THIS BOOK
MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

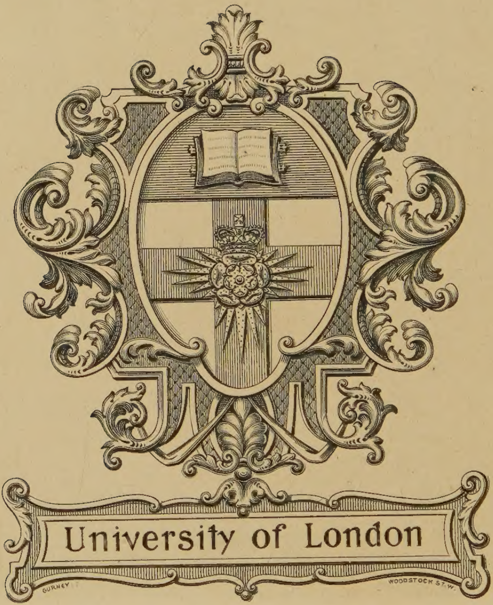
UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

REFERENCE ONLY

PARL. PAPERS
FOR REFERENCE ONLY.



616961

THE
PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

(AUTHORISED EDITION),

FOURTH SERIES.

SIXTH SESSION OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH PARLIAMENT
OF THE
UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

5 EDWARD VII.

VOLUME CXLI.

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE FOURTEENTH DAY OF FEBRUARY TO THE TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1905.

FIRST VOLUME OF SESSION.

1905.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED,
UNDER CONTRACT WITH HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,
BY
WYMAN AND SONS, LIMITED, FETTER LANE, LONDON.

8472

CHRONOLOGY OF "THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES."

THE PARLIAMENTARY HISTORY contains all that can be collected of the Legislative History of this country from the Conquest to the close of the XVIIIth Century (1803), 36 vols. The chief sources whence these Debates are derived are the Constitutional History, 24 vols.; Sir Simonds D'Ewes' Journal; Debates of the Commons in 1620 and 1621; Chandler and Timberland's Debates, 22 vols.; Grey's Debates of the Commons, from 1667 to 1694, 10 vols.; Almon's Debates, 24 vols.; Debrett's Debates, 63 vols.; The Hardwicke Papers; Debates in Parliament by Dr. Johnson, &c., &c.

THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES commence with the year 1803, and the contents are set forth in the following Chronological Table:—

HISTORY.

CONQUEST to 34 GEO. II.—1066 to 1760.

Vol. 1 to 15, 1 WILL. I. to 34 GEO. II.
1066-1760

REIGN OF GEORGE III.—1760 to 1820.

Vol. 15 to 35, 1 GEO. III. to 40 GEO. III.
1760-1800

(FIRST PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	35	41	GEO. III.	1801
—	36	42	—	1802

(SECOND PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	36	42	GEO. III.	1802-3

DEBATES.

First Series.

(SECOND PARLIAMENT—continued.)

Vol.	1 & 2	44	GEO. III.	1803-4
—	3 to 5	45	—	1805
—	6 & 7	46	—	1806

(THIRD PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	8 & 9	47	GEO. III.	1806-7

(FOURTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	9 to 11	48	GEO. III.	1807-8
—	12 — 14	49	—	1809
—	15 — 17	50	—	1810
—	18 — 20	51	—	1810-11
—	21 — 23	52	—	1812

(FIFTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	24 to 26	53	GEO. III.	1812-13
—	27 & 28	54	—	1813-14
—	29 to 31	55	—	1814-15
—	32 — 34	56	—	1816
—	35 & 36	57	—	1817
—	37 — 38	58	—	1818

(SIXTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	39 & 40	59	GEO. III.	1819
—	41	60	—	1819-20

Second Series.

REIGN OF GEORGE IV.—1820 to 1830.

(SEVENTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	1 to 3	1	GEO. IV.	1820
—	4 & 5	2	—	1821
—	6 — 7	3	—	1822
—	8 — 9	4	—	1823
—	10 — 11	5	—	1824
—	12 — 13	6	—	1825-6
—	14 — 15	7	—	1826

(EIGHTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	16	7	GEO. IV.	1826
—	17	8	—	1827
—	18 & 19	9	—	1828
—	20 — 21	10	—	1829
—	22 to 25	11	—	1830

Third Series.

REIGN OF WILLIAM IV.—1830 to 1837

(NINTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	1 to 3	1	WILL. IV.	1830-1

(TENTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	4 to 8	2	WILL. IV.	1832
—	9 — 14	3	—	1831

(ELEVENTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	15 to 20	4	WILL. IV.	1833
—	21 — 25	5	—	1834

(TWELFTH PARLIAMENT.)

Vol.	26 to 30	6	WILL. IV.	1835
—	31 — 35	7	—	1836
—	36 — 38	8	—	1837

REIGN OF VICTORIA—1837 to 1901.

(Thirteenth Parliament.)

Vol. 39 to 44	1	Victoria	1838
— 45 — 50	2	—	1839
— 51 — 55	3	—	1840
— 56 — 58	4	—	(a) 1841

(Fourteenth Parliament.)

Vol. 59	4	Victoria	(b) 1841
— 60 to 65	5	—	1842
— 66 — 71	6	—	1843
— 72 — 76	7	—	1844
— 77 — 82	8	—	1845
— 83 — 88	9	—	1846
— 89 — 94	10	—	(a) 1847

(Fifteenth Parliament.)

Vol. 95	10	Victoria	(b) 1847
— 96 to 101	11	—	1848
— 102 —107	12	—	1849
— 108 —113	13	—	1850
— 114 —118	14	—	1851
— 119 —122	15	—	(a) 1852

(Sixteenth Parliament.)

Vol. 123	15	Victoria	(b) 1852
— 124 to 129	16	—	1853
— 130 —135	17	—	1854
— 136 —139	18	—	1855
— 140 —143	19	—	1856
— 144	20	—	(a) 1857

(Seventeenth Parliament.)

Vol. 145 to 147	20	Victoria	(b) 1857
— 148 —151	21	—	1858
— 152 —153	22	—	(a) 1859

(Eighteenth Parliament.)

Vol. 154 to 155	22	Victoria	(b) 1859
— 156 —160	23	—	1860
— 161 —164	24	—	1861
— 165 —168	25	—	1862
— 169 —172	26	—	1863
— 173 —176	27	—	1864
— 177 —180	28	—	1865

(Nineteenth Parliament.)

Vol. 181 to 184	29	Victoria	1866
— 185 —189	30	—	1867
— 190 —193	31	—	1867-8

(Twentieth Parliament.)

Vol. 194 to 198	32	Victoria	1868-9
— 199 —203	33	—	1870
— 204 —208	34	—	1871
— 209 —213	35	—	1872
— 214 —217	36	—	1873

(Twenty-First Parliament.)

Vol. 218 to 221	37	Victoria	1874
— 222 —226	38	—	1875
— 227 —231	39	—	1876
— 232 —236	40	—	1877
— 237 —242	41	—	1878
— 243 —249	42	—	1878-9
— 250 & 251	43	—	(a) 1880

(Twenty-Second Parliament.)

Vol. 252 to 256	43	Victoria	(b) 1880
— 257 —265	44	—	1881
— 266 —273	45	—	(a) 1882
— 274 & 275	45	—	(b) 1882
— 276 to 283	46	—	1883
— 284 —292	47	—	1884
— 293 —301	48	—	1884-5

(Twenty-Third Parliament.)

Vol. 302 to 307	49	Victoria	(a) 1886

(Twenty-Fourth Parliament.)

Vol. 308 & 309	49	Victoria	(b) 1886
— 310 to 321	50	—	1887
— 322 —332	51	—	1888
— 333 —340	52	—	1889
— 341 —348	53	—	1890
— 349 —356	54	—	1890-1

Fourth Series.

(Twenty-Fourth Parliament—cont.)

Vol. 1 to 6	55	Victoria	1892

(Twenty-Fifth Parliament.)

Vol. 7	56	Victoria	1892
— 8 to 21	57	—	1893-4
— 22 — 29	57	—	1894
— 30 — 35	58	—	1895

(Twenty-Sixth Parliament.)

Vol. 36	59	Victoria	1895
— 37 to 44	59	—	1895-6
— 45 — 52	60	—	1897
— 53 — 65	61	—	1898
— 66 — 76	62	—	1899
— 77	63	—	1899
— 78 — 83	63	—	1900
— 84	63 & 64	—	1900
— 85 — 87	64	—	1900

(Twenty-Seventh Parliament.)

Vol. 88	64	Victoria	1900

REIGN OF EDWARD VII.

(Twenty-Seventh Parliament—cont.)

Vol. 89	1	Edward VII.	1901
— 90 to 100	1	—	1901
— 101	1 & 2	—	1902
— 102 to 117	2	—	1902
— 118 to 128	3	—	1903
— 129 to 140	4	—	1904
— 141	5	—	1905

HIS MAJESTY'S PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF STATE, Etc.

THE CABINET.

Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury——Rt. Hon. Arthur J. Balfour.
Lord President of the Council and President of the Board of Education——Most Hon. the Marquess of Londonderry, K.G.
Lord Chancellor——Rt. Hon. Earl of Halsbury.
Secretaries of State——
  Foreign Affairs——Most Hon. the Marquess of Lansdowne, K.G.
  Home Department——Rt. Hon. A. Akers-Douglas, M.P.
  Colonial——Rt. Hon. Alfred Lyttelton, M.P.
  War——Rt. Hon. H. O. Arnold-Forster, M.P.
  India——Rt. Hon. St. John Brodrick, M.P.
Chancellor of the Exchequer——Rt. Hon. J. Austen Chamberlain, M.P.
First Lord of the Admiralty——Rt. Hon. Earl of Selborne.
Lord Chancellor of Ireland——Rt. Hon. Lord Ashbourne.
President of the Board of Trade——Rt. Hon. Gerald W. Balfour, M.P.
Postmaster-General——Rt. Hon. Lord Stanley, M.P.
Secretary for Scotland——Most Noble the Marquess of Linlithgow.
President of the Local Government Board——Rt. Hon. Walter H. Long, M.P.
President of the Board of Agriculture——Rt. Hon. Earl of Onslow.
Chief Secretary for Ireland——Rt. Hon. George Wyndham, M.P.
Lord Privy Seal——Most Hon. the Marquess of Salisbury.

NOT IN THE CABINET.

Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury——Sir A. Acland-Hood, Bt., M.P.
Financial Secretary to the Treasury——Victor Cavendish, Esq., M.P.
Secretary to the Board of Education——Sir William Anson, M.P.
Secretary to the Admiralty——E. G. Pretyman, Esq., M.P.
Lords of the Treasury——
  Lord Balcarres, M.P.
  Hon. Ailwyn Fellowes, M.P.
  H. W. Forster, Esq., M.P.
Lords of the Admiralty——
  Admiral Sir John Fisher, G.C.B.
  Rear-Admiral Sir C. C. Drury, K.C.S.I.
  Rear-Admiral W. H. May, M.V.O.
  Capt. F. G. Inglefield, R.N.
Civil Lord of the Admiralty——Arthur H. Lee, Esq., M.P.
Army Council——
  The Secretary of State for War [in the Cabinet].
  Lt.-Gen. Sir N. G. Lyttelton, K.C.B., (Chief of General Staff).
  Major-General C. W. H. Douglas (Adjutant-General).
  Major-General H. C. O. Plumer, C.B. (Quartermaster-General).
  Major-General Sir J. W. Murray, K.C.B. (Master General of the Ordnance).
  The Under-Secretary of State for War.
  The Financial Secretary to the War Office.
  Secretary. The Permanent Under-Secretary of State for War (Col. Sir E. W. D. Ward, K.C.B.).
Inspector-General of the Forces——General H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, K.G., K.P., etc.
Parliamentary Secretary, Foreign Office——Earl Percy, M.P.
Parliamentary Secretary, Home Office——Hon. T. H. Cochrane, M.P.
Parliamentary Secretary, Colonial Office——His Grace the Duke of Marlborough.
Parliamentary Secretary, India Office——Most Noble the Marquess of Bath.
Parliamentary Secretary, War Office——Rt. Hon. Earl of Donoughmore.
Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade——A. Bonar Law Esq., M.P.
Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board——J. Grant Lawson, Esq., M.P.
Financial Secretary, War Office—W. Bromley Davenport, Esq., M.P.
Attorney-General——Sir R. B. Finlay, K.C., M.P.
Solicitor-General——Rt. Hon. Sir E. Carson, K.C., M.P.
Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland——Rt. Hon. Earl of Dudley.
The Lord Advocate——C. Scott Dickson, Esq., K.C., M.P.
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster——Rt. Hon. Sir Wm. Walrond, Bt., M.P.

OTHER OFFICERS OF STATE.

Judge Advocate-General——

Lord Chamberlain——Rt. Hon. Earl of Clarendon, G.C.B.
Vice-Chamberlain——Rt. Hon. Lord Wolverton.
Lord Steward——Rt. Hon. Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, G.C.V.O.
Master of the Horse——His Grace the Duke of Portland, K.G., G.C.V.O.
Paymaster-General——Rt. Hon. Sir Savile Crossley, Bt., M.V.O., M.P.
Comptroller of the Household——Viscount Valentia, M.V.O., M.P.
Treasurer of the Household——The Marquess of Hamilton, M.P.
Captain Yeomen of the Guard—Rt. Hon. Earl Waldegrave.

Lords-in-Waiting——
- Rt. Hon. Earl of Kintore, G.C.M.G.
- Rt. Hon. Earl of Denbigh.
- Rt. Hon. Viscount Churchill, K.C.V.O.
- Rt. Hon. Earl of Erron.
- Rt. Hon. Lord Lawrence.
- Rt. Hon. Lord Suffield, G.C.V.O., K.C.B.
- Rt. Hon. Lord Kenyon.

SCOTLAND.

Secretary for Scotland and Keeper of the Great Seal——The Most Noble the Marquess of Linlithgow.
Lord Justice-General——Rt. Hon. A. Graham Murray.
Lord Advocate——Rt. Hon. C. Scott Dickson, Esq., K.C., M.P.
Lord Justice Clerk——Rt. Hon. Lord Kinsburgh, C.B.
Lord Clerk Register——His Grace the Duke of Montrose, K.T.
Lord High Commissioner——Rt. Hon. Earl of Leven and Melville.
Solicitor-General——E. T. Salvensen, Esq., K.C.

IRELAND.

Lord Lieutenant——Rt. Hon. Earl of Dudley.
Lord Chancellor——Rt. Hon. Lord Ashbourne.
Chief Secretary and Keeper of Privy Seal——Rt. Hon. George Wyndham, M.P.
Under Secretary——Sir Antony MacDonnell, G.C.S.I., K.C.V.O.
Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction——President: The Rt. Hon. the Chief Secretary for Ireland; Vice-President: Rt. Hon. Horace Plunkett.
Attorney-General——Rt. Hon. J. Atkinson, K.C., M.P.
Solicitor-General——J. H. M. Campbell, Esq., K.C., M.P.

PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

Chairman of Committees——Rt. Hon. Earl of Onslow.
Clerk of Parliaments——Sir Henry J. L. Graham, K.C.B.
Deputy Clerk of Parliaments (Clerk Assistant)——Hon. E. P. Thesiger, C.B.
Reading-Clerk and Clerk of Outdoor Committees——Edward Hall Alderson, Esq.
Counsel to the Chairman of Committees——Albert Gray, Esq.
Chief Clerk and Clerk of Public Bills——A. Harrison, Esq.
Senior Clerks——
- Principal Clerk, Judicial Department, and Taxing Officer of Judicial Costs——J. F. Skene, Esq.
- Clerk of the Journals——W. A. Leigh, Esq.
- Principal Clerk of Private Committees——J. F. Symons Jeune, Esq.
- Peers' Printed Paper Office——C. L. Anstruther, Esq. and W. H. Hamilton Gordon, Esq.

Other Clerks—Hon. A. McDonnell; A. H. Robinson, Esq. (Clerk of Private Bills); H. P. St. John, Esq.; V. M. Biddulph, Esq.; Hon. E. A. Stonor; H. J. F. Badeley, Esq.; C. Headlam, Esq.; J. B. Hotham, Esq.; E. C. Vigors, Esq.; A. Tennyson, Esq.; and G. D. Luard, Esq.
Accountant and Copyist——Mr. T. A. Court.
Assistant Copyists——Mr. H. P. Norris and Mr. R. A. Court.
Messengers——Messrs. A. A. Worfell, C. E. Chizlett, A. M. Stoll, J. W. F. Locke, J. McMillan, G. Bennett, G. T. Philip.
Librarian——Edmund Gosse, Esq., LL.D.
Assistant Librarian——A. H. M. Butler.
Attendant——Mr. W. Worfell.

Examiners for Standing Orders——C. W. Campion, Esq. ; J. F. Symons Jeune, Esq ; Clerk ——B. H. Fell, Esq.
Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod——Admiral Sir F. H. Stephenson, G.C.V.O., K.C.B.
Yeoman Usher——Captain T. D. Butler.
Serjeant-at-Arms——Lt.-Col. Rt. Hon. Sir Fleetwood I. Edwards, G.C.V.O., K.C.B.
Deputy Serjeant-at-Arms——S. Hand, Esq.
Resident Superintendent——J. K. Williams, Esq.
Shorthand Writer——W. H. Gurney Salter, Esq.
Principal Doorkeepers——Messrs. W. Chandler, E. Fox, F. Holman.
First Class Assistants——Messrs. C. Walker, J. Hedley, J. Lane, B. Gallop.
Second Class Assistants——Messrs. H. B. Strevens, G. W. Cross, W. Stopp.
Third Class Assistants——Messrs. J. Woolacott, A. A. Edney, J. F. Baum.
Messengers——Messrs. A. J. Solman, J. B. Forsyth, C. Chapman, W. Phillips, W. W. Meates.
Superintendent of Refreshment Rooms——Mr. W. Casbon.
Inspector of Police attending the House of Lords——Mr. A. Palmer.
Clerk of the Works, Houses of Parliament——Mr. C. J. Williams.
Resident Engineer, Houses of Parliament——Mr. A. P. Patey.

PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Clerk of the House of Commons——Sir Courtney Peregrine Ilbert, K.C.S.I., C.I.E.
Clerk-Assistant——Arthur W. Nicholson, Esq.
Second Clerk-Assistant——T. L. Webster, Esq.
Principal Clerks——
    Public Bill Office, and Clerk of Fees——W. Gibbons, Esq., C.B.
    Clerk of the Journals——W. H. Ley, Esq.
    Committee Office——R. Dickinson, Esq.
    Private Bill Office——J. H. W. Somerset, Esq.
Senior Clerks——F. St. George Tupper, Esq. ; H. C. Tower ,Esq. ; C. V. Frere, Esq. L. T. Le Marchant, Esq.; G. C. Giffard, Esq.; Sir E. H. Doyle, Bart.
Assistant Clerks——S. L. Simeon, Esq. ; Arthur I. Dasent, Esq. ; E. C. Howe Browne, Esq. ; Horace West, Esq. ; Henry A. Ferguson-Davie, Esq. ; Arthur H. Ellis, Esq. ; Percy A. Bull, Esq. ; F. R. Williams Wynn, Esq. ; W. E. Grey, Esq. ; F. C. Holland, Esq. ; J. W. G. Bond, Esq.
Junior Clerks——H. C. Dawkins, Esq. ; R. P. Colomb, Esq. ; B. H. Fell, Esq. ; R. E. Childers, Esq. ; J. Scott Porter, Esq. ; F. C. Bramwell, Esq. ; W. T. Legge, Esq., C. R. Turner, Esq. ; W. K. Gibbons, Esq. ; A. E. A. W. Smyth, Esq. ; K. J. C. Moorsom, Esq. ; R. D. Radcliffe, Esq., W. P. Johnstone, Esq.
Serjeant-at-Arms——H. D. Erskine, Esq., C.V.O.
Deputy Serjeant——F. R. Gosset, Esq.
Assistant Sergeant——W. H. Erskine, Esq.
Office Messenger——Mr. C. J. H. Shearn.
Chaplain to the House——The Ven. Archdeacon Basil Wilberforce, D.D.
Secretary to the Speaker——Edward Gully, Esq., C.B.
Counsel to the Speaker——Hon. Sir E. Chandos Leigh, K.C., K.C.B.
Trainbearer——Mr. J. French.
Messenger——Mr. W. Murrell.
Collector of Fees on Private Bills——C. L. Lockton, Esq.
Clerk to Referees——Sir E. H. Doyle, Bart.
Examiners of Private Bills——C. W. Campion, Esq. ; J. F. Symons Jeune, Esq.
Taxing Master——C. W. Campion, Esq. ; Clerk——B. H. Fell, Esq.
Vote Office——
    Principal Clerk——Philip Smith, Esq.
    Assistant Clerks——H. Otway Mayne, Esq. ; John Poyser, Esq.
    Messenger——Mr. John Edwards.
Librarian——R. C. Walpole, Esq. ; Assistant Librarian——Temple Franks, Esq., B.C.L. Clerks in Library——Messrs. J. R. Crimp, Wm. Stewart ; Messengers——Messrs. A. Firmin, W. Hague.
Shorthand Writer——W. H. Gurney Salter, Esq.
Printers——
    Journals——G. E. Briscoe Eyre, Esq.
    Votes——J. B. Nichols, Esq.
Postmaster——Mr. I. Lincoln ; Hall Keeper——Mr. J. Glynn.
Office Keeper——Mr. H. Bullock.
Office Clerk in Committee Office——Mr. T. Fielden Mitchell.
Office Clerk in Journal Office——Mr. A. A. Taylor.
Messengers——Messrs. C. Davie, H. Jones, G. D. Weller, J. Armstrong, J. Woodward, J. Ivory, G. Norman, J. Surrey, A. Sepple.
Doorkeepers——Mr. M. Inglefield and Mr. H. Hambling.

Messengers (1st Class)——Mr. C. WOODCRAFT, Mr. R. ROBERTSON, Mr. J. HILLS, Mr. J. SPRAGUE, Mr. A. ANDREWS, Mr. T. B. SPRAY, Mr. G. ANSTEY, Mr. J. H. DAY, Mr. J. HENDERSON, Messengers (2nd Class)——Messrs. G. WAINWRIGHT, J. GUYATT, R. TURTLE, A. HASKELL, A. C. JOHNSON, G. CLAPPERTON, H. E. LININGTON, H. G. EMMETT, J. L. PHILIP, W. FINDLAY.

Superintendent of Members' Waiting Room——Mr. J. F. HENLEY; Assistant——Mr W. BROADBENT; Porters——Messrs. J. ORAM and J. HART.

Inspector of Police attending the House of Commons——Mr. SCANTLEBURY.

AN ALPHABETICAL LIST

OF THE

LORDS SPIRITUAL AND TEMPORAL

IN THE

SIXTH SESSION OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH PARLIAMENT

OF

THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

5 EDWARD VII. 1905.

NOTE.—The Figures in the Margin refer to the corresponding Figures on the Roll.

A

36 Abercorn, James Marquess of. (Duke of Abercorn)
346 Abercromby, George Ralph Lord
466 Aberdare, Henry Campbell Lord
49 Abergavenny, William Marquess of 74 Abingdon, Montagu Arthur Earl of 394 Abinger, Shelley Leopold Laurence Lord
459 Acton, Richard Maximilian Lord
530 Addington, Egerton Lord
44 Ailesbury, Henry Augustus Marquess of 46 Ailsa, Archibald Marquess of
3 Albany, His Royal Highness Leopold Charles Edward George Albert Duke of 76 Albemarle, Arnold Allan Cecil Earl of 561 Aldenham, Henry Hucks Lord
476 Alington, Humphrey Napier Lord
589 Allerton, William Lawies Lord
586 Alverstone, Richard Everard Lord
157 Amherst, William Archer Earl
540 Amherst of Hackney, William Amhurst Lord
488 Ampthill, Arthur Oliver Villiers Lord
191 Ancaster, Gilbert Henry Earl of 42 Anglesey, Henry Cyril Marquess of
438 Annaly, Luke Lord
124 Annesley, Hugh Earl. (Elected for Ireland)
484 Ardilaun, Arthur Edward Lord
30 Argyll, John Douglas Sutherland Duke of 597 Armstrong, William Henry Armstrong FitzPatrick Lord
279 Arundell of Wardour, John Francis Lord
507 Ashbourne, Edward Lord
98 Ashburnham, Bertram Earl of
396 Ashburton, Francis Denzil Edward Lord
537 Ashcombe, George Lord
556 Ashton, James Lord
322 Auckland, William Morton Lord
582 Avebury, John Lord
92 Aylesford, Charles Wightwick Earl of

B

307 Bagot, William Lord
455 Balinhard, James Lord. (Earl of Southesk)
291 Balfour of Burley, Alexander Hugh Lord. (Elected for Scotland)
127 Bandon, James Francis Earl of (Elected for Ireland)
206 Bangor, Henry William Crosbie Viscount. (Elected for Ireland)
258 Bangor, Watkin Herbert Bishop of
286 Barnard, Henry de Vere Lord
590 Barrymore, Arthur Hugh Lord
527 Basing, George Limbrey Lord
402 Bateman, William Spencer Lord
35 Bath, Thomas Henry Marquess of 250 Bath and Wells, George Wyndham Bishop of 110 Bathurst, Seymour Henry Earl
545 Battersea, Cyril Lord
150 Beauchamp, William Earl
13 Beaufort, Henry Adelbert Wellington Fitzroy Duke of 16 Bedford, Herbrand Arthur Duke of 292 Belhaven and Stenton, Alexander Charles Lord. (Elected for Scotland)
319 Bellew, Charles Bertram Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
126 Belmore, Somerset Richard Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)
425 Belper, Henry Lord
73 Berkeley, Randal Mowbray Thomas Earl of 312 Berwick, Richard Henry Lord
595 Biddulph, Michael Lord
538 Blythswood, Archibald Campbell Lord
200 Bolingbroke and St. John, ——— Viscount
330 Bolton, William Thomas Lord
299 Boston, George Florance Lord
267 Botreaux, Charles Edward Hastings Lord. (Earl of Loudoun)
523 Bowes, Claude George Lord. (Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorn)
293 Boyle, Charles Spencer Canning Lord. (Earl of Cork and Orrery)
487 Brabourne, Edward Lord
149 Bradford, George Cecil Orlando Earl of 578 Brampton, Henry Lord
446 Brancepeth, Gustavus Russell Lord. (Viscount Boyne)
20 Brandon, Alfred Douglas Duke of 520 Brassey, Thomas Lord
318 Braybrooke, Henry Lord
272 Braye, Alfred Thomas Townshend Lord
50 Breadalbane, Gavin Marquess of 221 Bridport, Arthur Wellington Alexander Nelson Viscount
45 Bristol, Frederick William John Marquess of 256 Bristol, George Forrest Bishop of 327 Brodrick, William Lord. (Viscount Midleton)
101 Brooke, Francis Richard Charles Guy Earl, and Earl of Warwick
434 Brougham and Vaux, Henry Charles Lord
146 Brownlow, Adelbert Wellington Brownlow Earl 102 Buckinghamshire, Sidney Carr Earl of 557 Burghclere, Herbert Coulstoun Lord
594 Burnham, Edward Levy Lord
518 Burton, Michael Arthur Lord
38 Bute, John Marquess of 283 Byron, George Frederick William Lord

C

118 Cadogan, George Henry Earl
183 Cairns, Wilfred Dallas Earl
328 Calthorpe, Augustus Cholmondeley Lord
41 Camden, John Charles Marquess
268 Camoys, Ralph Francis Julian Lord
160 Camperdown, Robert Adam Philips Haldane Earl of 4 Canterbury, Randall Thomas Archbishop of 216 Canterbury, Henry Charles Viscount
405 Carew, Robert Shapland George Julian Lord
315 Carleton, Richard Henry Lord. (Earl of Shannon)
70 Carlisle, George James Earl of

117	Carnarvon, George Edward Stanhope Molyneux Earl of
85	Carnwath, Robert Harris Carnwath Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)
192	Carrington, Charles Robert Earl
345	Carysfort, William Lord. (Earl of Carysfort)
355	Castlemaine, Albert Edward Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
458	Castletown, Bernard Edward Barnaby Lord
144	Cathcart, Alan Frederick Earl
158	Cawdor, Frederick Archibald Vaughan Earl
386	Chaworth, Reginald Lord. (Earl of Meath)
429	Chelmsford, Frederic Augustus Lord
428	Chesham, Charles Compton William Lord
245	Chester, Francis John Bishop of
67	Chesterfield, Edwyn Francis Earl of
529	Cheylesmore, Herbert Francis Lord
132	Chichester, Francis Godolphin Earl of
240	Chichester, Ernest Roland Bishop of
43	Cholmondeley, George Henry Hugh Marquess of
234	Churchill, Victor Albert Francis Charles Viscount
430	Churston, John Lord
214	Clancarty, William Frederick Viscount. (Earl of Clancarty)
379	Clanwilliam, Richard James Lord. (Earl of Clanwilliam)
55 & 112	Clarendon, Edward Hyde Earl of. (Lord Chamberlain of the Household)
384	Clements, Charles Lord. (Earl of Leitrim)
284	Clifford of Chudleigh, Lewis Henry Hugh Lord
264	Clinton, Charles John Robert Lord
338	Clonbrock, Luke Gerald Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
391	Cloncurry, Valentine Frederick Lord
201	Cobham, Charles George Viscount
360	Colchester, Reginald Charles Edward Lord
468	Coleridge, Bernard John Seymour Lord
233	Colville of Culross, Charles Robert William Viscount
215	Combermere, Francis Lynch Wellington Viscount
418	Congleton, Henry Lord
2	Connaught and Strathearn, His Royal Highness Arthur William Patrick Albert Duke of
173	Cottenham, Kenelm Charles Edward Earl of
470	Cottesloe, Thomas Francis Lord
77	Coventry, George William Earl of
174	Cowley, Henry Arthur Mornington Earl
93	Cowper, Francis Thomas de Grey Earl
190	Cranbrook, Gathorne Earl of
579	Cranworth, Bertram Francis Lord
129	Craven, William George Robert Earl of
539	Crawshaw, Thomas Lord
193	Crewe, Robert Offley Ashburton Earl of
340	Crofton, Edward Henry Churchill Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
197	Cromer, Evelyn Earl of
225	Cross, Richard Assheton Viscount
25	Cumberland and Teviotdale, His Royal Highness Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Fredk. Duke of
576	Currie, Philip Henry Wodehouse Lord

D

90	Dartmouth, William Heneage Earl of
179	Dartrey, Vesey Earl of
553	Davey, Horace Lord. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)
567	Dawnay, Hugh Richard Lord. (Viscount Downe)
263	de Clifford, Jack Southwell Lord
421	De Freyne, Arthur Lord
107	De La Warr, Gilbert Geo. Reginald Earl
395	De L'Isle and Dudley, Philip Lord
406	De Mauley, William Ashley Webb Lord

528	De Ramsey, William Henry Lord
260	de Ros, Dudley Charles Lord
392	de Saumarez, James St. Vincent Lord
368	Delamere, Hugh Lord
62	Denbigh, Rudolph Robert Basil Aloysius Augustine Earl of
393	Denman, Thomas Lord
509	Deramore, Robert Wilfrid Lord
57	Derby, Frederick Arthur Earl of
492	Derwent, Harcourt Lord
60	Devon, Charles Pepys Earl of
17	Devonshire, Spencer Compton Duke of.
302	Digby, Edward Henry Trafalgar Lord
305	Dinevor, Arthur de Cardonnel Lord
71	Doncaster, William Henry Walter Earl of. (Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry)
280	Dormer, Ronald John Lord
472	Douglas, Charles Alexander Lord. (Earl of Home)
121	Drogheda, Ponsonby William Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)
165	Ducie, Henry John Earl of
176	Dudley, William Humble Earl of
51	Dufferin and Ava, Terence John Temple Marquess of
343	Dunalley, Henry O'Callaghan Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
333	Dunboyne, Robert St. John Fitz-Walter Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
88	Dundonald, Douglas Mackinnon Baillie Hamilton Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)
542	Dunleath, Henry Lyle Lord
387	Dunmore, Charles Adolphus Lord. (Earl of Dunmore)
454	Dunning, John Lord. (Lord Rollo)
162	Durham, John George Earl of
237	Durham, Handley Carr Glyn Bishop of

E

427	Ebury, Robert Wellesley Lord
164	Effingham, Henry Alexander Gordon Earl of
194	Egerton, Wilbraham Earl
151	Eldon, John Earl of
420	Elgin, Victor Alexander Lord. (Earl of Elgin and Kincardine)
347	Ellenborough, Edward Downes Lord
171	Ellesmere, Francis Charles Granville Earl of
511	Elphinstone, Sidney Herbert Lord
244	Ely, Alwyne Bishop of
469	Emly, Thomas William Gaston Lord
350	Erskine, William Macnaghten Lord
229	Esher, Reginald Baliol Viscount
69	Essex, George Devereux de Vere Earl of
596	Estcourt, George Thomas John Lord
464	Ettrick, William John George Lord. (Lord Napier)
39	Exeter, William Thomas Brownlow Marquess of
212	Exmouth, Edward Addington Hargreaves Viscount

F

566	Fairlie, David Lord. (Earl of Glasgow)
199	Falkland, Byron Plantagenet Viscount. (Elected for Scotland)
202	Falmouth, Evelyn Edward Thomas Viscount
573	Farquhar, Horace Brand Lord
547	Farrer, Thomas Cecil Lord
474	Fermanagh, John Henry Lord. (Earl Erne)
89	Ferrers, Sewallis Edward Earl
180	Feversham, William Ernest Earl of
532	Field, William Ventris Lord
29	Fife, Alexander William George Duke of
382	Fingall, Arthur James Francis Lord (Earl of Fingall)
319	Fisherwick, Edward Arthur Donald St. George Hamilton Lord. (Marquess of Donegall)
437	Fitzhardinge, Charles Paget Fitzhardinge Lord
103	Fitzwilliam, William Charles De Meuron Earl
304	Foley, Henry Thomas Lord
287	Forbes, Horace Courtenay Gammell Lord. (Elected for Scotland)
369	Forester, Cecil Theodore Lord

116	Fortescue, Hugh Earl
358	Foxford, William Henry Edmond de Vere Sheaffe Lord. (Earl of Limerick)

G

320	Gage, Henry Charles Lord. (Viscount Gage)
170	Gainsborough, Charles William Francis Earl of
353	Gardner, ——— Lord
478	Gerard, Frederic John Lord
371	Gifford, Edric Frederic Lord
577	Glanusk, Joseph Russell Lord
560	Glenesk, Algernon Lord
239	Gloucester, Charles John Bishop of
211	Gordon, John Campbell Viscount. (Earl of Aberdeen)
451	Gormanston, Jenico William Joseph Lord. (Viscount Gormanston)
230	Goschen, George Joachim Viscount
219	Gough, Hugh Viscount
12	Grafton, Augustus Charles Lennox Duke of
96	Graham, Douglas Beresford Malise Ronald Earl. (Duke of Montrose)
352	Granard, Bernard Arthur William Patrick Hastings Lord. (Earl of Granard)
309	Grantley, John Richard Brinsley Lord
163	Granville, Granville George Earl
591	Grenfell, Francis Wallace Lord
461	Greville, Algernon William Fulke Lord
139	Grey, Albert Henry George Earl
266	Grey de Ruthyn, Rawdon George Grey Lord
515	Grimthorpe, Edmund Lord
357	Grinstead, Lowry Egerton Lord (Earl of Enniskillen)
104	Guilford, Frederick George Earl of
329	Gwydir, Peter Robert Lord

H

83	Haddington, George Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)
482	Haldon, Lawrence William Lord
575	Haliburton, Arthur Lawrence Lord
220	Halifax, Charles Lindley Viscount
5 & 195	Halsbury, Hardinge Stanley Earl of. (Lord High Chancellor)
519	Hamilton of Dalzell, Gavin George Lord
223	Hampden, Henry Robert Viscount
471	Hampton, Herbert Perrott Murray Lord
218	Hardinge, Henry Charles Viscount
105	Hardwicke, John Manners Earl of
456	Hare William Lord. (Earl of Listowel)
142	Harewood, Henry Ulick Earl of
475	Harlech, George Ralph Charles Lord
99	Harrington, Charles Augustus Earl of
359	Harris, George Robert Canning Lord
141	Harrowby, John Herbert Dudley Earl of
443	Hartismere, Charles Henry Chandos Lord. (Lord Henniker)
262	Hastings, Albert Edward Delaval Lord
397	Hatherton, Edward George Percy Lord
303	Hawke, Martin Bladen Lord
549	Hawkesbury, Cecil George Savile Lord
294	Hay, Archibald Fitzroy George Lord. (Earl of Kinnoul)
339	Headley, Charles Mark Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
562	Heneage, Edward Lord
198	Hereford, Robert Viscount
251	Hereford, John Bishop of
500	Herries, Marmaduke Francis Lord
512	Herschell, Richard Farrer Lord
37	Hertford, Hugh de Grey Marquess of
377	Heytesbury, Leonard Lord
217	Hill, Rowland Richard Viscount
513	Hillingdon, Charles William Lord
111	Hillsborough, Arthur Wills John Wellington Trumbull Blundell Earl of. (Marquess of Downshire)
514	Hindlip, Charles Lord
569	Holm Patrick, Hans Wellesley Lord
205	Hood, Francis Wheler Viscount

493 Hothfield, Henry James Lord

457 Howard of Glossop, Francis Edward Lord

276 Howard de Walden, Thomas Evelyn Lord

152 Howe, Richard George Penn Earl

490 Howth, William Ulick Tristram Lord. (Earl of Howth)

58 Huntingdon, Warner Francis John Plantagenet Earl of

213 Hutchinson, Richard Walter John Viscount. (Earl of Donoughmore)

444 Hylton, Hylton George Hylton Lord

I

188 Iddesleigh, Walter Stafford Earl of

106 Ilchester, Henry Edward Earl of

334 Inchiquin, Lucius William Lord. (Elected for Ireland)

167 Innes, Henry John Earl. (Duke of Roxburghe)

570 Inverclyde, George Arbuthnot Lord

533 Iveagh, Edward Cecil Lord

J

558 James, Henry Lord

78 Jersey, Victor Albert George Earl of

K

536 Kelvin, William Lord

385 Kenlis, Geoffrey Thomas Lord. (Marquess of Headfort)

424 Kenmare, Valentine Augustus Lord. (Earl of Kenmare)

441 Kenry, Windham Thomas Lord. (Earl of Dunraven and Mount-Earl)

517 Kensington, Hugh Lord

317 Kenyon, Lloyd Lord

361 Ker, Robert Schomberg Lord. (Marquess of Lothian)

447 Kesteven, John Henry Lord

584 Killanin, Martin Henry Lord

337 Kilmaine, Francis William Lord. (Elected for Ireland)

381 Kilmarnock, Charles Gore Lord. (Earl of Erroll)

155 Kilmorey, Francis Charles Earl of (Elected for Ireland)

178 Kimberley, John Earl of

435 Kinnaird, Arthur Fitz-Gerald Lord

564 Kinnear, Alexander Smith Lord

587 Kinross, Patrick Lord

403 Kintore, Algernon Hawkins Thomond Lord (Earl of Kintore)

232 Kitchener of Khartoum and of the Vaal, Horatio Herbert Viscount

592 Knollys, Francis Lord

227 Knutsford, Henry Thurstan Viscount

L

485 Lamington, Charles Wallace Alexander Napier Lord

122 Lanesborough, John Vansittart Danvers Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)

341 Langford, Hercules Edward Lord. (Elected for Ireland)

32 Lansdowne, Henry Charles Keith Marquess of

185 Lathom, Edward George Earl of

84 Lauderdale, Frederick Henry Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)

453 Lawrence, John Hamilton Lord

431 Leconfield, Charles Henry Lord

15 Leeds, George Godolphin Duke of 168 Leicester, Thomas William Earl of

411 Leigh, William Henry Lord

204 Leinster, Maurice Viscount. (Duke of Leinster)

86 Leven and Melville, Ronald Ruthven Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)

161 Lichfield, Thomas Francis Earl of

248 Lichfield, Augustus Bishop of

331 Lilford, John Lord

242 Lincoln, Edward Bishop of

583 Lindley, Nathaniel Lord. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)

64 Lindsey, Montague Peregrine Albemarle Earl of

506 Lingen, Ralph Robert Wheeler Lord

53 Linlithgow, John Adrian Louis Marquess of

565 Lister, Joseph Lord

259 Liverpool, Francis James Bishop of

228 Llandaff, Henry Viscount

543 Llangattock, John Allan Lord

554 Loch, Edward Douglas Lord

344 Loftus, John Henry Lord. (Marquess of Ely)

189 Londesborough, William Francis Henry Earl of 236 London, Arthur Foley Bishop of

140 Lonsdale, Hugh Cecil Earl of

401 Lovat, Simon Joseph Lord

169 Lovelace, Ralph Gordon Earl of

300 Lovel and Holland, Augustus Arthur Lord. (Earl of Egmont)

125 Lucan, George Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)

568 Ludlow, Henry Ludlow Lord

413 Lurgan, William Lord

184 Lytton, Victor Alexander George Robert Earl of 433 Lyveden, Courtenay Robert Percy Lord

M

95 Macclesfield, George Loveden William Henry Earl of

522 Macnaghten, Edward Lord. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)

526 Magheramorne, Dudley Stuart Lord

119 Malmesbury, James Edward Earl of

22 Manchester, William Angus Drogo Duke of 285 Manners of Haddon, Henry John Brinsley Lord. (Marquess of Granby)

354 Manners, John Thomas Lord

113 Mansfield, William David Earl of

137 Manvers, Charles William Sydney Earl

80 Mar, John Francis Erskine Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)

82 Mar and Kellie, Walter John Francis Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)

18 Marlborough, Charles Richard John Duke of

535 Masham, Samuel Lord

335 Massy, John Thomas William Lord. (Elected for Ireland)

123 Mayo, Dermot Robert Wyndham Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)

356 Meldrum, Charles Lord. (Marquess of Huntly)

208 Melville, Charles Saunders Viscount

323 Mendip, Thomas Charles Lord. (Viscount Clifden)

440 Meredyth, James Herbert Gustavus Meredyth Lord. (Lord Athlumney)

409 Methuen, Paul Sanford Lord

295 Middleton, Digby Wentworth Bayard Lord

235 Milner, Alfred Viscount

362 Minster, Victor George Henry Francis Lord. (Marquess Conyngham)

143 Minto, Gilbert John Earl of

442 Monck, Henry Power Charles Stanley Lord. (Viscount Monck)

524 Monckton, George Edmund Milnes Lord. (Viscount Galway)

467 Moncreiff, Henry James Lord

497 Monk Bretton, John William Lord

505 Monkswell, Robert Lord

296 Monson, Augustus Debonnaire John Lord

510 Montagu of Beaulieu, Henry John Lord

351 Monteagle, Henry Ulick Lord (Marquess of Sligo)

414 Monteagle of Brandon, Thomas Spring Lord

148 Morley, Albert Edmund Earl of

81 Morton, Sholto George Watson Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)

389 Mostyn, Llewelyn Nevill Vaughan Lord

115 Mount Edgcumbe, William Henry Earl of

534 Mount Stephen, George Lord

261 Mowbray, Charles Botolph Joseph Lord

574 Muncaster, Josslyn Francis Lord

159 Munster, Aubrey Earl of

336 Muskerry, Hamilton Matthew Fitzmaurice Lord. (Elected for Ireland)

N

450 Napier, Robert William Lord

135 Nelson, Horatio Earl

23 Newcastle, Henry Pelham Archibald Douglas Duke of

572 Newlands, William Wallace Lord

541	Newton, Thomas Wodehouse Lord
9	Norfolk, Henry Duke of. (Earl Marshal of England)
47	Normanby, Constantine Charles Henry Marquess of
274	North, William Henry John Lord
40	Northampton, William George Spencer Scott Marquess of
498	Northbourne, Walter Henry Lord
182	Northbrook, Francis George Earl of
581	Northcote, Henry Stafford Lord
87	Northesk, David John Earl of. (Elected for Scotland)
502	Northington, Frederic Lord. (Lord Henley)
24	Northumberland, Henry George Duke of
480	Norton, Charles Bowyer Lord
249	Norwich, John Bishop of

O

585	O'Brien, Peter Lord
462	O'Hagan, Maurice Herbert Ignatius Towneley Lord
449	O'Neill, Edward Lord
130	Onslow, William Hillier Earl of
400	Oranmore and Browne, Geoffrey Henry Browne Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
138	Orford, Robert Horace Earl of
366	Oriel, Clotworthy John Eyre Lord. (Viscount Massereene)
448	Ormathwaite, Arthur Lord
363	Ormonde, James Edward William Theobald Lord. (Marquess of Ormonde)
548	Overtoun, John Campbell Lord
416	Oxenfoord, John Hew North Gustave Henry Lord. (Earl of Stair)

P

226	Peel, Arthur Wellesley Viscount
64 & 59	Pembroke and Montgomery, Sidney Earl of. (Lord Steward of the Household)
445	Penrhyn, George Sholto Gordon Lord
254	Peterborough, Edward Carr Bishop of
277	Petre, Bernard Henry Philip Lord
544	Playfair, George James Lord
376	Plunket, William Lee Lord
388	Poltimore, Augustus Frederick George Warwick Lord
297	Ponsonby, Walter William Brabazon Lord. (Earl of Bessborough)
21	Portland, William John Arthur Charles James Duke of
222	Portman, William Henry Berkeley Viscount
100	Portsmouth, Newton Earl of
79	Poulett, William John Lydston Earl
501	Powerscourt, Mervyn Richard Lord
134	Powis, George Charles Earl of

R

108	Radnor, Jacob Earl of
423	Raglan, George Fitz-Roy Henry Lord
473	Ramsay, Arthur George Maule Lord. (Earl of Dalhousie)
374	Ranfurly, Uchter John Mark Lord. (Earl of Ranfurly)
452	Rathdonnell, Thomas Kane Lord. (Elected for Ireland)
559	Rathmore, David Robert Lord
367	Ravensworth, Arthur Thomas Lord
370	Rayleigh, John William Lord
491	Reay, Donald James Lord
593	Redesdale, Algernon Bertram Lord
551	Rendel, Stuart Lord
504	Revelstoke, John Lord
332	Ribblesdale, Thomas Lord
11	Richmond, Charles Henry Duke of
231	Ridley, Matthew White Viscount
48	Ripon, George Frederick Samuel Marquess of
241	Ripon, William Boyd Bishop of
196	Roberts, Frederick Sleigh Earl
580	Robertson, James Patrick Bannerman Lord. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)
252	Rochester, Edward Stuart Bishop of
310	Rodney, George Bridges Harley Dennett Lord
439	Romilly, John Gaspard Le Marchant Lord
131	Romney, Charles Earl of
378	Rosebery, Archibald Philip Lord, (Earl of Rosebery)

563 Rosmead, Hercules Arthur Temple Lord
136 Rosse, Lawrence Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)
128 Rosslyn, James Francis Harry Earl of 404 Rossmore, Derrick Warner William Lord
503 Rothschild, Nathaniel Mayer Lord
177 Russell, John Francis Stanley Earl 19 Rutland, John James Robert Duke of

S

479 Sackville, Lionel Sackville Lord
14 St. Albans, Charles Victor Albert Aubrey De Vere Duke of 253 St. Albans, Edgar, Bishop of 246 St. Asaph, Alfred George Bishop of 255 St. Davids, John Bishop of 147 Saint Germans, Henry Cornwallis Earl of 275 St. John of Bletso, Beauchamp Moubray Lord
422 Saint Leonards, Edward Burtenshaw Lord
525 Saint Levan, John Lord
508 Saint Oswald, Rowland Lord
217 St. Vincent, Carnegie Parker Viscount
8 & 34 Salisbury, James Edward Hubert Marquess of. (Lord Privy Seal)
243 Salisbury, John Bishop of 326 Saltersford, James George Henry Lord. (Earl of Courtown)
288 Saltoun, Alexander William Fredk. Lord. (Elected for Scotland)
463 Sandhurst, William Lord
68 Sandwich, Edward George Henry Earl of 348 Sandys, Michael Edwin Marcus Lord
531 Savile, John Savile Lord
278 Saye and Sele, John Fiennes Lord
75 Scarbrough, Aldred Fredk. George Beresford Earl of 298 Scarsdale, Alfred Nathaniel Holden Lord
415 Seaton, John Reginald Upton Lord
383 Sefton, Osbert Cecil Lord. (Earl of Sefton)
187 Selborne, William Waldegrave Earl of 72 Shaftesbury, Anthony Earl of
349 Sheffield, Henry North Lord. (Earl of Sheffield)
313 Sherborne, Edward Lennox Lord
56 Shrewsbury, Charles Henry John Earl of 481 Shute, Walter Bulkeley Lord. (Viscount Barrington)
588 Shuttleworth, Ughtred James Lord
209 Sidmouth, William Wells Viscount
365 Silchester, Thomas Lord. (Earl of Longford)
289 Sinclair, Charles William Lord. (Elected for Scotland)
372 Somerhill, Hubert George Lord. (Marquess of Clanricarde)
311 Somers, Arthur Herbert Tennyson Lord
10 Somerset, Algernon Duke of
465 Somerton, Sidney James Lord. (Earl of Normanton)
186 Sondes, George Edward Earl
308 Southampton, Charles Henry Lord
109 Spencer, John Poyntz Earl
282 Stafford, Fitzherbert Lord
516 Stalbridge, Richard de Aquila Lord
65 Stamford, William Earl of 94 Stanhope, Arthur Philip Earl
410 Stanley of Alderley, Edward Lyulph Lord
550 Stanmore, Arthur Lord
325 Stewart of Garlies, Randolph Henry Lord. (Earl of Galloway)
153 Stradbroke, George Edward John Mowbray Earl of 172 Strafford, Francis Edmund Cecil Earl of 114 Strange, John James Hugh Henry Earl. (Duke of Atholl)
571 Strathcona and Mount Royal, Donald Alexander Lord
399 Stratheden, Hallyburton George Lord
496 Strathspey, James Lord. (Earl of Seafield)
324 Stuart of Castle Stuart, Francis James Lord. (Earl of Moray)
408 Sudeley, Charles Douglas Richard Lord

499 Sudley, Arthur Jocelyn Charles Lord. (Earl of Arran)

316 Suffield, Charles Lord

61 Suffolk and Berkshire, Henry Molyneux Paget Earl of

27 Sutherland, Cromartie Duke of

546 Swansea, Ernest Ambrose Lord

T

426 Talbot de Malahide, Richard Wogan Lord

91 Tankerville, George Montagu Earl of

154 Temple of Stowe, Algernon William Stephen Earl

390 Templemore, Henry Spencer Lord

210 Templetown, Henry Edward Montagu Dorington Clotworthy Viscount. (Elected for Ireland)

495 Tennyson, Hallam Lord

375 Tenterden, Charles Stuart Henry Lord

281 Teynham, Henry John Philip Sidney Lord

521 Thring, Henry Lord

321 Thurlow, Thomas John Lord

477 Tollemache, Bentley Lyonel John Lord

290 Torphichen, James Walter Lord. (Elected for Scotland)

203 Torrington, George Master Viscount

33 Townshend, John James Dudley Stuart Marquess

432 Tredegar, Godfrey Charles Lord

486 Trevor, Arthur William Lord

247 Truro, John Bishop of

489 Tweeddale, William Montagu Lord. (Marquess of Tweeddale)

494 Tweedmouth, Edward Lord

314 Tyrone, Henry De La Poer Lord. (Marquess of Waterford)

V

7 & 156 Vane, Charles Stewart Earl. (Marquess of Londonderry) (Lord President of the Council)

270 Vaux of Harrowden, Hubert George Charles Lord

342 Ventry, Dayrolles Blakeney Lord. (Elected for Ireland)

301 Vernon, George Francis Augustus Lord

145 Verulam, James Walter Earl of

417 Vivian, George Crespigny Brabazon Lord

W

257 Wakefield, George Rodney Bishop of

97 Waldegrave, William Frederick Earl

1 Wales, His Royal Highness The Prince of

306 Walsingham, Thomas Lord

555 Wandsworth, Sydney James Lord

552 Welby, Reginald Earle Lord

26 Wellington, Arthur Charles Duke of 364 Wemyss, Francis Richard Lord. (Earl of Wemyss)

412 Wenlock, Beilby Lord

271 Wentworth, Ralph Gordon Lord (In another place as Earl of Lovelace)

436 Westbury, Richard Luttrell Pilkington Lord

120 Westmeath, Anthony Francis Earl of. (Elected for Ireland)

28 Westminster, Hugh Richard Arthur Duke of

63 Westmorland, Anthony Mildmay Julian Earl of

181 Wharncliffe, Francis John Earl of

373 Wigan, James Ludovic Lord. (Earl of Crawford)

269 Willoughby de Broke, Richard Greville Lord

133 Wilton, Arthur George Earl of

483 Wimborne, Ivor Bertie Lord

31 Winchester, Henry William Montagu Marquess of

238 Winchester, Herbert Edward Bishop of

66 Winchilsea and Nottingham, Henry Stormont Earl of

273 Windsor, Robert George Lord

175 Winton, George Arnulph Earl of. (Earl of Eglintoun)

224 Wolseley, Garnet Joseph Viscount

460 Wolverton, Frederick Lord

398 Worlingham, Archibald Brabazon Sparrow Lord. (Earl of Gosford)

407 Wrottesley, Arthur Lord

380 Wynford, Philip George Lord

Y

166 Yarborough, Chas. Alfred Worsley Earl of

6 York, William Dalrymple Archbishop of

Z

52 Zetland, Lawrence Marquess of

265 Zouche of Haryngworth, Robert Nathaniel Cecil George Lord

The following Lords have Two Numbers, being Twice named in the Roll :

Earl of Halsbury, as Lord High Chancellor, and as Earl of Halsbury. (Nos. 5 and 195.)

Earl Vane (Marquess of Londonderry), as Lord President, and as Earl Vane (Marquess of Londonderry). (Nos. 7 and 156.)

Marquess of Salisbury, as Lord Privy Seal, and as Marquess of Salisbury. (Nos. 8 and 34.)

Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, as Lord Steward, and as Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery. (Nos. 54 and 59.)

Earl of Clarendon, as Lord Chamberlain, and as Earl of Clarendon. (Nos. 55 and 112.)

Earl of Lovelace, as Earl of Lovelace, and as Lord Wentworth. (Nos. 169 and 271.)

ROLL

OF THE

LORDS SPIRITUAL AND TEMPORAL

IN THE

SIXTH SESSION OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH PARLIAMENT

OF

THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

5 EDWARD VII. 1905.

MEM.—According to the Usage of Parliament, when the House appoints a Select Committee the Lords appointed to serve upon it are named in the Order of their Rank, beginning with the Highest; and so, when the House sends a Committee to a Conference with the Commons, the Lord highest in Rank is called first, and the rest go forth in like Order: But when the Whole House is called over for any Purpose, within the House, or for the Purpose of proceeding forth to Westminster Hall, or upon any public Solemnity, the Call begins invariably with the Junior Baron.

1 His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales.

2 His Royal Highness Arthur William Patrick Albert Duke of Connaught and Strathearn

3 His Royal Highness Leopold Charles Edward George Albert Duke of Albany

4 Randall Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury

5 Hardinge Stanley Earl of Halsbury Lord High Chancellor

6 William Dalrymple Archbishop of York

7 Charles Steward Earl VANE. (Marquess of Londonderry). Lord President of the Council.

8 James Edward Hubert Marquess of Salisbury, Lord Privy Seal.

9 Henry Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal of England

10 Algernon Duke of Somerset

11 Charles Henry Duke of Richmond

12 Augustus Charles Lennox Duke of Grafton

13 Henry Adelbert Wellington Fitzroy Duke of Beaufort

14 Charles Victor Albert Aubrey de Vere Duke of St. Albans

15 George Godolphin Duke of Leeds

16 Herbrand Arthur Duke of Bedford

17 Spencer Compton Duke of Devonshire.

18 Charles Richard John Duke of Marlborough

19 John James Robert Duke of Rutland

20 Alfred Douglas Duke of Brandon

21 William John Arthur Charles James Duke of Portland

22 William Angus Drogo Duke of Manchester

23 Henry Pelham Archibald Douglas Duke of Newcastle

24 Henry George Duke of Northumberland

25 His Royal Highness Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale

26 Arthur Charles Duke of Wellington

27 Cromartie Duke of Sutherland

28 Hugh Richard Arthur Duke of Westminster

29 Alexander William George Duke of Fife

30 John Douglas Sutherland Duke of Argyll

31 Henry William Montagu Marquess of Winchester

32 Henry Charles Keith Marquess of Lansdowne

33 John James Dudley Stuart Marquess Townshend

34 James Edward Hubert Marquess Salisbury. (In another place as Lord Privy Seal.)

35 Thomas Henry Marquess of Bath

36 James Marquess of Abercorn (Duke of Abercorn)

37 Hugh de Grey Marquess of Hertford

38 John Marquess of Bute

39 William Thomas Brownlow Marquess of Exeter

40 William George Spencer Scott Marquess of Northampton

41 John Charles Marquess Camden

42 Henry Cyril Marquess of Anglesey

43 George Henry Hugh Marquess of Cholmondeley.

44 Henry Augustus Marquess of Ailesbury

45 Frederick William John Marquess of Bristol

46 Archibald Marquess of Ailsa

47 Constantine Charles Henry Marquess of Normanby

48 George Frederick Samuel Marquess of Ripon

49 William Marquess of Abergavenny

50 Gavin Marquess of Breadalbane

51 Terence John Temple Marquess of Dufferin and Ava

52 Lawrence Marquess of Zetland

53 John Adrian Louis Marquess of Linlithgow

54 Sidney Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, Lord Steward of the Household

55 Edward Hyde Earl of Clarendon, Lord Chamberlain of the Household

56 Charles Henry John Earl of Shrewsbury

57 Frederick Arthur Earl of Derby

58 Warner Francis John Plantagenet Earl of Huntingdon

59 Sidney Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery. (In another place as Lord Steward of the Household)

60 Charles Pepys Earl of Devon

61 Henry Molyneux Paget Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire

62 Rudolph Robert Basil Aloysius Augustine Earl of Denbigh

63 Anthony Mildmay Julian Earl of Westmorland

64 Montague Peregrine Albemarle Earl of Lindsey

65 William Earl of Stamford

66 Henry Stormont Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham

67 Edwyn Francis Earl of Chesterfield

68 Edward George Henry Earl of Sandwich

69 George Devereux de Vere Earl of Essex

70 George James Earl of Carlisle

71 William Henry Walter Earl of Doncaster. (Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry)

72 Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury
73 Randal Mowbray Thomas Earl of Berkeley
74 Montagu Arthur Earl of Abingdon
75 Aldred Frederick George Beresford Earl of Scarborough
76 Arnold Allan Cecil Earl of Albemarle
77 George William Earl of Coventry
78 Victor Albert George Earl of Jersey
79 William John Lydston Earl Poulett
80 John Francis Erskine Earl of Mar. (Elected for Scotland)
81 Sholto George Watson Earl of Morton. (Elected for Scotland)
82 Walter John Francis Earl of Mar and Kellie. (Elected for Scotland)
83 George Earl of Haddington. (Elected for Scotland)
84 Frederick Henry Earl of Lauderdale. (Elected for Scotland)
85 Robert Harris Carnwath Earl of Carnwath. (Elected for Scotland)
86 Ronald Ruthven Earl of Leven and Melville. (Elected for Scotland)
87 David John Earl of Northesk. (Elected for Scotland)
88 Douglas Mackinnon Baillie Hamilton Earl of Dundonald. (Elected for Scotland)
89 Sewallis Edward Earl Ferrers
90 William Heneage Earl of Dartmouth
91 George Montagu Earl of Tankerville
92 Charles Wightwick Earl of Aylesford
93 Francis Thomas De Grey Earl Cowper
94 Arthur Philip Earl Stanhope
95 George Loveden William Henry Earl of Macclesfield
96 Douglas Beresford Malise Ronald Earl Graham. (Duke of Montrose)
97 William Frederick Earl Waldegrave
98 Bertram Earl of Ashburnham
99 Charles Augustus Earl of Harrington
100 Newton Earl of Portsmouth
101 Francis Richard Charles Guy Earl Brooke and Earl of Warwick
102 Sidney Carr Earl of Buckinghamshire
103 William Charles De Meuron Earl Fitzwilliam
104 Frederick George Earl of Guilford
105 John Manners Earl of Hardwicke
106 Henry Edward Earl of Ilchester
107 Gilbert George Reginald Earl De La Warr
108 Jacob Earl of Radnor
109 John Poyntz Earl Spencer
110 Seymour Henry Earl Bathurst
111 Arthur Wills John Wellington Trumbull Blundell Earl of Hillsborough. (Marquess of Downshire)
112 Edward Hyde Earl of Clarendon. (In another place as Lord Chamberlain of the Household)
113 William David Earl of Mansfield
114 John James Hugh Henry Earl Strange. (Duke of Atholl)
115 William Henry Earl of Mount Edgcumbe
116 Hugh Earl Fortescue
117 George Edward Stanhope Molyneux Earl of Carnarvon
118 George Henry Earl Cadogan
119 James Edward Earl of Malmesbury
120 Anthony Francis Earl of Westmeath. (Elected for Ireland)
121 Ponsonby William Earl of Drogheda (Elected for Ireland)
122 John Vansittart Danvers Earl of Lanesborough. (Elected for Ireland)
123 Dermot Robert Wyndham Earl of Mayo. (Elected for Ireland)
124 Hugh Earl Annesley. (Elected for Ireland)
125 George Earl of Lucan. (Elected for Ireland)
126 Somerset Richard Earl of Belmore (Elected for Ireland)
127 James Francis Earl of Bandon (Elected for Ireland)
128 James Francis Harry Earl of Rosslyn
129 William George Robert Earl of Craven
130 William Hillier Earl of Onslow

131 Charles Earl of Romney

132 Francis Godolphin Earl of Chichester

133 Arthur George Earl of Wilton

134 George Charles Earl of Powis

135 Horatio Earl Nelson

136 Lawrence Earl of Rosse. (Elected for Ireland)

137 Charles William Sydney Earl Manvers

138 Robert Horace Earl of Orford

139 Albert Henry George Earl Grey

140 Hugh Cecil Earl of Lonsdale

141 John Herbert Dudley Earl of Harrowby

142 Henry Ulick Earl of Harewood

143 Gilbert John Earl of Minto

144 Alan Frederick Earl Cathcart

145 James Walter Earl of Verulam

146 Adelbert Wellington Brownlow Earl Brownlow

147 Henry Cornwallis Earl of St Germans

148 Albert Edmund Earl of Morley

149 George Cecil Orlando Earl of Bradford

150 William Earl Beauchamp

151 John Earl of Eldon

152 Richard George Penn Earl Howe

153 George Edward John Mowbray Earl of Stradbroke

154 Algernon William Stephen Earl Temple of Stowe

155 Francis Charles Earl of Kilmorey (Elected for Ireland)

156 Charles Stewart Earl Vane. (Marquess of Londonderry.) In another place as Lord President of the Council).

157 William Archer Earl Amherst

158 Frederick Archibald Vaughan Earl Cawdor

159 Aubrey Earl of Munster

160 Robert Adam Philips Haldane Earl of Camperdown

161 Thomas Francis Earl of Lichfield

162 John George Earl of Durham

163 Granville George Earl Granville

164 Henry Alexander Gordon Earl of Effingham

165 Henry John Earl of Ducie

166 Charles Alfred Worsley Earl of Yarborough

167 Henry John Earl Innes. (Duke of Roxburghe)

168 Thomas William Earl of Leicester

169 Ralph Gordon Earl of Lovelace

170 Charles William Francis Earl of Gainsborough

171 Francis Charles Granville Earl of Ellesmere

172 Francis Edmund Cecil Earl of Strafford

173 Kenelm Charles Edward Earl of Cottenham

174 Henry Arthur Mornington Earl Cowley

175 George Arnulph Earl of Winton (Earl of Eglintoun)

176 William Humble Earl of Dudley

177 John Francis Stanley Earl Russell

178 John Earl of Kimberley

179 Vesey Earl of Dartrey

180 William Ernest Earl of Feversham

181 Francis John Earl of Wharncliffe

182 Francis George Earl of Northbrook

183 Wilfrid Dallas Earl Cairns

184 Victor Alexander George Robert Earl of Lytton

185 Edward George Earl of Lathom

186 George Edward Earl Sondes

187 William Waldegrave Earl of Selborne

188 Walter Stafford Earl of Iddesleigh

189 William Francis Henry Earl of Londesborough

190 Gathorne Earl of Cranbrook

191 Gilbert Henry Earl of Ancaster

192 Charles Robert Earl Carrington

193 Robert Offley Ashburton Earl of Crewe

194 Wilbraham Earl Egerton

195 Hardinge Stanley Earl of Halsbury. (In another place as Lord High Chancellor)

196 Frederick Sleigh Earl Roberts

197 Evelyn Earl of Cromer

198 Robert Viscount Hereford

199 Byron Plantagenet Viscount Falkland. (Elected for Scotland)

200 ——— Viscount Bolingbroke and St. John

201 Charles George Viscount Cobham
202 Evelyn Edward Thomas Viscount Falmouth
203 George Master Viscount Torrington
204 Maurice Viscount Leinster. (Duke of Leinster)
205 Francis Wheler Viscount Hood
206 Henry William Crosbie Viscount Bangor. (Elected for Ireland)
207 Carnegie Parker Viscount St. Vincent
208 Charles Saunders Viscount Melville
209 William Wells Viscount Sidmouth
210 Henry Edward Montagu Dorington Clotworthy Viscount Templetown. (Elected for Ireland)
211 John Campbell Viscount Gordon (Earl of Aberdeen)
212 Edward Addington Hargreaves Viscount Exmouth
213 Richard Walter John Viscount Hutchinson. (Earl of Donoughmore)
214 William Frederick Viscount Clancarty. (Earl of Clancarty)
215 Francis Lynch Wellington Viscount Combermere
216 Henry Charles Viscount Canterbury
217 Rowland Richard Viscount Hill
218 Henry Charles Viscount Hardinge
219 Hugh Viscount Gough
220 Charles Lindley Viscount Halifax
221 Arthur Wellington Alexander Nelson Viscount Bridport
222 William Henry Berkeley Viscount Portman
223 Henry Robert Viscount Hampden
224 Garnet Joseph Viscount Wolseley
225 Richard Assheton Viscount Cross
226 Arthur Wellesley Viscount Peel
227 Henry Thurstan Viscount Knutsford
228 Henry Viscount Llandaff
229 Reginald Baliol Viscount Esher
230 George Joachim Viscount Goschen
231 Matthew White Viscount Ridley
232 Horatio Herbert Viscount Kitchener of Khartoum and of the Vaal
233 Charles Robert William Viscount Colville of Culross.
234 Victor Albert Francis Charles Viscount Churchill
235 Alfred Viscount Milner
236 Arthur Foley Bishop of London
237 Handley Carr Glyn Bishop of Durham
238 Herbert Edward Bishop of Winchester
239 Charles John Bishop of Gloucester
240 Ernest Roland Bishop of Chichester
241 William Boyd Bishop of Ripon
242 Edward Bishop of Lincoln
243 John Bishop of Salisbury
244 Alwyne Bishop of Ely
245 Francis John Bishop of Chester
246 Alfred George Bishop of St. Asaph
247 John Bishop of Truro
248 Augustus Bishop of Lichfield
249 John Bishop of Norwich
250 George Wyndham Bishop of Bath and Wells
251 John Bishop of Hereford
252 Edward Stuart Bishop of Rochester
253 Edgar Bishop of St. Albans
254 Edward Carr Bishop of Peterborough
255 John Bishop of St. David's
256 George Forrest Bishop of Bristol.
257 George Rodney Bishop of Wakefield
258 Watkin Herbert Bishop of Bangor
259 Francis James Bishop of Liverpool
260 Dudley Charles Lord de Ros.
261 Charles Botolph Joseph Lord Mowbray
262 Albert Edward Delaval Lord Hastings
263 Jack Southwell Lord de Clifford
264 Charles John Robert Lord Clinton
265 Robert Nathaniel Cecil George Lord Zouche of Haryngworth
266 Rawdon George Grey Lord Grey de Ruthyn
267 Charles Edward Hastings Lord Botreaux. (Earl of Loudoun)
268 Ralph Francis Julian Lord Camoys
269 Richard Greville Lord Willoughby de Broke

270 Hubert George Charles Lord Vaux of Harrowden
271 Ralph Gordon Lord Wentworth. (In another place as Earl of Lovelace)
272 Alfred Thomas Townshend Lord Braye
273 Robert George Lord Windsor
274 William Henry John Lord North
275 Beauchamp Moubray Lord St. John of Bletso
276 Thomas Evelyn Lord Howard de Walden
277 Bernard Henry Philip Lord Petre
278 John Fiennes Lord Saye and Sele
279 John Francis Lord Arundell of Wardour
280 Ronald John Lord Dormer
281 Henry John Philip Sidney Lord Teynham
282 Fitzherbert Lord Stafford
283 George Frederick William Lord Byron
284 Lewis Henry Hugh Lord Clifford of Chudleigh
285 Henry John Brinsley Lord Manners of Haddon. (Marquess of Granby)
286 Henry de Vere Lord Barnard
287 Horace Courtenay Gammell Lord Forbes. (Elected for Scotland)
288 Alexander William Frederick Lord Saltoun. (Elected for Scotland)
289 Charles William Lord Sinclair. (Elected for Scotland)
290 James Walter Lord Torphichen. (Elected for Scotland)
291 Alexander Hugh Lord Balfour of Burley. (Elected for Scotland)
292 Alexander Charles Lord Belhaven and Stenton. (Elected for Scotland)
293 Charles Spencer Canning Lord Boyle. (Earl of Cork and Orrery)
294 Archibald Fitzroy George Lord Hay. (Earl of Kinnoul)
295 Digby Wentworth Bayard Lord Middleton
296 Augustus Debonnaire John Lord Monson
297 Walter William Brabazon Lord Ponsonby. (Earl of Bessborough)
298 Alfred Nathaniel Holden Lord Scarsdale
299 George Florance Lord Boston
300 Augustus Arthur Lord Lovel and Holland. (Earl of Egmont)
301 George Francis Augustus Lord Vernon
302 Edward Henry Trafalgar Lord Digby
303 Martin Bladen Lord Hawke
304 Henry Thomas Lord Foley
305 Arthur de Cardonnel Lord Dinevor
306 Thomas Lord Walsingham
307 William Lord Bagot
308 Charles Henry Lord Southampton
309 John Richard Brinsley Lord Grantley
310 George Bridges Harley Dennett Lord Rodney
311 Arthur Herbert Tennyson Lord Somers
312 Richard Henry Lord Berwick
313 Edward Lennox Lord Sherborne
314 Henry De La Poer Lord Tyrone (Marquess of Waterford)
315 Richard Henry Lord Carleton. (Earl of Shannon)
316 Charles Lord Suffield
317 Lloyd Lord Kenyon
318 Henry Lord Braybrooke
319 Edward Arthur Donald St. George Lord Fisherwick. (Marquess of Donegall)
320 Henry Charles Lord Gage. (Viscount Gage)
321 Thomas John Lord Thurlow
322 William Morton Lord Auckland
323 Thomas Charles Lord Mendip, (Viscount Clifden)
324 Francis James Lord Stuart of Castle Stuart. (Earl of Moray)
325 Randolph Henry Lord Stewart of Garlies. (Earl of Galloway)
326 James George Henry Lord Saltersford. (Earl of Courtown)
327 William Lord Brodrick. (Viscount Midleton)
328 Augustus Cholmondeley Lord Calthorpe
329 Peter Robert Lord Gwydir
330 William Thomas Lord Bolton

331 John Lord Lilford
332 Thomas Lord Ribblesdale
333 Robert St. John FitzWalter Lord Dunboyne. (Elected for Ireland)
334 Lucius William Lord Inchiquin. (Elected for Ireland)
335 John Thomas William Lord Massy. (Elected for Ireland)
336 Hamilton Matthew Fitzmaurice Lord Muskerry. (Elected for Ireland)
337 Francis William Lord Kilmaine. (Elected for Ireland)
338 Luke Gerald Lord Clonbrock (Elected for Ireland)
339 Charles Mark Lord Headley. (Elected for Ireland)
340 Edward Henry Churchill Lord Crofton. (Elected for Ireland)
341 Hercules Edward Lord Langford (Elected for Ireland)
342 Dayrolles Blakeney Lord Ventry (Elected for Ireland)
343 Henry O'Callaghan Lord Dunalley. (Elected for Ireland)
344 John Henry Lord Loftus. (Marquess of Ely)
345 William Lord Carysfort. (Earl of Carysfort)
346 George Ralph Lord Abercromby
347 Edward Downes Lord Ellenborough
348 Michael Edwin Marcus Lord Sandys
349 Henry North Lord Sheffield. (Earl of Sheffield)
350 William Macnaghten Lord Erskine
351 Henry Ulick Lord Monteagle (Marquess of Sligo)
352 Bernard Arthur William Patrick Hastings Lord Granard. (Earl of Granard)
353 ———————— Lord Gardner
354 John Thomas Lord Manners
355 Albert Edward Lord Castlemaine (Elected for Ireland)
356 Charles Lord Meldrum. (Marquess of Huntly)
357. Lowry Egerton Lord Grinstead. (Earl of Enniskillen)
358 William Henry Edmond de Vere Sheaffe Lord Foxford. (Earl of Limerick)
359 George Robert Canning Lord Harris
360 Reginald Charles Edward Lord Colchester
361 Robert Schomberg Lord Ker. (Marquess of Lothian)
362 Victor George Henry Francis Lord Minster. (Marquess Conyngham)
363 James Edward William Theobald Lord Ormonde. (Marquess of Ormonde)
364 Francis Richard Lord Wemyss. (Earl of Wemyss)
365 Thomas Lord Silchester. (Earl of Longford)
366 Clotworthy John Eyre Lord Oriel. (Viscount Massereene)
367 Arthur Thomas Lord Ravensworth
368 Hugh Lord Delamere
369 Cecil Theodore Lord Forester
370 John William Lord Rayleigh
371 Edric Frederic Lord Gifford
372 Hubert George Lord Somerhill (Marquess of Clanricarde)
373 James Ludovic Lord Wigan. (Earl of Crawford)
374 Uchter John Mark Lord Ranfurly. (Earl of Ranfurly)
375 Charles Stuart Henry Lord Tenterden
376 William Lee Lord Plunket
377 Leonard Lord Heytesbury
378 Archibald Philip Lord Rosebery. (Earl of Rosebery)
379 Richard James Lord Clanwilliam. (Earl of Clanwilliam)
380 Philip George Lord Wynford
381 Charles Gore Lord Kilmarnock. (Earl of Erroll)
382 Arthur James Francis Lord Fingall. (Earl of Fingall)
383 Osbert Cecil Lord Sefton. (Earl of Sefton)
384 Charles Lord Clements. (Earl of Leitrim)
385 Geoffrey Thomas Lord Kenlis. (Marquess of Headfort)
386 Reginald Lord Chaworth. (Earl of Meath)
387 Charles Adolphus Lord Dunmore. (Earl of Dunmore)

388 Augustus Frederick George Warwick Lord Poltimore

389 Llewelyn Nevill Vaughan Lord Mostyn

390 Henry Spencer Lord Templemore

391 Valentine Frederick Lord Cloncurry

392 James St. Vincent Lord de Saumarez

393 Thomas Lord Denman

394 Shelley Leopold Laurence Lord Abinger

395 Philip Lord De L'Isle and Dudley

396 Francis Denzil Edward Lord Ashburton

397 Edward George Percy Lord Hatherton

398 Archibald Brabazon Sparrow Lord Worlingham. (Earl of Gosford)

399 Hallyburton George Lord Stratheden

400 Geoffrey Henry Browne Lord Oranmore and Browne. (Elected for Ireland).

401 Simon Joseph Lord Lovat

402 William Spencer Lord Bateman

403 Algernon Hawkins Thomond Lord Kintore. (Earl of Kintore)

404 Derrick Warner William Lord Rossmore

405 Robert Shapland George Julian Lord Carew

406 William Ashley Webb Lord De Mauley

407 Arthur Lord Wrottesley

408 Charles Douglas Richard Lord Sudeley

409 Paul Sanford Lord Methuen

410 Edward Lyulph Lord Stanley of Alderley

411 William Henry Lord Leigh

412 Beilby Lord Wenlock

413 William Lord Lurgan

414 Thomas Spring Lord Monteagle of Brandon

415 John Reginald Upton Lord Seaton

416 John Hew North Gustave Henry Lord Oxenfoord. (Earl of Stair)

417 George Crespigny Brabazon Lord Vivian

418 Henry Lord Congleton

419 Charles Bertram Lord Bellew. (Elected for Ireland)

420 Victor Alexander Lord Elgin (Earl of Elgin and Kincardine)

421 Arthur Lord de Freyne

422 Edward Burtenshaw Lord Saint Leonards

423 George Fitz-Roy Henry Lord Raglan

424 Valentine Charles Lord Kenmare. (Earl of Kenmare)

425 Henry Lord Belper

426 Richard Wogan Lord Talbot de Malahide

427 Robert Wellesley Lord Ebury

428 Charles Compton William Lord Chesham

429 Frederic Augustus Lord Chelmsford

430 John Lord Churston

431 Charles Henry Lord Leconfield

432 Godfrey Charles Lord Tredegar

433 Courtenay Robert Percy Lord Lyveden

434 Henry Charles Lord Brougham and Vaux

435 Arthur Fitz-Gerald Lord Kinnaird

436 Richard Luttrell Pilkington Lord Westbury

437 Charles Paget Fitzhardinge Lord Fitzhardinge

438 Luke Lord Annaly

439 John Gaspard Le Marchant Lord Romilly

440 James Herbert Gustavus Meredyth Lord Meredyth. (Lord Athlumney)

441 Windham Thomas Lord Kenry. (Earl of Dunraven and Mount-Earl)

442 Henry Power Charles Stanley Lord Monck. (Viscount Monck)

443 Charles Henry Chandos Lord Hartismere. (Lord Henniker)

444 Hylton George Hylton Lord Hylton

445 George Sholto Gordon Lord Penrhyn

446 Gustavus Russell Lord Brancepeth. (Viscount Boyne)

447 John Henry Lord Kesteven

448 Arthur Lord Ormathwaite

449 Edward Lord O'Neill

450 Robert William Lord Napier
451 Jenico William Joseph Lord Gormanston. (Viscount Gormanston)
452 Thomas Kane Lord Rathdonnell. (Elected for Ireland)
453 John Hamilton Lord Lawrence
454 John Lord Dunning. (Lord Rollo)
455 James Lord Balinhard. (Earl of Southesk)
456 William Lord Hare. (Earl of Listowel)
457 Francis Edward Lord Howard of Glossop
458 Bernard Edward Barnaby Lord Castletown
459 Richard Maximilian Lord Acton
460 Frederick Lord Wolverton
461 Algernon William Fulke Lord Greville
462 Maurice Herbert Ignatius Towneley Lord O'Hagan
463 William Lord Sandhurst
464 William John George Lord Ettrick. (Lord Napier)
465 Sidney James Lord Somerton. (Earl of Normanton)
466 Henry Campbell Lord Aberdare
467 Henry James Lord Moncrieff
468 Bernard John Seymour Lord Coleridge
469 Thomas William Gaston Lord Emly
470 Thomas Francis Lord Cottesloe
471 Herbert Perrott Murray Lord Hampton
472 Charles Alexander Lord Douglas (Earl of Home)
473 Arthur George Maule Lord Ramsay (Earl of Dalhousie)
474 John Henry Lord Fermanagh. (Earl Erne)
475 George Ralph Charles Lord Harlech
476 Humphrey Napier Lord Alington
477 Bentley Lyonel John Lord Tollemache
478 Frederic John Lord Gerard
479 Lionel Sackville Lord Sackville
480 Charles Bowyer Lord Norton
481 Walter Bulkeley Lord Shute. (Viscount Barrington)
482 Lawrence William Lord Haldon
483 Ivor Bertie Lord Wimborne
484 Arthur Edward Lord Ardilaun
485 Charles Wallace Alexander Napier Lord Lamington
486 Arthur William Lord Trevor
487 Edward Lord Brabourne
488 Arthur Oliver Villiers Lord Ampthill
489 William Montagu Lord Tweeddale. (Marquess of Tweeddale)
490 William Ulick Tristram Lord Howth. (Earl of Howth)
491 Donald James Lord Reay
492 Harcourt Lord Derwent
493 Henry James Lord Hothfield
494 Edward Lord Tweedmouth
495 Hallam Lord Tennyson
496 James Lord Strathspey. (Earl of Seafield)
497 John William Lord Monk Bretton
498 Walter Henry Lord Northbourne
499 Arthur Jocelyn Charles Lord Sudley. (Earl of Arran)
500 Marmaduke Francis Lord Herries
501 Mervyn Richard Lord Powerscourt
502 Frederick Lord Northington. (Lord Henley)
503 Nathaniel Mayer Lord Rothschild
504 John Lord Revelstoke
505 Robert Lord Monkswell
506 Ralph Robert Wheeler Lord Lingen
507 Edward Lord Ashbourne
508 Rowland Lord Saint Oswald
509 Robert Wilfrid Lord Deramore
510 Henry John Lord Montagu of Beaulieu
511 Sidney Herbert Lord Elphinstone
512 Richard Farrer Lord Herschell
513 Charles William Lord Hillingdon
514 Charles Lord Hindlip
515 Edmund Lord Grimthorpe
516 Richard de Aquila Lord Stalbridge
517 Hugh Lord Kensington
518 Michael Arthur Lord Burton
519 Gavin George Lord Hamilton of Dalzell
520 Thomas Lord Brassey

521 Henry Lord Thring

522 Edward Lord Macnaghten. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)

523 Claude George Lord Bowes. (Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorn)

524 George Edmund Milnes Lord Monckton. (Viscount Galway)

525 John Lord Saint Levan

526 Dudley Stuart Lord Magheramorne

527 George Limbrey Lord Basing

528 William Henry Lord de Ramsey

529 Herbert Francis Lord Cheylesmore

530 Egerton Lord Addington

531 John Savile Lord Savile

532 William Ventris Lord Field

533 Edward Cecil Lord Iveagh

534 George Lord Mount Stephen

535 Samuel Lord Masham

536 William Lord Kelvin

537 George Lord Ashcombe

538 Archibald Campbell Lord Blythswood

539 Thomas Lord Crawshaw

540 William Amhurst Lord Amherst of Hackney

541 Thomas Wodehouse Lord Newton

542 Henry Lyle Lord Dunleath

543 John Allan Lord Llangattock

544 George James Lord Playfair

545 Cyril Lord Battersea

546 Ernest Ambrose Lord Swansea

547 Thomas Cecil Lord Farrer

548 John Campbell Lord Overtoun

549 Cecil George Savile Lord Hawkesbury

550 Arthur Lord Stanmore

551 Stuart Lord Rendel

552 Reginald Earle Lord Welby

553 Horace Lord Davey. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)

554 Edward Douglas Lord Loch

555 Sydney James Lord Wandsworth

556 James Lord Ashton

557 Herbert Coulstoun Lord Burghclere

558 Henry Lord James

559 David Robert Lord Rathmore

560 Algernon Lord Glenesk

561 Henry Hucks Lord Aldenham

562 Edward Lord Heneage

563 Hercules Arthur Temple Lord Rosmead

564 Alexander Smith Lord Kinnear

565 Joseph Lord Lister

566 David Lord Fairlie. (Earl of Glasgow)

567 Hugh Richard Lord Dawnay. (Viscount Downe)

568 Henry Ludlow Lord Ludlow

569 Hans Wellesley Lord Holm Patrick

570 George Arbuthnot Lord Inverclyde

571 Donald Alexander Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal

572 William Wallace Lord Newlands

573 Horace Brand Lord Farquhar

574 Josslyn Francis Lord Muncaster

575 Arthur Lawrence Lord Haliburton

576 Philip Henry Wodehouse Lord Currie

577 Joseph Russell Lord Glanusk

578 Henry Lord Brampton

579 Bertram Francis Lord Cranworth

580 James Patrick Bannerman Lord Robertson. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)

581 Henry Stafford Lord Northcote

582 John Lord Avebury

583 Nathaniel Lord Lindley. (A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary)

584 Martin Henry Lord Killanin.

585 Peter Lord O'Brien

586 Richard Everard Lord Alverstone

587 Patrick Lord Kinross

588 Ughtred James Lord Shuttleworth

589 William Lawies Lord Allerton

590 Arthur Hugh Lord Barrymore

591 Francis Wallace Lord Grenfell

592 Francis Lord Knollys

593 Algernon Bertram Lord Redesdale

594 Edward Levy Lord Burnham.

595 Michael Lord Biddulph.

596 George Thomas John Lord Estcourt

597* William Henry Armstrong Fitz-Patrick Lord Armstrong.

---

* This number is in excess of the total Number of Lords Spiritual and Temporal, the Discrepancy being caused by the following Lords being twice named in the Roll :

Earl of Halsbury as Lord High Chancellor and as Earl of Halsbury (Nos. 5 and 195)

Earl Vane (Marquess of Londonderry) as Lord President and as Earl Vane (Marquess of Londonderry). (Nos. 7 and 156.)

Marquess of Salisbury as Lord Privy Seal and as Marquess of Salisbury. (Nos. 8 and 34.)

Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery as Lord Steward and as Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery (Nos. 54 and 59)

Earl of Clarendon as Lord Chamberlain and as Earl of Clarendon (Nos. 55 and 112)

Earl of Lovelace as Earl of Lovelace and as Lord Wentworth (Nos. 169 and 271)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF MEMBERS

IN THE

SIXTH SESSION OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH PARLIAMENT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND AND THE FIFTH OF KING EDWARD VII.

(Compiled at the Opening of the Session.)

A

Abraham, William (Glamorgan, Rhondda)
Abraham, William (Cork Co., N.E.)
Acland-Hood, Captain Sir A., Bt. (Somerset, Wellington)
Agg-Gardner, James T. (Cheltenham)
Agnew, Sir Andrew N., Bt. (Edinburgh, South)
Ainsworth, John S. (Argyll)
Aird, Sir John (Paddington, N.)
Allen, Charles P. (Gloucester, Stroud)
Allhusen, Aug. Henry E. (Hackney, Central)
Allsopp, Hon. George H. (Worcester)
Ambrose, Robert (Mayo, West)
Anson, Sir William R., Bt. (Oxford University)
Arkwright, John S. (Hereford)
Arnold-Forster, Hugh O. (Belfast, West)
Arrol, Sir William (Ayrshire, South)
Asher, Alexander (Elgin Burghs)
Ashton, Thomas Gair (Beds., Luton)
Asquith, Rt. Hon. Herbert H. (Fife, East)
Atherley-Jones, Llewellyn (Durham, N.W.)
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John (Londonderry, North)
Aubrey-Fletcher, Rt. Hon. Sir H. (Sussex, Lewes)
Austin, Sir John, Bt. (York, W.R., Osgoldcross)

B

Bagot, Captain Josceline F. (Westmoreland, Kendal)
Bailey, James (Newington, Walworth)
Bain, Colonel James Robert (Cumberland, Egremont)
Baird, John G. A. (Glasgow, Central)
Balcarres, Lord (Lancashire, Chorley)
Baldwin, Alfred (Worcester, Bewdley)
Balfour, Rt. Hon. Arthur J. (Manchester, East)
Balfour, Captain Charles B. (Middlesex, Hornsey)
Balfour, Rt. Hon. Gerald William (Leeds, Central)
Balfour, K. R. (Christchurch)
Banbury, Sir Fred. George (Camberwell, Peckham)
Banes, Major George E. (West Ham, South)
Barlow, John Emmott (Somerset, Frome)
Barran, Rowland Hirst (Leeds, North)
Barry, Edward (Cork Co., South)
Barry, Sir Francis Tress, Bt. (Windsor)
Bartley, Sir George C. T. (Islington, N.)
Bathurst, Hon. Allen B. (Gloucester, Cirencester)
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire, Chesterfield)
Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. Hicks, Bt. (Bristol, W.)

Beaumont, Wentworth C.B. (Northumberland, Hexham)

Beckett, Ernest W. (York, N.R., Whitby)

Bell, Richard (Derby)

Benn, John Williams (Devonport)

Bentinck, Lord Henry C. (Nottingham, S.)

Bhownaggree, Sir M. M. (Bethnal Green, N.E.)

Bignold, A. (Wick Burghs)

Bigwood, James (Middlesex, Brentford)

Bill, Charles (Staffordshire, Leek)

Bingham, Lord (Surrey, Chertsey)

Black, Alexander W. (Banffshire)

Blake, Edward (Longford, S.)

Blundell, Colonel H. B. H. (Lancashire, Ince)

Boland, John (Kerry, South)

Bolton, Thomas Dolling (Derbyshire, N. East)

Bond, Edward (Nottingham, E.)

Boscawen, Capt. A. S. T. Griffith (Kent, Tunbridge)

Boulnois, Edmund (Marylebone, E.)

Bousfield, William R. (Hackney, N.)

Bowles, Colonel Henry F. (Middlesex, Enfield)

Bowles, Thomas Gibson (King's Lynn)

Brand, Hon. Arthur G. (Cambridge, Wisbech)

Brassey, Albert (Oxon, Banbury)

Brigg, John (York, W.R., Keighley)

Bright, Allan Heywood (Shropshire, Oswestry)

Broadhurst, Henry (Leicester)

Brodrick, Rt. Hon. W. St. John F. (Surrey, Guildford)

Brotherton, Edward Allen (Wakefield)

Brown, Sir Alex. Hargreaves (Shropshire, Wellington)

Brown, George M. (Edinburgh, Central)

Brunner, Sir John T., Bt. (Cheshire, Northwich)

Bryce, Rt. Hon. James (Aberdeen, South)

Brymer, Col. W. Ernest (Dorset, South)

Buchanan, Thomas R. (Perthshire, E.)

Bull, William James (Hammersmith)

Burdett-Coutts, W. L. A. B. (Westminster)

Burke, E. Haviland (King's County, Tullamore)

Burns, John (Battersea)

Burt, Thomas (Morpeth)

Butcher, John George (York)

Buxton, Sydney Charles (Tower Hamlets, Poplar)

C

Caldwell, James (Lanark, Mid.)

Cameron, Robert (Durham, Houghton-le-Spring)

Campbell, Rt. Hon. James A. (Glasgow and Aberdeen Universities)

Campbell, J. (Armagh, South)

Campbell, James H.M. (Dublin University)

Campbell-Bannerman, Rt. Hon. Sir H. (Stirling Burghs)

Carlile, William Walter (Bucks, N.)

Carson, Rt. Hon. Sir Edward H. (Dublin University)

Carvill, Patrick G. H. (Newry)

Causton, Richard Knight (Southwark, West)

Cautley, Henry S. (Leeds, East)

Cavendish, Richard F. (Lancashire, North Lonsdale)

Cavendish, Victor C. W. (Derbyshire, West)

Cawley, Frederick (Lancs, Prestwich)

Cayzer, Sir Charles W. (Barrow-in-Furness)

Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)

Cecil, Lord Hugh Richard H. (Greenwich)

Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Birmingham, W.)

Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. Austen (Worcestershire, East)

Chamberlayne, T. (Southampton)

Channing, Francis A. (Northampton, East)

Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry (Lincolnshire, Sleaford)

Chapman, Edward (Cheshire, Hyde)

Cheetham, John Frederick (Stalybridge)

Churchill, Winston L. S. (Oldham)

Clancy, John J. (Dublin Co., North)

Clare, Octavius Leigh (Lancashire, Eccles)

Clive, Capt. Percy Archer (Herefordshire, Ross)

Coates, Major E. F. (Lewisham)

Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. (Ayrshire, North)

Coddington, Sir William, Bt. (Blackburn)

Cogan, Denis J. (Wicklow, East)

Coghill, Douglas H. (Stoke-upon-Trent)

Cohen, Benjamin L. (Islington, E.)
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse (Birmingham, Bordesley)
Colomb, Sir John C. R. (Great Yarmouth)
Colston, Charles Edward H. A. (Gloucester, Thornbury)
Compton, Lord Alwyne F. (Beds, Biggleswade)
Condon, Thomas J. (Tipperary, E.)
Cook, Sir Frederick Lucas, Bt. (Lambeth, Kennington)
Corbett, Arch. Cameron (Glasgow, Tradeston)
Corbett, T. L. (Down, North)
Cox, Irwin Edward B. (Middlesex, Harrow)
Craig, Charles Curtis (Antrim, South)
Craig, R. Hunter (Lanark, Govan)
Crean, Eugene (Cork, S.E.)
Cremer, William R. (Shoreditch, Haggerston)
Cripps, Charles A. (Lancashire, Stretford)
Crombie, John William (Kincardineshire)
Crooks, William (Woolwich)
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow, Camlachie)
Cross, Herbert Shepherd (Bolton)
Crossley, Sir Savile B., Bt. (Halifax)
Cubitt, Hon. Henry (Surrey, Reigate)
Cullinan, J. (Tipperary, South)
Cust, Henry J. C. (Southwark, Bermondsey)

D

Dalkeith, Earl of (Roxburgh)
Dalrymple, Sir Charles, Bt. (Ipswich)
Dalziel, James H. (Kirkcaldy Burghs)
Davenport, William Bromley (Cheshire, Macclesfield)
Davies, A. (Carmarthen Boroughs)
Davies, Col. Sir Horatio David (Chatham)
Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan)
Delany, William (Queen's Co., Ossory)
Denny, Colonel John M. (Kilmarnock Burghs)
Delvin, Charles R. (Galway)
Devlin, Joseph (Kilkenny, North)
Dewar, John A. (Inverness)
Dewar, Sir Thomas R. (Tower Hamlets, St. George's)
Dickinson, Robert E. (Somerset, Wells)
Dickson, Charles Scott (Glasgow, Bridgton)
Dickson-Poynder, Sir J., Bt. (Wilts, Chippenham)
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir C. W., Bt. (Gloucester, Forest of Dean)
Dillon, John (Mayo, East)
Dimsdale, Rt. Hon. Sir Joseph C. (London)
Disraeli, Coningsby R. (Cheshire, Altrincham)
Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. D., Bt. (Middlesex, Uxbridge)
Dobbie, John (Ayr Burghs)
Donelan, Captain A. J. C. (Cork, East)
Doogan, P. C. (Tyrone, East)
Dorington, Rt. Hon. Sir John E., Bt. (Gloucester, Tewkesbury)
Doughty, Sir George (Great Grimsby)
Douglas, Rt. Hon. Aretas Akers (Kent, St. Augustine's)
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark, North-West)
Doxford, Sir William T. (Sunderland)
Duffy, William J. (Galway, South)
Duke, H. E. (Plymouth)
Duncan, James H. (Yorks, W.R., Otley)
Dunn, Sir William, Bt. (Paisley)
Durning-Lawrence, Sir Edwin, Bt. (Cornwall, Truro)
Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir W. H., Bt. (Kent, Dartford)

E

Edwards, Frank (Radnor)
Egerton, Hon. Alan de Tatton (Cheshire, Knutsford)
Elibank, Master of (Edinburgh, Midlothian)
Ellice, Captain Edward C. (St. Andrews Burghs)
Elliot, Hon. Arthur R. D. (Durham)
Ellis, John Edward (Nottingham, Rushcliffe)
Emmott, Alfred (Oldham)
Esmonde, Sir T. Grattan, Bt. (Wexford, North)
Evans, Sir Francis H. (Maidstone)
Evans, Samuel Thomas (Glamorgan, Mid)
Eve, H. Trelawney (Devon, Ashburton)

F

Faber, E. Beckett (Hants, Andover)
Faber, G. Denison (York)
Fardell, Sir T. George (Paddington, S.)
Farquharson, Dr. Robert (Aberdeenshire, West)
Farrell, James P. (Longford, North)
Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn E. (Hunts, Ramsey)
Fenwick, Charles (Northumberland, Wansbeck)
Ferguson, Ronald C. Munro (Leith Burghs)
Fergusson, Rt. Hon. Sir J., Bt. (Manchester, N.E.)
Ffrench, Peter (Wexford, South)
Field, William (Dublin, St. Patrick)
Fielden, Edward B. (Lancashire, Middleton)
Finch, Rt. Hon. George H. (Rutland)
Findlay, Alexander (Lanarkshire, N.E.)
Finlay, Sir Robert B. (Inverness Burghs)
Firbank, Sir Joseph Thomas (Hull, East)
Fisher, William Hayes (Fulham)
Fison, Frederick William (York, W.R., Doncaster)
FitzGerald, Sir Robert U. P., Bt. (Cambridge)
Fitzmaurice, Lord Edmund G. Petty (Wilts, Cricklade)
Fitzroy, Hon. E. Algernon (Northants, South)
Flannery, Sir J. Fortescue (Yorkshire, Shipley)
Flavin, Michael Joseph (Kerry, North)
Flower, Sir Ernest F. S. (Bradford, W.)
Flynn, James C. (Cork, North)
Forster, Henry W. (Kent, Sevenoaks)
Foster, Sir Michael (London University)
Foster, Philip S. (Warwick, Stratford-upon-Avon)
Foster, Sir B. Walter (Derby, Ilkeston)
Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir H. H. (Wolverhampton, East)
Freeman-Thomas, F. (Hastings)
Fuller, J. M. F. (Wilts, Westbury)
Furness, Sir Christopher, Bt. (Hartlepool)

G

Galloway, William Johnson (Manchester, S.W.)
Gardner, Ernest (Berks, Wokingham)
Garfit, William (Boston)
Gibbs, Hon. Alban George H. (London)
Gilhooly, James (Cork Co., West)
Gladstone, Rt. Hon. Herbert J. (Leeds, West)
Goddard, Daniel Ford (Ipswich)
Godson, Sir Augustus F. (Kidderminster)
Gordon, Hon. John Edwin (Elgin and Nairn)
Gordon, John (Londonderry, S.)
Gordon, Major W. E. (Tower Hamlets, Stepney)
Gore, Hon. S. F. Ormsby- (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough)
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir J. Eldon (Cambridge University)
Goschen, Hon. George J. (Sussex, East Grinstead)
Goulding, Edward A. (Wilts, Devizes)
Graham, Henry R. (St. Pancras, West)
Grant, Corrie (Warwickshire, Rugby)
Gray, Ernest (West Ham, North)
Green, Walford Davis (Wednesbury)
Greene, Sir E. Walter, Bt. (Bury St. Edmunds)
Greene, Henry David (Shrewsbury)
Greene, Walter Raymond (Cambs., Chesterton)
Grenfell, Major William H. (Bucks, Wycombe)
Gretton, John (Derbyshire, South)
Greville, Capt. Hon. Ronald H. F. (Bradford, East)
Grey, Rt. Hon. Sir Edward, Bt. (Northumberland, Berwick)
Griffith, Ellis J. (Anglesey)
Groves, James G. (Salford, South)
Guest, Hon. Ivor C. (Plymouth)
Gully, Rt. Hon. W. C. (Carlisle)
Gunter, Col. Sir Robert, Bt. (York, W.R., Barkstone Ash)
Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton (Norfolk, North)
Guthrie, Walter Murray (Tower Hamlets, Bow, etc.)

H

Hain, Edward (Cornwall, St. Ives)

Haldane, Rt. Hon. Richard B. (Haddington)

Hall, E. Marshall (Lancashire, Southport)

Halsey, Rt. Hon. Thomas F. (Herts, Watford)

Hambro, C. Eric (Surrey, Wimbledon)

Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord George (Middlesex, Ealing)

Hamilton, Marquess of (Londonderry)

Hammond, John (Carlow)

Harcourt, Lewis Vernon (Lancashire, Rossendale)

Hardie, James Keir (Merthyr Tydvil)

Hardy, Laurence (Kent, Ashford)

Hare, Thomas L. (Norfolk, S.W.)

Harmsworth, R. Leicester (Caithness)

Harrington, Timothy (Dublin, Harbour)

Harris, Frederick L. (Tynemouth)

Harris, Dr. F. Rutherfoord (Camberwell, Dulwich)

Harwood, George (Bolton)

Haslam, Sir Alfred Seale (Newcastle-under-Lyme)

Haslett, Sir James H. (Belfast, North)

Hatch, Ernest F. George (Lancashire, Gorton)

Hay, Hon. Claude G. D. (Shoreditch, Hoxton)

Hayden, John P. (Roscommon, South)

Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir A. D., Bt. (Walsall)

Healy, Timothy M. (Louth, North)

Heath, Arthur Howard (Hanley)

Heath, James (Staffordshire, N.W.)

Heaton, J. Henniker (Canterbury)

Helder, Augustus (Whitehaven)

Helme, Norval W. (Lancashire, Lancaster)

Hemphill, Rt. Hon. C. Hare (Tyrone, North)

Henderson, Sir Alexander (Staffordshire, West)

Henderson, Arthur (Durham, Barnard Castle)

Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T. (Oxon, Henley)

Hickman, Sir Alfred (Wolverhampton, West)

Higham, John Sharp (Yorkshire, W.R., Sowerby)

Hill, Capt. Arthur (Down, West)

Hoare, Sir Samuel, Bt. (Norwich)

Hobhouse, Charles E. H. (Bristol, East)

Hobhouse, Rt. Hon. Henry (Somerset, East)

Hogg, Lindsay (Sussex, Eastbourne)

Holland, Sir William H. (York, W.R., Rotherham)

Hope, J. D. (Fife, West)

Hope, J. Fitzalan (Sheffield, Brightside)

Hornby, Sir William Henry, Bt. (Blackburn)

Horner, Frederick W. (Lambeth, North)

Horniman, Frederick John (Penryn and Falmouth)

Houldsworth, Sir W. Henry, Bt. (Manchester, N.W.)

Hoult, Joseph (Cheshire, Wirral)

Houston, Robert P. (Liverpool, West Toxteth)

Howard, Capt. J. (Kent, Faversham)

Howard, Joseph (Middlesex, Tottenham)

Hozier, Hon. James H. C. (Lanark, South)

Hudson, George B. (Herts, Hitchin)

Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C. (Montgomery)

Hunt, Rowland (Shropshire, Ludlow)

Hutchinson, Dr. Charles F. (Sussex, Rye)

Hutton, Alfred E. (York, W.R., Morley)

Hutton, John (Yorkshire, Richmond)

I

Isaacs, Rufus Daniel (Reading)

J

Jacoby, James Alfred (Derbyshire, Mid)

Jameson, Major J. Eustace (Clare, West)

Jebb, Sir Richard Claverhouse (Cambridge University)

Jeffreys, Rt. Hon. Arthur F. (Hants, North)

Jessel, Captain Herbert M. (St. Pancras, South)

Johnson, John (Gateshead)

Joicey, Sir James, Bt. (Durham, Chester-le-street)

Jones, David Brynmor (Swansea District)

Jones, William (Carnarvon, Arfon)

Jordan, Jeremiah (Fermanagh, South)

Joyce, Michael (Limerick)

K

Kearley, Hudson E. (Devonport)

Kemp, George (Lancashire, Heywood)

Kennaway, Rt. Hon. Sir J. H., Bt. (Devon, Honiton)

Kennedy, Patrick J. (Westmeath, North)

Kennedy, Vincent P. (Cavan, W.)

Kenyon, Hon. G. T. (Denbigh)

Kenyon-Slaney, Colonel Wm. (Shropshire, Newport)

Kerr, John (Preston)

Keswick, William (Surrey, Epsom)

Kilbride, Dennis (Kildare, S.)

Kimber, Henry (Wandsworth)

King, Sir H. Seymour (Hull, Central)

Kitson, Sir James, Bt. (York, W.R., Colne Valley)

Knowles, Sir Lees (Salford, West)

L

Labouchere, Henry (Northampton)

Lambert, George (Devon, South Molton)

Lambton, Hon. F. W. (Durham, South East)

Langley, Batty (Sheffield, Attercliffe)

Laurie, Lieut.-Gen. John W. (Pembroke and Haverfordwest)

Law, Andrew B. (Glasgow, Blackfriars)

Law, Hugh A. (Donegal, West)

Lawrence, Sir Joseph (Monmouth Boroughs)

Lawrence, William F. (Liverpool, Abercromby)

Lawson, Hon. Harry L. W. (Tower Hamlets, Mile End)

Lawson, John Grant (York, N.R., Thirsk)

Lawson, Sir Wilfrid, Bt. (Cornwall, Camborne)

Layland-Barratt, F. (Devon, Torquay)

Lee, Arthur H. (Hants, Fareham)

Lees, Sir Elliott, Bt. (Birkenhead)

Leese, Sir Joseph F. (Lancashire, Accrington)

Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage (St. George's, Hanover Square)

Leigh, Sir Joseph (Stockport)

Leng, Sir John (Dundee)

Leveson-Gower, F. S. (Sutherland)

Levy, M. (Leicestershire, Loughborough)

Lewis, John Herbert (Flint Boroughs)

Llewellyn, Evan Henry (Somerset, North)

Lloyd-George, David (Carnarvon, etc.)

Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. Amelius (Essex, Epping)

Loder, Gerald W. E. (Brighton)

Long, Col. Charles W. (Worcestershire, Evesham)

Long, Rt. Hon. Walter H. (Bristol, South)

Lonsdale, John B. (Armagh, Mid.)

Lough, Thomas (Islington, W.)

Lowe, Francis W. (Birmingham, Edgbaston)

Lowther, Claude N. W. (Cumberland, Eskdale)

Lowther, Rt. Hon. James William (Cumberland, Penrith)

Loyd, Archie Kirkman (Berks, Abingdon)

Lucas, Col. Francis A. (Suffolk, Lowestoft)

Lucas, Reginald J. (Portsmouth)

Lundon, W. (Limerick, East)

Lyell, Chas. Henry (Dorset, E.)

Lyttelton, Hon. Alfred (Warwick and Leamington)

M

Macdona, J. Cumming (Southwark, Rotherhithe)

MacDonnell, Dr. Mark A. (Queen's County, Leix)

MacIver, David (Liverpool, Kirkdale)

Macnamara, Thomas J. (Camberwell, North)

MacNeill, J. G. Swift (Donegal, South)

Maconochie, A. W. (Aberdeenshire, East)

MacVeagh, Jeremiah (Down, South)

McArthur, Charles (Liverpool, Exchange)

McArthur, William A. (Cornwall, St Austell)

McCalmont, Colonel James (Antrim, East)

McCann, J. (Dublin, St. Stephen's Green)

McCrae, George (Edinburgh, East)

McFadden, Edward (Donegal, East)

M'Hugh, Patrick A. (Leitrim, North)

McIver, Sir Lewis, Bt. (Edinburgh, West)

M'Kean, John (Monaghan, South)

McKenna, Reginald (Monmouth, North)

M'Killop, James (Stirlingshire)

McKillop, W. (Sligo, North)

McLaren, Sir C. B. Bright (Leicester, Bosworth)

Majendie, James H. A. (Portsmouth)

Malcolm, Ian Z. (Suffolk, Stowmarket)

Manners, Lord Cecil R. J. (Leicestershire, Melton)

Mansfield, H. (Lincoln, Spalding)

Mappin, Sir Frederick T., Bt. (York, W.R., Hallamshire)

Markham, A. B. (Notts., Mansfield)

Martin, Richard Biddulph (Worcester, Droitwich)

Massey-Mainwaring, Hon. W. F. B. (Finsbury, Central)

Maxwell, Rt. Hon. Sir Herbert E., Bt. (Wigton)

Maxwell, William Jardine (Dumfriesshire)

Melville, Beresford Valentine (Stockport)

Meysey-Thompson, Sir H., Bt. (Stafford, Handsworth)

Middlemore, John T. (Birmingham, North)

Mildmay, Francis B. (Devon, Totnes)

Milner, Rt. Hon. Sir Fred. G., Bt. (Notts., Bassetlaw)

Milvain, Thomas (Hampstead)

Mitchell, Edward (Fermanagh, N.)

Mitchell, William (Burnley)

Molesworth, Sir Lewis W., Bt. (Cornwall, Bodmin)

Montagu, George C. (Hunts., Huntingdon)

Montagu, Hon. John Scott- (Hants., New Forest)

Moon, Edward Robert P. (St. Pancras, North)

Mooney, John J. (Dublin Co., South)

Moore, William (Antrim, North)

Morgan, David John (Essex, Walthamstow)

Morgan, Col. Hon. Fred. C. (Monmouthshire, South)

Morgan, John Lloyd (Carmarthenshire, West)

Morley, Charles (Brecknock)

Morley, Rt. Hon John (Montrose, etc.)

Morrell, George Herbert (Oxon., Woodstock)

Morrison, Lieut. James A. (Wiltshire, Wilton)

Morton, Arthur H. A. (Deptford)

Moss, Samuel (Denbighshire, East)

Moulton, John Fletcher (Cornwall, Launceston)

Mount, William A. (Berks., Newbury)

Mowbray, Sir Robert G. C., Bt. (Lambeth, Brixton)

Muntz, Sir Philip Albert (Warwickshire, Tamworth)

Murnaghan, George (Tyrone, Mid.)

Murphy, John (Kerry, East)

Murray, Charles James (Coventry)

Murray, Colonel C. Wyndham (Bath)

Myers, William Henry (Winchester)

N

Nannetti, Joseph P. (Dublin, College Green)

Newdigate, Francis Alex. (Warwickshire, Nuneaton)

Newnes, Sir George, Bt. (Swansea Town)

Nicholson, William G. (Hants., Petersfield)

Nolan, Col. J. P. (Galway, North)

Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)

Norman, Henry (Wolverhampton, S.)

Norton, Captain Cecil W. (Newington, West)

Nussey, Thomas Willans (Pontefract)

O

O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)

O'Brien, K. (Tipperary, Mid)

O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)

O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, North)

O'Brien, Wm. (Cork)

O'Connor, James (Wicklow, West)

O'Connor, John (Kildare, N.)

O'Connor, Thomas P. (Liverpool, Scotland)

O'Doherty, William (Donegal, North)

O'Donnell, John (Mayo, South)

O'Donnell, Thomas (Kerry, West)

O'Dowd, John (Sligo, South)

O'Kelly, C. (Mayo, North)

O'Kelly, James (Roscommon, North)

O'Malley, William (Galway, Connemara)

O'Mara, James (Kilkenny, South)

O'Neill, Hon. R. Torrens (Antrim, Mid.)

O'Shaughnessy, P. J. (Limerick, West)

O'Shee, James John (Waterford, West)

P

Palmer, Sir Charles M., Bt. (Durham, Jarrow)

Palmer, Sir Walter (Salisbury)

Parker, H. Gilbert G. (Gravesend)

Parkes, Ebenezer (Birmingham, Central)

Parrott, William (Yorks, W.R., Normanton)

Partington, O. (Derbyshire, High Peak)

Paulton, James M. (Durham, Bishop Auckland)

Pearson, Sir Weetman D., Bt. (Colchester)

Pease, Herbert P. (Darlington)

Pease, J. A. (Essex, Saffron Walden)

Peel, Hon. William R. W. (Manchester, South)

Pemberton, John S. G. (Sunderland)

Percy, Earl (Kensington, South)

Perks, Robert W. (Lincolnshire, South)

Philipps, John W. (Pembrokeshire)

Pierpoint, Robert (Warrington)

Pilkington, Lieut.-Col. Richard (Lancashire, Newton)

Pirie, Duncan Vernon (Aberdeen, North)

Platt-Higgins, Frederick (Salford, North)

Plummer, Sir Walter R. (Newcastle-on-Tyne)

Powell, Sir Francis Sharp, Bt. (Wigan)

Power, Patrick J. (Waterford, East)

Pretyman, Capt. Ernest George (Suffolk, Woodbridge)

Price, Robert John (Norfolk, East)

Priestley, Arthur (Grantham)

Pryce-Jones, Lieut.-Col. Edward (Montgomery Boroughs)

Purvis, Robert (Peterborough)

Pym, C. Guy (Bedford)

Q

Quilter, Sir W. Cuthbert, Bt. (Suffolk, Sudbury)

R

Randles, John S. (Cumberland, Cockermouth)

Rankin, Sir James, Bt. (Herefordshire, Leominster)

Rasch, Major Fred. C. (Essex, Chelmsford)

Ratcliff, R. F. (Staffordshire, Burton)

Rea, Russell (Gloucester)

Reckitt, Harold James (Lincolnshire, Brigg)

Reddy, M. (King's County, Birr)

Redmond, John E. (Waterford)

Redmond, William H. K. (Clare, East)

Reed, Sir Edward J. (Cardiff)

Reid, James (Greenock)

Reid, Sir Robert T. (Dumfries Burghs)

Remnant, James F. (Finsbury, Holborn)

Renshaw, Sir Charles B. (Renfrew, West)

Renwick, George (Newcastle-on-Tyne)

Richards, Henry Charles (Finsbury, East)

Richards, Thomas (Monmouthshire, W.)

Rickett, J. Compton (Scarborough)

Ridley, Samuel F. (Bethnal Green, South-West)

Ritchie, Rt. Hon. Charles T. (Croydon)

Roberts, John Bryn (Carnarvonshire, Eifion)

Roberts, John Herbert (Denbighshire, West)

Roberts, Samuel (Sheffield, Ecclesall)

Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)

Robertson, T. Herbert (Hackney, South)

Robinson, Brooke (Dudley)

Robson, William Snowdon (South Shields)

Roche, John (Galway, East)

Roe, Sir Thomas (Derby)

Rolleston, Sir John F. L. (Leicester)

Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye (Islington, South)

Ropner, Colonel Sir E. H. O. Robert (Stockton)

Rose, Charles Day (Cambridge, Newmarket)

Rothschild, Hon. Lionel W. (Bucks, Aylesbury)

Round, Rt. Hon. James (Essex, Harwich)

Royds, Col. Clement M. (Rochdale)

Runciman, Walter (Dewsbury)

Russell, Thomas W. (Tyrone, South)

Rutherford, John (Lancashire, Darwen)

Rutherford, William W. (Liverpool, West Derby)

S

Sackville, Colonel S. G. Stopford (Northants, North)

Sadler, Colonel Samuel A. (Middlesbrough)

Samuel, Sir Harry S. (Tower Hamlets, Limehouse)

Samuel, Herbert Louis (Yorkshire, Cleveland)

Samuel, Stuart M. (Tower Hamlets, Whitechapel)

Sandys, Col. Thomas M. (Lancashire, Bootle)

Sassoon, Sir Edward A., Bt. (Hythe)

Saunderson, Colonel Rt. Hon. E. J. (Armagh, North)

Schwann, Charles E. (Manchester, North)

Scott, Charles Prestwich (Lancashire, Leigh)

Scott, Sir Samuel E., Bt. (Marylebone, West)

Seely, Charles Hilton (Lincoln)

Seely, Major John E. B. (Isle of Wight)

Seton-Karr, Sir Henry (St. Helens)

Shackleton, David James (Lancashire, Clitheroe)

Sharpe, W. E. Thompson (Kensington, North)

Shaw, T. F. Charles Edward (Stafford)

Shaw, Thomas (Hawick Burghs)

Shaw-Stewart, M. Hugh (Renfrew, East)

Sheehan, Daniel D. (Cork Co., Mid.)

Sheehy, David (Meath, S.)

Shipman, Dr. John G. (Northampton)

Simeon, Sir J. S. Barrington, Bt. (Southampton)

Sinclair, Captain John (Forfar)

Sinclair, Louis (Essex, Romford)

Skewes-Cox, Thomas (Surrey, Kingston)

Sloan, Thomas Henry (Belfast, South)

Slack, John Bamford (Herts, St. Albans)

Smith, Abel Henry (Herts, Hertford)

Smith, Hugh C. (Northumberland, Tyneside)

Smith, James Parker (Lanark, Partick)

Smith, Samuel (Flintshire)

Smith, Hon. W. Fred. D. (Strand, Westminster)

Soames, Arthur W. (Norfolk, South)

Soares, Ernest J. (Devon, Barnstaple)

Spear, John W. (Devon, Tavistock)

Spencer, Rt. Hon. Charles R. (Northants, Mid)

Spencer, Sir Ernest (West Bromwich)

Stanhope, Hon. Philip James (Leicestershire, Market Harborough)

Stanley, Hon. Arthur (Lancashire, Ormskirk)

Stanley, Edward (Somerset, Bridgwater)

Stanley, Rt. Hon. Lord (Lancashire, Westhoughton)

Stevenson, Francis S. (Suffolk, E.)

Stewart, Sir Mark J. McTaggart, Bt. (Kirkcudbright)

Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M., Bt. (Glasgow, College)

Stock, James Henry (Liverpool, Walton)

Stone, Sir John Benjamin (Birmingham, East)

Strachey, Sir Edward (Somerset, South)

Stroyan, John (Perthshire, West)

Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley (Essex, Maldon)

Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath, South)

T

Talbot, Lord Edmund (Sussex, Chichester)

Talbot, Rt. Hon. John G. (Oxford University)

Taylor, Austin (Liverpool, East Toxteth)

Taylor, Theodore C. (Lancashire, Radcliffe)

Tennant, Harold John (Berwickshire)

Thomas, Abel (Carmarthen, E.)

Thomas, Sir Alfred (Glamorgan, E.)

Thomas, David Alfred (Merthyr Tydvil)

Thomas, J. A. (Glamorgan, Gower)

Thompson, Dr. E. C. (Monaghan, N.)

Thomson, F. W. (York, W.R., Skipton)

Thorburn, Sir Walter (Peebles and Selkirk)

Thornton, Percy M. (Clapham)

Tillett, Louis J. (Norwich)

Tollemache, Henry J. (Cheshire, Eddisbury)

Tomkinson, James (Cheshire, Crewe)

Tomlinson, Sir William E. M. (Preston)

Toulmin, George (Bury, Lancashire)

Trevelyan, Charles P. (York, W.R., Elland,

Tritton, Charles E. (Lambeth, Norwood)

Tuff, Charles (Rochester)

Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward (Essex, South-East)

Tuke, Sir John Batty (Edinburgh and St. Andrew's Universities)

Tully, Jasper (Leitrim, South)

Turnour, Viscount (Sussex, Horsham)

U

Ure, Alexander (Linlithgowshire)

V

Valentia, Viscount (Oxford)

Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. Howard (Sheffield, Central)

Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)

W

Waldron, Laurence Ambrose (Dublin, St. Stephen's Green)

Walker, Col. William H. (Widnes)

Wallace, Robert (Perth)

Walrond, Rt. Hon. Sir W. H., Bt. (Devon, Tiverton)

Walton, John Lawson (Leeds, South)

Walton, Joseph (York, W.R. Barnsley),

Wanklyn, J. Leslie (Bradford, Central)

Warde, Colonel Charles E. (Kent, Medway)

Warner, T. Courtenay T. (Stafford, Lichfield)

Wason, Eugene (Clackmannan and Kinross)

Wason, John C. (Orkney and Shetland)

Webb, Colonel William G. (Staffordshire, Kingswinford)

Weir, James Galloway (Ross and Cromarty)

Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. Earle (Taunton)

Welby, Sir Charles G. E., Bt. (Notts, Newark)

Wentworth, Capt. B. C. Vernon- (Brighton)

Wharton, Rt. Hon. J. Lloyd (York, W.R., Ripon)

White, George (Norfolk, North-West)

White, L. (York, E.R., Buckrose)

White, Patrick (Meath, North)

Whiteley, George (York, W.R., Pudsey)

Whiteley, Herbert (Ashton-under-Lyne)

Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)

Whitmore, Charles A. (Chelsea)

Whittaker, Thomas P. (York, W.R., Spen Valley)

Williams, Rt. Hon. Joseph Powell- (Birmingham, South)

Williams, Arthur O. (Merionethshire)

Williams, Colonel Robert (Dorset, West)

Willoughby de Eresby, Lord (Lincolnshire, Horncastle)

Wills, Arthur Walters (Dorsetshire, N.)

Wills, Sir Frederick (Bristol, North)

Wilson, Arthur S. (York, E.R., Holderness)

Wilson, Charles H. (Hull, West)

Wilson, Frederick W. (Norfolk, Mid)

Wilson, Henry Joseph (York, W.R., Holmfirth)

Wilson, John (Durham, Mid)

Wilson, John (Falkirk Burghs)

Wilson, J. (Glasgow, St. Rollox)

Wilson, John William (Worcestershire, North)

Wilson-Todd, Sir William H., Bt. (York, E.R., Howdenshire)

Wodehouse, Rt. Hon. Edmond R. (Bath)

Wolff, Gustavus Wilhelm (Belfast, East)

Wood, James (Down, East)

Woodhouse, Sir James T. (Huddersfield)

Worsley-Taylor, H. W. (Lancashire, Blackpool)

Wortley, Rt. Hon. Charles B. Stuart- (Sheffield, Hallam)

Wrightson, Sir Thomas, Bt. (St. Pancras, East)

Wylie, Alexander (Dumbartonshire)

Wyndham, Rt. Hon. George (Dover)

Wyndham-Quin, Major W. H. (Glamorgan, South)

Y

Yerburgh, Robert A. (Chester)

Young, Samuel (Cavan, East)

Younger, William (Lincolnshire, Stamford)

Yoxall, James Henry (Nottingham, West)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF CONSTITUENCIES,

WITH

NAMES OF MEMBERS.

(Compiled at the opening of the Session.)

ENGLAND—COUNTIES (234 Members).

BEDFORDSHIRE (2)

North, or Biggleswade	Compton, Lord Alwyne F.
South, or Luton	Ashton, T. Gair.

BERKSHIRE (3)

East, or Wokingham	Gardner, Ernest.
North, or Abingdon	Loyd, A. K.
South, or Newbury	Mount, W. A.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE (3)

Mid, or Aylesbury	Rothschild, Hon. L. W.
North, or Buckingham	Carlile, W. W.
South, or Wycombe	Grenfell, Major W. H.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE (3)

East, or Newmarket	Rose, C. D.
North, or Wisbech	Brand, Hon. A. G.
West, or Chesterton	Greene, W. R.

CHESHIRE (8)

Altrincham	Disraeli, Coningsby R.
Crewe	Tomkinson, J.
Eddisbury	Tollemache, H. J.
Hyde	Chapman, E.
Knutsford	Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton.
Macclesfield	Davenport, W. Bromley.
Northwich	Brunner, Sir J. T.
Wirral	Hoult, J.

CORNWALL (6)

Mid, or St. Austell	M'Arthur, W. A.
North-East, or Launceston	Moulton, J. F.
North-West, or Camborne	Lawson, Sir Wilfrid, Bt.
South-East, or Bodmin	Molesworth, Sir L., Bt.
Truro	Durning-Lawrence, Sir E., Bt.
West, or St. Ives	Hain, E.

CUMBERLAND (4)

Cockermouth	Randles, J. S.
Mid, or Penrith	Lowther, Rt. Hon. J. W.
North, or Eskdale	Lowther, C. W. H.
West, or Egremont	Bain, J. R.

DERBYSHIRE (7)

Chesterfield	Bayley, Thomas.
High Peak	Partington, O.
Ilkeston	Foster, Sir B. W.
Mid	Jacoby, J. A.
North-East	Bolton, T. D.
South	Gretton, J.
West	Cavendish, Victor C. W.

DEVONSHIRE (8)

East, or Honiton	Kennaway, Rt. Hon. Sir J. H., Bt.
Mid, or Ashburton	Eve, Harry T.
North-East, or Tiverton	Walrond, Col. Rt. Hon. Sir W. H.
North, or South Molton	Lambert, G.
North-West, or Barnstaple	Soares, E. J.
South, or Totnes	Mildmay, F. Bingham.
Torquay	Barratt, F. L.
West, or Tavistock	Spear, J. W.

DORSETSHIRE (4)

East	Lyell, Chas. H.
North	Wills, A. W.
South	Brymer, W. E.
West	Williams, Col. R.

DURHAM (8)

Barnard Castle	Henderson, Arthur.
Bishop Auckland	Paulton, J. M.
Chester-le-Street	Joicey, Sir James, Bt.
Houghton-le-Spring	Cameron, Robert.
Jarrow	Palmer, Sir C. Mark, Bt.
Mid	Wilson, John.
North-West	Atherley-Jones, L.
South-East	Lambton, Hon. F. W.

ESSEX (8)

East, or Maldon	Strutt, Hon. C. H.
Mid, or Chelmsford	Rasch, Major F. C.
North-East, or Harwich	Round, J.
North, or Saffron Walden	Pease, J. A.
South-East	Tufnell, Col. E.
South, or Romford	Sinclair, Louis.
South-West, or Walthamstow	Morgan, D. J.
West, or Epping	Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. R. M.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE (5)

East, or Cirencester	Bathurst, Hon. A. B.
Forest of Dean	Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir C. W., Bt.
Mid, or Stroud	Allen, C. P.
North, or Tewkesbury	Dorington, Sir J. E., Bt.
South, or Thornbury	Colston, C. E. H. A.

HAMPSHIRE (5)

East, or Petersfield	Nicholson, W. G.
New Forest	Montagu, Hon. J. W. E. D. Scott-

HAMPSHIRE (5)—cont.

North, or Basingstoke	Jeffreys, A. F.
South, or Fareham	Lee, Lt.-Col. A. H.
West, or Andover	Faber, E. B.

HEREFORDSHIRE (2)

North, or Leominster	Rankin, Sir Jas., Bart.
South, or Ross	Clive, Capt. P. A.

HERTFORDSHIRE (4)

East, or Hertford	Smith, A. H.
Mid, or St. Albans	Slack, J. Bamford
North, or Hitchin	Hudson, G. B.
West, or Watford	Halsey, Rt. Hon. T. F.

HUNTINGDONSHIRE (2)

North, or Ramsey	Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn E.
South, or Huntingdon	Montagu, G. C.

ISLE OF WIGHT (1)	Seely, Capt. J. E. B.

KENT (8)

East, or St. Augustine's	Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers
Isle of Thanet	Marks, H. H.
Mid, or Medway	Warde, Lt.-Col. C. E.
North-East, or Faversham	Howard, Capt. J.
North-West, or Dartford	Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir W. Hart, B
South, or Ashford	Hardy, Laurence.
South-West, or Tunbridge	Boscawen, A. Griffith.
West, or Sevenoaks	Forster, H. W.

LANCASHIRE, NORTH (4)

Blackpool	Worsley-Taylor, H. W.
Chorley	Balcarres, Lord.
Lancaster	Helme, N. W.
North Lonsdale	Cavendish, Richd. F.

LANCASHIRE, NORTH-EAST (4)

Accrington	Leese, Sir J. F.
Clitheroe	Shackleton, D. J.
Darwen	Rutherford, John.
Rossendale	Harcourt, Lewis.

LANCASHIRE, SOUTH-EAST (8)

Eccles	Clare, O. L.
Gorton	Hatch, E. F. G.
Heywood	Kemp, G.
Middleton	Fielden, E. B.
Prestwich	Cawley, F.
Radcliffe-cum-Farnworth	Taylor, T. C.
Stretford	Cripps, C. A.
Westhoughton	Stanley, Rt. Hon. Lord.

LANCASHIRE, SOUTH-WEST (7)

Bootle	Sandys, Col. T. M.
Ince	Blundell, Col. H. B. Hollinshed
Leigh	Scott, C. P.
Newton	Pilkington, Lt.-Col. R.
Ormskirk	Stanley, Hon. Arthur.
Southport	Hall, E. Marshall.
Widnes	Walker, Col. W. H.

LEICESTERSHIRE (4)

East, or Melton	Manners, Lord C. R. J.
Mid, or Loughborough	Levy, M.
South, or Harborough	Stanhope, Hon. Philip.
West, or Bosworth	M‘Laren, Sir C. B. B., Bt.

LINCOLNSHIRE (7)

East Lindsey, or Louth	Perks, R. W.
Holland, or Spalding	Mansfield, H. R.
North Kesteven, or Sleaford	Chaplin, Rt. Hon. H.
North Lindsey, or Brigg	Reckitt, H. J.
South Kesteven, or Stamford	Younger, W.
South Lindsey, or Horncastle	Willoughby de Eresby, Lord.
West Lindsey, or Gainsborough	Ormsby-Gore, Hon. S. F.

MIDDLESEX (7)

Brentford	Bigwood, J.
Ealing	Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord George.
Enfield	Bowles, Lt. Col. H. F.
Harrow	Cox, J. E. Bainbridge.
Hornsey	Balfour, Capt. C. B.
Tottenham	Howard, J.
Uxbridge	Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. D., Bt.

MONMOUTHSHIRE (3)

North	M‘Kenna, R.
South	Morgan, Col. Hon. F. C.
West	Richards, Tom.

NORFOLK (6)

East	Price, R. J.
Mid	Wilson, F. W.
North	Gurdon, Sir W. B.
North-West	White, G.
South	Soames, A. W.
South-West	Hare, T. L.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE (4)

East	Channing, F. A.
Mid	Spencer, Hon. C. R.
North	Sackville, S. G. S.
South	Fitzroy, Hon. J. G.

NORTHUMBERLAND (4)

Berwick-upon-Tweed	Grey, Rt. Hon. Sir Edward, Bt
Hexham	Beaumont, Wentworth C B.
Tyneside	Smith, H. C.
Wansbeck	Fenwick, C.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE (4)

Bassetlaw	Milner, Rt. Hon. Sir F. G., Bt.
Mansfield	Markham, A. B.
Newark	Welby, Sir C. G. E., Bt.
Rushcliffe	Ellis, J. E.

OXFORDSHIRE (3)

Mid, or Woodstock	Morrell, G. H.
North, or Banbury	Brassey, Albert.
South, or Henley	Hermon-Hodge, Sir R. T., Bt.

RUTLAND (1)	Finch, Rt. Hon. G. H.

SHROPSHIRE (4)
Mid, or Wellington	Brown, Sir Alexander, Bt.
North, or Newport	Kenyon-Slaney, Col. W.
South, or Ludlow	Hunt, Rowland.
West, or Oswestry	Bright, Allan H.
SOMERSETSHIRE (7)
Bridgwater	Stanley, E. J.
East	Hobhouse, Henry.
Frome	Barlow, J. E.
North	Llewellyn, Evan H.
South	Strachey, Sir Edward.
Wells	Dickinson, R. E.
West, or Wellington	Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir A. F., Bt.
STAFFORDSHIRE (7)
Burton	Ratcliffe, R. F.
Handsworth	Meysey-Thompson, Sir H., Bt.
Kingswinford	Webb, Col. W. G.
Leek	Bill, Charles.
Lichfield	Warner, T. Courtenay T.
North-West	Heath, James.
West	Henderson, Sir Alexander, Bt.
SUFFOLK (5)
North-East, or Eye	Stevenson, F. S.
North, or Lowestoft	Lucas, Col. F. A.
North-West, or Stowmarket	Malcolm, Ian.
South-East, or Woodbridge	Pretyman, Capt. E. G.
South, or Sudbury	Quilter, Sir Cuthbert, Bt.
SURREY (6)
Kingston	Skewes-Cox, T.
Mid, or Epsom	Keswick, W.
North-East, or Wimbledon	Hambro, C. E.
North-West, or Chertsey	Bingham, Lord.
South-East, or Reigate	Cubitt, Hon. Henry.
South-West, or Guildford	Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John.
SUSSEX (6)
East, or Rye	Hutchinson, Dr. Chas. Fredk.
Mid, or Lewes	Fletcher, Rt. Hon. Sir Hy., Bt.
North, or East Grinstead	Goschen, G. J., jun.
North-West, or Horsham	Turnour, Viscount.
South, or Eastbourne	Hogg, L.
South-West, or Chichester	Talbot, Lord Edmund.
WARWICKSHIRE (4)
North-East, or Nuneaton	Newdigate, F. A.
North, or Tamworth	Muntz, Sir Philip, Bt.
South-East, or Rugby	Grant, Corrie.
South-West, or Stratford-on-Avon	Foster, P. S.
WESTMORELAND (2)
North, or Appleby	Rigg, R.
South, or Kendal	Bagot, Capt. J. F.
WILTSHIRE (5)
East, or Devizes	Goulding, E. A.
North, or Cricklade	Fitzmaurice, Lord E. G. Petty.
North-West, or Chippenham	Dickson-Poynder, Sir J. P., Bt.
South, or Wilton	Morrison, Lt. J. A.
West or Westbury	Fuller, J. M. F.

WORCESTERSHIRE (5)
East	Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. Austen.
Mid, or Droitwich	Martin, R. Biddulph.
North	Wilson, J. W.
South, or Evesham	Long, Col. C. Wigram.
West, or Bewdley	Baldwin, Alfred.
YORKSHIRE, EAST RIDING (3)
Buckrose	White, L.
Holderness	Wilson, A. S.
Howdenshire	Wilson-Todd, Sir W. H., Bt.
YORKSHIRE, NORTH RIDING (4)
Cleveland	Samuel, H. L.
Richmond	Hutton, John.
Thirsk and Malton	Lawson, J. Grant.
Whitby	Beckett, E. W.
YORKSHIRE, WEST RIDING (N.) (5)
Elland	Trevelyan, C. P.
Keighley	Brigg, John.
Shipley	Flannery, Sir J. Fortescue
Skipton	Thomson, F. W.
Sowerby	Higham, John Sharp.
YORKSHIRE, WEST RIDING (S.) (8)
Barnsley	Walton, Joseph.
Colne Valley	Kitson, Sir J. B., Bt.
Doncaster	Fison, F. W.
Hallamshire	Mappin, Sir F. T., Bt.
Holmfirth	Wilson, H. J.
Morley	Hutton, A. E.
Normanton	Parrott, Wm.
Rotherham	Holland, Sir H. W.
YORKSHIRE, WEST RIDING (E.) (6)
Barkston Ash	Gunter, Col. Sir Robert, Bt.
Osgoldcross	Austin, Sir John, Bt.
Otley	Duncan, J. H.
Pudsey	Whiteley, G.
Ripon	Wharton, Rt. Hon. J. Lloyd.
Spen Valley	Whittaker, T. P.

ENGLAND—METROPOLITAN BOROUGHS (62 Members).

BATTERSEA AND CLAPHAM (2)
Battersea	Burns, John.
Clapham	Thornton, Percy M.
BETHNAL GREEN (2)
North-East	Bhownaggree, Sir M M.
South-West	Ridley, S. F.
CAMBERWELL (3)
Dulwich	Harris, Dr. F. Rutherfoord.
North	Macnamara, T. J.
Peckham	Banbury, Sir Frederick, Bt.
CHELSEA (1)	Whitmore, C. A

Croydon (1)	Ritchie, Rt. Hon. C. T.
Deptford (1)	Morton, A. H. A.
Finsbury (3)
Central	Massey-Mainwaring, Hon. W. F. B.
East	Richards, H. C.
Holborn	Remnant, J. R.
Fulham (1)	Fisher, W. Hayes.
Greenwich (1)	Cecil, Lord Hugh R. H.
Hackney (3)
Central	Allhusen, A. H. E.
North	Bousfield, W. R.
South	Robertson, T. H.
Hammersmith (1)	Bull, W. J.
Hampstead (1)	Milvain, Thomas.
Islington (4)
East	Cohen, B. L.
North	Bartley, Sir George.
South	Rollit, Sir A. K.
West	Lough, Thomas.
Kensington (2)
North	Sharpe, W. E. T.
South	Percy, Earl.
Lambeth (4)
Brixton	Mowbray, Sir R. G., Bt.
Kennington	Cook, F. L.
North	Horner, F. W.
Norwood	Tritton, C. E.
Lewisham (1)	Coates, Major Ed. F.
London, City (2)	Dimsdale, Sir J. C. Gibbs, Hon. A. G. H.
Marylebone (2)
East	Boulnois, Edmund.
West	Scott, Sir S. E., Bt.
Newington (2)
Walworth	Bailey, Jas.
West	Norton, Capt. C. W.
Paddington (2)
North	Aird, Sir John.
South	Fardell, Sir T. G.
St. George's, Hanover Square (1)	Legge, Col. Hon. H.
St. Pancras (4)
East	Wrightson, Sir Thos., Bt.
North	Moon, E. R. P.
South	Jessel, Capt. H. M.
West	Graham, H. R.
Shoreditch (2)
Haggerston	Cremer, W. R.
Hoxton	Hay, Hon. C. G. D.

Southwark (3)
Bermondsey	Cust, H. J. C.
Rotherhithe	Macdona, J. Cumming.
West	Causton, R. K.
Strand (1)	Smith, Hon. W. F. D.
Tower Hamlets (7)
Bow and Bromley	Guthrie, W. M.
Limehouse	Samuel, Harry S.
Mile End	Lawson, Hon. H.
Poplar	Buxton, Sydney C.
St. George's	Dewar, Sir Thomas.
Stepney	Gordon, Major W. E. E.
Whitechapel	Samuel, S. M.
Wandsworth (1)	Kimber, Hy.
West Ham (2)
North	Gray, Ernest.
South	Banes, Major G. E.
Westminster (1)	Burdett-Coutts, W. L. Ashmead B.
Woolwich (1)	Crooks, Wm.

ENGLAND—PROVINCIAL CITIES AND BOROUGHS (164 Members).

Ashton-under-Lyne (1)	Whiteley, H. J.
Aston Manor (1)	Cecil, E.
Barrow-in-Furness (1)	Cayzer, Sir C. W.
Bath, City (2)	Murray, Col. C. Wyndham. Wodehouse, Rt. Hon. E. R.
Bedford (1)	Pym, C. Guy.
Birkenhead (1)	Lees, Sir Elliott, Bt.
Birmingham, City (7)
Bordesley	Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse.
Central	Parkes, Ebenezer.
East	Stone, Sir J. Benjamin.
Edgbaston	Lowe, F. W.
North	Middlemore, J. T.
South	Williams, J. Powell-
West	Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. Joseph.
Blackburn (2)	Hornby, Sir W. H., Bt. Coddington, Sir W., Bt.
Bolton (2)	Cross, H. S. Harwood, G.
Boston (1)	Garfit, W.
Bradford, City (3)
Central	Wanklyn, J. L.
East	Greville, Capt. Hon. R. H. Fulke.
West	Flower, Ernest S. F.
Brighton (2)	Loder, Gerald W. E. Wentworth, Bruce C. Vernon-

Bristol, City (4)
East	Hobhouse, C. E. H.
North	Wills, Sir F.
South	Long, Rt. Hon. W. H.
West	Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H., Bt.
Burnley (1)	Mitchell, W.
Bury (1)	Toulmin, G.
Bury St. Edmunds (1)	Greene, Sir E. W., Bt.
Cambridge (1)	FitzGerald, Sir R. Penrose-, Bt.
Canterbury, City (1)	Heaton, J. Henniker.
Carlisle, City (1)	Gully, Rt. Hon. W. C. (Speaker).
Chatham (1)	Davies, Sir Horatio D.
Cheltenham (1)	Agg-Gardner, J. T.
Chester, City (1)	Yerburgh, R. A.
Christchurch (1)	Balfour, Major K. R.
Colchester (1)	Pearson, Sir Weetman D., Bt.
Coventry (1)	Murray, C. J.
Darlington (1)	Pease, Herbt. P.
Derby (2)	Roe, Sir T. Bell, R.
Devonport (2)	Kearley, H. E. Benn, J. Williams.
Dewsbury (1)	Runciman, W.
Dover (1)	Wyndham, George.
Dudley (1)	Robinson, Brooke.
Durham, City (1)	Elliot, Hon. Arthur R. D.
Exeter, City (1)	Vincent, Sir E.
Gateshead (1)	Johnson, John.
Gloucester, City (1)	Rea, R.
Grantham (1)	Priestley, A.
Gravesend (1)	Parker, Sir Gilbert.
Grimsby, Great (1)	Doughty, Sir G.
Halifax (2)	Crossley, Sir S. B. Whitley, J. H.
Hanley (1)	Heath, A. H.
Hartlepool (1)	Furness, Sir C.
Hastings (1)	Thomas, Capt. F. F.
Hereford, City (1)	Arkwright, J. S.
Huddersfield (1)	Woodhouse, Sir J. T

Hull, City (3)
Central	King, Sir H. Seymour.
East	Firbank, Sir Joseph.
West	Wilson, C. H.
Hythe (1)	Sassoon, Sir Edward A. Bt.
Ipswich (2)	Goddard, D. F. Dalrymple, Sir Chas., Bt.
Kidderminster (1)	Godson, Sir Augustus F.
Leeds, City (5)
Central	Balfour, Rt. Hon. G. W.
East	Cautley, H. S.
North	Barran, R. H.
South	Walton, John Lawson
West	Gladstone, Rt. Hon. Herbert J
Leicester (2)	Broadhurst, Henry. Rolleston, Sir J. F. L.
Lincoln, City (1)	Seely, C. H.
Liverpool, City (9)
Abercromby	Lawrence, W. F.
East Toxteth	Taylor, Austin.
Everton
Exchange	M'Arthur, Charles.
Kirkdale	MacIver, David.
Scotland	O'Connor, T. P.
Walton	Stock, J. H.
West Derby	Rutherford, W. W.
West Toxteth	Houston, R. P.
Lynn Regis (1)	Bowles, T. Gibson.
Maidstone (1)	Evans, Sir F. H.
Manchester, City (6)
East	Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J.
North	Schwann, C. E.
North-East	Fergusson, Rt. Hon. Sir J., Bt.
North-West	Houldsworth, Sir W. H., Bt.
South	Peel, Hon. W. R. W.
South-West	Galloway, W. J.
Middlesbrough (1)	Sadler, Col. S. A.
Monmouth District (1)	Lawrence, Sir Joseph.
Morpeth (1)	Burt, Thomas.
Newcastle-under-Lyme (1)	Haslam, Sir A. S.
Newcastle-upon-Tyne, City (2)	Plummer, Sir W. R. Renwick, G.
Northampton (2)	Labouchere, Henry. Shipman, Dr. J. G.
Norwich, City (2)	Hoare, Sir Samuel, Bt. Tillett, Louis John.

Nottingham, City (3)
East	Bond, Edward.
South	Bentinck, Lord H. C.
West	Yoxall, J. H.
Oldham (2)	Emmott, Alfred. Churchill, W. L. S.
Oxford, City (1)	Valentia, Viscount.
Penryn and Falmouth (1)	Horniman, F. J.
Plymouth (2)	Duke, H. E. Guest, Hon. I. C.
Pontefract (1)	Nussey, T. Willans.
Portsmouth (2)	Majendie, J. H. A. Lucas, R. J.
Preston (2)	Kerr, John. Tomlinson, Sir William.
Reading (1)	Isaacs, Rufus D.
Rochdale (1)	Royds, Col. C. M.
Rochester, City (1)	Tuff, Charles
St. Helens (1)	Seton-Karr, Sir Henry.
Salford (3)
North	Platt-Higgins, F.
South	Groves, J. G.
West	Knowles, Lees.
Salisbury, City (1)	Palmer, W.
Scarborough (1)	Rickett, J. Compton.
Sheffield, City (5)
Attercliffe	Langley, Batty.
Brightside	Hope, J. Fitzalan.
Central	Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. Howard.
Ecclesall	Roberts, S.
Hallam	Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart-.
Shrewsbury (1)	Greene, H. D.
Southampton (2)	Simeon, Sir J. S. Barrington, Bt. Chamberlayne, T.
South Shields (1)	Robson, W. S.
Stafford (1)	Shaw, T. F. C. E.
Stalybridge (1)	Cheetham, J. F.
Stockport (2)	Leigh, Sir Joseph. Melville, B. V.
Stockton (1)	Ropner, Col. Sir E. H. O. R.
Stoke-upon-Trent (1)	Coghill, D. H.
Sunderland (2)	Doxford, Sir W. T. Pemberton, J. S. G.

TAUNTON (1)	Welby, Lt.-Col. A. C. E.
TYNEMOUTH (1)	Harris, F. L.
WAKEFIELD, CITY (1)	Brotherton, E. A.
WALSALL (1)	Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir A. D., Bt.
WARRINGTON (1)	Pierpoint, Robert.
WARWICK AND LEAMINGTON (1)	Lyttelton, Hon. Alfred.
WEDNESBURY (1)	Green, W. D.
WEST BROMWICH (1)	Spencer, Sir Ernest.
WHITEHAVEN (1)	Helder, Augustus.
WIGAN (1)	Powell, Sir F. S., Bt.
WINCHESTER, CITY (1)	Myers, W. H.
WINDSOR (1)	Barry, Sir F. T., Bt.
WOLVERHAMPTON (3)
East	Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir H. H.
South	Norman, H.
West	Hickman, Sir Alfred.
WORCESTER, CITY (1)	Allsopp, Hon. G. H.
YARMOUTH, GREAT (1)	Colomb, Sir John C. R.
YORK, CITY (2)	Butcher, J. G. Faber, G. D.

WALES—COUNTIES (19 Members).

ANGLESEY (1)	Griffith, Ellis J.
BRECKNOCKSHIRE (1)	Morley, Charles.
CARDIGANSHIRE (1)	Davies, M. L. Vaughan.
CARMARTHENSHIRE (2)
East	Thomas, Abel.
West	Morgan, J. Lloyd.
CARNARVONSHIRE (2)
North or Arfon	Jones, William.
South or Eifion	Roberts, J. Bryn.
DENBIGHSHIRE (2)
East	Moss, Samuel.
West	Roberts, J. H.
FLINTSHIRE (1)	Smith, Samuel.
GLAMORGANSHIRE (5)
East	Thomas, Sir Alfred.
Mid	Evans, S. T.
Rhondda	Abraham, William.
South	Wyndham-Quin, Major W. H.
West, or Gower	Thomas, J. A.
MERIONETHSHIRE (1)	Williams, A. O.

MONTGOMERYSHIRE (1)	Humphreys-Owen, A. C.
PEMBROKESHIRE (1)	Philipps, J. Wynford.
RADNORSHIRE (1)	Edwards, F.

WALES—BOROUGHS (11 Members).

CARDIFF DISTRICT (1)	Reed, Sir E. J.
CARMARTHEN DISTRICT (1)	Davies, Alfred.
CARNARVON DISTRICT (1)	Lloyd-George, David.
DENBIGH DISTRICT (1)	Kenyon, Hon. G. T.
FLINT DISTRICT (1)	Lewis, J. H.
MERTHYR TYDVIL (2)	Thomas, D. A. Hardie, J. Keir.
MONTGOMERY DISTRICT (1)	Pryce-Jones, Lieut.-Col. E.
PEMBROKE AND HAVERFORDWEST DISTRICT (1)	Laurie, Lieut.-Col. J. W.
SWANSEA (2)
District	Jones, D. Brynmor.
Town	Newnes, Sir G.

SCOTLAND—COUNTIES (39 Members).

ABERDEENSHIRE (2)
East	Maconachie, A. W.
West	Farquharson, Dr. R.
ARGYLLSHIRE (1)	Ainsworth, J. S.
AYRSHIRE (2)
North	Cochrane, Hon. T. H.
South	Arrol, Sir William.
BANFFSHIRE (1)	Black, A. W.
BERWICKSHIRE (1)	Tennant, H. J.
BUTESHIRE (1)
CAITHNESS-SHIRE (1)	Harmsworth, R. L.
CLACKMANNAN AND KINROSS (1)	Wason, Eugene.
DUMBARTONSHIRE (1)	Wylie, Alexander.
DUMFRIESSHIRE (1)	Maxwell, W. J. H.
EDINBURGH (MIDLOTHIAN) (1)	The Master of Elibank.
ELGIN AND NAIRN (1)	Gordon, Hon. J. E
FIFESHIRE (2)
East	Asquith, Rt. Hon. H. H.
West	Hope, J. D.
FORFARSHIRE (1)	Sinclair, Capt. J.

Haddingtonshire (1)	Haldane, R. B.
Inverness-shire (1)	Dewar, J. A.
Kincardineshire (1)	Crombie, J. W.
Kirkcudbrightshire (1)	Stewart, Sir Mark J. McT., Bt.
Lanarkshire (6)
Govan	Craig, R. H.
Mid	Caldwell, J.
North-East	Findlay, Alexander.
North-West	Douglas, C. M.
Partick	Smith, J. Parker.
South	Hozier, Hon. J. H. C.
Linlithgowshire (1)	Ure, Alex.
Orkney and Shetland (1)	Wason, J. C.
Peebles and Selkirk (1)	Thorburn, Sir Walter.
Perthshire (2)
East	Buchanan, T. R.
West	Stroyan, J.
Renfrewshire (2)
East	Shaw-Stewart, M. H.
West	Renshaw, Sir Charles.
Ross and Cromarty (1)	Weir, J. G.
Roxburghshire (1)	Dalkeith, Earl of.
Stirlingshire (1)	McKillop, J.
Sutherlandshire (1)	Leveson-Gower, F. S.
Wigtonshire (1)	Maxwell, Rt. Hon. Sir H. E., Bt.

SCOTLAND—CITIES AND BURGHS (31 Members).

Aberdeen, City (2)
North	Pirie, D. V.
South	Bryce, Rt. Hon. James.
Ayr District (1)	Dobbie, Joseph.
Dumfries District (1)	Reid, Sir R. T.
Dundee (2)	Robertson, Edmund. Leng, Sir John
Edinburgh, City (4)
Central	Brown, G. M.
East	McCrae, George.
South	Agnew, Sir A. N., Bt.
West	McIver, Sir Lewis, Bt.
Elgin District (1)	Asher, Alexander.
Falkirk District (1)	Wilson, John.

Glasgow, City (7)
Blackfriars and Hutchesontown	Law, A. B.
Bridgeton	Dickson, C. Scott.
Camlachie	Cross, Alexander.
Central	Baird, J. G. A.
College	Stirling-Maxwell, Sir J. M., Bt.
St. Rollox	Wilson, John.
Tradeston	Corbett, A. Cameron.
Greenock (1)	Reid, James.
Hawick District (1)	Shaw, Thomas.
Inverness District (1)	Finlay, Sir R. B.
Kilmarnock District (1)	Denny, Col. J. McA.
Kirkcaldy District (1)	Dalziel, J. H.
Leith District (1)	Ferguson, R. C. Munro.
Montrose District (1)	Morley, Rt. Hon. J.
Paisley (1)	Dunn, Sir Wm., Bt.
Perth City (1)	Wallace, Robert.
St. Andrews District (1)	Ellice, Capt. Ed. Chas.
Stirling District (1)	Campbell-Bannerman, Rt. Hn. Sir H.
Wick District (1)	Bignold, Arthur.

IRELAND—COUNTIES (85 Members).

Antrim (4)
East	McCalmont, Col. J.
Mid	O'Neill, Hon. R. T.
North	Moore, William.
South	Craig, C. C.
Armagh County (3)
Mid	Lonsdale, J. B.
North	Saunderson, Col. Rt. Hon. E. J.
South	Campbell, J.
Carlow County (1)	Hammond, John.
Cavan (2)
East	Young, Samuel.
West	Kennedy, V. P.
Clare (2)
East	Redmond, W. H. K.
West	Jameson, Major J. E.
Cork, County (7)
East	Donelan, Captain A. J. C.
Mid	Sheehan, D. D.
North	Flynn, J. C.
North-East	Abraham, Wm.
South	Barry, Edward.
South-East	Crean, Eugene.
West	Gilhooly, J.

DONEGAL (4)
East	McFadden, E.
North	O'Doherty, W.
South	MacNeill, J. G. Swift.
West	Law, Hugh A.
DOWN (4)
East	Wood, James.
North	Corbett, T. L.
South	MacVeagh, J.
West	Hill, Captain Arthur.
DUBLIN, COUNTY (2)
North	Clancy, J. J.
South	Mooney, J. J.
FERMANAGH (2)
North	Mitchell, Ed.
South	Jordan, Jeremiah.
GALWAY, COUNTY (4)
Connemara	O'Malley, William.
East	Roche, John.
North	Nolan, Col. J. P.
South	Duffy, W. J.
KERRY (4)
East	Murphy, J.
North	Flavin, M. J.
South	Boland, J. P.
West	O'Donnell, Thos.
KILDARE (2)
North
South	Kilbride, Dennis.
KILKENNY COUNTY (2)
North	Devlin, Joseph.
South	O'Mara, James.
KING'S COUNTY (2)
Birr	Reddy, Michael.
Tullamore	Burke, E. H.
LEITRIM (2)
North	McHugh, Patrick A.
South	Tully, Jasper.
LIMERICK, COUNTY (2)
East	Lundon, Wm.
West	O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
LONDONDERRY, COUNTY (2)
North	Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John.
South	Gordon, J.
LONGFORD, COUNTY (2)
North	Farrell, J. P.
South	Blake, Edward.
LOUTH (2)
North	Healy, T. M.
South	Nolan, Joseph.

MAYO (4)
East	Dillon, John.
North	O'Kelly, Conor.
South	O'Donnell, John.
West	Ambrose, Robert.
MEATH (2)
North	White, Patrick.
South	Sheehy, David.
MONAGHAN (2)
North	Thompson, Dr. E. C.
South	McKean, J.
QUEEN'S COUNTY (2)
Leix	MacDonnell, Dr. M. A.
Ossory	Delany, William.
ROSCOMMON (2)
North	O'Kelly, Jas.
South	Hayden, J. P.
SLIGO, COUNTY (2)
North	McKillop, W.
South	O'Dowd, John.
TIPPERARY (4)
East	Condon, T. J.
Mid	O'Brien, K. E.
North	O'Brien, P. J.
South	Cullinan, John.
TYRONE (4)
East	Doogan, P. C.
Mid	Murnaghan, George.
North	Hemphill, Rt. Hon. C. H.
South	Russell, T. W.
WATERFORD, COUNTY (2)
East	Power, P. J.
West	O'Shee, J. J.
WESTMEATH (2)
North	Kennedy, P. J.
South	Sullivan, Donal.
WEXFORD (2)
North	Esmonde, Sir T. H. G.
South	Ffrench, Peter.
WICKLOW (2)
East	Cogan, Denis J.
West	O'Connor, James.

IRELAND—CITIES AND BOROUGHS (16 Members).

BELFAST, CITY (4)
East	Wolff, G. W.
North	Haslett, Sir Jas. H.
South	Sloan, T. H.
West	Arnold-Forster, H. O.
CORK, CITY (2)	O'Brien, J. F. X. O'Brien, Wm.

Dublin, City (4)
College Green	Nannetti, J. P.
Dublin Harbour	Harrington, T.
St. Patrick's	Field, William.
St. Stephen's Green	Waldron, L. A.
Galway, Town (1)	Devlin, Chas. R.
Kilkenny (1)	O'Brien, Patrick.
Limerick, City (1)	Joyce, Michael.
Londonderry, City (1)	Hamilton, Capt. the Marquess of.
Newry (1)	Carvill, P. G. H.
Waterford (1)	Redmond, J. E.

UNIVERSITIES (9 Members).

England :—
Cambridge University (2)	Jebb, Sir R. C. Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir J. E.
London University (1)	Foster, Sir Michael.
Oxford University (2)	Anson, Sir W. R., Bart. Talbot, Rt. Hon. J. G.
Scotland :—
Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities (1)	Tuke, Sir J. Batty.
Glasgow and Aberdeen Universities (1) ...	Campbell, Rt. Hon. J. A.
Ireland :—
Dublin University (2)	Carson, Rt. Hon. Sir E. H. Campbell, J. H. M.

SUMMARY.

	No. of Members
England
Counties	234
Metropolitan Boroughs	62
Provincial Cities and Boroughs	164
		460
Wales
Counties	19
Boroughs	11
		30
Scotland
Counties	39
Cities and Burghs	31
		70
Ireland
Counties	85
Cities and Boroughs	16
		101
Universities
England	5
Scotland	2
Ireland	2
		9
Total number of Members		670

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TO

VOLUME CXLI.

FIRST VOLUME OF SESSION, 1905.

HOUSE OF LORDS: TUESDAY, 14TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

BLACK ROD.

Page

The LORD GREAT CHAMBERLAIN acquainted the House, "That His Majesty had appointed Admiral Sir Henry Frederick Stephenson, K.C.B., G.C.V.O., to be Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod in the room of General Sir Michael Antony Shrapnel Biddulph, G.C.B., deceased, and that he was at the door ready to receive their Lordships' commands"; whereupon the House directed he should be called in; accordingly he was called in and officiated in his place 1

THE KING'S SPEECH.

The KING, being seated on the Throne, and the Commons being at the Bar with their Speaker, His Majesty was pleased to make a most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, and then retired 1

SAT FIRST.

The EARL of HARDWICKE sat first in Parliament after the death of his nephew.

The VISCOUNT RIDLEY sat first in Parliament after the death of his father.

The LORD RANFURLY (E. Ranfurly) took the oath.

WATKIN HERBERT, LORD BISHOP of BANGOR, was (in the usual manner) introduced.

The LORD CLINTON sat first in Parliament after the death of his father 5

ROLL OF THE LORDS.—Garter King of Arms attending, delivered at the Table (in the usual manner) a List of the Lords Temporal in the Sixth Session of the Twenty-seventh Parliament of the United Kingdom. The same was ordered to lie on the Table 5

Feb. 14.| Page

SELECT VESTRIES.—Bill, pro formâ, read 1a... 5

Address in reply to His Majesty's most gracious Speech.

The Marquess of Winchester .. ..
Lord Cranmore-Browne 11
Earl Spencer 19
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (The Marquess of Lansdowne) 28
Viscount Goschen 37

On Question, Motion agreed to, nemine dissentiente, and ordered to be presented to His Majesty by the Lords with White Staves.

ALIEN IMMIGRATION FROM THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE.—Return of the number of aliens that arrived from the Continent at ports in the United Kingdom in each month of the year 1905. Ordered to be laid before the House.—(The Lord Wolverton) 38

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS (RECESS).

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that the following Papers having been commanded to be presented to this House by His Majesty had been so presented on the following dates by delivery to the Clerk of the Parliaments, pursuant to Standing Order No. CXI., viz. :—

TRADE REPORTS. I. ANNUAL SERIES.

No. 3256. Brazil (Bahia). (August 16.)
No. 3257. Greece (Ionian Islands).
No. 3258. Chile. (August 23.)
No. 3259. Costa Rica. (August 26.)
No. 3260. Austria-Hungary (Fiume).
No. 3261. Morocco (Dar-al-Baida). (August 27.)
No. 3262. Mexico (Vera Cruz).
No. 3263. Zanzibar (Zanzibar and Pemba). (August 30.)
No. 3264. Portugal (Laurenço Marques). (August 31.)
No. 3265. Italy (Lombardy). (September 3.)
No. 3266. Turkey (Damascus). (September 7.)
No. 3267. Persia (Khorassan and Sistan).
No. 3268. Italy (Sardinia).
No. 3269. Japan (Nagasaki).
No. 3270. China (Canton). (September 9.)
No. 3271. Portugal (Angola).
No. 3272. Russia (Consular District of Riga, 1903).
No. 3273. Portugal (Madeira, 1903).
No. 3274. Egypt (Alexandria, 1903). (September 14.)
No. 3275. Belgium, 1903. (September 20.)
No. 3276. Japan (Consular District of Tainan (S. Formosa, 1903). (September 17.)
No. 3277. Russia (Odessa). (September 21.)

Feb. 14.] Page

No. 3278. Russia (Finland).
No. 3279. United States of America. (September 22.)
No. 3280. China.
No. 3281. Peru. (September 27.)
No. 3282. Turkey (Crete). (September 29.)
No. 3283. Brazil (Rio de Janeiro). (October 4.)
No. 3284. Colombia (Barranguilla).
No. 3285. Mexico (Mexico).
No. 3286. Siam (Bangkok). (October 5.)
No. 3287. Germany.
No. 3288. Portugal (Goa). (October 6.)
No. 3289. France (Society Islands). (October 7.)
No. 3290. China (Chungking).
No. 3291. Sian (Chiengmai).
No. 3292. Panama. (October 8.)
No. 3293. China (Kiukiang).
No. 3294. Japan (Kobe and Osaka). (October 11.)
No. 3295. Tunis.
No. 3296. Germany (German Colonies). (October 12.)
No. 3297. Austria-Hungary (Bosnia and The Herzegovina). (October 13.)
No. 3298. Borneo (Brunei, Sarawak, and British North Borneo). (October 14.)
No. 3299. Russia (Archangel). (October 15.)
No. 3300. France (Martinique). (October 20.)
No. 3301. France. (October 26.)
No. 3302. Greece. (November 3.)
No. 3303. China (Amoy). (November 11.)
No. 3304. Russia (Reval). (November 18.)
No. 3305. Persia (Ispahan).
No. 3306. Turkey (Bengazi and Derna). (November 23.)
No. 3307. Chile.
No. 3308. Persia (Azerbaijan). (November 29.)
No. 3309. Russia (Agriculture in the Trans-Caucasus in 1904). (December 5.)
No. 3310. France (Dahomey).
No. 3311. Netherlands (Dutch Guiana).
No. 3312. France (Senegal).
No. 3313. France (French Guinea). (December 8.)
No. 3314. Switzerland. (December 9.)
No. 3315. Cuba. (December 13.)
No. 3316. France (Ivory Coast). (December 14.)
No. 3317. China (Foochow). (December 16.)
No. 3318. Italy (Ancona). (December 20.)
No. 3319. Italy (Elba). (December 29.)
No. 3320. Foreign Trade of Italy. (January 4.)
No. 3321. Somaliland Protectorate. (January 21.)
No. 3322. Morocco (Tangier). (February 2.)
No. 3323. South Italy. (February 8.) 39

Feb. 14.] Page

II. MISCELLANEOUS SERIES.

No. 619. Commercial Instruction in Germany. (September 15.)

No. 620. United States (Chicago Summer Vacation). (September 21.)

No. 621. Art Trade Schools in Germany. (December 20.)

No. 622. German Machinery Import and Export Trade and Industry.

No. 623. Mining and Metallurgical Industries of Spain in 1903. (December 30.)

No. 624. German Cement. (January 5.)

No. 625. Rice Industry in the United States. (January 12.)

No. 626. Iron and Steel Exhibits at the St. Louis Exhibition. (February 2.)

No. 627. United States Railways. (February 7.)

No. 628. Cultivation of Tea in the Caucasus. (February 8.)

REFORMATORY AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

I. (Ireland). Forty-second Report of the Inspector appointed to visit the Reformatory and Industrial Schools of Ireland. (August 17.)

II. (Great Britain). Forty-seventh Report, for the year 1903, of the Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools. Part II. General Report and Appendices III. to XI. (September 15.) 41

BOARD OF AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES.

I. Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to investigate experimentally and to report upon certain questions connected with the dipping and treatment of sheep.
Report.
Minutes of Evidence with Appendices. (August 18.)

II. Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to inquire into and report upon the working in Great Britain of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1893—
Report. (January 28.)
Minutes of Evidence with Appendices and Index. (February 13.) 42

BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (EDUCATION).—Annual report on the distribution of grants for agricultural education and research in the year 1903–1904; with statements respecting the several colleges and institutions aided; the experiments conducted; together with a summary of the agricultural instruction provided by county councils in 1903–1904, and the expenditure on the same in 1902–1903. (November 29.) 42

TRANSVAAL.—Correspondence relating to the position of British Indians in the Transvaal. (August 18.) 42

COLONIES. I. (ANNUAL).

No. 423. Sierra Leone (Report for 1903). (August 18.)

No. 424. Gambia (Report for 1903). (August 18.)

No. 425. Ceylon (Report for 1903). (August 26.)

No. 426. Gold Coast (Report for 1903). (September 2.)

No. 427. Lagos (Report for 1903). (September 7.)

No. 428. Bahamas (Report for 1903–1904). (September 13.)

Feb. 14.] Page

No. 429. Northern Territories of the Gold Coast (Report for 1903). (September 19.)
No. 430. Mauritius. (September 28.)
No. 431. Seychelles. (October 1.)
No. 432. Barbados. (October 3.)
No. 433. Southern Nigeria (Report for 1903). (October 11.)
No. 434. Fiji (Report for 1903). (November 7.)
No. 435. Straits Settlements (Report for 1903). (November 8.)
No. 436. Grenada (Report for 1903). (November 21.)
No. 437. Northern Nigeria (Report for 1903). (November 26.)
No. 438. Jamaica (Report for 1903–1904). (December 7.)
No. 439. Malta (Report for 1903–1904). (December 10.)
No. 440. Bechuanaland Protectorate (Report for 1902–1903 and 1903–1904) (December 13.)
No. 441. British Guiana (Report for 1903–1904). (December 20.)
No. 442. Trinidad and Tobago (Report for 1903–1904). (December 21.)
No. 443. St. Lucia (Report for 1903). (December 29.)
No. 444. Basutoland (Report of 1903–1904). (February 9.) 42

II. Miscellaneous.

No. 28. Reports on Rubber in the Gold Coast and Sierra Leone. (November 28.)
No. 29. Ceylon: Reports on the results of the mineral survey in 1903–1904, by Professor W. R. Dunstan, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S. 43

Colonies (Preferential Trade).—Papers relating to Resolutions passed by Colonial Legislatures since 1890 in favour of preferential trade relations with the United Kingdom. (December 29.) 43

Imperial Institute (Indian Section).—Annual Report for the year 1903–1904. (August 22.) 43

Lunacy (Ireland).—Fifty-third Report with Appendices, of the Inspectors of Lunatics in Ireland for the year 1903. (August 23.) 44

Workmen's Compensation.

I. Statistics of proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1897 and 1900, and the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, during the year 1903. (August 24.)

II. Report of the Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to inquire into the Law relating to compensation for injuries to workmen. Vol. II. Minutes of Evidence, with Index. (December 9.) 44

Agricultural Statistics (Ireland).

I. Abstracts showing the acreage under crops and the number of live stock in each county and province, 1903–1904. (August 24.)

II. Migratory Labourers. Report and tables relating to Irish migratory agricultural, and other labourers, for the year 1904. (November 29.)

III. Tables showing the extent, in statute acres, and the produce of the crops for the year 1904. (December 30.) 44

Feb. 14.] Page

TREATY SERIES.

No. 6. (1904.) Agreement between the United Kingdom and Germany, providing for the settlement by arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments ; signed at London, 12th July, 1904. (August 30.)

No. 7. (1904.) Convention between the United Kingdom and China respecting the employment of Chinese labour in British Colonies and Protectorates ; signed at London, 13th May, 1904. (September 22.)

No. 8. (1904.) Convention between the United Kingdom and Sweden and Norway providing for the settlement by arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the respective Governments ; signed at London, 11th August, 1904. (Ratifications exchanged at London, 9th November, 1904.) (November 18.)

No. 9. (1904.) Agreement between the United Kingdom and Switzerland providing for the settlement by arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments ; signed at London, 16th November, 1904. (November 26.)

No. 10. (1904.) Agreement between the United Kingdom and Portugal providing for the settlement by arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments ; signed at Windsor, 16th November, 1904. (November 26.)

No. 11. (1904.) Accession of Sweden to the International Copyright Convention, 9th September, 1886, and Declaration of 4th May, 1896. 1st August, 1904. (November 26.)

No. 12. (1904.) Accession of Cuba to the Industrial Property Convention, 1883, etc. ; 17th November, 1904. (November 28.)

No. 13. (1904.) Declaration between the United Kingdom and Russia relating to the constitution of an International Commission of Inquiry on the subject of the North Sea Incident ; signed at St. Petersburg, 25th (12th) November, 1904. (December 12.)

No. 1 (1905.) Accession of Cuba to Arrangements respecting False Indications of Origin on Goods and the International Registration of Trade Marks (Industrial Property Union.) 1st January, 1905. (January 24.)

No. 2. (1905.) Agreement between the United Kingdom and Russia respecting Joint Stock Companies and other Commercial Industrial and Financial Associations ; signed at St. Petersburg, 19th (16th) December, 1904. (February 10.) 44

AFRICA.

I. Somaliland. Despatches, etc., regarding the Military Operations in Somaliland, from the 18th January, 1902, to the 31st May, 1904. (August 31.)

II. Correspondence relating to the construction of Railways in Sierra Leone, Lagos, and the Gold Coast. (December 7.) 45

Feb. 14.] Page

INDIA.

I. (Excise.) Papers relating to the Excise Administration in Assam. (August 31.)

II. (Trade). Review of the Trade of India in 1903–1904. (October 28.)

III. (Statistical Abstract). Statistical Abstract relating to British India from 1893–94 to 1902–03. Thirty-eighth Number. (November 2.)

IV. (Sanitary Measures). Report on sanitary measures in India in 1902–1903. Vol. 36. (November 2.)

V. (Tibet). Further papers relating to Tibet, No. III. (in continuation of [Cd. 2054]). (January 27.) 45

ARMY.

I. List of exceptions to the Army Regulations as to pay, non-effective pay, and allowances sanctioned by the Commissioners of the Treasury, pursuant to the Royal Warrant dated 27th October, 1884, during the year 1903–1904. (September 1.)

II. Amendments in the Rules of Procedure under the Army Act. (October 8.)

III. Report on the trial of the short rifle by the Army and Navy. (December 7.)

IV. Order in Council defining the duties of the Army Council. (August 16.)

V. Approximate estimate of expenditure under the Military Works Acts of 1897, 1899, and 1901. (September 13.) 46

FIJI.—Correspondence relating to Native taxation and the communal system in Fiji. (September 9.) 46

POLICE (METROPOLIS).—Report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, for the year 1903. (September 13.) .. ..

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).—Report of the Commissioners of Prisons and the Directors of Convict Prisons, for the year ended 31st March, 1904. (September 13.) 46

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

I. Report of the Board of Education for the year 1903–1904. (September 13.)

II. Special Reports on Educational Subjects. Special reports on the educational systems of the chief Crown Colonies and Possessions of the British Empire, including reports on the training of native races—

Vol. 12 (Part I.) West Indies and Central America, St. Helena, Cyprus, and Gibraltar.

Vol. 13 (Part II.) West Africa, Basutoland, Southern Rhodesia, East Africa Protectorate, Uganda, Mauritius, Seychelles.

Vol. 14 (Part III.) Federated Malay States, Hong Kong, Straits Settlements, Fiji, Falkland Islands. (February 6.)

Feb. 14.] Page

III. Regulations relating to the Royal College of Science, the Royal College of Art, and to Museums under the Board of Education (from 1st August, 1904, to 31st July, 1905). (November 3.)

IV. Report for the year 1903, on the museums, colleges, and institutions under the administration of the Board. (November 15.)

V. List of Secondary Schools under the administration of the Board 1902-1903. (November 29.)

VI. Grants under Section 97, etc.—

Grants paid to school boards under Section 97, Elementary Education Act, 1870.

School board accounts.

List of loans. (December 22.)

VII. Reports from University College, 1904. (January 18.) 46

Congested Districts Board (Ireland).—Report of the Board, for the year ending 31st March, 1904. (September 19.) 47

Irish Land Commission (Proceedings).

Return for the months of March, April, May, and June, 1904. (September 22.)

Return for the month of July, 1904. (October 31.)

Return for the month of August, 1904. (November 2.)

Return for the month of September, 1904. (November 14.) 47

Crown Agents for the Colonies.—Accounts of the Crown Agents' Office Funds for the years 1900, 1901, and 1902. (September 23.) 47

Agriculture and Technical Instruction (Ireland).—Manual of Fisheries (Ireland) Acts. (September 23.) 48

Banking, Railway, and Shipping Statistics (Ireland).—Report for June, 1904. (September 27.) 48

Straits Settlements.—Reports on the Federated Malay States for 1903. (September 28.) 48

British Central Africa.—Report on the trade and general condition of the British Central Africa Protectorate for 1903-1904. (September 28.) .. 48

Military Prisons.—Report on the discipline and management of the Military Prisons, 1903. (October 4.) 48

Peterhead Harbour.—Reports respecting Peterhead Harbour Works. (October 5.) 48

Persia.—Report on the condition and prospects of British trade in Oman, Bahrein, and Arab ports in the Persian Gulf; by H. W. Maclean, Special Commissioner of the Commercial Intelligence of the Board of Trade. (October 13.) 48

Feb. 14.] Page

TURKEY.

No. 3. (1904.) Correspondence respecting the Asiatic Provinces of Turkey. (October 8.)

No. 4. (1904.) Further correspondence respecting the affairs of South Eastern Europe (in continuation of Turkey, No. 2. (1904.) (October 28.) .. 48

MINES AND QUARRIES (GENERAL REPORT AND STATISTICS FOR 1903. PART II. LABOUR).

I. General report and statistics relating to persons employed and accidents at mines and quarries in the United Kingdom and to the enforcement of the Mines and Quarries Acts. (October 10.)

II. General report and statistics relating to the output and value of the minerals raised in the United Kingdom, the amount and value of the metals produced, and the exports and imports of minerals. (October 25.) 48

CHINA, No. 5 (1904).—Report by Consul-General Hosie on the Province of Ssuch'uan. (October 20.) 49

LAND LAW (IRELAND) ACT, 1887 (EVICTION NOTICES).

I. Return of the number of Eviction Notices filed during the Quarter ended the 30th day of September 1904. (October 21.)

II. Return of the number of Eviction Notices filed during the Quarter ended 31st December 1904. (January 27.) 49

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP.

I. (Draft Regulations: Docks, Wharves, and Quays.) Report to His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department by Chester Jones, Esquire, on the Draft Regulations for Docks, Wharves, and Quays. (October 26.)

II. Annual Report of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Workshops, for the year 1903. Part II.—Tables. (November 30.) 49

INEBRIATE ACTS (INSPECTOR'S REPORT).—Report of the Inspector under the Inebriates Acts, 1879 to 1900, for the year, 1903. (October 28.) 49

SHERIFF COURT PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND).—Report of a Departmental Committee appointed by the Secretary for Scotland to inquire into Sheriff Court Procedure; with minutes of evidence, appendix, and index. (October 28.) 49

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACTS, 1896.—Orders made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade.

I. Authorising the construction of a light railway in the County of East Suffolk from Melton to Bromswell, Sutton, Shottisham, Hollesley, Alderton, and Bawdsey.

II. Authorising the construction of light railways in the parish of Northam and the parish and borough of Bideford in the county of Devon in extension of the Bideford, Westward Ho! and Appledore Railway, and the working of that railway as a light railway under the Light Railways Act, 1896.

Feb. 14.]

Page

III. Amending the Maidstone and Faversham Junction Light Railway Order, 1901.

IV. Authorising the construction of an additional light railway in the county of Gloucester, in the borough of Cheltenham, and the abandonment of the construction of part of another light railway already authorised in the same borough

V. Amending the Axminster and Lyme Regis Light Railway Order,

VI. Amending the Brackenhill Light Railway Order, 1901.

VII. Amending the Tickhill Light Railway Order, 1901.

VIII. Authorising the construction of light railways in the county of Essex from Southend by way of Rochford, Creeksea Burnham, Southminster, Asheldham, Dengie, Tillingham, Bradwell-juxta-Mare, and West Mersea to Colchester. (October 28.) 49

EVICTIONS (IRELAND).

I. Return of evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 30th September, 1904. (October 29.)

II. Return of evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 31st December, 1904. (January 31.) 50

ROYAL UNIVERSITY OF IRELAND — Annual Report for the year 1903. (November 2.) 50

METEOROLOGY.—Report of the Meteorological Council, for the year ended 31st March, 1904, to the President and Council of the Royal Society. (November 3.) 50

UNEMPLOYED IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.—Report to the Board of Trade on agencies and methods for dealing with the unemployed in certain foreign countries, by Mr. David F. Schloss. (November 4.) 50

IRELAND DEVELOPMENT GRANT ACT (1903).—Report of the Lord Lieutenant of all his proceedings under the Act for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1904. (November 7.) 50

AFRICA.

No. 12. (1904.) General Report on the Uganda Protectorate, for the year ending 31st March, 1904. (November 9.)

No. 13. (1904.) Report by Mr. A. E. Butter on the survey of the proposed frontier between British East Africa and Abyssinia. (With a map.) (December 1.)

No. 14. (1904.) Correspondence respecting slavery in the Islands of Zanzibar and Pemba, in continuation of Africa, No. 6. (1902.) (December 29.)

No. 15. (1904.) Report on East Africa Protectorate, for the year 1903-1904. (January 7.)

No. 16. (1904.) Report on the construction and working of the Mombasa-Victoria (Uganda) Railway and Steamboat Service on Lake Victoria, 1903–1904. (January 10.)

No. 1. (1905.) Further correspondence respecting the administration of the Independent State of the Congo (in continuation of Africa, No. 7. (1904.) (December 17.) 51

Feb. 14.] Page

ADOLF BECK (COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY).—Report of the Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to inquire into the case of Dr. Adolf Beck; together with minutes of evidence, appendix, and facsimiles of various documents. (November 18.) 51

BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES (SCOTLAND).—Forty-eighth Detailed Annual Report of the Registrar-General for Scotland of Births, Deaths, and Marriages in Scotland. (Abstracts of 1902.) (November 19.) 51

JUDICIAL STATISTICS (SCOTLAND).—Report on the Judicial Statistics for Scotland, for the year 1903. (November 23.) 51

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS (ROYAL COMMISSION).

Report on the Manuscripts of—

I. The Earl of Egmont. Vol. I.

II. The Marquess of Lothian, preserved at Blickling Hall, Norfolk. (November 24.)

III. Lady du Cane. (January 19.) 51

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND).—Annual Report for the year ended March, 1904. (November 28.) .. ..

BRITISH AND FOREIGN TRADE (AND INDUSTRY) (SECOND SERIES).—Second Series of memoranda, statistical tables, and charts, prepared in the Board of Trade, with reference to various matters bearing on British and Foreign Trade and Industrial Conditions. (December 12.) 52

MISCELLANEOUS, No. 2 (1904).—Warrant issued by the Secretary of State on 4th December, 1904, authorising the detention of the ship "Captain W. Menzell" at Cardiff. (December 12.) 52

JUDICIAL STATISTICS (ENGLAND AND WALES), 1900.—Statistics relating to criminal proceedings, police, coroners, prisons, reformatory and industrial schools, and criminal lunatics, for the year 1903. (December 13.) 52

CYPRUS.—Annual Report for 1903–1904. (January 4.) 52

RAILWAY SERVANTS (HOURS OF LABOUR).—Return in pursuance of Section 4 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1889, of railway servants of certain classes who were on one or more occasions during the month of October, 1903, on duty on the railways of the United Kingdom for more than twelve hours at a time; or who, after being on duty more than twelve hours were allowed to resume work with less than nine hours' rest (January 12.) 52

FOREIGN IMPORT DUTIES, 1904.—Statement of the Rates of Import Duties levied in European countries, in the United States, in Japan, China, and Persia, upon the produce and manufactures of the United Kingdom. (Duties in force, so far as notified to the Board of Trade, at date of preparation of this Return, November, 1904). (November 5.) 52

Feb. 14.] Page

NATIONAL EDUCATION (IRELAND).

I. Appendix (Section III.) to the Annual Report of the Commissioners for the year 1903.

II. Appendix (Section IV.) to the Annual Report of the Commissioners for the year 1903. (January 14.)

III. Appendix (Section I.) to the Annual Report of the Commissioners for the year 1903. (January 28.)

IV. Appendix (Section II.) to the Annual Report of the Commissioners for the year 1903. (January 28.) 52

COAL SUPPLIES (ROYAL COMMISSION).—Final Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of the coal resources of the United Kingdom. Part I. to XIII. (January 18.) 53

EXPLOSIVES (EXPLOSION IN A SHOP AT NEWCASTLE EMLYN).—Report to the right hon. the Secretary of State for the Home Department by Captain J. H. Thomson, His Majesty's Chief Inspector of Explosives, on the circumstances attending an explosion which occurred in an ironmonger's shop at Newcastle Emlyn, Carmarthenshire, on the 25th November, 1904. (January 19.) 53

NAVY.—Distribution and mobilisation of the fleet. (January 24.) 53

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

I. Returns of accidents and casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several railway companies in the United Kingdom during the three months ended 30th June, 1904, in pursuance of the Regulation of Railways Act (1871), together with reports of the inspecting officers, assistant inspecting officers, and sub-inspectors of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain accidents which were inquired into. (November 10.)

II. Returns of accidents and casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several railway companies in the United Kingdom during the three months ending 30th September, 1904, in pursuance of the Regulation of Railways Act (1871); together with the reports of inspecting officers, assistant inspecting officers, and sub-inspectors of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain accidents which were inquired into. (January 25.) 53

COMMERCIAL No. 1 (1905).—Further findings of the Permanent Commission established under the Sugar Convention of 5th March, 1902; reports of the British delegate and appeal of His Majesty's Government against certain of those findings. (January 31.) 54

AGRICULTURAL LABOURERS.—Second Report by Mr. Wilson Fox on the wages, earnings, and conditions of employment of agricultural labourers in the United Kingdom; with statistical tables and charts. (February 3.) .. 54

CANCER RESEARCH (COLONIES).—Correspondence relating to cancer research in the colonies. (February 9.) 54

MISCELLANEOUS, No. 1 (1905).—Reports on the laws in force in certain foreign countries in regard to the emission of smoke from chimneys. (February 10.)

The same were ordered to lie on the Table 54

Feb. 14.] Page

RUSSIA.

No. 1 (1905.) Correspondence respecting contraband of war in connection with hosilities between Russia and Japan.

No. 2. (1905.) Correspondence relating to the North Sea Incident .. 54

POST OFFICE.

I. (Increase of Maximum). Additional Articles to the Money Order Convention of the 7th–14th of October, 1871, between the General Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the General Post Office of the Netherlands.

II. (Money Orders—Mexico). Agreement between the Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Post Office of the United States of Mexico. Dated 4th February—18th March, 1904 54

IRISH LAND COMMISSION (PROCEEDINGS).—Return for the months of October, November and December, 1904 54

EDUCATION (SCOTLAND).—Minute of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland, dated 30th January, 1905, providing for the establishment of committees for the training of teachers (with explanatory memorandum). Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table 54

COUNTY COURTS.—Rules, dated 19th December, 1904 55

COUNTY COURTS ACT 1888 (SALFORD REGISTRY).—Order of the Lord Chancellor, That Robert Forrester Addie, the Registrar of the County Court of Lancashire, held at Salford, shall, so long as he holds his office as such registrar, be excluded from private practice as a solicitor, and with the concurrence of the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, that Section 20 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Officers) Act, 1879, shall not apply to the office of Robert Forrester Addie as such registrar of the County Court of Lancashire held at Salford 55

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.—Account of the receipts and expenditure of the Paymaster-General on behalf of the Supreme Court of Judicature in respect of the Funds of Suitors of the Court in the year ended 29th February, 1904; also account of the National Debt Commissioners for the same period in respect of funds held by them on behalf of the Supreme Court of Judicature; together with the report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon .. 55

DEEDS OF ARRANGEMENT ACT.

I. Rule, under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887.

II. Rule, dated 1st October, 1904 55

LUNACY RETURNS TO THE LORD CHANCELLOR.

I. The number of visits made, and the number of patients seen, by the several Commissioners in Lunacy during the six months ended 31st December, 1904.

II. All sums received by the visitors of lunatics for travelling expenses or upon any other account from the 1st January to the 31st December, 1904.

III. The number of visits made, the number of patients seen, and the number of miles travelled by the visitors of lunatics from the 1st April, 1904, to the 30th September, 1904 55

Feb. 14.]

MILITIA ACT, 1882 (DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS).—Returns of descriptions of qualifications of deputy-lieutenants lodged during 1904, as furnished to the Chief Secretary for Ireland 56

LOAN SOCIETIES.—Abstract of accounts of loan societies in England and Wales, furnished to the central office for the registry of friendly societies, for the year ended 31st December, 1903 56

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

I. Accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland for the year ended 31st December, 1903 ; together with the report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon.

II. Additional rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland as to the French course. Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland for the examination in music. Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland making an addition to Rule 9 (a) of the Rules and Programme for 1905.

III. Time-table of examinations for the year 1905 56

BANK OF ENGLAND.

I. Return of the amount of notes issued more than forty years and outstanding on 26th October, 1904, which have been written off.

II. Annual accounts of Exchequer Bills and other Government securities purchased 56

SUPERANNUATION.

I. Treasury Minute, dated 5th October, 1904, awarding a special pension to Sir Augustus W. L. Hemming, G.C.M.G., late Governor of Jamaica.

II. Treasury Minutes, granting retired allowances under Section 2 of the Superannuation Act, 1887, to—

Robert Henderson, lineman, Engineer-in-Chief's Department, Post Office. (September 2, 1904.)

Alfred Webster, clerk, Derby Post Office. (September 6, 1904.)

Samuel J. Morton, assistant superintendent, Boston Post Office. (September 6, 1904.)

Joseph Levingston, engineer, 1st class, Engineer-in-Chief's Department, Post Office. (November 21, 1904.)

Tom F. Dickinson, sorting clerk and telegraphist, Post Office. (November 28, 1904.)

Alfred H. Beaumont, town postman, Leeds Post Office. (January 6, 1905.)

John Still, inspector, Post Office, London. (January 11, 1905.)

Henry G. Bartlett, second division clerk (higher grade), Admiralty. (January 17, 1905.)

Charles F. Williams, second division clerk, Admiralty. (January 17, 1905.)

Feb. 14.] Page

III. Treasury Minutes, declaring that the following persons were appointed without a civil service certificate through inadvertence on the part of the heads of their departments—

Richard Leaney, labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office. (September 3, 1904.)

John W. Ginno, Royal Laboratory, War Office. (October 14, 1904.)

Benjamin Banks, boy artificer, Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield, War Office. (October 21, 1904.)

John Foster, boy labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office. (October 21, 1904.)

William Gregory, carpenter, Royal Carriage Department, War Office. (October 29, 1904.)

Frederick G. Postons, Postmaster of Newmarket, Post Office (November 4, 1904.)

IV. Professional Qualifications. Treasury Minute, declaring that for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the office of Professor of Zoology in the Royal College of Science, Dublin, professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired on the public service are required. (August 26, 1904) 56

DUCHY OF CORNWALL.—Account of the receipts and disbursements of the Duchy Cornwall, in the year ended 31st December, 1904 58

CHELSEA HOSPITAL (ARMY PRIZE MONEY AND LEGACY FUNDS, 1903–1904).—Account of the receipts and expenditure of the Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital (for services other than those voted by Parliament), in the year ended 31st March, 1904 ; together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon 58

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.—Rules, dated 1st October, 1904 58

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN GUARANTEED LOAN OF 1855.—Account for the year ended 31st December, 1904 58

WINTER ASSIZES (IRELAND).—Four Orders in Council, dated 2nd November, 1904, for holding winter assizes in Ireland 58

PHARMACY (IRELAND) ACTS, 1875 AND 1890.—Order in Council, dated 2nd November, 1904, approving of a regulation made by the Pharmaceutical Society .. 58

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND).—Two Orders with respect to the urban county districts of Ballymena and Omagh 58

GENERAL PRISONS (IRELAND) ACT, 1877.—Order closing the prison at Wexford 58

AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND) ACT, 1899.—Fifty-five minutes by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland sanctioning forms of instruction for certain county boroughs, counties, and urban districts 58

Feb. 14.] Page

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP.

I. (Dangerous and Unhealthy Industries.) Regulations, dated 24th October 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 79 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, in respect of the processes of loading, unloading, moving, and handling goods in, on, or at any dock, wharf, or quay, and the processes of loading, unloading, or coaling any ship in dock, harbour, or canal.

II. (Special Exception: Overtime.) Order, dated 15th November, 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 49 of the Factory and Workshop Act, extending the special exception under that section to non-textile factories and workshops, or parts thereof in which the making-up of any article of table linen, bed linen, or other household linen is carried on.

III. (Special Exception. Night Work.) Order, dated 9th August 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 54 (4) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception in that section to male young persons of the age of sixteen years and upwards employed on the system of three shifts of not more than eight hours each in the processes of pressing and reeling cordite and nitrating and moulding gun cotton carried on in non-textile factories 58

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS, 1853 TO 1891 (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Licences granted by His Majesty to—

I. Kate Ellen Shoesmith, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of Compassion, 63, Sutherland Street, Pimlico.

II. Alice Robinson, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley.

III. Sarah Wildman, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Elizabeth Fry Refuge, Hackney, E.

IV. Elizabeth Ann Holden, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Elizabeth Fry Refuge, Hackney, E.

V. Lucy Gould, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of St. John the Baptist, Pimlico, S.W.

VI. Mary Ann Murray, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley.

VII. Ada Hauson, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley 59

CERTIFIED INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES (REGULATIONS FOR MANAGEMENT).—Regulations made, with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the management and discipline of the certified inebriate reformatory at East Hailing, Norfolk 60

Feb. 14.] Page

POLLING DISTRICTS.

Order made by the—

County council of the county of Southampton, altering certain polling districts in the Andover, New Forest, and Fareham parliamentary divisions.

Council of the borough of Devonport, altering certain polling districts in the borough.

Council of the borough of Salford, altering certain polling districts in the borough.

County council of the county of Lancaster, altering certain polling districts in the Ince, Lancaster, and Westhoughton parliamentary divisions.

County council of the countyiof Lancaster, altering certain polling districts in the Middleton, Stretford, and Widnes parliamentary divisions.

County council of the county of Durham, altering certain polling districts in the county.

County council of the county of Berks, altering the polling districts for the several parliamentary divisions of the county 60

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANIES.—Statements of accounts and of life assurance and annuity business and abstracts of actuarial reports deposited with the Board of Trade under Section 10 of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870, during the year ended 31st December, 1904 60

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE FUND.—Account of the General Lighthouse Fund under the Acts 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60. s. 679, and 61 & 62 Vict. c. 44, showing the income and expenditure for the year ended 31st March, 1904 61

WEST HIGHLAND RAILWAY (EXTENSION FROM BANAIRE TO MALLAIG).—Third annual report by the Board of Trade as to the condition and working of the Banaire to Mallaig Railway, the rates and charges for traffic, and the receipts and expenditure of any company in working the railway, for the year 1903–1904 61

RAILWAYS (PRIVATE SIDINGS) ACT, 1904.—Rule made by the Railway and Canal Commissioners in pursuance of the 20th Section of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, in relation to applications to the Commissioners made under Section 3 of the Railways (Private Sidings) Act, 1904.. .. 61

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.—Regulations to be observed by the admirals, masters, and crews of fishing vessels, and carriers forming the fleets belonging to the Port of Kingston-upon-Hull, made pursuant to the provisions of Section 417 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 61

INDIA.

I. (Examinations). Regulations for examination for the civil service of India.

II. (Loans raised in India). Return of all loans raised in India chargeable on the revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ended on the 30th September, 1904, with the rates of interest and tota amount payable thereon, and the date of the termination of each loan, the debt incurred during the half-year, the moneys raised thereby during the half-year, the loans paid off or discharged during the half-year, and the loans outstanding at the close of the half-year stating, so far as the public convenience will allow, the purpose or service for which moneys have been raised during the half-year. .. ..

Feb 14.] Page

III. (Loans raised in England.) Return of all loans raised in England under the provisions of any Acts of Parliament, chargeable on the revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ended on the 30th September, 1904, with the rates of interest and total amount payable thereon, and the date of the termination of each loan, the debt incurred during the half-year, the moneys raised thereby during the half-year, the loans paid off or discharged during the half-year, and the loans outstanding at the close of the half-year, stating, so far as the public convenience will allow, the purpose or service for which moneys have been raised during the half-year 61

DOCKYARD PORTS REGULATION ACT, 1865.—Order in Council of 24th October, 1904, amending the regulations affecting the Dockyard Port of Plymouth 62

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

I. Order in Council of 10th February, 1905, confirming certain byelaws made by the Trinity House of Kingston-upon-Hull, fixing the rates of pilotage between the ports of Hull and Goole.

II. Order in Council of the 4th October, 1904, directing the registries of sea-fishing boats be kept at Port Talbot and Methil 62

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890.

I. Order in Council of 4th November, 1904, entitled, "The British Protectorates Neutrality (Amendment) Order in Council, 1904."

II. Order in Council of 10th February, 1905, entitled, "The East Africa and Uganda (Currency) Order in Council, 1905."

III. Orders in Council of the 24th October, 1904, entitled respectively—
"The British Protectorate Neutrality Order in Council, 1904."
"The Foreign Jurisdiction Neutrality Order in Council, 1904."
"The China and Corea Order in Council, 1904."
"The Southern Nigeria Order in Council, 1904," and
"The Cyprus Telegraphs Order, 1904."

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACTS, 1878 TO 1904.

I. Order in Council of 12th December, 1904, approving a new denomination of standard measure of length of twenty metres.

II. Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, specifying new fees to be taken in respect of the verification and stamping by inspectors of weights and measures, and weighing and measuring instruments 63

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1858.—Order in Council of 12th December, 1904, approving a statement of proposed new and revised appointments and alterations of salaries in the establishment of the Secretary of State for India in Council 63

COPYRIGHT ACTS, 1844 TO 1886.—Order in Council of the 12th December, 1904, giving effect to the accession of Sweden to the International Copyright Convention, 1886 63

Feb. 14.] Page

BISHOPRICS ACT, 1878, AND BISHOPRICS OF SOUTHWARK AND BIRMINGHAM ACT, 1904.—Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, for the foundation of the Bishopric of Birmingham 63

EXPLOSIVES ACT, 1875.—Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, prohibiting, except under certain conditions, certain fireworks of a dangerous nature .. 63

LEEWARD ISLANDS.—Amended prison rule relating to the employment of female prisoners.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 63

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877.

I. Statute made by the Governing body of Magdalen College, Oxford, on 11th May, 1904, amending the existing Statutes of the College.

II. Two Statutes made by the Governing Body of Balliol College, Oxford, on 26th May, 1904, amending (i) Statute III., and (ii) Statute IV. and Schedule B. of the College Statutes.

III. Statute made by the Governing Body of New College, Oxford, on the the 15th June, 1904, amending Statute XV. (Pension Fund) of the Statutes of the College.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and to be printed. (No. 1) .. 64

COMMITTEE FOR PRIVILEGES.—Appointed 64

COMMITTEE FOR THE JOURNALS.—Appointed 64

STOPPAGES IN THE STREETS.—Order to prevent, renewed 64

APPEAL COMMITTEE.—Appointed 64

MARGATE PIER AND HARBOUR COMPANY.—Report and statement of accounts, for the year ended 5th April, 1904 64

MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR BOARD.—Accounts for the year ended 1st July, 1904.

Delivered (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 64

ALIEN IMMIGRATION FROM THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE.—Return in (part) respecting. Laid before the House (pursuant to Order of this day), and to be printed. (No. 2.) 64

House adjourned at ten minutes before Seven o'clock, to Thursday next, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: TUESDAY, 14TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

Message to attend His Majesty.

The House went; and, being returned—

MR. SPEAKER informed the House, That he had issued Warrants for New Writs during the Recess, for County of Kent (Isle of Thanet Division), in the room of the Right Hon. James Lowther, deceased; County of Monmouth (Western Division), The Right Hon. Sir William George Granville Venables Vernon Harcourt, deceased; County of Sussex (West or Horsham Division), John Heywood Johnstone, esquire, deceased; Borough of Stalybridge, The Hon. Matthew White Ridley, called to the House of Peers; Borough of Tower Hamlets (Mile End Division), Spencer Charrington, esquire, deceased; County of Dorset (Northern Division), John Kenelm Digby Wingfield-Digby, esquire, deceased; County of Kildare (Northern Division), Edmund Leamy, esquire, deceased 65

NEW MEMBERS SWORN.—John Frederick Cheetham, Esquire, for Borough of Stalybridge; Edward Turnour, Esquire, commonly called Viscount Turnour, County of Sussex (North-Western or Horsham Division); Thomas Richards, Esquire, County of Monmouth (Western Division); Colonel Harry Lawson Webster Lawson, commonly called The hon. Harry Lawson Webster Lawson; Parliamentary Borough of the Tower Hamlets (Mile End Division); Arthur Walters Wills, Esquire, County of Dorset (Northern Division); Harry Hananel Marks, Esquire, County of Kent (Isle of Thanet Division) 65

ELECTIONS.—Ordered, That all Members who are returned for two or more places in any part of the United Kingdom do make their Election for which of the places they will serve, within one week after it shall appear that there is no question upon the Return for that place; and if anything shall come in question touching the Return or Election of any Member, he is to withdraw during the time the matter is in debate; and that all Members returned upon double Returns do withdraw till their Returns are determined.

Resolved, That no Peer of the Realm, except such Peers of Ireland as shall for the time being be actually elected, and shall not have declined to serve, for any county, city, or borough of Great Britain, hath any right to give his vote in the Election of any Member to serve in Parliament.

Motion made and Question proposed, "That it is a high infringement of the liberties and privileges of the Commons of the United Kingdom for any Lord of Parliament or other Peer or Prelate not being a Peer of Ireland at the time elected, and not having declined to serve for any county, city, or borough, of Great Britain, to concern himself in the election of Members to serve for the Commons in Parliament, except only any Peer of Ireland, at such Elections in Great Britain respectively where such Peer shall appear as a candidate, or by himself, or any others, be proposed to be elected; or for any Lord-Lieutenant or Governor of any county to avail himself of any authority derived from his Commission, to influence the Election of any Member to serve for the Commons in Parliament."—(Sir Alexander Acland-Hood.)

Sir Wilfrid Lawson (Cornwall, Camborne) 66
The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) 67

Question put.

The House divided :—Ayes, 345 ; Noes, 65. (Division List No. 1.)

PRIVILEGE.

Mr. Dalziel (Kirkcaldy Burghs) 71

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Lord Alington, a Peer of Parliament, has, by his action in connection with the recent Election in North Dorset, been guilty of a breach of the Privileges of this House."—(Mr. Dalziel.)

Mr. A. J. Balfour 74

Question put, "That the Question be not now put."

The House divided :—Ayes, 257 ; Noes, 191. (Division List No. 2.)

ELECTIONS.—Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath been elected or returned a Member of this House, or endeavoured so to be, by bribery, or any other corrupt practices, this House will proceed with the utmost severity against all such persons as shall have been wilfully concerned in such bribery or other corrupt practices.

WITNESSES.

Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath been tampering with any witness, in respect of his evidence to be given to this House, or any Committee thereof, or directly or indirectly hath endeavoured to deter or hinder any person from appearing or giving evidence, the same is declared to be a high crime or misdemeanour ; and this House will proceed with the utmost severity against such offender.

Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath given false evidence in any case before this House, or any Committee thereof, this House will proceed with the utmost severity against such offender 79

METROPOLITAN POLICE.—Ordered, That the Commissioners of the Police of the Metropolis do take care that, during the session of Parliament, the passages through the streets leading to this House be kept free and open, and that no obstruction be permitted to hinder the passage of Members to and from this House, and that no disorder be allowed in Westminster Hall, or in the passages leading to this House, during the Sitting of Parliament, and that there be no annoyance therein or thereabouts ; and that the Serjeant at Arms attending this House do communicate this Order to the Commissioners aforesaid 79

Feb. 14.] Page

VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.—Ordered, That the Votes and Proceedings of this House be printed, being first perused by Mr. Speaker; and that he do appoint the printing thereof; and that no person but such as he shall appoint do presume to print the same 80

PRIVILEGES.—Ordered, That a Committee of Privileges be appointed 80

OUTLAWRIES BILL.—" For the more effectual preventing Clandestine Outlawries," read the first time; to be read a second time 80

JOURNAL.

Ordered, That the Journal of this House, from the end of the last session to the end of the present session, with an Index thereto, be printed.

Ordered, That 500 copies of the said Journal and Index be printed by the appointment and under the direction of Sir Courtenay Peregrine Ilbert, K.S.C.I., C.I.E., the Clerk of this House.

Ordered, That the said Journal and Index be printed by such person as shall be licensed by Mr. Speaker, and that no other person do presume to print the same 80

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS (RECESS).

The following Papers, presented by His Majesty's Command during the Recess, were delivered to the Librarian of the House of Commons during the Recess, pursuant to the Standing Order of the 14th August, 1896 :—

1. Explosions (Newcastle Emlyn).—Copy of Report by Captain J. H. Thomson, His Majesty's Chief Inspector of Explosives, to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, on the circumstances attending an Explosion which occurred in an ironmonger's shop at Newcastle Emlyn, Carmarthenshire, on the 25th November, 1904.

2. Beck (Adolf) (Committee of Inquiry).—Copy of Report of the Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to inquire into the case of Mr. Adolf Beck, together with Minutes of Evidence, Appendix, and facsimiles of various Documents.

3. Coal Supplies (Royal Commission).—Copy of Final Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of the Coal Resources of the United Kingdom. Parts I. to XIII.

4. Historical Manuscripts (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report on the Manuscripts of the Earl of Egmont, Vol. I.

5. Historical Manuscripts (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report on the Manuscripts of the Marquess of Lothian, preserved at Blickling Hall, Norfolk.

6. Historical Manuscripts (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report on the Manuscripts of Lady du Cane.

7. Mines and Quarries.—Copy of General Report and Statistics for the year 1903; Part II., Labour; General Report and Statistics relating to persons employed and Accidents at Mines and Quarries in the United Kingdom, and to the enforcement of the Mines and Quarries Acts,

8. Mines and Quarries.—Copy of General Report and Statistics for the year 1903 Part III., Output; General Report and Statistics relating to the Output and Value of the Minerals raised in the United Kingdom, the amount and value of the metals produced, and the exports and imports of Minerals.

9. Prisons (England and Wales).—Copy of Report of the Commissioners of Prisons and the Directors of Convict Prisons, with Appendices, for the year ended 31st March, 1904.

10. Factories and Workshops.—Copy of Report of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Workshops for 1903. Part II. Tables.

11. Factory and Workshop (Draft Regulations—Docks, Wharves, and Quays).—Copy of Report to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, by Chester Jones, esquire, on the Draft Regulations for Docks, Wharves, and Quays.

12. Reformatory and Industrial Schools (Great Britain).—Copy of Forty-seventh Report of His Majesty's Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools for 1903. Part II. General Report and Appendices III. to XI.

13. Police (Metropolis).—Copy of Report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for the year 1903.

14. Inebriates Acts (Inspector's Report).—Copy of Report of the Inspector under the Inebriates Acts, 1879 to 1900, for the year 1903.

15. Workmen's Compensation.—Copy of Statistics of Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1897 and 1900, and the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, during the year 1903.

16. Workmen's Compensation.—Copy of Report of the Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to inquire into the Law relating to Compensation for Injuries to Workmen. Vol. II., Minutes of Evidence, with Index.

17. Judicial Statistics (England and Wales).—Copy of Judicial Statistics, Part I., relating to Criminal Proceedings, Police, Coroners, Prisons, Reformatory and Industrial Schools, and Criminal Lunatics, for England and Wales for 1903.

18. East India (Trade).—Copy of Review of Trade of India for 1903–4.

19. East India (Statistical Abstract).—Copy of Statistical Abstract relating to British India from 1893–4 to 1902–3, Thirty-eighth Number.

20. East India (Sanitary Measures).—Copy of Report on Sanitary Measures in India in 1902–3 (Vol. XXXVI.).

21. Imperial Institute (Indian Section).—Copy of Annual Report of the Imperial Institute (Indian Section) for the year 1903–4.

22. East India (Tibet).—Copy of Further Papers relating to Tibet (No. III.).

Feb. 14.] Page

23. East India (Excise).—Copy of Papers relating to the Excise Administration in Assam.

24. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of an additional Light Railway, in the county of Gloucester, in the borough of Cheltenham, and the abandonment of the construction of part of another Light Railway already authorised in the same borough (Cheltenham and District Light Railway (Extension No. 3) Order, 1904).

25. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the county of East Suffolk from Melton to Bromeswell, Sutton Shottisham, Hollesley, Alderton, and Bawdsey (Woodbridge and Bawdsey Light Railway Order, 1904).

26. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending The Brackenhill Light Railway Order, 1901 (Brackenhill Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1904.

27. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending The Tickhill Light Railway Order, 1901 (Tickhill Light Railway (Extension of time) Order, 1904).

28. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending The Maidstone and Faversham Junction Light Railway Order, 1901 (Maidstone and Faversham Junction Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1904.

29. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the county of Essex from Southend by way of Rochford, Creeksea, Burnham, Southminster, Asheldham, Dengie, Tillingham, Bradwell-juxta-Mare, and West Mersea, to Colchester (Southend and Colchester Light Railways Order, 1904.)

30. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending the Axminster and Lyme Regis Light Railway Order, 1899 (Axminster and Lyme Regis Light Railway (Further Capital Powers) Order, 1904).

31. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the parish of Northam and the parish and borough of Bideford, in the county of Devon, in extension of the Bideford, Westward Ho! and Appledore Railway, and the working of that Railway as a Light Railway under The Light Railways Act, 1896 (Bideford, Westward Ho! and Appledore Light Railway Order, 1904).

32. Railway Accidents.—Copy of Returns of Accidents and Casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several Railway Companies in United Kingdom during the three months ending 30th June, 1904, together with Reports of the Inspecting Officers of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain Accidents which were inquired into,

33. Railway Accidents.—Copy of Returns of Accidents and Casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several Railway Companies in the United Kingdom during the three months ending 30th September, 1904, together with Reports of the Inspecting Officers of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain Accidents which were inquired into.

34. Railway Servants (Hours of Labour).—Copy of Return, in pursuance of Section 4 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1889, of Railway Servants of certain classes who were on one or more occasions during the month of October, 1903, on duty on the railways of the United Kingdom for more than twelve hours at a time; or who, after being on duty more than twelve hours were allowed to resume work with less than nine hours' rest.

35. Foreign Import Duties.—Copy of Statement of the Rates of Import duties levied in European Countries, in the United States, in Japan, China, and Persia, upon the Produce and Manufactures of the United Kingdom in 1904.

36. British and Foreign Trade and Industry.—Copy of Second Series of Memoranda, Statistical Tables, and Charts, prepared in the Board of Trade, with reference to various matters bearing on British and Foreign Trade and Industrial Conditions.

37. Muscat Region (Trade).—Copy of Report on the condition and prospects of British Trade in Oman, Bahrein, and the Arab Ports in the Persian Gulf by H. W. Maclean, Special Commissioner of the Commercial Intelligence Committee of the Board of Trade.

38. Unemployed in Foreign Countries.—Copy of Report to the Board of Trade on Agencies and Methods for dealing with the Unemployed in certain Foreign Countries by Mr. David F. Schloss.

39. Earnings of Agricultural Labourers.—Copy of Second Report by Mr. Wilson Fox on the Wages, Earnings, and Conditions of Employment of Agricultural Labourers in the United Kingdom, with Statistical Tables and Charts.

40. Irish Land Commission (Proceedings).—Copy of Return of Proceedings during the months of March, April, May, June, July, August, and September, 1904.

41. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Seventieth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year, 1903. Section I.

42. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Seventieth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1903. Section II.

43. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Seventieth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1903. Section III.

44. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Seventieth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1903. Section IV.

45. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Tables showing the extent in statute acres and the produce of the Crops for the year 1904.

Feb. 14.] Page

46. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Abstracts showing the Acreage under Crops and the number of Live Stock in each county and province of Ireland, for the year 1903–4.

47. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland) (Migratory Labourers).—Copy of Report and Tables relating to Irish Migratory Agricultural and other Labourers for the year 1904.

48. Evictions (Ireland).—Copy of Return of Evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 30th September 1904.

49. Evictions (Ireland).—Copy of Return of Evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 31st December, 1904.

50. Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887 (Eviction Notices).—Copy of Return of Eviction Notices filed during the quarter ended 30th September, 1904.

51. Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887 (Eviction Notices).—Copy of Return of Eviction Notices filed during the quarter 31st December, 1904.

52. Banking, Railway, and Canal Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Report on the Banking, Railway, and Canal Statistics of Ireland for the half-year ended 30th June, 1904.

53. Reformatory and Industrial Schools (Ireland).—Copy of Forty-second Report of the Inspector for the year 1903.

54. Lunacy (Ireland).—Copy of Fifty-third Report, with Appendices, of Inspectors of Lunatics (Ireland) for the year 1903.

55. Congested Districts Board (Ireland).—Copy of Thirteenth Report of the Board, being for the year ending 31st March, 1904.

56. Royal University of Ireland.—Copy of Twenty-second Report of the Royal University of Ireland, being for the year 1903.

57. Local Government Board (Ireland).—Copy of Annual Report of the Local Government Board for Ireland, for the year ended 31st March, 1904.

58. Ireland Development Grant Act, 1903.—Copy of Report of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland of all his Proceedings under the Act, for the year ended 31st March, 1904.

59. Fisheries (Ireland) Acts.—Copy of Manual prepared for the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction, Ireland, on the Fisheries (Ireland) Acts.

60. Army (Pay, Non-effective Pay, and Allowances).—Copy of List of Exceptions to the Army Regulations as to Pay, Non-effective Pay, and Allowances sanctioned during the year 1903–4.

61. Military Prisons.—Copy of Report on the Discipline and Management of Military Prisons in 1903.

62. Army.—Copy of Amendments in the Rules of Procedure under the Army Act.

63. Army.—Copy of Approximate Estimate of Expenditure under the Military Works Acts of 1897, 1899, and 1901.

64. Army.—Copy of Order in Council defining the duties of the Army Council.

65. Army.—Copy of Order in Council defining the duties of the Inspector-General of the Forces.

66. Army.—Copy of Order in Council defining the duties of the Director of Army Finance.

67. Army.—Copy of Report on the trial of the Short Rifle by the Army and Navy.

68. Somaliland (Despatches).—Copy of Despatches, etc., regarding the Military Operations in Somaliland from the 18th January, 1902, to the 31st May, 1904.

69. Board of Education (Special Reports).—Copy of Special Reports on Educational Subjects, Vol. 12. Educational Systems of the Chief Crown Colonies and Possessions of the British Empire, including Reports on the Training of Native Races. Part I. West Indies and Central America, St. Helena, Cyprus, and Gibraltar.

70.—Board of Education (Special Reports).—Copy of Special Reports on Educational Subjects, Vol. 13. Educational Systems of the Chief Crown Colonies and Possessions of the British Empire, including Reports on the Training of Native Races. Part II. West Africa, Basutoland, Southern Rhodesia, East Africa Protectorate, Uganda, Mauritius, Seychelles.

71. Board of Education (Special Reports).—Copy of Special Reports on Educational Subjects, Vol. 14. Educational Systems of the Chief Crown Colonies and Possessions of the British Empire, including Reports on the Training of Native Races. Part III. Federated Malay States, Hong Kong, Straits Settlements, Fiji, Falkland Islands.

72. Board of Education.—Copy of Regulations relating to the Royal College of Science, the Royal College of Art, and to Museums under the Board of Education from 1st August, 1904, to 31st July, 1905

73. Board of Education.—Copy of Reports from University Colleges, 1904.

74. Board of Education.—Copy of (1) Grants paid in respect of School Boards under Section 97 of Elementary Education Act, 1870 (2) School Board Accounts, (3) List of Loans, for 1903–4.

75. Board of Education.—Copy of Report on the Victoria and Albert Museum, the Royal College of Science and Art, the Geological Survey and Museum, and on the work of the Solar Physics Committee for the year 1903

76. Board of Education.—Copy of Lists of Secondary Schools, Science and Art Classes, and Evening Schools and Schools of Art, under the administration of the Board of Education, for the school year 1902–3.

77. Board of Education.—Copy of Report of the Board of Education for the year 1903–4.

Feb. 14.] Page

78. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (Distribution of Grants).—Copy of Annual Report on the Distribution of Grants for Agricultural Education and Research in the year 1903–4, etc.

79. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (Departmental Committee).—Copy of Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to investigate experimentally and to report upon certain questions connected with the Dipping and Treatment of Sheep.

80. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (Departmental Committee).—Copy of Minutes of Evidence taken before the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, to investigate experimentally and to Report upon certain questions connected with the Dipping and Treatment of Sheep, with Appendices.

81. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (Departmental Committee).—Copy of Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to inquire into and Report upon the working in Great Britain of The Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1893.

82. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (Departmental Committee).—Copy of Minutes of Evidence taken before the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to inquire into and report upon the working in Great Britain of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1893, with Appendices and Index.

83. Judicial Statistics (Scotland).—Copy of Report on the Judicial Statistics of Scotland for the year 1903.

84. Births, Deaths, and Marriages (Scotland).—Copy of Forty-eighth Detailed Annual Report of the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages in Scotland (Abstracts of 1902).

85. Sheriff Court Procedure (Scotland) (Departmental Committee).—Copy of Report of a Departmental Committee appointed by the Secretary for Scotland to inquire into Sheriff Court Procedure, with Minutes of Evidence Appendix, and Index.

86. Navy.—Copy of Memorandum relating to the Distribution and Mobilisation of the Fleet.

87. Peterhead Harbour.—Copy of Reports respecting Peterhead Harbour Works.

88. Meteorology.—Copy of Report of the Meteorological Council to the Royal Society for the year ended 31st March 1904.

89. Colonial Reports (Annual).—Copies of Reports Nos. 423 (Sierra Leone Annual Report for 1903), 424 (Gambia, Annual Report for 1903), 425 (Ceylon, Annual Report for 1903), 426 (Gold Coast, Annual Report for 1903), 427 (Lagos, Annual Report for 1903), 428 (Bahamas, Report for 1903–4), 429 (Northern Territories of the Gold Coast, Annual Report for 1903), 430 (Mauritius, Annual Report for 1903), 431 (Seychelles, Annual Report for 1903), 432 (Barbados, Report for 1903–4), 433 (Southern Nigeria, Annual Report for 1903), 434 (Fiji, Annual Report for 1903), 435 (Straits Settlements, Annual Report for 1903), 436 (Grenada, Annual Report for 1903), 437 (Northern Nigeria, Annual Report for 1903), 438 (Jamaica, Report for 1903–4, 439 (Malta, Report for 1903–4), 440 (Bechuanaland Protectorate, Report for 1902–3 and 1903–4), 441 (British Guiana, Report for 1903–4), 442 (Trinidad and Tobago, Report for 1903–4), 443 (St. Lucia, Annual Report for 1903), 444 (Basutoland), Report for 1903–4).

Feb. 14.] Page

90. Colonial Reports (Miscellaneous).—Copies of Reports Nos. 28 (Reports on Rubber in the Gold Coast and Sierra Leone), 29 (Ceylon, Reports on the Results of the Mineral Survey in 1903–4 by Professor W. R. Dunstan, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.).

91. Straits Settlements.—Copy of Reports on the Federated Malay States for 1903.

92. Transvaal (British Indians).—Copy of Correspondence relating to the position of British Indians in the Transvaal.

93. Cyprus.—Copy of Annual Report on Cyprus for 1903–4.

94. Cancer Research (Colonies).—Copy of Correspondence relating to Cancer Research in the Colonies.

95. Fiji.—Copy of Correspondence relating to Native Taxation and the Communal System in Fiji.

96. Colonies (Preferential Trade).—Copy of Papers relating to Resolutions passed by Colonial Legislatures since 1890 in favour of Preferential Trade Relations with the United Kingdom.

97. West Africa.—Copy of Correspondence relating to the construction of Railways in Sierra Leone, Lagos, and the Gold Coast.

98. Crown Agents.—Copy of Accounts of the Crown Agents' Office Funds for the years 1900, 1901, and 1902.

99. British Central Africa.—Copy of Report on the Trade and general condition of the British Central Africa Protectorate for 1903-4.

100. Treaty Series (No. 6, 1904).—Copy of Agreement between the United Kingdom and Germany, providing for the settlement by Arbitration of certain classes of Questions which may arise between the two Governments. Signed at London, 12th July, 1904.

101. Treaty Series (No. 7, 1904).—Copy of Convention between the United Kingdom and China, respecting the employment of Chinese Labour in British Colonies and Protectorates. Signed at London, 13th May, 1904.

102. Treaty Series (No. 8, 1904).—Copy of Convention between the United Kingdom and Sweden and Norway, providing for the Settlement by Arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between, the respective Governments. Signed at London, 11th August 1904.

103. Treaty Series (No. 9, 1904).—Copy of Agreement between the United Kingdom and Switzerland, providing for the Settlement by Arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments. Signed at London, 16th November, 1904.

104. Treaty Series (No. 10, 1904).—Copy of Agreement between the United Kingdom and Portugal, providing for the Settlement by Arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments. Signed at Windsor, 16th November, 1904.

Feb. 14.] Page

105. Treaty Series (No. 11, 1904).—Copy of Accession of Sweden to the International Copyright Convention, 9th September, 1886, and the Declaration of 4th May, 1896. 1st August, 1904.

106. Treaty Series (No. 12, 1904).—Copy of Accession of Cuba, to the Industrial Property Convention, 1883, &c., 17th November, 1904.

107. Treaty Series (No. 13, 1904).—Copy of Declaration between the United Kingdom and Russia, relating to the Constitution of an International Commission of Inquiry on the subject of the North Sea Incident. Signed at St. Petersburg, 25th (12th) November, 1904.

108. Treaty Series (No. 1, 1905).—Copy of Accession of Cuba to Arrangements respecting False Indications of Origin on Goods, and the International Registration of Trade Marks (Industrial Property Union) 1st January, 1905.

109. Treaty Series (No. 2, 1905.)—Copy of Agreement between the United Kingdom and Russia, respecting Joint Stock Companies and other Commercial, Industrial, and Financial Associations. Signed at St. Petersburg, 29th (16th) December, 1904.

110. Africa (No. 12, 1904).—Copy of General Report on the Uganda Protectorate for the year ending 31st March, 1904.

111. Africa (No. 13, 1904).—Copy of Report by Mr. A. E. Butter, on the Survey of the Proposed Frontier between British East Africa and Abyssinia, with a map.

112. Africa (No. 14, 1904).—Copy of Correspondence respecting Slavery in the Islands of Zanzibar and Pemba.

113. Africa (No. 15, 1904).—Copy of Report on the East Africa Protectorate for the year 1903–4.

114. Africa (No. 16, 1904).—Copy of Report on the Construction and Working of the Mombasa-Victoria (Uganda) Railway and Steamboat Service on Lake Victoria, 1903–4.

115. Africa (No. 1, 1905).—Copy of Further Correspondence respecting the Administration of the Independent State of the Congo.

116. Turkey (No. 3, 1904).—Copy of Correspondence respecting the Asiatic Provinces of Turkey.

117. Turkey (No. 4, 1904).—Copy of Further Correspondence respecting the Affairs of South Eastern Europe.

118. China (No. 5, 1904).—Copy of Report, by Consul-General Hosie, on the Province of Ssuch'uan, with two Maps.

119. Russia (No. 1, 1905).—Copy of Correspondence respecting Contraband of War in connection with Hostilities between Russia and Japan.

120. Russia (No. 2, 1905).—Copy of Correspondence relating to the North Sea Incident.

Feb. 14.] Page

121. Sugar Convention (Commercial, No. 1, 1905).—Copy of Further Findings of the Permanent Commission established under the Sugar Convention of 5th March, 1902, Report of the British Delegate, and Appeal of His Majesty's Government against certain of those Findings.

122. Detention of the "Captain W. Menzell" (Miscellaneous, No. 2, 1904).—Copy of a Warrant issued by the Secretary of State on 4th December, 1904, authorising the detention of the ship "Captain W. Menzell" at Cardiff.

123. Emission of Smoke (Foreign Regulations) (Miscellaneous, No. 1, 1905).—Copy of Reports on the Laws in Force in certain Foreign Countries in regard to the Emission of Smoke from Chimneys.

124. Trade Reports (Annual Series).—Copies of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, Nos. 3256 to 3323.

125. Trade Reports (Miscellaneous Series).—Copies of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Miscellaneous Series, Nos. 619 to 628.

Ordered, That the said Papers do lie upon the Table 81

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

IRISH LAND COMMISSION (PROCEEDINGS).—Copy presented, of Return of Proceedings during the months of October, November, and December, 1903 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 94

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND).—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 7th July, 1904; Mr. Joyce]; to lie upon the Table 94

AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND) ACT, 1899.—Copy presented, of Fifty-five Minutes by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland sanctioning Forms of Instruction for certain County Boroughs, Counties, and Urban Districts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table .. 94

PHARMACY ACTS (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Order in Council, dated 2nd November, 1904, approving of a Regulation made by the Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 94

MILITIA ACT, 1882 (DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS, IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Return of descriptions of qualifications of Deputy Lieutenants lodged during 1904, as furnished to the Chief Secretary for Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 94

WINTER ASSIZES (IRELAND).—Copies presented, of Four Orders in Council, dated 2nd November, 1904, for holding Winter Assizes in Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 94

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Time Table of Examinations for 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 94

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Additional rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, making an addition to Rule 9 (a) of the Rules and Programme for 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table. 94

Feb. 14.] Page

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland for the Examination in Music [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Additional Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland as to the French Course [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Two Orders of the Local Government Board for Ireland with respect to the Urban County Districts of Ballymena and Omagh [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

PRISONS (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Order closing the Prison at Wexford under The General Prisons (Ireland) Act, 1877 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

LEEWARD ISLANDS.—Copy presented of Amended Prison Rule relating to the employment of female prisoners [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

POSTAL AGREEMENT (MEXICO).—Copy presented, of Agreement between the Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Post Office of the United States of Mexico for the Exchange of Money Orders dated 4th February–18th March, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 95

POSTAL CONVENTION (NETHERLANDS).—Copy presented, of Additional Articles relating to increase of maximum to the Money Order Convention of the 7th–14th October, 1871, between the General Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the General Post Office of the Netherlands [by Command]; to lie upon the Table. 95

POST OFFICE (MONEY ORDERS).—Copy presented, of the Postal Order (Colonial) Regulations, 1904, dated 29th September, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 95

POST OFFICE (MONEY ORDERS).—Copy presented, of the Postal Order (Colonial) Amendment (No. 1) Regulations, 1904, dated 28th December, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 96

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS SPECIAL EXCEPTION—OVERTIME.—Copy presented, of Order, dated 15th November, 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 49 of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception under that section to non-textile factories and workshops, or parts thereof, in which the making-up of any article of table linen, bed linen, or other household linen is carried on [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 96

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (SPECIAL EXCEPTION—NIGHTWORK).—Copy presented, of Order, dated 9th August, 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 54 (4) of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception in that section to male young persons of the age of sixteen years and upwards, employed on the system of three shifts of not more than eight hours each in the processes of pressing and reeling cordite and nitrating and moulding guncotton carried on in non-textile factories [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 96

Feb. 14.]

Page

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (DANGEROUS AND UNHEALTHY INDUSTRIES).—Copy presented, of Regulations, dated 24th October, 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 79 of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, in respect of the processes of loading, unloading, moving and handling goods in, on, or at any dock, wharf, or quay, and the processes of loading, unloading, or coaling any ship in any dock, harbour, or canal [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 96

INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES (REGULATIONS).—Copy presented, of Regulations made with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the management and discipline of the certified Inebriate Reformatory at East Hasling, Norfolk [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 96

POLLING DISTRICTS (BOROUGH OF SALFORD).—Copy presented, of Order made by the Council of the Borough of Salford, altering certain Polling Districts in the Borough [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 97

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF LANCASTER).—Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of the County of Lancaster altering certain Polling Districts in the Middleton, Stretford and Widnes Parliamentary Divisions [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 97

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF SOUTHAMPTON).—Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of Southampton altering certain Polling Districts in the Andover, New Forest, and Fareham Parliamentary Divisions [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 97

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF DURHAM).—Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of the County of Durham altering certain Polling Districts in the county [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 97

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF LANCASTER).—Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of Lancaster altering certain Polling Districts in the Ince, Lancaster, and Westhoughton Parliamentary Divisions [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 97

POLLING DISTRICTS (BOROUGH OF DEVONPORT).—Copy presented, of Order made by the Council of the borough altering certain Polling Districts in the borough [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 97

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF BERKS).—Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of the County of Berks altering certain Polling Districts for the several Parliamentary Divisions of the County [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 97

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Copy presented, of licence granted to Mary Ann Murray, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 98

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Copy presented, of Licence granted to Ada Hanson, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 98

Feb. 14.] Page

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Copy presented, of a Licence to be at large granted to Elizabeth Ann Holden, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Elizabeth Fry Refuge, Hackney, E. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 98

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Copy presented, of a Licence to be at large granted to Lucy Gould, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of St. John the Baptist, Pimlico, S.W. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table .. 98

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Copy presented, of a Licence granted to Kate Ellen Shoesmith, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of Compassion, 63, Sutherland Street, Pimlico, S.W. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 98

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Copy presented, of Licence granted to Alice Robinson, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 98

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).—Copy presented, of a Licence granted to Sarah Wildman, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Elizabeth Fry Refuge, Hackney, E. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 99

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE AUTHORITIES, ETC.—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 11th August, 1904; Mr. Charles M'Arthur]; to lie upon the Table 99

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANIES.—Copy presented, of Statements of Accounts, and of Life Assurance and Annuity Business and Abstracts of Actuarial Reports, deposited with the Board of Trade during the year ended 31st December, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. (No. 1.) 99

RAILWAYS (PRIVATE SIDINGS) ACT 1904 (RULE).—Copy presented, of Rule made by the Railway and Canal Commissioners in relation to applications made under Section 3 of the Railway (Private Sidings) Act, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 99

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE FUND.—Account presented, of the General Lighthouse Fund showing the income and expenditure for the year ended 31st March, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. (No. 2.) 99

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.—Copy presented of Regulations to be observed by the Admirals, Masters, and Crews of Fishing Vessels and Carriers forming the fleets belonging to the Port of Kingston-upon-Hull under Section 417 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 99

WEST HIGHLAND RAILWAY (EXTENSION FROM BANAVIE TO MALLAIG).—Copy presented, of Third Annual Report by the Board of Trade as to the condition and working of the Banavie and Mallaig Railway, the rates and charges for traffic, and the receipts and expenditure of any Company in working the Railway, for the year 1903–4 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. (No. 3) 99

Feb. 14.]

Page

East India Examinations.—Copy presented, of Regulations for Examinations for the Civil Service of India [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

East India (Loans Raised in India).—Copy presented, of Return of all Loans raised in India, chargeable on the Revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ending 30th September, 1904, etc. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. (No. 4) 100

East India (Loans Raised in England).—Copy presented, of Return of all Loans raised in England, chargeable on the Revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ending on the 30th September, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. (No. 5) 100

Bishoprics of Southwark and Birmingham Act, 1904.—Copy presented, of Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, for the foundation of the Bishopric of Birmingham [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

Copyright Acts 1844 to 1886.—Copy presented, of Order in Council of 12th December, 1904, giving effect to the Accession of Sweden to the International Convention, 1886 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

Dockyard Ports Regulation Act, 1865.—Copy presented, of Order in Council of 24th October, 1904, amending the Regulations affecting the Dockyard Port of Plymouth [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

Explosives Act, 1875.—Copy presented, of Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, prohibiting, except under certain conditions, certain Firework of a dangerous nature [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 100

Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act, 1877 (Oxford).—Copy presented, of Statutes made by the Governing Body of Magdalen College, Oxford, on 11th May, 1904, amending the existing Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. (No. 6) 101

Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act, 1877 (Oxford).—Copy presented of Statute made by the Governing Body of New College, Oxford, on 15th June, 1904, amending Statute XV.(Pension Fund) of the Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 7].. .. 101

Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act, 1877 (Oxford).—Copy presented, of Statutes made by the Governing Body af Balliol College, Oxford, on 26th May, 1904, amending (1) Statute III., and (2) Statute IV., and Schedule B. of the College Statutes [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. (No. 8) 101

Weights and Measures Acts, 1878 to 1904.—Copy presented, of Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, specifying New Fees to be taken in respect of the Verification and Stamping by Inspectors of Weights and Measures, of Weights, Measures, and Weighing and Measuring Instruments [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 101

Weights and Measures Act, 1878, and Weights and Measures (Metric System) Act, 1897.—Copy presented, of Order in Council of 12th December, 1903, approving a New Denomination of Standard Measure of length of Twenty Metres [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 101

Feb. 16.] Page

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890.—Copy presented, of Orders in Council of 24th October, 1904, entitled The Protectorates Neutrality Order in Council, 1904, The Foreign Jurisdiction Neutrality Order in Council, 1904, The China and Corea Order in Council, 1904, The Southern Nigeria Order in Council, 1904, and The Cyprus Telegraphs Order, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 101

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890.—Copy presented, of Order in Council of 10th February, 1905, entitled The East Africa and Uganda (Currency) Order in Council 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.. 102

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890 —Copy presented, of Order in Council of the 14th November, 1904, entitled the British Protectorates Neutrality (Amendment) Order in Council, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 102

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1858 —Copy presented, of Order in Council of 14th December, 1904, approving a statement of proposed new and revised appointments and alterations of salaries in the establishment of the Secretary of State for India in Council [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 102

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894 —Copy presented, of Order in Council of 24th October, 1904, directing that Registries of Sea Fishing Boats be kept at Port Talbot and Methil [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 102

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894 —Copy presented, of Order in Council of 10th February, 1905, confirming certain Bye-laws made by the Trinity House of Kingston-upon Hull fixing the Rates of Pilotage between the ports of Hull and Goole [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 102

EDUCATION (SCOTLAND)—Copy presented, of Minute of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland dated 30th January, 1905, providing for the establishment of Committees for the Training of Teachers [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 102

ROYAL IRISH CONSTABULARY PENSIONS.—Copy presented, of Return showing the names of all Constabulary Officers now in receipt of Pensions, of all Head Constables, Sergeants and Constables, and of all Widows and Children to whom Pensions have been granted since the Constabulary Estimate for 1904–5 was prepared, with the amount and date of pension in each case [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 102

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN GUARANTEED LOAN OF 1855.—Copy presented, of Account for the year 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 103

BANK OF ENGLAND.—Copy presented, of Return of the amount of Notes issued more than 40 years which have not been presented for payment, and which have been written off on the 8th December, 1904, from the total amount of Notes issued from the Issue Department of the Bank of England [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 103

CHELSEA HOSPITAL.—Account presented, for the year ended 31st March 1904, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 9.] 130

Feb. 14.]

Page

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.—Account presented, of Receipts and Expenditure of the Paymaster General on behalf of the Supreme Court of Judicature in respect of the Funds of Suitors of the Court in the year ended 29th February 1904, and of Account of the National Debt Commissioners for the same period in respect of Fund, held by them on behalf of the Supreme Court of Judicature, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 10.] .. 103

POST OFFICE TELEGRAPHS.—Account presented, showing the gross amount received and expended on account of the Telegraph Service during the year ended 31st March 1904, etc. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 11.] 103

DUCHY OF CORNWALL.—Account presented, of the Receipts and Disbursements of the Duchy of Cornwall for the year ended 31st December, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 12.] 103

LAND REGISTRY (NEW BUILDINGS) ACT, 1900.—Account presented, showing the Money issued from the Consolidated Fund, under the provisions of The Land Registry (New Buildings) Act, 1900, and of the Expenditure; the Money expended and borrowed and the Securities created under the said Act, for the period ended 31st March 1904, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 13.] 104

PUBLIC OFFICES SITE (DUBLIN) ACT, 1903.—Account presented, showing the Money issued from the Consolidated Fund under the provisions of The Public Offices Site (Dublin) Act, 1903, and of the Expenditure; the Money expended and borrowed and the Securities created under the said Act for the period ended 31st March 1904, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 104

CONSOLIDATED FUND.—Abstract Account presented, showing the Issues made from the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom in the financial year ended 31st March 1904 for the Interest and Management of the Debt, for the Civil List, and for all other Issues in the financial year for services charged directly on the said Fund; with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 14.].. 104

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 28th November 1904, granting to Tom F. Dickinson, Sorting Clerk and Telegraphist, Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 104

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 21st November 1904, granting to Joseph Livingstone, Engineer, 1st Class, Engineer in Chief's Department, Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 104

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute dated 17th January 1905, granting to Charles F. Williams, Second Division Clerk, Admiralty, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 105

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 6th September 1904, granting to Alfred Webster, Clerk, Derby Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 105

Feb. 14.] Page

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 2nd September 1904, granting to Robert Henderson, Lineman, Engineer-in-Chief's Department, Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 105

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 11th January 1905, granting to John Still, Inspector, Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 105

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 6th September 1904, granting to Samuel J. Morton, Assistant Superintendent, Boston Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 105

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 6th January 1905, granting to Alfred H. Beaumont, Town Postman, Leeds Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 105

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 17th January 1905, granting to Henry G. Bartlett, 2nd Division Clerk (Higher Grade), Admiralty, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 105

SUPERANNUATIONS.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated August 26th, 1904, declaring that for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the office of Professor of Zoology in the Royal College of Science, Dublin, professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired on the Public Service are required [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 106

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1859.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 5th October 1904, awarding a Special Pension to Sir Augustus W. L. Hemming, G.C.M.G., late Governor of Jamaica [by Act]; to lie upon the Table .. 106

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 3rd September 1904, declaring that Richard Leamy, Labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 106

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 14th October 1904, declaring that John W. Ginno, Royal Laboratory, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table .. 106

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 21st October 1904, declaring that Benjamin Banks, Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 106

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 4th March, 1904, declaring that Frederick George Postans, Postmaster of Newmarket Post Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate, through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 106

Feb. 14.] Page

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 29th October 1904, declaring that William Gregory, Carpenter, Royal Carriage Department, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 107

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 21st October 1904, declaring that John Foster, Boy Labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 107

COUNTY COURTS ACTS, 1888, AND SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (OFFICERS) ACT, 1879.—Copy of Order made by the Lord Chancellor, dated 25th August, 1904, directing that the Registrar of the County Court of Lancashire, held at Salford, shall not practise as a solicitor, and that Section 20 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Officers) Act, 1879, shall not apply to the office of Registrar of the said County Court [by Act] 107

SUPREME COURT (RULES).—Copy of Rules of the Supreme Court, dated 1st October, 1904 [by Act] 107

DEEDS OF ARRANGEMENT ACT, 1887 (RULE).—Copy of Rule under the Act, dated 1st October, 1904 [by Act] 107

LUNACY.—Copy of Report to the Lord Chancellor of the number of visits made, the number of Patients seen, and the number of miles travelled by the Visitors of Lunatics between 1st April, 1904, and 30th September, 1904 [by Act] 107

LUNACY.—Copy of Return to the Lord Chancellor of the number of visits made and the number of Patients seen by the several Commissioners in Lunacy during the six months ending on the 31st December, 1904 [by Act] 107

BANK OF ENGLAND.—Accounts of Exchequer Bills and other Government Securities purchased, and of the amount of Balances of Sums issued for the Payment of Dividends, etc., for the year ending 5th January, 1905 [by Act]; to be printed 108

COUNTY COURT RULES.—Copy of County Court Rules, 1904 [by Act] 108

LUNACY.—Copy of Return of all sums received by the Visitors of Lunatics for travelling expenses, or upon any other account, from 1st January to 31st December, 1904 [by Act] 108

MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR BOARD.—Copy of Accounts of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board for the year ending 1st July, 1904 [by Act] 108

POSTMASTER-GENERAL AND NATIONAL TELEPHONE COMPANY.—Copy ordered "of Memorandum of the Postmaster-General dated the 14th February, 1905, setting forth an Agreement dated 2nd February, 1905, between the Postmaster-General and the National Telephone Company, Limited."—(Lord Stanley.)

Copy presented accordingly; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed .. 108

Feb. 14.] Page

KING'S SPEECH.

Mr. SPEAKER reported His Majesty's Speech, and read it in the House, as followeth:—

King's Speech (Motion for an Address in Reply).

Mr. Mount (Berkshire, Newbury) 108
Mr. Samuel Roberts (Sheffield, Ecclesall) 114

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman (Stirling Burghs) 120
Sir Howard Vincent (Sheffield, Central) 138

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

Sir John Gorst (Cambridge University) 141
Colonel Pilkington (Lancashire, Newton) 145
Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis) 147
The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) 153

Motion made, and Question, "That the debate be now adjourned."—(Mr. Asquith) ; put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

ADJOURNMENT.—Motion made, and Question, "That this House do now adjourn."—(Sir A. Acland-Hood) put, and agreed to.

Adjourned at ten minutes after Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: WEDNESDAY, 15TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

NEW WRIT.

New Writ for the Borough of Liverpool (Everton Division), in the room of Sir John Archibald Willox (Chiltern Hundreds).—(Sir Alexander Acland-Hood.) 169

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS reported, That, in accordance with Standing Order 79, he had conferred with the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords, for the purpose of determining in which House of Parliament the respective Private Bills should be first considered, and they had determined that the Bills contained in the following List should originate in the House of Lords, viz. :—

Abertillery Urban District Water.
Administrative County of London and District Electric Power Company.
Alexandra Park and Palace.
Bangor (County Down) Water and Improvement.
Barry Railway.
Blackpool Improvement.
Blackpool, St. Anne's, and Lytham Tramways.
Bridgewater Canals.
Bristol Blind Asylum.
Buenos Ayres Grand National Tramways.
Cardiff Railway.
Central Electric Supply.
Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation.
City of London Electric Lighting Company.
Clacton Improvement.
Clacton-on-Sea Commissioners.
Commercial Union Assurance.
Cordoba and Rosario Railway.
County of London Electric Supply Company.
Dearne Valley Railway.
East Cowes Gas.
East London and Lower Thames Electric Power.
Entre Rios Railways.
Formby Township.
Gosport and Fareham Tramways.
Great Central Railway.
Great Central Railway (Pension Fund).
Hastings Harbour.
Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment)

Feb. 15.] Page

Hastings Tramways.
Hessle Gas.
Hessle Urban District Council.
Humber Conservancy.
Hythe Corporation.
Leeds and Liverpool Canal.
Littlehampton Urban District Council.
Llandrindod Wells Urban District Council.
London and India Docks Company.
London Squares and Enclosures (Preservation).
Mansfield Corporation.
Marylebone Chapels.
Matlock Bath Improvement.
Medway and Thames Canal.
Metropolitan and Great Central Railway Companies.
Metropolitan District Railway.
Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District).
Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers).
Metropolitan Railway.
Mexborough and Swinton Tramways (Extension of Time).
Mortgage Insurance Corporation.
Naval Works (Portsmouth Barracks Site).
Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation.
Nine Mile Point Railway.
North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply.
Nottingham Corporation.
Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation.
Oldham and Saddleworth District Tramways.
Orphan Working School and Alexander Orphanage.
Preston Corporation (Ribble Navigation).
Rhymney Railway.
Sandgate Urban District Council.
Sheffield University.
Shepton Mallet Gas Company (Electric Lighting).
South Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways.
Southend and Colchester Light Railways.
South Lancashire Tramways.
Southport, Birkdale, and West Lancashire Water Board.
Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation).
Tees Valley Water Board.
Torpoint Urban District Water.
Tralee Urban District Council.

Feb. 15.] Page

Truro Water.
Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.
University College, London (Transfer).
Weaver Navigation.
Wellingborough and District Tramroads and Electricity Supply.
West Cumberland Electric Tramways (Extension of Time).
Western Valleys (Monmouthshire) Water and Gas.
West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers.
Whitby Urban District Council.
Workington Harbour and Dock. 169

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES CONGESTED DISTRICT AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.—Petition from Wester Ross, for continuance; to lie upon the Table 171

MACRAE, JOHN JACOB ANDREW.—Petition of John Jacob Andrew MacRae, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table 172

REDDI, ARJANA.—Petition of Arjana Reddi, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table 172

SUGAR TAX.—Petitions for repeal; from Blackburn; Glasgow (two); Halifax (two); London; and, Peterborough; to lie upon the Table 172

VARATHANUNTHAJEE, VIJAGA, SAHIB.—Petition of Vijaga Varathanunthajee, Sahib, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table 172

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

PATENTS, DESIGNS, AND TRADE MARKS ACTS, 1883 TO 1902.—Copy presented, of the Patent Rules, 1905, dated 20th October, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 172

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.—Copy presented, of Report on the state of the Finances of the University, made by the University Court, for the year 1903–4 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 17.] .. 172

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.—Copy presented, of Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Edinburgh for the year 1903–4 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 18.] 172

UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW.—Copy presented, of Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Glasgow for 1903–4 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 19.] 172

PRISONS (SCOTLAND).—Copy presented, of Regulations, dated 20th August, 1904, made by the Secretary for Scotland for the Measuring and Photographing of Prisoners [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 172

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS ACT, 1896, AND MOTOR CAR ACT, 1903.—Copy presented, of the Heavy Motor Car (Scotland) Order, 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 173

Feb. 15.] Page

Greenwich Hospital and Travers' Foundation.—Accounts presented, for the year ended 31st March, 1904, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed [No. 20.] 173

Diseases of Animals Acts, 1894 to 1903.—Copy presented, of an Order, entitled, The Hull (Channel Islands Animals) Landing Place Revocation Order of 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 173

Papers laid upon the Taple by the Clerk of the House.

Loan Societies.—Abstract of Accounts for Loan Societies in England and Wales to 31st December, 1903, furnished to the Central Office for the Registry of Friendly Societies [by Act].

Intermediate Education (Ireland).—Account of Receipts and Expenditure for 1903, with Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 21.]

Royal University of Ireland.—Copy of Accounts of Receipts and Expenditure of the Royal University of Ireland for the year ended 31st March, 1904, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 22.] 173

Parliamentary Constituencies (Electors, etc.) (United Kingdom).—Address for "Return showing, with regard to each Parliamentary Constituency in the United Kingdom, the total number and, as far as possible, the number in each class of Electors on the register now in force; and also showing the Population and Inhabited Houses in each Constituency (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 69, of Session 1904)."—(Sir Charles Dilke.) 173

Sanitary Inspectors and Inspectors of Workshops.—Return ordered, "showing what local authorities in the year 1904 had appointed (1) in London (a) female Sanitary Inspectors, distinguishing those whose duties consist entirely or principally of duties under the Factory and Workshops Act, and (b) male Sanitary Inspectors whose duties are solely duties under that Act; and (2) in the rest of England and Wales (a) female Inspectors and Assistant Inspectors of Nuisances, and (c) male and female inspectors of Workshops who are not also Inspectors of Nuisances; the number and salaries of the officers appointed to be shown in each case."—(Sir Charles Dilke.) 173

Brewers' Licences.—Return ordered, "of Accounts of the number of persons in each of the several Collections of the United Kingdom licensed as Brewers for sale, i.e., Common Brewers, Victuallers, Retailers of beer to be drunk on the premises, Retailers of beer not to be drunk on the premises, and Brewers of beer not for sale, particularising each class in each Collection; and of the number of Licences issued to Victuallers and Retailers of beer to be drunk on the premises and not to be drunk on the premises; and stating also the quantities of malt, unmalted corn, rice, etc., sugar, including its equivalent of syrups, etc., hops and hop substitutes, used by Brewers of beer for sale, and of malt and sugar used by Brewers not for sale, from the 1st day of October, 1903, to the 30th day of September, 1904."

"Of the amount of Licence Duty paid and Beer Duty charged from the 1st day of October, 1903, to the 30th day of September, 1904, distinguishing Brewers for sale from other Brewers," "Of the number of Brewers for sale (i.) who use malt and hops, or hop substitutes only, and (ii.) who use malt with substitutes for same and hops or hop substitutes paying for Licences, from the 1st day of October, 1903, to the 30th day of September, 1904, separating them into classes, according to the number of barrels of beer charged with duty calculated at 1·055 degrees gravity, viz.: under 1,000 barrels; 1,000 and under 10,000; 10,000 and under 20,000; 20,000 and under 30,000; 30,000 and under 50,000; 50,000 and under 100,000; 100,000 and under 150,000; 150,000 and under 200,000; 200,000 and under 250,000; 250,000 and under 300,000; 300,000 and under 350,000; 350,000 and under 400,000; 400,000 and under 450,000; 450,000 and under 500,000; 500,000 and under 600,000; 600,000 and under 700,000; 700,000 and under 800,000; 800,000 and under 900,000; 900,000 and under 1,000,000; 1,000,000 and under 1,500,000; 1,500,000 and under 2,000,000; 2,000,000 barrels and over; showing separately, in each class, the quantities of malt, unmalted corn, rice, etc., sugar, including its equivalent of syrups, etc., hops and hop substitutes used; and stating also the number of bulk barrels of beer produced, and the amount of Licence Duty paid and Beer Duty charged in each class."

"And, of the number of barrels of beer exported from the United Kingdom, and the declared value thereof, and where exported to, from the first day of October, 1903, to the 30th day of September, 1904, distinguishing England, Scotland, and Ireland (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 37, of Session 1904)."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.) 174

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND).—Copy ordered, "of Account of the Receipts and Payments of the Accountant General of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland, in respect of the Funds of Suitors in the said Court, including therein Funds to the credit of Lunacy Accounts, in the year to the 30th day of September, 1904; together with a Statement of Liabilities and Assets, and Particulars of Securities in Court, on the 30th day of September, 1904."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.) 175

NATIONAL GALLERY (REPORT).—Copy ordered, "of the Report of the Director of the National Gallery for the year 1904, with Appendices."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.) 175

CIVIL CONTINGENCIES FUND, 1903–4.—Copy ordered, "of Accounts of the Civil Contingencies Fund, 1903-4, showing (1) the receipts and payments in connection with the fund in the year ended the 31st day of March, 1904; (2) the distribution of the capital of the fund at the commencement and close of the year; together with Copy of the Correspondence with the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon."—(Mr Victor Cavendish.) 175

TRADE AND NAVIGATION.—Copy ordered, "of Accounts relating to Trade and Navigation of the United Kingdom for each month during the year 1905."—(Mr. Gerald Balfour.) 176

ALIEN IMMIGRATION FROM THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE.—Return ordered, "of the number of Aliens that arrived from the Continent at Ports in the United Kingdom in each month of the year 1905."—(Mr. Gerald Balfour.) 176

POST OFFICE TELEGRAPHS.—Copy ordered, "of Account showing the gross amount received and the gross amount expended in respect of the Telegraph Service from the date of the transfer of the telegraphs to the State to the 31st day of March, 1904 (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 49, of Session 1904)."—(Lord Stanley.) 176

Feb. 15.]

Page

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

THE UNFUNDED DEBT.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 176

LAND PURCHASE IN THE WEST OF IRELAND.—Question, Mr. James O'Kelly (Roscommon, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 177

CASE OF DE TIÉGE.—Question, Mr. Emmott (Oldham); Answer, Earl Percy .. 177

BALLOT FOR BILLS AND MOTION .—Ordered, "That no Bills, other than Government Bills, be introduced in anticipation of the ballot, and that all Members who desire to ballot, whether for Bills, or for Motions, for Tuesday, 21st February and Tuesday, 28th February, and Wednesday, 22nd February, and Wednesday, 1st March, do hand in their names at the Table during the sitting of the House on the first and second day of the session, and that a copy of such Notices be handed in, at the latest, during the sitting of the House on the third day of the session.

"That the ballot for the precedence of the said Bills and Motions be taken on the third day on which the House sits at a convenient time and place, to be appointed by Mr. Speaker, and that the presentation of Bills on the fourth sitting day to be taken as soon after Twelve o'clock as Mr. Speaker may deem convenient."—(Mr. A. J. Balfour.) 177

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

Mr. Asquith (Fifeshire, E.) 178

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that, the various aspects of the fiscal question have now been fully discussed in the country for nearly two years, the time has come for submitting the issue to the people without further delay.'"—(Mr. Asquith.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) 190
Mr. Elliot (Durham) 202
Mr. David MacIver (Liverpool, Kirkdale) 208
Mr. Emmott (Oldham) 216

Page
Mr. Purvis (Peterborough) 220
Mr. Lough (Islington, W.) 222
Mr. Cohen (Islington, E.). 226
Mr. Cathcart Wason (Orkney and Shetland) 229
Mr. Evelyn Cecil (Aston Manor) 232
Mr. Ainsworth (Argyllshire) 234
Mr. Parkes (Birmingham, Central) 236
Sir William Holland (Yorkshire, W.R., Rotherham) 238

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till the Evening Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [15th February], to Main Question [14th February], " That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

" Most Gracious Sovereign,

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

" At the end of the Question, to add the words, ' And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that, the various aspects of the fiscal question having now been fully discussed in the country for nearly two years, the time has come for submitting the issue to the people without further delay. ' "—(Mr. Asquith.)

Question again proposed, " That those words be there added."

Mr. Renwick (Newcastle-on-Tyne) 241
Major Seely (Isle of Wight) 246
Mr. Herbert Robertson (Hackney, S.) 248
Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe) 252
Sir Thomas Wrightson (St. Pancras, E.) 257
Sir Edward Grey (Northumberland, Berwick) 258

Motion made and question proposed, " That the debate be now adjourned." —(Mr. Ernest Gray.)

Mr. Winston Churchill (Oldham) 274

Question put and negatived.

Original Question again proposed.

Mr. Ernest Gray 275

And, it being Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS: THURSDAY, 16TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

SAT FIRST.

Bentley Lyonel John Lord Tollemache.—Sat first in Parliament after the death of his grandfather 277

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with :—

Aberdare Tramways.
Abertillery Urban District Council.
Accrington Corporation.
Accrington District Gas and Water Board.
Acton Sewage.
Administrative County of London and District Electric Power Company.
Alexandra Park and Palace.
Andover Lighting and Power.
Aylesbury Gas.
Baker Street and Waterloo Railway.
Bangor (County Down) Water and Improvement.
Barry Railway.
Birmingham Corporation.
Blackpool Improvement.
Blackpool St. Anne's and Lytham Tramways.
Bolton Corporation.
Bootle Corporation.
Brentwood Gas.
Bridgewater Canals.
Bristol Blind Asylum.
Bristol Corporation.
Brockenhurst Gas.
Bromley Corporation.
Brompton, Chatham, Gillingham and Rochester Water.
Buenos Ayres Grand National Tramways Company.
Cardiff Railway.
Central Electric Supply Company.
Central London Railway (New Lines).
Channel Ferry Railway and Quay (Dover).
Charing Cross Euston, and Hampstead Railway.
Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation (Power Supply).
Chelsea Electricity Supply Company.
City of London Electric Lighting Company (Extension of Powers).
City of London (Means of Escape from Fire).
Clacton Improvement.
Clacton-on-Sea Commissioners.
Clay Cross Railway (Abandonment).
Colne Corporation.
Commercial Union Assurance Company.
Cordoba and Rosario Railway Company.
Cork Junction Railways.
County of London Electric Supply Company.
Croydon Corporation.

Croydon Gas.
Dearne Valley Railway.
Dublin Corporation (Superannuation).
Dublin United Tramways.
Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway.
Ealing Corporation.
East Cowes Gas.
East London and Lower Thames Electric Power.
Edgware and Hampstead Railway.
Entre Rios Railways Company.
Epping Gas.
Formby Township.
Gas Light and Coke, South Metropolitan, and Commercial Gas Companies.
Gosport and Fareham Tramways.
Great Berkhampstead Gas.
Great Central Railway.
Great Central Railway (Pension Fund).
Great Eastern Railway.
Great Northern Railway.
Great Northern (Ireland) and Midland Railways.
Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 1).
Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 2).
Great Western Railway (Additional Powers).
Great Western Railway (New Railways).
Halifax Corporation.
Hastings Harbour.
Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment).
Hessle Gas.
Hessle Urban District Council.
Higham and Hundred of Hoo Water.
Hitchin and District Gas.
Hull, Bransley, and West Riding Junction Railway and Dock.
Humber Conservancy.
Hythe Corporation.
Ilfracombe Harbour and Improvement.
Leeds and Liverpool Canal.
Littlehampton Urban District Council (Arun Bridge).
Liverpool Corporation (General Powers).
London Building Acts (Amendment).
London County Council (General Powers).
London County Council (Tramways).
London Gas.
London and India Docks.
London and North-Western Railway.
London Port and Docks Commission.
London Southern Tramways.
London Squares and Enclosures (Preservation).
London United Tramways.
Loughborough Corporation.
Mansfield Corporation.
Marylebone Chapels (Saint Paul's, Great Portland Street, and Saint Peter's, Vere Street).
Matlock Bath Improvement.
Medway and Thames Canal.
Metropolitan District Railway.

Feb. 16.] Page

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District).
Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers).
Metropolitan Electric Tramways.
Metropolitan and Great Central Railway Companies.
Metropolitan Pneumatic Despatch Company.
Metropolitan Railway.
Mexborough and Swinton Tramways.
Midland Railway.
Morley Corporation.
Mortgage Insurance Corporation.
Naval Works (Portsmouth Barracks Site).
Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation.
Nine Mile Point Railway.
North-East London Railway.
North-Eastern Railway.
North-Eastern Railway (Steam Vessels).
North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply.
North Sussex Gas.
Norwich Union Life Insurance Society.
Nottingham Corporation.
Nottingham and Retford Railway.
Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation.
Oldham and Saddleworth District Tramways.
Orphan Working School and Alexandra Orphanage.
Otley Gas and Improvement.
Preston Corporation (Ribble Navigation).
Rathmines and Rathgar Extension and Improvement.
Rhondda Urban District Council.
Rhymney Railway.
Rotherham, Maltby, and Loughton Railway.
Sale of Bread (London).
Sandgate Urban District Council (Sanitary Powers).
Seaham Gas.
Sheffield University.
Shepton Mallet Gas Company (Electric Lighting).
Shropshire and Worcestershire Electric Power.
Skegness Water.
South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways.
South Lancashire Tramways.
South Metropolitan Gas.
South Oxfordshire Water and Gas.
South Suburban Gas.
South Wales Electrical Power Distribution.
Southampton and Winchester Great Western Junction Railway (Abandonment).
Southend and Colchester Light Railways.
Southport, Birkdale, and West Lancashire Water Board.
Staffordshire County Council.
Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation)
Stockport Corporation.
Sunderland and South Shields Water.
Swansea Corporation.
Tees Valley Water Board.
Thames Conservancy.
Thames Harbour.
Torpoint Water.

Feb. 16.] Page

Tralee Urban District Council.
Truro Water.
Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.
Ulster and Connaught Light Railways.
University College, London (Transfer).
Walker and Wallsend Union Gas (Additional Powers).
Weaver Navigation.
West Cumberland Electric Tramways.
West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers.
Western Valleys (Monmouthshire) Water and Gas.
Weybridge and Walton-upon-Thames Electric Supply.
Whitby Urban District Council.
Whitechapel and Bow Railway.
Woolwich Borough Council.
Workington Harbour and Dock.
Wrexham Gas.

And also the Certificates that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have not been complied with :—

Wellingborough and District Tramroads and Electricity Supply.
Wigan Corporation.
Hastings Tramways.
Coventry Electric Tramways (Extension of Time).
Hammersmith City, and North-East London Railway.
Heckmondwike Improvement.
Mullingar, Kells, and Drogheda Railway.
Llandrindod Wells Urban District Council.

The same were ordered to lie on the Table 277

Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Bill.—The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House, That, pursuant to the Resolutions of the 8th of August last) the Bill had been lodged in the Private Bill Office, together with the declaration of the agent ; Bill presented ; read 1a ; read 2a, and committed 282

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

Education (Scotland).—Return showing the expenditure from the grant for public education in Scotland in the year 1904 ; with statistics.

Minute of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland, dated February 16, 1905, providing for the distribution of the General Aid Grant.

Presented (by command), and ordered to lie on the Table 282

Army (Military Savings Banks).—Statement of the amount due by the public to depositors in Military Savings Banks on the 31st March 1903, and of the receipts, interest, and disbursements in the said Military Savings Banks during the year next ensuing, ended the 31st March, 1904, etc. 282

Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (Prisons, Scotland).—Regulations, dated 20th August 1904, made by the Secretary for Scotland, under the Act for the measuring and photographing of prisoners 283

Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, and Motor Car Act, 1903.—The Heavy Motor Car (Scotland) Order, 1905. 283

Feb. 16.] Page

UNIVERSITIES (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1889.—Annual report on the state of the finances of the University of Edinburgh under the Act, for the year 1903–1904.

Annual statistical report by the University Court of the University of Edinburgh to the Secretary of Scotland under the Act, for the year 1903–1904.

Annual statistical report by the University Court of the University of Glasgow to the Secretary for Scotland under the Act, for the year 1903–1904 283

GREENWICH HOSPITAL AND TRAVERS' FOUNDATION (CAPITAL AND INCOME ACCOUNTS, 1903–1904).—Accounts of the receipt and expenditure of the capital and of the income derived from the lands and other property held for the benefit of Greenwich Hospital, and the Foundation of Samuel Travers, Esquire, for the year ended 31st March, 1904; together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon 283

PARKS REGULATION ACT, 1872.—Rules for Osborne 283

POST OFFICE (MONEY ORDERS) STATUTORY RULES AND ORDERS, 1904.

No. 1568. The Postal Order (Colonial) Regulations, 1904.

No. 1806. The Postal Order (Colonial) Amendment (No. 1) Regulations 1904 283

GREEK LOAN OF 1832.—Account for 1904. 283

DISEASES OF ANIMALS ACTS, 1894–1903.—Hull (Channel Islands Animals) Landing Place Revocation Order of 1904 283

MOTOR CAR ACTS, 1896 AND 1903.—Regulations as to weight, conditions of use, construction and speed of heavy motor cars, made by the Local Government Board under Section 6 of the Act of 1896, and Section 12 of the Act of 1903.

Regulation as to restriction of the driving of motor cars on certain highways or parts of highways situate with the borough of Beverley, made by the Local Government Board under Section 6 of the Act of 1896, and Section 8 of the Act of 1903.

(a) Regulations as to registration of motor cars made by the Local Government Board under Section 6 of the Act of 1896, and Section 7 of the Act of 1903—

Blackpool and Tynemouth (County Boroughs). For assigning index marks distinguishing the councils of the county boroughs for the purposes of the regulations prescribed by the Motor Car (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903.

(b) Regulations as to registration of motor cars made by the Local Government Board under Section 6 of the Act of 1896, and Section 7 of the Act of 1896, and Section 7 of the Act of 1903—

Dorset (County). For changing the index marks assigned to the council of the county by the Motor Car (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903 284

Feb. 16.] Page

PUBLIC RECORDS.—His Majesty's Stationery Office. Schedule containing a list and particulars of classes of documents existing or accruing in His Majesty's Stationery Office which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office.

Board of Agriculture and Fisheries. Second Schedule, containing a list and particulars of classes of documents existing or accruing in the office of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office .. 284

PATENTS, DESIGNS, AND TRADE MARKS ACTS, 1883–1892.—Patents Rules, 1905 284

PRIVATE PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.—Report by the Acting Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords and the Chairman of Ways and Means in the House of Commons, under Section 2 of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899—

That, having regard to Section 16 (2) of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, the provisions of the Caledonian Railway Order, the Clyde Navigation Order, the Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution) Order, the Highland Railway Order, and the North British Railway (General Powers) Order are of such a character that they ought to be dealt with by Private Bills and not by Provisional Orders.

That, save as aforesaid, the Provisional Orders be allowed to proceed subject to such recommendations as may be hereafter made with respect to the several Orders.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 285

NEW BILLS.

Bishopric of Bristol Bill [H.L.].—A Bill for re-arranging the boundaries of the diocese of Bristol and Gloucester and Bath and Wells. Was presented by the Lord Bishop of Bristol; read 1ª; to be printed; and to be read 2ª on Tuesday next. (No. 3.) 285

Reserve Forces Bill [H.L.] (No. 4).—A Bill to amend the law relating to the Reserve Forces; And— 285

Military Manœuvres Bill [H.L.] (No. 5).—A Bill to amend the Military Manœuvres Act, 1897. Were presented by the Viscount Hutchinson (E. Donoughmore); read 1ª; to be printed; and to be read 2 on Friday the 24th inst. 285

Seamen's and Soldiers' False Characters Bill [H.L.].—A Bill to amend the law relating to the falsification of seamen's and soldiers' certificates of service or discharge, and to false statements made, used, or given in connection with entry or enlistment into His Majesty's Naval, Military, or Marine Forces. Was presented by the Viscount Hutchinson (E. Donoughmore); read 1ª; to be printed; and to be read 2ª on Tuesday next. (No. 6.) 285

Feb. 16.] Page

Ecclesiastical Commissioners Bill [H.L.].—A Bill to provide for the appointment of an additional Church Estates Commissioner. Was presented by the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury ; read 1^a ; and to be printed. (No. 7.) .. 286

Municipal Corporations (Merthyr Tydvil Scheme Confirmation) Bill [H.L.].—A Bill to confirm a scheme made by a Committee of the Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council under the Municipal Corporation Acts, 1882 and 1885, relating to Merthyr Tydvil. Was presented by the Lord President (E. Vane [M. Londonderry]) ; read 1^a ; and to be printed. (No. 8.) .. 286

THE CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (The Marquess of Lansdowne) 286

Moved, That the Earl of Onslow be appointed to take the Chair in all Committees of this House for this session.

That the Earl of Onslow do take the Chair in all Committees of the Whole House unless where it shall have been otherwise directed by the House.

That the Earl of Onslow do also take the Chair in all Committees upon Private Bills and other matters, unless where it shall have been otherwise directed by the House.—(The Marquess of Lansdowne.)

Earl Spencer 289

On Question, Motion agreed to and ordered accordingly.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Lord James of Hereford 290

Moved, " For a Return, showing—(1) The dates upon which any Bills mentioned in the different Speeches from the Throne during the present Parliament were introduced into the House of Commons ; (2) the dates when such Bills were transmitted to this House ; (3) the dates when the different stages of such Bills were taken in this House ; (4) like dates in respect of Bills of an important character not mentioned in the Speeches from the Throne, but introduced by, or supported by, the Government ; (5) the dates of the Prorogation of Parliament in the different sessions of the present Parliament."—(Lord James of Hereford.)

The Marquess of Lansdowne 291

On Question, Motion agreed to, and ordered accordingly.

House adjourned at a quarter before Five o'clock, till To-morrow, half-past ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: THURSDAY, 16TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS [LORDS].—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in respect of the Bills comprised in the List reported by the Chairman of Ways and Means as intended to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with in the following cases, viz. :—

Abertillery Urban District Water.
Administrative County of London and District Electric Power Company.
Alexandra Park and Palace.
Bangor (County Down) Water and Improvement.
Barry Railway.
Blackpool Improvement.
Blackpool, St. Anne's, and Lytham Tramways.
Bridgewater Canals.
Bristol Blind Asylum.
Buenos Ayres Grand National Tramways.
Cardiff Railway.
Central Electric Supply.
Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation.
City of London Electric Lighting Company.
Clacton Improvements.
Clacton-on-Sea Commissioners.
Commercial Union Assurance.
Cordoba and Rosario Railway.
County of London Electric Supply Company
Dearne Valley Railway.
East Cowes Gas.
East London and Lower Thames Electric Power.
Entre Rios Railways.
Formby Township.
Gosport and Fareham Tramways.
Great Central Railway.
Great Central Railway (Pension Fund).
Hastings Harbour.
Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment)
Hessle Gas.
Hessle Urban District Council.
Humber Conservancy.
Hythe Corporation.
Leeds and Liverpool Canal.
Littlehampton Urban District Council.
London and India Docks Company.
London Squares and Enclosures (Preservation).
Mansfield Corporation.
Marylebone Chapels.
Matlock Bath Improvement.
Medway and Thames Canal.
Metropolitan and Great Central Railway Companies.
Metropolitan District Railway.
Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District).

Feb. 20.] Page

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers).
Metropolitan Railway.
Mexborough and Swinton Tramways (Extension of Time).
Mortgage Insurance Corporation.
Naval Works (Portsmouth Barracks Site).
Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation.
Nine Mile Point Railway.
North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply.
Nottingham Corporation.
Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation.
Oldham and Saddleworth District Tramways.
Orphan Working School and Alexandra Orphanage.
Preston Corporation (Ribble Navigation).
Rhymney Railway.
Sandgate Urban District Council.
Sheffield University.
Shepton Mallet Gas Company (Electric Lighting).
South Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways.
Southend and Colchester Light Railways.
South Lancashire Tramways.
Southport, Birkdale, and West Lancashire Water Board.
Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation).
Tees Valley Water Board.
Torpoint Urban District Water.
Tralee Urban District Council.
Truro Water.
Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.
University College, London (Transfer).
Weaver Navigation.
West Cumberland Electric Tramways (Extension of Time).
Western Valleys (Monmouthshire) Water and Gas.
West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers.
Whitby Urban District Council.
Workington Harbour and Dock.

And they have certified that the Standing Orders have not been complied with in the following cases, viz. :—

Hastings Tramways.
Llandrindod Wells Urban District Council.
Wellingborough and District Tramroads and Electricity Supply. .. 292

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS [LORDS] (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the Petitions for the following Bills, originating in the Lords, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz. :—Hastings Tramways [Lords]; Llandrindod Wells Urban District Council [Lords]; Wellingborough and District Tramroads and Electricity Supply [Lords]. Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders 295

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table, Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the Petitions for the following Bills, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz. :—Coventry Electric Tramways (Extension of Time); Hammersmith, City, and North-East London Railway; Heckmondwike Improvement; Mullingar, Kells, and Drogheda Railway; Wigan Corporation. Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders 295

Feb. 16.] Page

PETITIONS.

IYER, N. A. SUBRAMANIA.—Petition of N. A. Subramania Iyer, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table 295

LICENSED PREMISES (HOURS OF CLOSING).—Petition from Wallasey, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table 295

LICENSING ACT, 1902.—Petition from Manchester, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table 296

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY.—Petition from Uppingham, for prohibition; to lie upon the Table 296

SUGAR TAX.—Petitions for repeal: from Ashton-under-Lyne; Patricroft; Radcliffe; Scarborough; Southport; Stockport; and, York; to lie upon the Table 296

TEINDS (SCOTLAND).—Petition from Greenock, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table 296

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

PRISONS (IRELAND).—Paper [presented 14th February]; to be printed. [No. 23.] 296

OSBORNE.—Copy presented, of Rules for Osborne in connection with the Regulations prescribed by the Parks Regulation Act, 1872 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 296

ALIEN IMMIGRATION FROM THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE.—Return (in part) presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February; Mr. Gerald Balfour]; to lie upon the Table and to be printed. [No. 24.] 296

TRADE AND NAVIGATION.—Return (in part) presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February; Mr. Gerald Balfour]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 25.] 296

BREWERS' LICENCES.—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 26.] 296

CIVIL CONTINGENCIES FUND, 1903–4.—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 27.] 296

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND).—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 28.] 297

NATIONAL GALLERY (REPORT).—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 29.] 297

TREASURY CHEST.—Account presented, for the year 1903–4, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 30.] 297

GREEK LOAN.—Account presented, up to 31st December, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 31.] 297

Feb. 16.] Page

Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1889.—Copy presented, of Report by the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords and the Chairman of Ways and Means in the House of Commons, under The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, that they are of opinion that the Caledonian Railway, the Clyde Navigation, the Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution), the Highland Railway, and the North British Railway (General Powers) Draft Orders ought to be dealt with by Private Bill and not by Provisional Order [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 32.] .. 297

Education (Scotland).—Copy presented, of Minute of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland, dated 16th February 1905, providing for the distribution of the General Aid Grant [by Command]; to lie upon the Table .. 297

Education (Scotland).—Copy presented, of Return showing the Expenditure from the Grant for Public Education in Scotland in the year 1904, with Statistics [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 297

Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, and Motor Car Act, 1903.—Copy presented—of Regulations made under the Acts I. General II. Borough of Beverley, III. County Boroughs of Blackpool and Tynemouth, and County of Dorset [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 298

Army (Military Savings Banks).—Copy presented, of Statement of the Amounts due by the Public to Depositors on 31st March 1903, and of the Receipts, Interests, and Disbursements during the year ended 31st March 1904, etc. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 33.] 298

Papers laid upon the Table by the Clerk of the House—

1. Public Records (His Majesty's Stationery Office.) Copy of Schedule containing a List and Particulars of Classes of Documents existing or accruing in His Majesty's Stationery Office which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office [by Act.] 298

2. Public Records (Board of Agriculture and Fisheries.) Copy of Second Schedule containing a List and Particulars of Classes of Documents existing or accruing in the Office of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office [by Act.] 298

Pauperism (England and Wales) (Monthly Statements).—Return ordered, "of Statements for each month of the year 1905, of the number of Paupers relieved in England and Wales (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 108, of Session 1904)."—(Mr. Grant Lawson.) 298

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Post Office Wages Committee—Correspondence between Post Office and Sir Edward Bradford.—Question, Mr. Thomas Bayley (Derbyshire, Chesterfield); Answer, Lord Stanley 298

Rules for use of Electricity in Mines.—Question, Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 299

The Licensing Act.—Question, Mr. Frederick Wilson (Norfolk, Mid.); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 299

WIRELESS TELEGRAPH APPARATUS ON LIGHTSHIPS.—Question, Major Seely (Isle of Wight); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour.

INCOME-TAX COLLECTION.—Question, Mr. John Ellis; Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 300

CASE OF MR. TILAK—MR. BREWIN'S REPORT.—Question, Mr. Schwann (Manchester, N.); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 301

REPORT ON POLICE OF INDIA.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 301

LISLEA NO. 1 NATIONAL SCHOOL (ARMAGH)—APPOINTMENT OF LOCAL MANAGER. —Question, Mr. Lonsdale (Armagh, Mid.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 302

PROPORTION OF MEN EMPLOYED IN RAND MINES.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 302

REPRESENTATIVE CONSTITUTION IN THE TRANSVAAL—PUBLICATION OF PAPERS. —Question, Mr. John Ellis; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 303

PUNISHMENT OF CHINESE LABOURERS IN THE TRANSVAAL.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 303

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

NAVAL GUNS.—Question, Mr. Renwick (Newcastle-on-Tyne); Answer, The Civil Lord of the Admiralty (Mr. Arthur Lee, Hampshire, Fareham) .. 304

NAVAL RECRUITING NOTICE.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.); Answer, Mr. Arthur Lee 304

WAGES OF CHINESE LABOURERS IN THE TRANSVAAL MINES.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel; Answer, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 305

WHITE LABOUR IN THE TRANSVAAL GOLD MINES.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel and Mr. Bell (Derby); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 305

VENEREAL DISEASES AMONG CHINESE COOLIES.—Question, Mr. Bell; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 306

TIBET EXPEDITION.—Question, Mr. Bryce (Aberdeen, S.) and Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, The Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) 306

INDIAN POLICE COMMISSION.—Question, Mr. Herbert Roberts (Denbighshire, W.); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 307

BRITISH MISSION TO KABUL.—Question, Mr. Herbert Roberts; Answer, Mr. Brodrick 307

THE VICEROY OF THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answer, Mr. Brodrick 307

Feb. 16.]

Page

MR. JOHN GODDEN'S CLAIM AGAINST THE DUTCH COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.—Question, Sir Ernest Flower (Bradford, W.); Answer, The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) .. 308

BRITISH APPEALS TO THE SUGAR COMMISSION.—Question, Mr. Lough (Islington, W.); Answer, The President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) 309

RUSSIAN SUGAR.—Question, Mr. Lough; Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 309

BRITISH BRANDY IN THE UNITED STATES.—Question, Sir Edward Sassoon (Hythe); Answer, Earl Percy 310

CONGO STATE INQUIRY.—Question, Mr. Emmott (Oldham); Answer, Earl Percy 311

SUGAR BOUNTIES.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis), Mr. Lough; Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 311

SAN DOMINGO SUGAR.—Question, Mr. Lough, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman; Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 312

UNITED STATES SUGAR.—Question, Mr. Lough; Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour .. 313

COLONIAL CONTRIBUTION TO COST OF PACIFIC CABLE.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain) 314

THE UNFUNDED DEBT.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 314

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR CONTRIBUTION.—Questions, Mr. Gibson Bowles, Mr. McCrae (Edinburgh, E.), and Mr. Whitley (Halifax); Answers, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 315

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS DEPOSITS.—Question, Dr. Macnamara (Camberwell, N.); Answer, The Postmaster-General (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton) 317

POSTMASTER-GENERAL'S ANNUAL REPORT.—Question, Dr. Macnamara; Answer, Lord Stanley 318

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK SECURITIES.—Question, Dr. Macnamara; Answer, Lord Stanley 319

CANADIAN CATTLE—IMPORT RESTRICTIONS.—Questions, Captain Donelan (Cork, E.), Mr. Buchanan, and Mr. Cathcart Wason; Answers, Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes (Huntingdonshire, Ramsey) 319

COUNTY COURT FEES.—Question, Sir Albert Rollit (Islington, S.); Answer, The Attorney-General (Sir Robert Finlay, Inverness Burghs) 320

SHEEP DISEASE IN COUNTY WICKLOW.—Question, Mr. James O'Connor (Wicklow, W.); Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 321

AVONDALE ESTATE, COUNTY WICKLOW.—Question, Mr. James O'Connor; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 321

IRISH LOCAL GOVERNMENT—PUBLIC BODIES ORDER, 1904.—Questions, Mr. James O'Connor; Answers, Mr. Wyndham 321

DUBLIN HACKNEY CARRIAGE STANDS.—Question, Mr. Nannetti (Dublin, College Green); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 323

DUBLIN CAR AND CAB LICENCE DUTIES.—Question, Mr. Nannetti; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 323

ASSAULT BY A CLERGYMAN AT WESTPORT.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 324

IRISH SCHOOL TEACHERS AS POLLING CLERKS.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 324

SIR ANTONY MACDONNELL.—Questions, Mr. Charles Craig (Antrim, S.) and Mr. William Moore (Antrim, N.); Answers, Mr. Wyndham 324

SEED POTATO GRANTS IN IRELAND.—Question, Colonel Nolan (Galway, N.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 326

ARMY PENSIONERS IN IRISH LUNATIC ASYLUMS.—Questions, Mr. Sloan; Answers, The Financial Secretary to the War Office (Mr. Bromley-Davenport, Cheshire Macclesfield) 327

THE JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answer, The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) 328

THE SECRETARY FOR SCOTLAND AND COMPANY DIRECTORSHIPS.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answer, Mr. A. J. Balfour 328

NEW MEMBER SWORN.—JOHN O'CONNOR, Esquire, for the County of Kildare (North Kildare Division) 329

NEW WRIT.—For the County of Westmoreland (Northern or Appleby Division), in the room of Richard Rigg, Esquire (Manor of Northstead).—(Mr. Herbert Gladstone). 329

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [15th February] to Question [14th February], "That an humble Adress be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that, the various aspects of the fiscal question having now been fully discussed in the country for nearly two years, the time has come for submitting the issue to the people without further delay.'"—(Mr. Asquith.)

Feb. 16.] Page

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. Ernest Gray (West Ham, N.) 330
Mr. J. Chamberlain (Birmingham, W.) 334
Lord Hugh Cecil (Greenwich) 350
Sir E. Durning-Lawrence (Cornwall, Truro) 359
Mr. Robson (South Shields) 368
Mr. Stuart Wortley (Sheffield, Hallam) 377
Mr. Bright (Shropshire, Oswestry) 380
Mr. Austin Taylor (Liverpool, East Toxteth) 382
Mr. Hunter Craig (Lanarkshire, Govan) 385
Mr. Reginald Lucas (Portsmouth) 387

EVENING SITTING.

King's Speech (Motion for an Address).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [15th February] to Question [14th February],

"That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that, the various aspects of the fiscal question having now been fully discussed in the country for nearly two years, the time has come for submitting the issue to the people without further delay.'"—(Mr. Asquith.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. Tomkinson (Cheshire, Crewe) 388
Sir Henry Kimber (Wandsworth) 392
Mr. Thomas Shaw (Hawick Burghs) 395
Mr. Malcolm (Suffolk, Stowmarket) 401
Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman (Stirling Burghs) 404
The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) 410

Question put.

The House divided :—Ayes, 248 ; Noes, 311. (Division List No. 3.)

Main Question again proposed.

Motion made, and Question, "That the debate be now adjourned."—(Dr. Macnamara.)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

Adjourned at five Minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS: FRIDAY, 17TH. FEBRUARY, 1905.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Abertillery Urban District Water Bill [H.L.].—Administrative County of London and District Electric Power Company Bill [H.L.]; Alexandra Park and Palace Bill [H.L.]; Bangor (County Down) Water and Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Blackpool Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Bristol Blind Asylum Bill [H.L.]; Clacton Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Clacton-on-Sea Commissioners Bill [H.L.]; East London and Lower Thames Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Formby Township Bill [H.L.]; Hastings Harbour Bill [H.L.]; Humber Conservancy Bill [H.L.]; Hythe Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Littlehampton Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Llandrindod Wells Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; London Squares and Enclosures (Preservation) Bill [H.L.]; Mansfield Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Matlock Bath Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Nine Mile Point Railway Bill [H.L.]; Nottingham Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Orphan Working School and Alexandra Orphanage Bill [H.L.]; Preston Corporation (Ribble Navigation) Bill [H.L.]; Sandgate Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Sheffield University Bill [H.L.]; Southport, Birkdale, and West Lancashire Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation) Bill [H.L.]; Tees Valley Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Torpoint Urban District Water Bill [H.L.]; Tralee Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; University College, London (Transfer) Bill [H.L.]; Weaver Navigation Bill [H.L.]; Whitby Urban District Council [H.L.]. Read 1ª 429

Barry Railway Bill [H.L.].—Blackpool, St. Anne's, and Lytham Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Bridgewater Canals Bills [H.L.]; Cardiff Railway Bill [H.L.]; Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation Bill [H.L.]; City of London Electric Lighting Company Bill [H.L.]; Commercial Union Assurance Bill [H.L.]; Cordoba and Rosario Railway Bill [H.L.]; East Cowes Gas Bill [H.L.]; Entre Rios Railway Bill [H.L.]; Gosport and Fareham Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Great Central Railway Bill [H.L.]; Great Central Railway (Pension Fund) Bill [H.L.]; Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment) Bill [H.L.]; Hastings Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Hessle Gas Bill [H.L.]; Leeds and Liverpool Canal Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan and Great Central Railway Companies Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan District Railway Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District) Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers) Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan Railway Bill [H.L.]; Mexborough and Swinton Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill [H.L.]; Mortgage Insurance Corporation Bill [H.L.]; North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply Bill [H.L.]; Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Oldham and Saddleworth District Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Rhymney Railway Bill [H.L.]; South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways Bill [H.L.]; Southend and Colchester Light Railways Bill [H.L.]; South Lancashire Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Truro Water Bill [H.L.]; Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads Bill [H.L.]; West Cumberland Electric Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill [H.L.]; Western Valleys (Monmouthshire) Water and Gas Bill [H.L.]; Workington Harbour and Dock Bill [H.L.]; Read 1ª; and referred to the Examiners 429

NEW BILL.

McConnell's Divorce Bill [H.L.].—A Bill to dissolve the marriage of Sir Robert John McConnell, Baronet, of Windsor Avenue, in the county of the City of Belfast, with Elsie George McConnell, his now wife, and to enable him to marry again; and for other purposes. Presented (on petition), and a copy of the proceedings in, and of the decree of divorce of the King's Bench Matrimonial Division of the High Court of Justice in Ireland. Delivered (on oath); Bill read 1ª; and to be read 2 on Tuesday, 28th March The usual orders made 430

Feb. 17.] Page

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

Roll of the Lords.—The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had prepared and laid it on the Table; the same was ordered to be printed. (No. 9) 430

Railway and Canal Traffic Acts, 1854 to 1894.—Sixteenth Annual Report of the Railway and Canal Commission; with Appendix 431

Trade Reports (Annual Series).

No. 3324. Denmark (Supplementary Report for 1903).

No. 3325. Belgium (Finances for 1904–1905).

Presented (by command), and oreredd to lie on the Table 431

Board of Education.—Draft Order in Council continuing certain provisions contained in the Order in Council of 6th March, 1902 431

Polling Districts (County of Lancaster).—Order made by the County Council of the County of Lancaster, re-dividing the Chorley Parliamentary Division into two convenient polling districts 431

Building Societies.—Tenth Annual Report by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies of the proceedings of the Registrars under the Building Societies Acts; with an abstract of the annual accounts and statements of the societies, for the year 1904 431

Friendly Societies, Workmen's Compensation Schemes, Industrial and Provident Societies, and Trades Unions.—Reports of the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies, for the year ended 31st December, 1904 431

Certified Inebriate Reformatories (Regulations for Management).—Regulations made with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the management and discipline of the Lancashire Certified Inebriate Reformatory 431

Duchy of Lancaster.—Account of the receipts and disbursements of the Duchy of Lancaster in the year ended 21st December, 1904; also, a separate account of the capital of the said Duchy to the same date .. 431

Locomotives on Highway Act, 1896, and Motor-car Act, 1903.

Orders by the Secretary for Scotland prohibiting motor-car traffic.

On special roads in the county of Perth. (20th August, 1904).

On a road in the county of Perth. (3rd February, 1905).

On certain roads in the county of Midlothian. (3rd February, 1905).

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 43

Sir Antony MacDonnell and Irish Devolution.

The Earl of Dunraven 432
The Earl of Westmeath 433
The Earl of Mayo 446
The Marquess of Ripon 447
Lord Rathmore 450
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (The Marquess of Lansdowne) 455
Earl Spencer 463
The Lord President of the Council and President of the Board of Education (The Marquess of Londonderry) 465
The Marquess of Lansdowne 466

House adjourned at ten minutes before Seven o'clock to Monday next, a quarter before Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: FRIDAY, 17TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

The House met at Twelve of the Clock.

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES, CONGESTED DISTRICTS, AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.—Petition from Lancashire, for continuance; to lie upon the Table 467

JUVENILE SMOKING.—Petition from Burnley, for legislation; to lie upon the Table 467

SUGAR TAX.—Petitions for repeal; from Newport (Mon.) (two); and Salford; to lie upon the Table 467

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).—Paper [presented 14th February] to be printed. [No. 34.] 467

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE AUTHORITIES, ETC.—Return [presented 14th February] to be printed. [No. 35.] 467

PUBLIC OFFICES SITE (DUBLIN) ACT, 1903.—Account [presented 14th February] to be printed. [No. 36.] 467

RAILWAY AND CANAL TRAFFIC ACTS, 1854 TO 1894.—Copy presented, of Sixteenth Annual Report of the Railway and Canal Commission, with Appendix [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 467

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF LANCASTER).—Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of the County Palatine of Lancaster, dividing the Chorley Parliamentary Division into two convenient Polling Districts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 467

Feb. 17.] Page

Inebriate Reformatories (Regulations).—Copy presented, of Regulations made with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the management and discipline of the Lancashire Certified Inebriate Reformatory [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 468

Civil Services and Revenue Departments (Appropriation Accounts).—Appropriation Accounts presented, for the year ending 31st March, 1904, together with the Reports of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon and certain Reports upon Store Accounts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 37.] 468

Duchy of Lancaster.—Accounts presented, for the year ended 31st December, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 38.] .. 468

Board of Education.—Copy presented, of Draft Order in Council continuing certain provisions contained in the Order in Council of 6th March, 1902 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 39.] 468

Pauperism (England and Wales) (Monthly Statements).—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 16th February; Mr. Grant Lawson]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 40.] 468

Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, and Motor Car Act, 1903.—Copy presented, of Order by the Secretary for Scotland prohibiting Motor Car Traffic on certain roads in the county of Midlothian [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 468

Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, and Motor Car Act, 1903.—Copy presented, of Order by the Secretary for Scotland prohibiting Motor Car Traffic on special roads in the county of Perth [by Act]; to lie upon the Table .. 468

Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, and Motor Car Act, 1903.—Copy presented, of Order by the Secretary for Scotland prohibiting Motor Car Traffic on a road in the county of Perth [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 468

Papers Laid Upon the Table by the Clerk of the House.—Friendly Societies, Workmen's Compensation Schemes, Industrial and Provident Societies, and Trade Unions.—Reports of the Chief Registrar for the year ending 31st December, 1904 [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 41.] .. ..

Building Societies.—Copy of Tenth Annual Report by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies of the Proceedings of the Registrars under the Building Societies Acts, etc. [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 42.]

Adjournment.—Resolved, "That this House, at the rising of the House this day, do adjourn till Monday next."—(Sir A. Ackland-Hood.)

New Writ.—For the county of Bute, in the room of the right hon. Andrew Graham Murray, Lord Justice-General and Lord President of the Court of Session in Scotland.—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

IMPERIAL EXCHEQUER AND COST OF TIBET EXPEDITION.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, Mr. A. J. Balfour 469

SALARY OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. A. J. Balfour 470

OVERTIME IN LINEN FACTORIES.—Question, Mr. Shackleton (Lancashire, Clitheroe); Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 470

COMPENSATION ALLOWANCE FOR INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE IN BURMAH.—Question, Mr. Hemphill (Tyrone N.); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 471

INCREASE OF SALARY FOR STRABANE DISPENSARY DOCTOR.—Question, Mr. Hemphill; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 471

DISPOSAL OF SITE OF DUKE OF YORK'S SCHOOL.—Question, Mr. Whitmore (Chelsea); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 472

BRITISH SOUTH AFRICA COMPANY.—Question, Mr. Labouchere (Northampton); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 472

NEW BILLS.

Shipowners' Negligence Remedies Bill.—"To enlarge the remedies of persons injured by the negligence of shipowners," presented by Sir Harry Samuel; supported by Mr. Brynmor Jones, Major Evans-Gordon, Mr. Sydney Buxton, Mr. Hayes Fisher, Mr. Ernest Gray, Mr. Jacoby, Sir Ernest Flower, Mr. Marks, Sir Albert Rollit, and Mr. Harold Reckitt; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 3rd, and to be printed. [Bill 1.] 472

Trade Unions and Trade Disputes Bill.—"To amend the Law relating to Trades Unions and Trade Disputes," presented by Mr. Whittaker; supported by Mr. Henderson, Mr. Bell, Mr. Shackleton, Mr. Beaumont, Mr. Johnson, Mr. John Burns, Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Runciman, Mr. Paulton, and Mr. Fenwick; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 10th, and to be printed. [Bill 2.] 473

Town Tenants (Ireland) Bill.—"To improve the position of Tenants in Towns of Ireland," presented by Mr. Patrick O'Brien; supported by Mr. John Redmond, Mr. J. F. X. O'Brien, Mr. Dillon, Mr. Joseph Devlin, Mr. Clancy, Mr. Field, Mr. MacVeagh, Mr. Mooney, and Mr. Charles Devlin; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 24th, and to be printed. [Bill 3.] .. 473

Coal Mines Employment Bill.—"To amend the provisions of the Coal Mines Regulation Acts which relate to Employment," presented by Mr. Jacoby; supported by Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. William Abraham (Rhondda), Mr. Keir Hardie, Mr. Thomas Bayley, Mr. Joseph Walton, Mr. Parrott, Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Thomas Richards, Sir Joseph Leese, and Mr. Norman; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 17th, and to be printed. [Bill 4.] .. 473

Coal Mines (Weighing of Minerals) Bill.—"To amend the provisions of The Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, which relate to the Weighing of Minerals," presented by Mr. Compton Rickett; supported by Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. William Abraham, Mr. Caldwell, Mr. Haldane, Sir William Holland, Mr. Warner, Mr. Cremer, Mr. Hatch, and Mr. Parrott; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 31st, and to be printed. [Bill 5.] 473

Feb. 17.] Page

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister," presented by Colonel Lockwood; supported by Sir William Gurdon, Sir Gilbert Parker, Mr. Broadhurst, Mr. Burt, Colonel Denny, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, Mr. Hambro, Sir Joseph Leese, Mr. David MacIver, and Sir Barrington Simeon; to be read a second time upon Friday, April 7th, and to be printed. [Bill 6.] 474

Land Values (Assessment and Rating) Bill.—" To provide for the separate Assessment and Rating of Land Values," presented by Sir John Brunner; supported by Mr. Trevelyan, Mr. Bell, Mr. Charles Douglas, Mr. William Jones, Mr. Lloyd-George, Mr. McCrae, Dr. Macnamara, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. J. H. Whitley, and Mr. Watson Rutherford; to be read a second time upon Friday, April 14th, and to be printed. [Bill 7.] 474

Liquor Traffic Local Veto (Scotland) Bill.—" To give the ratepayers a direct veto on the Liquor Traffic in their respective areas in Scotland," presented by Mr. Hunter Craig; supported by Mr. Asher, Mr. Black, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Cameron Corbett, Mr. Crombie, Sir William Dunn, Dr. Farquharson, Mr. John Hope, Mr. Robert Wallace, and Mr. Eugene Wason; to be read a second time upon Friday, May 5th, and to be printed. [Bill 8.] 474

Vehicles Lights Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to lights upon vehicles on highways," presented by Mr. Bigwood; to be read a second time upon Friday, May 12th, and to be printed. [Bill 9.] 474

Land Values Taxation (Scotland) Bill.—" To provide for the taxation for local purposes of Land Values in burghs in Scotland," presented by Mr. Ainsworth; supported by Mr. Black, Mr. Caldwell, Mr. Hunter Craig, Mr. Dalziel, Mr. Findlay, and Mr. J. D. Hope; to be read a second time upon Friday, May 19th, and to be printed. [Bill 10.] 474

Canals Bill.—" To establish public trusts under one control, with power to acquire, develop, extend, and administer the Canals and inland navigations of the United Kingdom, and to exercise all powers and authorities conducive or ancillary thereto," presented by Mr. Barran; supported by Sir John Brunner, Sir William Tomlinson, Sir William Holland, Sir Alfred Hickman, Mr. Channing, Mr. Platt-Higgins, Mr. Crombie, Mr. Kerr, Mr. Field, Mr. Trevelyan, Mr. McArthur, and Mr. Alexander Cross; to be read a second time upon Friday, May 26th, and to be printed. [Bill 11.].. 475

Plural Voting Bill.—" To prevent Plural Voting at Parliamentary elections," presented by Mr. Soames; supported by Mr. Harcourt, Mr. Henderson, Dr. Hutchinson, Mr. J. A. Pease, Mr. Price, Mr. Runciman, Mr. Shackleton, and Sir Edward Strachey; to be read a second time upon Friday, June 2nd, and to be printed. [Bill 12.] 475

Women's Enfranchisement Bill.—" To enable women to vote at Parliamentary elections," presented by Mr. Slack; supported by Colonel Denny, Mr. Shackleton, Mr. Emmott, Mr. Nannetti, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. George Whiteley, and Mr. Keir Hardie; to be read a second time upon Friday, May 12th, and to be printed. [Bill 13.] 475

Local Authorities (Qualification of Women) Bill.—" To enable women to be elected and act as members of county and borough councils and metropolitan borough councils," presented by Dr. Shipman; supported by Mr. Channing, Sir Richard Jebb, Mr. Henry Hobhouse, Mr. Emmott, Captain Norton, Mr. Bousfield, Mr. Yerburgh, Mr. Crooks, Sir Henry Kimber, Mr. Lough, and Mr. John Burns; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 31st, and to be printed. [Bill 14.] 475

Feb. 17.] Page

Private Legislation Procedure (Wales) Bill.—"To provide for improving and extending the procedure for obtaining Parliamentary powers by way of Provisional Orders in matters relating to Wales," presented by Mr. Vaughan-Davies; supported by Sir Alfred Thomas, Mr. Brynmor-Jones, Mr. Osmond Williams, and Mr. Herbert Roberts; to be read a second time upon Friday, 5th May, and to be printed. [Bill 15.] 475

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Sunday) Bill.—"To prohibit the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday," presented by Mr. Perks; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. Cameron, Sir Frederick Mappin, Mr. Fenwick, Mr. Charles Wilson, and Mr. John Wilson; to be read a second time upon Friday, May 26th, and to be printed. [Bill 16.] 476

Compensation for Damage to Crops Bill.—"To give compensation for damage by fires caused by sparks or cinders from railway engines," presented by Mr. Mount; supported by Sir Edward Strachey, Mr. Spear, Mr. Munro Ferguson, Mr. Hudson, Mr. Courtenay Warner, and Mr. Gardner; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 3rd, and to be printed. [Bill 17.] 476

Dublin Police Acts Amendment Bill.—"To amend the Dublin Police Acts," presented by Mr. Clancy; supported by Mr. Harrington, Mr. Nannetti, Mr. Field, Mr. Mooney, and Mr. Waldron; to be read a second time upon Friday, May 19th, and to be printed. [Bill 18.] 476

Local Government (Ireland) Act Amendment Bill.—"To amend the Local Government (Ireland) Acts," presented by Mr. Mooney; supported by Mr. Clancy, Mr. Roche, Mr. M'Hugh, Mr. Kilbride, Mr. Hayden, Mr. J. P. Farrell and Mr. Conor O'Kelly; to be read a second time upon Friday, June 2nd, and to be printed. [Bill 19.] 476

Small Holdings Bill.—"To further facilitate the provision of Small Holdings," presented by Mr. Channing; supported by Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Herbert Samuel, Mr. Price, Mr. Bright, Mr. Lyell, Dr. Hutchinson, Mr. George White, and Mr. Slack; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 24th, and to be printed. [Bill 20.] 476

Land Drainage and Sewers Bill.—"To amend the Law relating to the drainage of Land for Agricultural Purposes and the Law of Sewers," presented by Mr. Harold Reckitt; supported by Mr. Seymour Ormsby-Gore, Mr. Lambert, and Mr. Perks; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 31st, and to be printed. [Bill 21.] 477

Catholics Disabilities Removal Bill—"To remove certain disabilities affecting Catholics," presented by Mr. MacVeagh; supported by Mr. Kilbride; Mr. Patrick O'Brien, Mr. Sheehy, Mr. Mooney, Mr. M'Kean, Mr. Vincent Kennedy, Mr. Waldron, Mr. Delany, and Mr. Boland; to be read a second time upon Friday, June 2nd, and to be printed. [Bill 22.] 477

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Saturdays (Ireland) Bill.—"To amend the the Law relating to the sale of Intoxicating Liquors in Ireland on Saturdays, and for other purposes connected therewith," presented by Mr. Sloan; supported by Sir James Haslett, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. Jordan, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. T. L. Corbett, Mr. Wood, and Mr. O'Shaughnessy; to be read a second time upon Friday, April 7th, and to be printed. [Bill 23.] 477

Feb. 17. Page

House Letting (Scotland) Bill.—"To amend the system of House-letting in the burghs of Scotland," presented by Mr. Alexander Cross; supported by Sir John Leng, Mr. Hunter Craig, Colonel Bain, and Mr. T. W. Russell; to be read a second time upon Friday next, and to be printed. [Bill 24.] 477

Church Discipline Bill.—"To deal with Church Discipline," presented by Mr. Austin Taylor; supported by Mr. William Lawrence, Mr. Charles M'Arthur, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. David McIver, Mr. W. W. Rutherford, Mr. Channing and Major Seely; to be read a second time upon Friday, May 12th, and to be printed. [Bill 25.] 477

Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill.—"To grant certificates to Persons in Charge of Steam Engines and Boilers," presented by Mr. Joseph Walton; supported by Mr. John Wilson, Mr. Fenwick, Mr. Cameron, Mr. Parrott, Mr. Jacoby, Mr. Levy, Mr. Shackleton, Mr. John Johnson, and Mr. Arthur Henderson; to be read a second time upon Friday, May 26th, and to be printed. [Bill 26.] 477

Leasehold Enfranchisement Bill.—"To provide for the Enfranchisement of Leaseholds," presented by General Laurie; supported by Mr. Spear, Mr. Cohen, Sir George Fardell, and Mr. Louis Sinclair; to be read a second time upon Friday, April 7th. and to be printed. [Bill 27.] 478

Medical Act (1886) Amendment Bill.—"To amend The Medical Act, 1886," presented by General Laurie; supported by Sir Walter Foster, Sir John Tuke, Mr. Rothschild, Sir Howard Vincent, Mr. Middlemore, and Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree; to be read a second time upon Friday, April 14th, and to be printed. [Bill 28.] 478

Colonial Marriages Bill.—"To legalise certain Colonial Marriages," presented by General Laurie; supported by Mr. Rothschild, Mr. Arthur Stanley, Sir Gilbert Parker, and Captain Jessel; to be read a second time upon Friday, May 5th, and to be printed. [Bill 29.] 478

Contempt of Court (Ireland) Bill.—"To amend the Law relating to committals for Contempt of Court in Ireland," presented by Mr. Patrick Aloysius M'Hugh; supported by Mr. O'Dowd, Mr. Conor O'Kelly, Mr. Clancy, Mr. James O'Kelly, and Mr. William M'Killop; to be read a second time upon Friday, June 2nd, and to be printed. [Bill 30.] 478

Drunkenness (Ireland) Bill.—"To amend the Law relating to Drunkenness in Ireland, and for purposes connected therewith," presented by Mr. T. W. Russell; supported by Mr. Hugh Law, Sir James Haslett, Captain Donelan, and Mr. Wood; to be read a second time upon Friday. March 31st, and to be printed. [Bill 31.] 478

Franchise and Removal of Women's Disabilities Bill.—"To establish a single Franchise at all Elections, and thereby to abolish University representation and to remove the disabilities of women," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. John Burns, Mr. Keir Hardie, Mr. Atherley-Jones, Dr. Macnamara, Captain Norton, Mr. Shackleton, and Mr. Sheehan; to be read a second time upon Friday, April 28th, and to be printed. [Bill 32.] 479

Wages Boards Bill.—"To provide for the establishment of Wages Boards," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. John Burns, Mr. McKenna, Mr. Tennant, and Mr. Trevelyan; to be read a second time upon Friday, April 28th, and to be printed. [Bill 33.] 479

Feb. 17.] Page

Sunday Closing (Wales) Act (1881) Amendment Bill.—" To amend The Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881, and to make further provisions respecting the sale of Intoxicating liquors in Wales and Monmouthshire," presented by Mr. Herbert Roberts; supported by Sir Alfred Thomas, Mr. William Jones, and Mr. Herbert Lewis; to be read a second time upon Friday, May 19th, and to be printed. [Bill 34.] 479

Children's Courts Bill.—" To establish Children's Courts," presented by Sir Howard Vincent; supported by Mr. Samuel Smith and Sir John Gorst; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 3rd, and to be printed. [Bill 35.] 479

Merchandise Marks Bill.—" To amend the sixteenth section of The Merchandise Marks Act, 1887," presented by Sir Howard Vincent; supported by Mr. Evelyn Cecil, Mr. Middlemore, Sir Carne Rasch, and Mr. Field; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 3rd, and to be printed. [Bill 36.] .. 479

Public Trustee and Executor Bill.—" To provide for the appointment of a Public Trustee and Executor," presented by Sir Howard Vincent; supported by Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. Howard, and Colonel Tufnell; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 3rd, and to be printed. [Bill 37.] .. 480

Voting Disqualifications (Poor Law) Removal Bill.—" To prevent the disenfranchisement of persons receiving Poor Law relief," presented by Mr. Schwann; supported by Captain Norton, Mr. John Wilson (Durham), Mr. Churchill, Mr. Kearley, and Mr. Fenwick; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 10th, and to be printed. [Bill 38.] 480

Municipal Franchise (Companies) Bill.—" To confer the municipal franchise upon mercantile corporations and companies, and to amend The Municipal Corporations Act, 1882," presented by Sir Albert Rollit; supported by Sir James Woodhouse, Sir Fortescue Flannery, Sir William Holland, Mr. H. C. Richards, Mr. J. Howard, and Captain Jessel; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 39.] 480

Church Organisation and Discipline Bill.—" To repeal certain enactments; to provide for the constitution of Churchwardens' councils in England and Wales; to amend the Law relating to institution to benefices, to ecclesiastical suits, and to public worship; and to otherwise make better provision for the organisation and discipline of the Church of England," presented by Lord Hugh Cecil; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 17th, and to be printed. [Bill 40.] 480

Lands Valuation (Scotland) Amendment Bill.—"To amend The Lands Valuation (Scotland) Act, 1854," presented by Mr. M'Crae; supported by Mr. Bryce, Sir John Leng, Mr. Munro Ferguson, Mr. T. W. Russell, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. John Dewar, and Mr. Robert Wallace; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 10th, and to be printed. [Bill 41.] 480

Pharmacy Bill.—" To provide for the further regulation of the sale of poisons and the compounding of medical prescriptions, and to amend the Pharmacy Acts, 1852 and 1868," presented by Mr. Lough; supported by Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree, Mr. Henniker Heaton, Mr. Crooks, Mr. Osmond Williams, Mr. Ellis Griffith, Mr. James Reid, Mr. Munro Ferguson, Mr. Marshall Hall, Mr. Remnant, and Mr. Ernest Gray; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 24th, and to be printed. [Bill 42.] 480

Milk Depôts (London) Bill.—" To allow metropolitan borough councils to establish and maintain Milk Depôts," presented by Mr. Lough; supported by Dr. Shipman, Sir Charles Dilke, Dr. Macnamara, and Mr. J. H. Whitley; to be read a second time upon Friday, 12th May, and to be printed. [Bill 43.] 481

Feb. 17.] Page

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

Dr. Macnamara (Camberwell, N.) 481

Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland) 490

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question to add the words 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the facts now made known in respect of the importation of indentured Chinese coolies into the Transvaal show that Your Majesty's Government gave, during the discussion of the Transvaal Labour Ordinance in this House, assurances which have not been fulfilled ; and represent further that this House expresses its regret that nearly a year has elapsed since the promulgation of the Ordinance without securing the opinion of the people of the Transvaal on the question of the policy of the Ordinance, especially since the opinion of the British Colonies generally, so far as officially expressed, appears to be vigorously opposed to that policy.' "—(Dr. Macnamara.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

Sir Gilbert Parker (Gravesend) 500

Mr. Labouchere (Northampton) 506

Mr. Worsley-Taylor (Lancashire, Blackpool) 513

Major Seely (Isle of Wight) 520

The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 522

Question put.

The House divided :—Ayes, 214 ; Noes, 275. (Division List No. 4.)

Main Question again proposed.

Motion made, and Question, "That the debate be now adjourned."—(Mr. John Redmond)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed upon Monday next.

PREFERENTIAL AND RETALIATORY DUTIES.—Order [2nd February, 1904] that the Return relative to Preferential and Retaliatory Duties do lie upon the Table, read, and discharged. Paper withdrawn.—(Mr. Victor Cavendish) 540

Adjourned at twenty minutes before Six o'clock till Monday next.

Page

HOUSE OF LORDS: MONDAY, 20TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Central Electric Supply Bill [H.L.]; County of London Electric Supply Company Bill [H.L.]; Dearne Valley Railway Bill [H.L.]; London and India Docks Company Bill [H.L.]; Medway and Thames Canal Bill [H.L.]; Shepton Mallet Gas Company (Electric Lighting) Bill [H.L.]; Buenos Ayres Grand National Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Wellingborough and District Tramroads and Electricity Supply Bill [H.L.]. Presented; read 1ª; and referred to the Examiners 541

Marylebone Chapels Bill [H.L.]; Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Naval Works (Portsmouth Barracks Site) Bill [H.L.]; West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Bill [H.L.]. Presented, and read 1ª 541

Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Bill.—Brought from the Commons, and (pursuant to the Resolutions of the 8th of August last), read 1ª, 2ª, and committed. 541

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TREATY SERIES, No. 3, 1905.—Agreements between the United Kingdom and France referring to arbitration the question of the grant of the French flag to Muscat dhows; signed at London, 13th October, 1904, and 13th January, 1905. (Ratifications of agreement of 13th October, 1904, exchanged at London, 18th January, 1905.) 541

STATISTICS.—Statistical abstract for the British Empire in each year from 1889 to 1903. First Number.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table 541

PRISONS, ENGLAND AND WALES (VISITING COMMITTEES).—Draft rules proposed to be made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department under the Prison Acts, 1877 and 1898, with respect to the constitution of the Visiting Committee of Stafford Prison 542

NATIONAL DEBT (MILITARY SAVINGS BANKS).—Account of the gross amount of all moneys received and paid by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, on account of the Fund for Military Savings Banks, from 10th September, 1845, to 5th January, 1905 542

BANK OF ENGLAND.—Applications made by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England for advances to Government authorised by Parliament from 5th January, 1904, to 5th January, 1905 542

SUPERANNUATION.—Treasury Minute, dated 16th February, 1905, declaring that Edward George Gausden, labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service certificate through inadvertence on the part of the head of his Department 542

BANKRUPTCY.—General rules, dated 5th January, 1905, made pursuant to Section 127 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 542

Feb. 20.] Page

NEW BILL.

Sunday Closing (Shops) Bill [H.L.].—An Act to provide for the closing of shops and the prohibition of street trading on Sunday. Was presented by the Lord Avebury; read 1ª; and to be printed. [No. 10.] 542

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING.

The Earl of Meath 543
Earl Stanhope 554
Earl Egerton 555
The Earl of Ranfurly 556
Lord Balfour of Burleigh 557
The Under-Secretary of State for War (The Earl of Donoughmore) .. 559

House adjourned at ten minutes before Six o'clock, till to-morrow half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: MONDAY, 20TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Aberdare Tramways Bill.—"To enable the Aberdare Urban District Council to make and maintain tramways and street improvements; and for other purposes," presented and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 563

Accrington Corporation Bill.—"To authorise the Corporation of Accrington to construct and work tramways; to execute street works and improvements and to make further provision for the improvement, local government, and health of the borough of Accrington; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 563

Accrington District Gas and Water Board Bill.—"To authorise the Accrington District Gas and Water Board to make new waterworks; to extend their limits of supply for gas and water; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 564

Acton Sewage Bill.—"To authorise the Urban District Council of Acton to construct and maintain sewerage and sewage outfall works; and to make further provision for the admission of sewage into the Metropolitan Main Drainage System from a portion of the Urban District of Acton; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 564

Andover Lighting and Power Bill.—"For incorporating and conferring powers upon the Andover Lighting and Power Company; and for other purposes, presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 564

Feb. 20.] Page

Aylesbury Gas Bill.—" For incorporating and conferring powers on the Aylesbury Gas Company," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 564

Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Bill.—" To confer further powers on the Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Company," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills .. 564

Birmingham Corporation Bill.—"To empower the Corporation of Birmingham to construct additional tramways ; to make certain street works ; to amend certain provisions of the Acts relating to their waterworks undertaking ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 564

Bolton Corporation Bill.—"To authorise the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Bolton to construct additional waterworks ; to make street improvements ; to confer upon them further powers with respect to the supply of electricity, streets, buildings, sewers, and drains, and with respect to the local government and health of the borough ; to raise additional money ; to make further provisions as to rates and rating in the borough ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 564

Bootle Corporation Bill.—" To extend the borough of Bootle ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 565

Brentwood Gas Bill.—" For incorporating and conferring powers on the Brentwood Gas Company," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 565

Bristol Corporation Bill.—" To empower the Corporation of Bristol to execute works ; to make further provision for the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the city of Bristol ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time .. 565

Brompton, Chatham, Gillingham, and Rochester Water Bill.—"To confer further powers upon the Brompton, Chatham, Gillingham, and Rochester, Waterworks Company ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills .. 565

Central London Railway Bill.—" To empower the Central London Railway Company to construct new railways ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 565

Channel Ferry Railway and Quay Bill.—" To incorporate the Channel Ferry Railway and Quay Company ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 565

Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Bill.—" To confer further powers on the Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Company ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 566

Feb. 20.] Page

Chelsea Electricity Supply Bill.—" For providing for the extinction of the Founders' Shares of the Chelsea Electricity Supply Company (Limited), and the substitution therefor of Ordinary Shares in the capital of that Company ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 566

City of London (Escape from Fire) Bill.—" For the provision of means of escape from fire in and upon buildings within the City of London," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 566

Clay Cross Railway (Abandonment) Bill.—" For the abandonment of the Clay Cross Railway ; and for other purposes ; presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills .. 566

Colne Corporation Bill.—" For making further and better provision in regard to the markets, and the supply of gas, water, and electricity by the Corporation of Colne, and the improvement, health, and good government of the borough, and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 566

Cork Junction Railways Bill.—" To incorporate the Cork Junction Railways Company, and for making railways in the county borough of Cork and in the East Riding of the county of Cork, and to confer working agreement, subscription, and other powers on certain existing railway companies and others ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 566

Croydon Corporation Bill.—" To divide the West Ward of the county borough of Croydon, and to increase the number of aldermen and councillors ; to authorise the Corporation of the borough to construct and work additional tramways, and to execute certain street improvements ; to make further provision for the government, and for the preservation of the health of the inhabitants of the borough ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 567

Croydon Gas Bill.—" To provide for the transfer to the Croydon Gas Company of the undertaking of the Caterham and District Gas Company ; to extend the limits of supply of the Croydon Gas Company ; to authorise that company to raise additional capital ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 567

Dublin Corporation (Superannuation) Bill.—" To enable the corporation of the City of Dublin to grant pensions or other superannuation allowances to artisans, workmen, labourers, and servants in their service, in certain cases ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 567

Dublin United Tramways Bill.—" To transfer the undertakings of the Dublin United Tramways Company and the Dublin Southern District Tramways Company to the Dublin United Tramways Company (1896), Limited, and to amend the Acts relating to those companies ; and for other purposes," presented and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 567

Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Bill.—" To confer further powers the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Company in relation to their on general undertaking, and their separate undertaking of the New Ross and Waterford Extension Railways; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 567

Ealing Corporation Bill.—" To confer upon the corporation of the borough of Ealing further powers with respect to their electric lighting undertaking, and with respect to the regulation of streets and buildings, sanitary matters, recreation grounds, and milk supply; and to vest in the Corporation the appointment of collectors of poor rates; and for other purposes, "presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 568

Edgware and Hampstead Railway Bill.—" To authorise a deviation of part of the Edgware and Hampstead Railway; and to confer further powers on the Edgware and Hampstead Railway Company; and for other purposes," presented and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 568

Epping Gas Bill.—" For incorporating and conferring powers on the Epping Gas Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 568

Gas Light and Coke South Metropolitan, and Commercial Gas Companies Bill.—" To amend the Acts relating to the Gas Light and Coke, South Metropolitan, and Commercial Gas Companies with regard to the testing of gas, procedure for forfeitures, and otherwise," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 568

Great Berkhampstead Gas Bill.—" For incorporating and conferring powers upon the Great Berkhampstead Gas Light and Coke Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 568

Great Eastern Railway Bill.—" For conferring further powers on the Great Eastern Railway Company; for enabling the Great Northern and Great Eastern Joint Committee to acquire additional lands; for extending the periods limited for the completion of works by the Company, the Hertfordshire County Council, and the Epping Rural District Council, and for the purchase of lands by the Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 569

Great Northern (Ireland) and Midland Railways Bill.—" To provide for the vesting of the undertaking of the Donegal Railway Company in the Midland Railway Company and in a Joint Committee of that Company and the Great Northern Railway Company (Ireland); to incorporate such Joint Committee and to transfer to that Committee certain of the powers of the Great Northern Railway Company (Ireland) in connection with the undertaking of the Strabane and Letterkenny Railway Company; to confer further powers upon the Great Northern Railway Company (Ireland); and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 569

Feb. 20.] Page

Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 1) Bill.—" To confer further powers on the Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway Company," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 569

Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 2) Bill.—" To empower the Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway Company to construct new railways in extension of their authorised railways ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 569

Great Northern Railway Bill.—" To authorise the construction of a bridge over the River Witham at Langrick Ferry, and to confer powers on the Great Northern Railway Company and the county councils of the administrative counties of the parts of Lindsey and the parts of Holland in the county of Lincoln, with reference thereto ; to confer powers on the company with reference to certain footpaths and the purchase of lands ; to confirm the purchase of certain lands by the Great Northern and Great Eastern Joint Committee ; to extend the time limited for the completion of certain works and the purchase of certain lands by the company ; to authorise the abandonment of certain authorised railways at Grantham ; to empower the Horncastle Railway Company to raise further moneys by borrowing ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 569

Great Western Railway (Additional Powers) Bill.—" For conferring further powers upon the Great Western Railway Company in respect of their own undertaking, and upon that Company and the London and North Western Railway Company in respect of an undertaking in which they are jointly interested, and upon the Great Western and Metropolitan Railway Companies in respect of an undertaking in which they are jointly interested for amalgamating the Wye Valley Railway Company and the Lambourn Valley Railway Company with the Great Western Railway Company ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 570

Great Western Railway (New Railways) Bill.—" For empowering the Great Western Railway Company to construct new railways ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 570

Halifax Corporation Bill.—" To confer further powers on the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the county borough of Halifax with respect to the disposal of liquid trade refuse ; and for the construction of additional tramways and street widenings ; and in regard to streets and buildings ; and for the health, local government, and improvement of the borough ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 570

Higham and Hundred of Hoo Water Bill.—" To empower the Higham and Hundred of Hoo Water Company to raise additional capital ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 571

Hitchin and District Gas Bill.—" For incorporating and conferring powers upon the Hitchin Gas Company, Limited ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 571

Feb. 20.] Page

Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Junction Railway and Dock Bill.—"To extend the time for the purchase of lands and completion of works authorised by the Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Junction Railway and Dock (South Yorkshire Extension Lines) Act, 1902; to amend the Acts relating to the Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Junction Railway and Dock Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 571

Ilfracombe Harbour and Improvement Bill.—"To confirm an agreement for the acquisition by the Ilfracombe Urban District Council of part and the lease (with an option of purchase) of the remainder of the Ilfracombe Pier and Harbour undertaking, including Lantern Hill and other lands held therewith; and to enable Council to carry out street improvements; and to make further and better provision for the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 571

Liverpool Corporation Bill.—"For conferring on the Corporation of the City of London further powers for the protection of public health; for the better prevention of smoke nuisance, for the regulation of public meetings, and for licensing cattle drovers; for making provisions as to the acquisition of lands by the Corporation and as to the repayment of moneys borrowed by the Corporation for certain objects; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 571

London and North Western Railway Bill.—"For conferring further powers upon the London and North Western Railway Company in relation to their own undertaking and upon that Company, in conjunction with the Great Western Railway Company and the Furness Railway Company, in relation to their respective joint undertakings; and upon the North and South Western Junction Railway Company in respect of their undertaking and upon the London and North Western Railway Company in relation to the undertaking of the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 572

London Buildings Acts (Amendment) Bill.—"To amend the Acts relating to buildings in London; to confer various powers on the London County Council; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 572

London County Council (General Powers) Bill.—"To empower the London County Council to execute works and to acquire lands and utilise other lands; to make provisions with respect to milk supply and sale of food and drugs; to authorise the extension of Hampstead Heath and the exchange of lands in connection with parks, commons, and open spaces; to extend the time for the completion of certain authorised works; to provide for the licensing of employment agencies; to empower councils of metropolitan boroughs to supply electric fittings; to confer further powers upon the Council of the Metropolitan Borough of Battersea with respect to Latchmere Allotments; to provide for contributions by the councils of metropolitan boroughs to expenditure by the London County Council; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 572

Feb. 20.] Page

London County Council (Tramways) Bill.—"To enable the London County Council to construct and work tramways in the County of London, and to deviate the authorised subway from Southampton Row to the Victoria Embankment; to extend the time limited for the completion of certain authorised tramways; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 573

London Gas Bill.—"To amend the Acts relating to the supply of gas in London, and to make further provisions with reference thereto," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 573

London Portland Docks Commission Bill.—"To constitute and incorporate a Commission for the administration of the Port of London and for transferring to the Commission the undertakings of certain dock companies and certain powers and duties of the Conservators of the River Thames and the Watermen's Company; and for other purposes connected therewith," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time .. 573

London Southern Tramways Bill.—"To authorise the use on the tramways of the London Southern Tramways Company of mechanical power and to empower that Company to purchase lands and construct works; and for other purposes," presented and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 573

London United Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill.—"To extend the time limited by the London United Tramways Act, 1901, and the London United Tramways Act, 1902, for the construction of tramways and the acquisition of lands," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 573

Loughborough Corporation Bill.—"To extend the time limited for the construction of waterworks by the Loughborough Corporation Act, 1897, and to enable the Corporation to purchase further lands, and to borrow further moneys for their waterworks; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 574

Metropolitan Electric Tramways Bill.—"To confer powers on the Metropolitan Electric Tramways, Limited, for widening and altering roads and acquiring lands in the county of Middlesex; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 574

Metropolitan Pneumatic Despatch Bill.—"For incorporating the Metropolitan Pneumatic Despatch Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 574

Midland Railway Bill.—"To confer additional powers upon the Midland Railway Company for the construction of works and the acquisition of lands; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 574

Morley Corporation Bill.—"To confer further powers upon the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Morley in relation to their water and electric lighting undertakings; and to make further provision in regard to the health, improvement, and good government of the said borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 574

Feb. 20.] Page

North Eastern Railway Bill.—" To confer additional powers upon the North Eastern Railway Company for the construction of new railways, dock works, and other works, and the acquisition of lands ; and for other purposes, presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 574

North Eastern Railway (Steam Vessels) Bill.—" To authorise the North Eastern Railway Company to own and use vessels for the conveyance of traffic between the ports of Hull and Goole and certain Continental ports, and to subscribe to the funds of steamship companies ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 575

North East London Railway Bill.—" For incorporating the North East London Railway Company, and for empowering them to construct railways from the City of London to Walthamstow, Epping Forest, Waltham Abbey, and Cheshunt ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 575

North Sussex Gas Bill.—" To incorporate the North Sussex Gas Company and to enable that company to supply with gas certain parishes in the county of Sussex," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 575

Norwich Union Life Insurance Society Bill.—" To alter the constitution of the Norwich Union Life Insurance Society by substituting a Memorandum and Articles of Association for its existing Laws and Regulations, and to repeal the Acts relating to such Society ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 575

Nottingham and Retford Railway Bill.—" To extend the time for the purchase of lands for and the completion of railways authorised by the Nottingham and Retford Railway Act, 1902 ; to amend that Act in various respects ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 575

Otley Gas and Improvement Bill.—" To empower the Urban District Council of Otley to supply gas, and to provide for the transfer of the undertaking of the Otley Gas Company to the Council, and to make further and better provision with regard to the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 575

Rathmines and Rathgar Extension and Improvement Bill.—" To extend the boundaries of the Rathmines and Rathgar Urban District ; to confer further powers on the Urban District Council of Rathmines and Rathgar with respect to streets and sanitary and other matters for the improvement and good government of their district ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time ; and ordered to be read a second time 576

Rhondda Urban District Council Bill.—" To extend the time for the purchase of land and construction of waterworks, tramways, street widenings, and other works by the Rhondda Urban District Council ; to authorise the Council to construct new gasworks ; and to confer upon the Council further powers with regard to the health, improvement, and local government of the district ; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time , and ordered to be read a second time 576

Feb. 20.] Page

Rotherham, Maltby, and Laughton Railway Bill.—" For incorporating the Rotherham, Maltby, and Laughton Railway Company, and authorising them to construct railways in the West Riding of the County of York; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 576

Sale of Bread (London) Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to the Sale of Bread in the County of London; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 576

Seaham Gas Bill.—" For incorporating and conferring powers on the eaham Gas and Lighting Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 576

Shropshire and Worcestershire Electric Power Bill.—" To confer further powers upon the Shropshire and Worcestershire Electric Power Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 577

Skegness Water Bill.—" To incorporate and confer powers upon the Skegness Water Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 577

Southampton and Winchester Great Western Junction Railway (Abandonment) Bill.—" For the abandonment of the Southampton and Winchester Great Western Junction Railway," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 577

South Metropolitan Gas Bill.—" To provide for the retirement of the gas referees appointed in relation to the testing of gas supplied in the Metropolis; to empower the South Metropolitan Gas Company to purchase lands; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 577

South Oxfordshire Water and Gas Bill.—" For incorporating and conferring powers on the South Oxfordshire Water and Gas Company," presented and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 577

South Suburban Gas Bill.—" To alter the provisions of the Acts relating to the South Suburban Gas Company with respect to the illuminating power of gas supplied by them and the testing of gas; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 577

South Wales Electrical Power Distribution Company Bill.—" To transfer to and vest in the South Wales Electrical Power Distribution Company the undertaking of the Carmarthenshire Electric Power Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 577

Stockport Corporation Bill.—" To confer further powers upon the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the county borough of Stockport with reference to the construction of waterworks and otherwise for the better local government and improvement of the borough; and to make provision with reference to the borrowing powers of the Corporation; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time .. 578

Feb. 20.] Page

Sunderland and South Shields Water Bill.—" To authorise the Sunderland and South Shields Water Company to construct additional waterworks; to raise additional capital; to extend the limits of supply of the company; to confer further powers upon the company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 578

Swansea Corporation Bill.—" To make provision for the acquisition by the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Swansea of the undertaking of the Swansea Improvements and Tramways Company; and to confer further powers upon the said mayor, aldermen, and burgesses in regard to their water undertaking; and the acquisition of lands for street improvements; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time 578

Thames Conservancy Bill.—" To confer further money and other powers on the Conservators of the River Thames for the deepening, widening, and improvement of its bed and channel; to provide for the licensing of persons in charge of launches propelled by mechanical power on the River Thames; to amend the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time .. 578

Ulster and Connaught Light Railways Bill.—" To authorise the Ulster and Connaught Light Railways Company to acquire additional lands; to extend the time limited by the Newry, Keady, and Tynan Light Railway Act, 1900, and the Ulster and Connaught Light Railways Act, 1903, for the compulsory purchase of lands for the purposes thereof, and for the completion of the Railways thereby authorised; to sanction the purchase of the Bessbrook and Newry Railway; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time, and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 578

Walker and Wallsend Union Gas Bill.—" To empower the Walker and Wallsend Union Gas Company to acquire additional lands and construct additional works; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 579

Weybridge and Walton-upon-Thames Electric Supply Bill.—" To confer further powers upon the Urban Electric Supply Company, Limited, with respect to their electric lighting undertakings in the urban districts of Weybridge and Walton-on-Thames respectively; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 579

Whitechapel and Bow Railway Bill.—" To authorise the Whitechapel and Bow Railway Company to raise additional capital; and the London, Tilbury, and Southend and Metropolitan District Railway Companies to subscribe thereto; and to raise additional capital for that purpose; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 579

Woolwich Borough Council Bill.—" To authorise the mayor, aldermen, and councillors of the Metropolitan Borough of Woolwich to widen Wickham Lane, Bexley, and to acquire lands for various purposes; and to confer upon the said mayor, aldermen, and councillors further powers with respect to their electrical undertaking; and to make further provisions in regard to the health and government of the borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time .. 579

Feb. 20.] Page

Wrexham Gas Bill.—" For conferring further powers on the Wrexham Gaslight Company," presented, and read the first time ; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 580

Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Bill (IN PURSUANCE OF STANDING ORDER OF AUGUST 10TH, 1904).—Read the first and second time, and (the Bill having been reported and considered in Session 1904 of Parliament) read the third time, and passed 580

PRIVATE LEGISLATION PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.—The Chairman of Ways and Means reported, That, after conferring with the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords, for the purpose of determining in which House of Parliament the respective Bills should be first considered, under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, they had determined that the following Bills should originate in the House of Lords, viz. : —Clyde Navigation ; Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution). Report to lie upon the Table 580

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES, CONGESTED DISTRICTS, AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.—Petition from Liddesdale, for continuance ; to lie upon the Table 580

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS ACT, 1897.—Petition from Bristol, for alteration of Law ; to lie upon the Table 580

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

DIFFERENTIAL DUTIES.—Copy presented, of Return of Differential Duties imposed, raised, reduced, or repealed in the years 1823, 1824, 1825, 1826, 1842, 1843, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1853, and 1860, stating (1) the rate of duty levied, and (2) the revenue derived from, and the quantities imported of, the articles concerned in the three years preceding, and in the three years following such change [by Command] ; to lie upon the Table 580

NAVY (APPROPRIATION ACCOUNT).—Copy presented, of the Appropriation Account of the Navy for 1903–4, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon, and upon the Store Accounts of the Navy [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 43.] 581

NATIONAL DEBT (MILITARY SAVINGS BANKS).—Account presented, of the Gross Amount of all Moneys received and paid by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt on account of the Fund for Military Savings Banks, from 19th September, 1845, to the 5th January, 1905 [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 44.] 581

ARMY (APPROPRIATION ACCOUNT).—Copy presented, of the Appropriation Account for 1903–4, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon, and upon the Store Accounts of the Army [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 45.] 581

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.—Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 16th February, 1905, declaring that Edward George Gousden, Labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service certificate, through inadvertence on the part of the head of his department [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table 581

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).—Copy presented, of Draft Rules proposed to be made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department under the Prisons Acts, 1877 and 1898, with respect to the constitution of the Visiting Committee of Stafford Prison [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 581

TREATY SERIES (No. 3, 1905).—Copy presented, of Agreements between the United Kingdom and France referring to arbitration the grant of the French flag to Muscat dhows. Signed at London, 13th October, 1904, and 13th January, 1905 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 581

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).—Copies presented, of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, Nos. 3324 and 3325 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 581

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT (BRITISH EMPIRE).—Copy presented, of Statistical Abstract for the British Empire in each year from 1889 to 1903. First number [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 581

BANKRUPTCY (RULES).—Copy presented, of General Rules, dated 5th January, 1905, in pursuance of Section 127 of The Bankruptcy Act, 1883 [by Act] to lie upon the Table 582

Papers laid upon the Table by the Clerk of the House :—

1. Inquiry into Charities (County of Wilts).—Further Return relative thereto [ordered 9th August, 1901]; Mr. Griffith-Boscawen; to be printed. [No. 46.]

2. Bank of England.—Copy of all applications made by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England for advances to Government authorised by Parliament, from 5th January, 1905 [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 47] 582

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

PLANS OF NEW PROCESSIONAL ROAD INTO CHARING CROSS.—Question, Mr. Whitmore (Chelsea); Answer, Lord Balcarres 582

PROMOTION AND RETIREMENT OF ABSTRACTOR CLERKS IN THE WAR OFFICE.—Question, Sir Thomas Esmonde (Wexford, N.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 582

LANDING OF FISH ILLEGALLY TRAWLED IN THE MORAY FIRTH.—Question, Mr. Crombie (Kincardineshire); Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 583

IMPORTS OF SUGAR FROM BRAZIL.—Question, Mr. Bright (Shropshire, Oswestry); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 583

CONSTRUCTION OF H.M.S. "ORION."—Question, Mr. J. F. Hope (Sheffield, Brightside); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 584

POSTAL FACILITIES IN THE NORTH OF IRELAND.—Question, Mr. T. W. Russell (Tyrone, S.); Answer, Lord Stanley 584

Feb. 20.] Page

MEMORIAL OF BELFAST POSTAL EMPLOYEES.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Lord Stanley 584

LEARNERS IN BELFAST POST OFFICE.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Lord Stanley 585

RESTRICTIONS ON MOVEMENT OF IRISH SWINE.—Questions, Mr. Delany (Queen's County, Ossory); Answer, Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes 585

DIR AND NOWAGAI.—Question, Sir Brampton Gurdon (Norfolk, N.); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 587

THE LUCAN ESTATE.—Question, Dr. Ambrose (Mayo, W.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 587

DISTRESS IN ACHILL ISLAND.—Question, Dr. Ambrose; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 588

STRENGTH OF METROPOLITAN VOLUNTEER REGIMENTS.—Question, Sir Howard Vincent (Sheffield, Central); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 588

EMBARGO ON CANADIAN CATTLE IMPORTATION.—Question, Sir John Leng (Dundee); Answer, Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes 591

REVENUE OF TRANSVAAL, AND ORANGE RIVER COLONY.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 591

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

ULLAPOOL R. N. R. STATION.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, The Civil Lord of the Admiralty (Mr. Arthur Lee, Hampshire, Fareham) 592

BOARD OF ADMIRALTY ADMINISTRATION.—Question, Sir John Colomb (Great Yarmouth); Answer, The Secretary to the Admiralty (Mr. Pretyman, Suffolk, Woodbridge) 592

THE NEW RIFLE.—Question, Sir John Colomb; Answer, The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.) 593

AUTOMATIC FUSE SETTERS.—Question, Mr. Soames (Norfolk, S.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 593

FIFTEEN-POUNDER BREECH-LOADING GUNS.—Question, Mr. Soames; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 593

SHOOTING OF PRIVATE MAHON AT PEKIN.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 594

COST OF SOUTH AFRICAN GARRISON.—Question, Mr. Whitley (Halifax); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 595

NEW ARMY SCHEME.—Question, Mr. McCrae (Edinburgh, E.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 595

WHITE LABOUR IN WITWATERSRAND MINES.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland); Answer, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 596

Feb. 20.]

Page

CHINESE LABOUR RIOTS.—Question, Mr. Whitley; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton .. 596

BRITISH MISSIONARIES IN THE CONGO FREE STATE.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel; Answer, The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) 596

CONGO FREE STATE—CASE OF MONSIEUR VAN CALCKEN.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel; Answer, Earl Percy 597

INCOME TAX.—Question, Mr. Whitley; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) 597

INCOME-TAX COLLECTION.—Questions, Mr. Lough (Islington, W.), Sir George Bartley (Islington, N.) and Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis); Answers, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 598

TRANSVAAL WAR LOAN.—Question, Mr. McCrae; Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 600

TRANSVAAL WAR—LOAN GUARANTEE.—Questions, Mr. McCrae and Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answers, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 601

RUSSIAN DUTY ON INDIAN TEA.—Question, Mr. Eugene Wason (Clackmannan and Kinross); Answer, The President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) 601

WITHINGTON POSTMEN'S PAY.—Question, Mr. Schwann (Manchester, N.); Answer, The Postmaster-General, Lord of Stanley (Lancashire, Westhoughton) 601

IMPORTATION OF AMERICAN STORE CATTLE.—Question, Mr. Edward Mitchell (Fermanagh, N.); Answer, Mr. Ailwyn-Fellowes (Huntingdonshire, Ramsey) 602

HEAVY MOTOR CAR TRAFFIC—COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE.—Question, Mr. Cathcart Wason (Orkney and Shetland); Answer, The Secretary to the Local Government Board, Mr. Grant Lawson (Yorkshire, N.R., Thirsk) .. 602

THE GREEN PARK.—Questions, Mr. Gibson Bowles and Mr. C. R. Spencer (Northhamptonshire, Mid.); Answer, Lord Balcarres (Lancashire, Chorley) .. 603

DEER FOREST RETURN.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, The Lord Advocate (Mr. Scott Dickson, Glasgow, Bridgton) 604

MORAY FIRTH FISHERIES.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson .. 605

CONGESTED DISTRICTS (SCOTLAND) ACT.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 605

CROFTERS ACT—CULLODEN ESTATE TENANTS.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 605

MOTOR TRAFFIC REGULATIONS IN AYRSHIRE.—Question, Mr. Cathcart Wason; Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 606

SCOTTISH LORDS OF SESSION—TABLE OF PROCEDURE.—Question, Mr. Caldwell (Lanarkshire, Mid.); Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 606

Feb. 20.] Page

DUBLIN HACKNEY CAR LICENCES.—Question, Mr. Nannetti (Dublin College Green); Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) .. 606

DUBLIN CARRIAGE INSPECTOR.—Question, Mr. Nannetti; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 607

ESTATES COMMISSIONERS' REPORT.—Questions, Mr. T. W. Russell (Tyrone, S.), and Mr. Dillon (Mayo, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 607

KINGS COUNTY AND SLIGO CONSTABULARY.—Question, Mr. Lonsdale (Armagh, Mid.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 608

TINAHELY DISPENSARY OFFICER.—Question, Mr. James O'Connor (Wicklow, W.) Answer, Mr. Wyndham 608

LAND ACT RULES.—Questions, Mr. Dillon, and Mr. T. W. Russell; Answers, Mr. Wyndham 609

FUTURE TENANTS IN IRELAND.—Question, Mr. O'Dowd (Sligo, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 609

SIR ANTONY MACDONNELL.—Questions, Mr. Wm. Moore (Antrim, W.), Mr. Lonsdale, Mr. Delany (Queens County, Ossory), Mr. Joseph Devlin (Kilkenny, N.), and Mr. Chas. Craig (Antrim, S.); Answers, Mr. Wyndham .. 610

LAND PURCHASE IN COUNTY CAVAN—CASE OF OWEN MCCABE.—Question, Mr. Vincent Kennedy (Cavan, W.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 611

DRUMHEEL EVICTED FARM.—Question, Mr. Vincent Kennedy; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 612

MITCHELSTOWN SUB-COMMISSION—CASE OF MICHAEL O'NEILL.—Question, Mr. William Abraham (Cork County, N.E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 612

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) ACT, 1898.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell (Longford, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 613

DOCTOR PENTLAND OF MOHILL.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 613

IRISH LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD—PUBLIC ACCOUNTS ORDER.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 613

LAND PURCHASE IN COUNTY SLIGO.—Question, Mr. O'Dowd; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 614

BELFAST CONSTABULARY DOCTOR.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 614

THE REV. M. MACDONNELL.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 615

POOR RATE COLLECTIONS IN GALWAY.—Question, Col. Nolan (Galway, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 615

GALWAY COUNTY COUNCIL MINUTES.—Question, Col. Nolan; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 616

STRABANE RATE COLLECTOR.—Question, Mr. William Moore; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 616

IRISH INCOME TAX COLLECTION.—Questions, Mr. James O'Connor, Mr. O'Shaughnessy; Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 617

POTATO SEED GRANTS.—Question, Col. Nolan, and Mr. Dillon; Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 618

IRISH CIVIL SERVICE—CASE OF MR. PERCY LUDGATE.—Question, Mr. T. Harrington (Dublin Harbour); Answer, The Financial Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Victor Cavendish, Derbyshire, W.) 619

DUBLIN POST OFFICE—OFFICERS' HOLIDAYS.—Question, Mr. Nannetti; Answer, Lord Stanley 620

DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER BILL.—Question, Mr. James O'Connor; Answer, The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) 620

STANDING ORDERS.—Ordered, That the Select Committee on Standing Orders do consist of thirteen members. Sir John Brunner, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. John Edward Ellis, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. Halsey, Mr. Henry Hobhouse, Mr. Humphreys-Owen, Sir James Rankin, Mr. William Redmond, Colonel Stopford-Sackville, Sir Mark McTaggart Stewart, Mr. Whitmore, and Mr. Wodehouse were accordingly nominated members of the Committee.—(Mr. Halsey.) 621

SELECTION.—Mr. Blake, Mr. Sydney Buxton, Sir John Dorington, Sir William Hart Dyke, Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Fenwick, Mr. Halsey, Mr. McKenna, Sir Mark McTaggart Stewart, and Mr. Wharton were nominated members of the Committee of Selection together with the Chairman of the Select Committee on Standing Orders.—(Mr. Halsey.) ..

Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe) 621

NEW BILLS.

Foreign Trawlers Regulation Bill.—"To provide for the better prevention of fishing by Foreign Trawl Vessels within areas closed to British Trawl Vessels," presented by Mr. Black; supported by Mr. Crombie, Mr. Weir, Mr. John Wilson (Falkirk), Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Cathcart Wason, and Mr. Ainsworth; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 7th March, and to be printed. [Bill 44.] 621

Rating of Machinery Bill.—"To amend the Law relating to the Rating of hereditaments containing Machinery," presented by Mr. George Whiteley; supported by Mr. Chapman, Sir Edward Strachey, Sir William Houldsworth, Sir John Dorington, Mr. Cawley, Sir William Tomlinson, and Mr. John Rutherford; to be read a second time upon Friday next, and to be printed. [Bill 45.] 622

Tramways and Public Companies (Ireland) Act (1883) Amendment Bill.—"To amend The Tramways and Public Companies (Ireland) Act, 1883," presented by Mr. Patrick Aloysius McHugh; supported by Mr. Clancy, Mr. O'Dowd, Mr. William McKillop, and Mr. Conor O'Kelly; to be read a second time upon Friday, 7th April, and to be printed. [Bill 46.] 622

Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act (1887) Repeal Bill.—"To repeal the Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887," presented by Mr. Lundon; supported by Mr. Dillon, Mr. John Redmond, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Mr. Patrick Aloysius McHugh, and Captain Donelan; to be read a second time upon Friday, 10th March, and to be printed. [Bill 47.] .. 622

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February] "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

Mr. John Redmond (Waterford) 622
Mr. Waldron (Dublin, St. Stephen's Green) 632

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the present system of Government in Ireland is in opposition to the will of the Irish people, and gives them no voice in the management of their own affairs; that the system is consequently ineffective and extravagantly costly, does not enjoy the confidence of any section of the population, and is productive of universal discontent and unrest, and has proved to be incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the people.'"—(Mr. John Redmond.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. William Moore (Antrim, N.) 633
The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 646
Mr. Haldane (Haddingtonshire) 663
Lord Hugh Cecil (Greenwich) 670
Mr. Joseph Devlin (Kilkenny, N.) 675
Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.) 682
Mr. T. W. Russell (Tyrone, S.) 686

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [20th February] to Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the present system of Government in Ireland is in opposition to the will of the Irish people, and gives them no voice in the management of their own affairs; that the system is consequently ineffective and extravagantly costly, does not enjoy the confidence of any section of the population, and is productive of universal discontent and unrest, and has proved to be incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the people."—(Mr. John Redmond.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. T. W. Russell 688
Mr. Lonsdale (Armagh, Mid) 698
Mr. Winston Churchill (Oldham) 701
Mr. T. L. Corbett (Down, N.) 714
Mr. Hugh Law (Donegal, W.) 715
Sir James Haslett (Belfast, N.) 716

And, it being Midnight, the Debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

PAUPERISM (ENGLAND AND WALES) (HALF-YEARLY STATEMENTS).—Copy ordered, "of Statement of the number of Paupers relieved on the 1st day of January, 1905, and similar Statement for the 1st day of July, 1905 (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 84, Session 1904)."—(Mr. Grant Lawson.) 720

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS: TUESDAY, 21ST FEBRUARY, 1905.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with:—Barry Railway [H.L.]; Bridgewater Canals [H.L.]; Hastings Tramways [H.L.]; Hessle Gas [H.L.]; Leeds and Liverpool Canal [H.L.]; Mortgage Insurance Corporation [H.L.]; Metropolitan District Railway [H.L.]. The same were ordered to lie on the Table 721

Abertillery Urban District Water Bill [H.L.]; Administrative County of London and District Electric Power Company Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª, and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 721

Alexandra Park and Palace Bill [H.L.].—Read 2ª, and committed 721

Feb. 21.]

Page

Bangor (County Down) Water and Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Blackpool Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Clacton Improvement Bill [H.L.]; East London and Lower Thames Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Humber Conservancy Bill [H.L.]; Hythe Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Littlehampton Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Matlock Bath Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Nine Mile Point Railway Bill [H.L.]; Nottingham Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Preston Corporation (Ribble Navigation) Bill [H.L.]; Sandgate Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Southport, Birkdale, and West Lancashire Water Board Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª, and committed. The Commitees to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 721

Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation) Bill [H.L.]; Tees Valley Water Board Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª, and committed 721

Torpoint Urban District Water Bill [H.L.].—Read 2ª, and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 721

Tralee Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Weaver Navigation Bill [H.L.].—Read 2ª, and committed 722

Whitby Urban District Council Bill [H.L.] Read 2ª, and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 722

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

Treaty Series, No. 4 (1905).—Convention between the United Kingdom and Mexico respecting postal rates upon letters passing between New Zealand and Mexico; signed at Mexico, 1st February, 1904. (Ratifications exchanged at Mexico, 12th January, 1905.) 722

Wages and Effects of Deceased Seamen.—Account of the sums received and paid in respect of the wages and effects of deceased seamen in the year ended 31st March, 1904.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table 722

Prisons (England and Wales) (Visiting Committees)..—Rules proposed to be made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department with respect to the constitution of the Visiting Committee of Borstal Prison 722

Polling District (County of Southampton.—Order made by the county council of the county of Southampton altering the Sarisbury polling district in the Fareham Parliamentary Division 722

Factory and Workshop (Special Exception—Night Work).—Order, dated 18th February, 1905, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 54 (4) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception in that section to male young persons of the age of sixteen years and upwards employed in the process of continuous wire-drawing carried on in non-textile factories 722

Committals (Ireland.—Returns from the Clerks of the Crown and Peace of the number of persons committed for trial in 1904 723

Railways Companies Powers Act, 1864.—Certificate of the Board of Trade authorising the Corringham Light Railway Company to raise additional capital 723

Feb. 21.] Page

SEAMEN'S SAVINGS BANKS (MONEY ORDERS AND TRANSMISSION OF WAGES).—Account of all deposits received and repaid by the Board of Trade on account of Seamen's Savings Banks, under the authority of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, during the year ended 20th November, 1903, and of the interest thereon; statement showing the number and amount of seamen's money orders issued and paid at ports in the United Kingdom and at ports abroad from 1855 to 31st March, 1904 ; also, statement showing the receipts and payments in connection with the transmission of seamen's wages, home and foreign, from 1878 to 31st March, 1904. 723

RAMSGATE HARBOUR.

Statement of the receipts and payments made by the Board of Trade for the year ended 31st March, 1904 ; together with an account of the receipt and issue of stores.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 723

NEW BILLS.

Criminal Cases (Reservation of Points of Law) Bill [H.L.].—A Bill to amend the Crown Cases Act, 1848. Was presented by the Lord Chancellor ; read 1ª ; and to be printed. [No. 11]. 723

Street Betting Bill [H.L.].—A Bill for the suppression of betting in streets and other public places. Was presented by the Lord Davey ; read 1ª ; to be printed ; and to be read 2ª on Tuesday next. [No. 12.] 723

Bishopric of Bristol Bill [H.L.].—Order of the day for the Second Reading read.

The Lord Bishop of Bristol 724

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2a ." (The Lord Bishop of Bristol.)

The Lord Archbishop of Canterbury 724

On Question, Bill read 2a, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

Seamen's and Soldiers' False Character Bill [H.L.].—Order of the day for the Second Reading read.

The Under-Secretary of State for War (The Earl of Donoughmore) .. 724

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª."—(The Earl of Donoughmore.)

On Question, Bill read 2ª, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

ARMY REORGANISATION.

The Duke of Bedford 725
Viscount Hardinge 737
Lord Raglan 739
The Under-Secretary of State for War (The Earl of Donoughmore) .. 742
Lord Tweedmouth 749
Lord Burghclere 751
The First Lord of the Admiralty (The Earl of Selborne) 751

Service of Militiamen Bill [H.L.].—A Bill to amend the law relating to the area of service of the Regular Militia when embodied. Was presented by the Viscount Hutchinson (E. Donoughmore); read 1ª; and to be printed. (No. 13.) 752

House adjourned at five minutes past Six o'clock, to Thursday next, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: TUESDAY, 21ST FEBRUARY, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Liverpool Corporation Bill.—Petition for additional Provision; referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 752

Local Government Provisional Orders (No 1.) Bill.—" To confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to Ashton-in-Makerfield, Burslem, Newbury, Southport, and Ulverston," presented by Mr. Grant Lawson; supported by Mr. Walter Long; read the first time; and and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, and to be printed. [Bill 48.] 752

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES, CONGESTED DISTRICTS, AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.—Petitions for continuance; from Forres; and Morayshire; to lie upon the Table 752

JUVENILE SMOKING.—Eight Petitions from Edinburgh, for legislation; to lie upon the Table 752

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Sunday Bill.—Petition from Melksham, in favour; to lie upon the Table 752

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS ACT, 1897.—Petition from Brighton, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table 752

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND) (OFFICIALS).—Return [presented 14th February] to be printed. [No. 48.] 753

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).—Paper [presented 20th February] to be printed. [No. 49.] 753

COMMITTALS (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of Returns from the Clerks of the Crown and Peace of the number of persons committed for trial in 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 753

PARLIAMENTARY CONSTITUENCIES (ELECTORS, ETC.) (UNITED KINGDOM).—Return presented, relative thereto [Address 15th February; Sir Charles Dilke]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 50.] 753

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF SOUTHAMPTON).—Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of the County of Southampton altering Sarisbury Polling District in the Fareham Parliamentary Division [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 753

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).—Copy presented, of Draft Rules proposed to be made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department under the Prisons Acts, 1877 and 1898, with respect to the constitution of the Visiting Committee of Borstal Prison [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 753

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (SPECIAL EXCEPTION—NIGHTWORK).—Copy presented, of Order, dated 18th February, 1905, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 54 (4) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception in that section to male young persons of the age of sixteen years and upwards employed in the process of continuous wire drawing carried on in non-textile factories [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 753

NAVY ESTIMATES, 1905–6.—Estimates presented, for the year 1905–6, with Explanation of Differences [by Command]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 51.] 753

NAVY (STATEMENT EXPLANATORY OF ESTIMATES).—Copy presented, of Statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty explanatory of the Navy Estimates, 1905–6 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 754

WAGES AND EFFECTS OF DECEASED SEAMEN.—Account presented, of the Sums received and paid in respect of the Wages and Effects of Deceased Seamen in the year ended 31st March, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 754

SEAMEN'S SAVINGS BANKS (MONEY ORDERS AND TRANSMISSION OF WAGES).—Accounts presented, of all Deposits received and repaid during the year ended 20th November, 1903, and Statement as to Money Orders issued and paid from 1855 to 31st March, 1904, and of Receipts and Payments in connection with the Transmission of Seamen's Wages from 1878 to 31st March, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. (No. 52) 754

RAMSGATE HARBOUR.—Copy presented, of Statement of the Receipts and Payments for the year ended 31st March, 1904, together with an Account of the Receipt and Issue of Stores [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 53.] 754

Feb. 21.] Page

RAILWAYS (CERTIFICATES) (CORRINGHAM LIGHT RAILWAY COMPANY).—Copy presented, of Draft Certificate of the Board of Trade authorising the Corringham Light Railway Company to raise additional Capital [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 754

TREATY SERIES (No. 4, 1905).—Copy presented, of Convention between the United Kingdom and Mexico respecting Postal Rates upon Letters passing between New Zealand and Mexico. Signed at Mexico, 1st February, 1904. Ratifications exchanged at Mexico, 12th January, 1905 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 754

PUBLIC REVENUE (INTERCEPTION).—Return ordered, " of the amounts of all Public Revenue derived from Taxes levied by Parliament, and from any other sources, which are not paid into His Majesty's Exchequer, for the years 1873–4, 1883–4, 1893–4, and 1903–4, respectively, with the totals in each case."—(Mr. Gibson Bowles.) 755

NATIONAL DEBT.—Return ordered, " showing the amounts of (1) the Funded Debt; (2) the Unfunded Debt; (3) the estimated capital value of Terminable Annuities on the 31st day of March, 1874, 1884, 1894, and 1904, respectively, with the totals for each year; (4) the estimated liability in respect of sums borrowed under the head of other capital liabilities; (5) the total amount on the same dates respectively, of the Contingent or Nominal Liabilities of the State; and (6) the total amount outstanding on the same dates respectively in respect of Loans guaranteed by the British Government."—(Mr. Gibson Bowles.) 755

LOCAL AUTHORITIES (LIABILITIES).—Address for " Return showing the total amount of the outstanding Balances of the Loans of Local Authorities in England and Wales, Scotland, and Ireland, respectively, at the close of the financial years 1873–4, 1883–4, 1893–4, and 1903–4, with the totals for the three countries on those dates."—(Mr. Gibson Bowles.) 755

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.—Return ordered, " showing for the Army, Navy, Civil Service, and Revenue Departments, respectively, the total amount of Supplementary Estimates for the years 1873–4, 1883–4, 1893–4, and 1903–4, respectively, with the totals for each year."—(Mr. Gibson Bowles.) 755

Jurors' Expenses (Ireland) Bill.—" To provide for the Payment of Expenses to Jurors in assize and county courts in Ireland "; presented by Mr. O'Dowd; supported by Mr. McHugh, Mr. Conor O'Kelly, Mr. William McKillop, and Mr. Cullinan; to be read a second time upon Friday, 7th April, and to be printed. [Bill 49.] 756

Access to Mountains (Scotland) Bill.—" To secure to the public the right of access to Mountains and Moorlands in Scotland "; presented by Mr. Bryce; supported by Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Thomas Shaw, Mr. Black, Colonel Denny, Mr. John Sinclair, and Mr. John Dewar; to be read a second time upon Friday, 31st March, and to be printed. [Bill 50.] 756

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

MERITORIOUS SERVICE REWARDS FOR PETTY OFFICERS IN THE ROYAL NAVY.—Question, Mr. Reginald Lucas (Portsmouth); Answer, Mr. Pretyman .. 756

PREFERENTIAL RATES FOR FOREIGN PRODUCE.—Question, Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 75

Feb. 21.]

Page

LIVE STOCK TRANSIT.—Question, Mr. Field ; Answer, Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes .. 757

EXPENDITURE IN MILITARY AND NAVAL WORKS IN WEST INDIES.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.) ; Answer, Mr. Victor Cavendish 758

THE LICENSING ACT.—Question, Mr. Corbett (Glasgow, Tradeston) ; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 759

PUBLICATION OF ABSTRACT OF THE MOWART COMMITTEE REPORT.—Question, Mr. Buchanan ; Answer, Mr. Bromley Davenport 759

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION IN CUTCH.—Question, Sir John Leng (Dundee) ; Answer, Mr. Brodrick 760

GRIEVANCES OF SEA POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES ON THE ADEN-BOMBAY SERVICE.—Question, Mr. Samuel Smith (Flintshire) ; Answer, Mr. Brodrick 761

NEWMAN ESTATE, COUNTY CORK.—Question, Mr. Flynn (Cork, N.) ; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 761

IRISH LIGHTS BOARD.—Question, Mr. Field ; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 762

STAFF OF IRISH DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION.—Question, Captain Donelan (Cork, E.) ; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 763

IRELAND—PUBLIC BODIES' ORDER, 1904.—Question, Captain Donelan ; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 763

CHANGES IN ARMY UNIFORM.—Question, Mr. Charles Hobhouse (Bristol, E.) ; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 764

REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE OF TRANSVAAL AND INTER-COLONIAL COUNCIL.—Question, Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) ; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 767

AMOUNT PAID FOR PURCHASE OF SOUTH AFRICAN RAILWAYS.—Question, Mr. Buchanan ; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 769

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

ABSOLETE WAR VESSELS.—Questions, Mr. Whitley (Halifax), Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis), and Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.) ; Answer, The Secretary of the Admiralty (Mr. Pretyman, Suffolk, Woodbridge) 769

MILITARY CONVICTS FROM THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.—Question, Mr. Patrick O'Brien (Kilkenny) ; Answer, The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.) 770

CHINESE LABOUR IN SOUTH AFRICA.—Question, Mr. Bayley (Derbyshire, Chesterfield) ; Answer, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 771

TRANSVAAL COMMISSIONER OF MINES.—Question, Dr. Macnamara (Camberwell, N.) ; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 771

LABOUR STATISTICS FOR THE TRANSVAAL.—Question, Dr. Macnamara ; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 772

Feb. 21.] Page

Proposed Changes in the Transvaal Government.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 772

Cancer in India.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, The Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) 772

Treatment of Egyptian Pilgrims at Suez.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, The Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) 773

Income Tax Collection.—Question, Mr. McCrae (Edinburgh, E.); Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) 773

Cost of Somaliland Campaign.—Question, Mr. Bayley; Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 774

Income Tax Exemption.—Question, Mr. Hayden (Roscommon, S.); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 774

Customs Boatmens' Grievances.—Question, Major Evans Gordon (Tower Hamlets, Stepney); Answer, The Financial Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Victor Cavendish, Derbyshire, W.) 775

Physical Deterioration—Children and Tobacco.—Question, Dr. Macnamara; Answer, The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers Douglas, Kent, St. Augustines) 775

Physical Deterioration Committee's Report.—Question, Dr. Macnamara; Answer, The Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education (Sir William Anson, Oxford University) 776

Underfed School Children.—Question, Dr. Macnamara; Answer, Sir William Anson 776

Electrification of Railways—Board of Trade Inspection.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, The President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) 776

Penalties for Illegal Trawling.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, The Lord-Advocate (Mr. Scott Dickson, Glasgow, Bridgton) 777

Orpen Estate, Cork.—Question, Mr. Flynn (Cork, N.); Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 777

Cork District Lunatic Asylum.—Questions, Mr. Flynn and Mr. Flavin (Kerry, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 778

Case of Daniel M'Goohan.—Question, Mr. William McKillop (Sligo, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 779

Drummeel Bog, Turbary.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell (Longford, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 779

Leitrim Magistracy—Mr. Youell's Appointment.—Question, Mr. P. A. McHugh (Leitrim, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 779

Ecclesiastical Disorders' Commission.—Question, Mr. Austin Taylor (Liverpool, E. Toxteth); Answer, The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) .. ..

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE (KING'S SPEECH, MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the proceedings on the Address in answer to His Majesty's Speech shall, until concluded, have precedence of all other Orders of the Day and of Notices of Motions at all Sittings for which they are set down."—(Mr. A. J. Balfour.)

Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis) 781
The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) 782

Question put.

The House divided :—Ayes, 203 ; Noes, 145. (Division List No. 5.)

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [20th February] to Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

> "Most Gracious Sovereign,
>
> We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

> "At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the present system of Government in Ireland is in opposition to the will of the Irish people, and gives them no voice in the management of their own affairs ; that the system is consequently ineffective and extravagantly costly, does not enjoy the confidence of any section of the population, and is productive of universal discontent and unrest, and has proved to be incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the people.' "—(Mr. John Redmond.)

Questions again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Sir James Haslett (Belfast, N.) 785
Mr. Dillon (Mayo, E.) 788
Colonel Kenyon-Slaney (Shropshire, Newport) 799
Mr. Charles Craig (Antrim, S.) 801
Mr. T. M. Healy (Louth, N.) 808
Mr. Gordon (Londonderry, S.) 817
Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.) 823
Mr. Cohen (Islington, E.) 826
Mr. Harwood (Bolton) 828
Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick) 831

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [February 20th] to Main Question [February 14th], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to your Majesty for the gracious Speech which your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the present system of Government in Ireland is in opposition to the will of the Irish people, and gives them no voice in the management of their own affairs; that the system is consequently ineffective and extravagantly costly, does not enjoy the confidence of any section of the population, and is productive of universal discontent and unrest, and has proved to be incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the people.' "—(Mr. John Redmond.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added.

Mr. Purvis (Peterborough) 835
Mr. Mooney (Dublin County, S.) 837
Mr. Herbert Robertson (Hackney, S.) 841
Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman (Stirling Burghs) 846
The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) 853
Mr. Blake (Longford, S.) 866

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 236; Noes, 286. (Division List No. 6.)

Main Question again proposed.

And, it being after Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

Adjourned at Twelve minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: WEDNESDAY, 22ND FEBRUARY, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES, CONGESTED DISTRICTS, AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.—Petition from Dumbartonshire, for continuance; to lie upon the Table 881

SUGAR TAX.—Petitions for repeal; from Ashton-under-Lyne (two); and Nelson; to lie upon the Table 881

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).—Paper [presented 21st February]; to be printed. [No. 54.] 881

WAGES AND EFFECTS OF DECEASED SEAMEN.—Account [presented 21st February]; to be printed. [No. 55.] 881

JUDICIAL STATISTICS (ENGLAND AND WALES).—Copy presented, of Judicial Statistics for England and Wales, 1903, Part II. (Civil Judicial Statistics), edited by Sir John MacDonnell, C.B., LL.D., Master of the Supreme Court [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 881

CIVIL SERVICES (SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1904–5).—Estimate presented, of the Further Sums required to be voted for the Service of the year ending 31st March, 1905 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 56.] 881

COLONIES (GENERAL).—Copy presented, of Further Papers relating to the proposed adoption of a Metric System of Weights and Measures for use within the Empire [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 881

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND).—Copy presented, of a General Order of the Local Government Board for Ireland entitled the Union Accounts Order, 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 882

HOUSE OF COMMONS (VENTILATION).—Copy presented, of Report of an Investigation of the Ventilation of the Debating Chamber of the House of Commons, and Recommendations for its Improvement, by Dr. M. H. Gordon [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 882

CONTRACTS OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES (WAGES).—Address for "Return showing—(1) for England and Wales, as regards each County Council, Town Council, Metropolitan Borough Council, Urban and Rural District Council, and Board of Guardians; (2) for Scotland, as regards each County Council, Town Council, Parish Council, and District Committee; and (3) for Ireland, as regards each County Council, Town Council, Urban District Council (not being a Town Council), Rural District Council, and Board of Guardians; whether the Contracts entered into by the Authority for the execution of works specify any conditions as to the Wages to be paid by the Contractor, or other conditions with regard to the persons employed by him; and, if so, what are the conditions so specified."—(Sir Charles Dilke.) 882

Feb. 22.] Page

NAVY (VESSELS STRUCK OFF EFFECTIVE LIST).—Return ordered, "of the Vessels struck off the list of Effective Ships of War, showing the name, date of completion, cost of hull, machinery, and armament, cost of repairs during the last ten years, date and cost of the last substantial repair with a view to commission, and the aggregate complement of officers and men."—(Mr. Edmund Robertson.) 882

NAVY (CRUISERS NOT STRUCK OFF EFFECTIVE LIST).—Return ordered, "of Protected and Unprotected Cruisers included in the Return presented to Parliament in 1904 (No. 136) which have not been struck off the list of Effective Ships, showing date of completion, cost, and aggregate complement of officers and men."—(Mr. Edmund Robertson.) 882

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

VENTILATION OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Question, Mr. Wylie (Dumbartonshire); Answer, Lord Balcarres 883

MAIL DELAYS AT PORTREE.—Question, Mr. John Dewar (Inverness); Answer, Lord Stanley 883

POST OFFICE AND POSTAL TELEGRAPH CLERKS' ASSOCIATION.—Question, Mr. Bell (Derby); Answer, Lord Stanley 884

PAY OF EXTRA DUTY IN EXCISE AND INLAND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS.—Question, Mr. Joseph Devlin (Kilkenny, N.); Answer, Mr. Victor Cavendish .. 884

LOCAL AUTHORITIES' ACCOUNTS IN IRELAND.—Questions, Mr. Joseph Devlin and Mr. William McKillop (Sligo, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 885

QUALIFICATIONS OF MANUAL INSTRUCTRESSES AND OTHERS IN NEEDLEWORK.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 887

DIRECTRESS OF NEEDLEWORK.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 887

VOLUNTEER MOUNTED INFANTRY.—Question, Sir Howard Vincent (Sheffield, Central); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 887

PAY OF THE ARMY.—Question, Sir Howard Vincent; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 888

MILITIA OFFICERS.—Question, Mr. Reginald Lucas (Portsmouth); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 889

FEDERATED MALAY STATES.—Question, Mr. Spear (Devonshire, Tavistock); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 889

PROTECTION OF TRAWLERS ON THE DOGGER BANK.—Question, Sir Seymour King (Hull, Central); Answer, Mr. A. J. Balfour 890

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

ADMIRALTY YACHT "ENCHANTRESS."—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis); Answer, The Secretary to the Admiralty (Mr. Pretyman, Suffolk, Woodbridge) 890

INDIAN CAVALRY—THE PATTERSON EQUIPMENT.—Question, Sir Carne Rasch (Essex, Chelmsford); Answer, The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.)

Feb. 22.] Page

THE TRANSVAAL LOAN.—Questions, Mr. McCrae (Edinburgh, E.), Sir Albert Rollit (Islington, S.), Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar), Mr. Gibson Bowles, Mr. Bayley (Derbyshire, Chesterfield); Answer, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick, and Leamington) .. 891

SOUTH AFRICAN INTER-COLONIAL COUNCIL—RAILWAY GOVERNMENT.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.), Mr. Whitley (Halifax); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 892

ADEN FRONTIER FORCE.—Question, Sir Carne Rasch, Mr. Charles Hobhouse (Bristol, E.); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 893

MECCA PILGRIMS.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) .. 893

INCOME-TAX APPEALS.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell (Longford, N.); Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) 894

VOLUNTEER NOTICES OUTSIDE COUNTRY POST OFFICES.—Question, Mr. Charles Allen (Gloucestershire, Stroud); Answer, The Postmaster-General (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton) 895

TELEGRAPHIC APPOINTMENTS.—Question, Captain Norton (Newington, W.); Answer, Lord Stanley 895

LONDON UNEMPLOYED RELIEF FUND.—Question, Mr. Sydney Buxton; Answer, The President of the Local Government Board (Mr. Walter Long, Bristol, S.) 896

CRIMINAL ALIENS IN THE UNITED STATES.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, W.R., Cleveland); Answer, The President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) 896

TANK ENGINES ON PASSENGER TRAINS.—Question, Mr. Bell (Derby); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 897

EXCLUSION OF CANADIAN CATTLE FROM THE UNITED KINGDOM.—Question, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Kilbride (Kildare, S.); Answer, Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes .. 898

THE GREEN PARK.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles, Mr. Sydney Buxton; Answer, Lord Balcarres (Lancashire, Chorley) 899

TEACHING OF DOMESTIC ECONOMY IN SCHOOLS.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, The Lord-Advocate (Mr. Scott Dickson, Glasgow, Bridgton).. 900

IRISH EVICTED TENANTS.—Question, Mr. Dillon (Mayo, E.); Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 900

GALBRAITH ESTATE, NORTH LONGFORD.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 901

LONGFORD EVICTED TENANTS.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 901

KINGSTON ESTATE, MITCHELSTOWN.—Question, Mr. William Abraham (Cork County, N.E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 901

Feb. 22.] Page

LIMERICK RURAL POSTMAN'S DISMISSAL.—Question, Mr. Lundon (Limerick, E.); Answer, Lord Stanley 902

IRISH NATIONAL SCHOOL PLANS.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, The Financial Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Victor Cavendish, Derbyshire, W.) 903

SIR ANTONY MACDONNELL.—Questions, Mr. Lonsdale (Armagh, Mid.), Mr. Edmund Robertson, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. Lonsdale, Mr. John Redmond (Waterford), Mr. Whitley, Mr. Dalziel, Mr. Blake, Mr. T. W. Russell (Tyrone, S.); Answers, The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.), and Mr. Wyndham .. 903

ALLEGED SHOOTING OF WORKMEN'S LEADERS AT WARSAW.—Question, Mr. Keir Hardie (Merthyr Tydvil); Answer, Mr. A. J. Balfour 908

UNDERFED SCHOOL CHILDREN.—Questions, Mr. Keir Hardie, Mr. Lough (Islington, W.), Dr. Macnamara (Camberwell, N.); Answers, Mr. A. J. Balfour .. 908

ADJOURNMENT.—Mr. JOHN REDMOND, Member for Waterford, rose in his place, and asked leave to move the Adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, viz., "The present conditions upon which Sir Antony MacDonnell holds the office of Under Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland"; but the pleasure of the House not having been signified, Mr. Speaker called on those Members who supported the Motion to rise in their places, and not less than forty Members having accordingly risen:—

The Motion stood over, under Standing Order No. 10, until the Evening Sitting this day 910

NEW BILLS.

Small Dwellings (Acquisition) Bill.—"To amend the provisions of Th Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899," presented by Sir Thomas Wrightson; supported by Mr. Claude Hay, Mr. Graham, Mr. Peel, Sir Alfred Hickman, Captain Jessel, Mr. Moon, Mr. Pike Pease, Mr. Jesse Collings, and Mr. Griffith-Boscawen; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 5th April, and to be printed. [Bill 51.] 910

Purchase of Land (England and Wales) Bill.—"To provide facilities for the sale of Land to occupying tenants and others in England and Wales," presented by Mr. Jesse Collings; supported by Sir John Dorington, Mr. Spear, Sir John Kennaway, Mr. Herbert Roberts, Sir Lewis Molesworth, Colonel Kenyon-Slaney, Mr. William Mitchell, and Colonel Pryce-Jones; to be read a second time upon Friday, 10th March, and to be printed. [Bill 52.] 911

Chartered Societies Bill.—"To provide for the further protection of Chartered Societies," presented by Sir John Rolleston; supported by Sir Francis Evans, Mr. Alban Gibbs, Mr. Fletcher Moulton, Mr. Charles Seely, and Sir James Woodhouse; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 22nd March, and to be printed. [Bill 53.] 911

Salmon Fisheries (Ireland) Acts Amendment Bill.—"To amend the Salmon Fisheries (Ireland) Acts," presented by Sir Henry Seton-Karr; supported by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Sir Robert Penrose-Fitzgerald, Mr. Grenfell, Captain Bagot, and Colonel Nolan; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 4th April, and to be printed. [Bill 54.] 911

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February]. "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

Captain Norton (Newington, W.) 912
Major Seely (Isle of Wight) 919

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly to represent to Your Majesty that the continuous and continuing changes in the War Office are destructive of the best interests of Your Majesty's Army, have gravely disordered the system upon which the regular forces at Home and Abroad are raised and trained, have discouraged the Militia and Volunteers, and disclose negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, more particularly as to the armament of the Artillery, whereby, in spite of the increased cost of the Army, its efficiency for the defence of the Empire has been diminished.'"—(Captain Norton).

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

Sir Howard Vincent (Sheffield, Central) 924
Mr. McCrae (Edinburgh, E.) 931
Mr. Wylie (Dumbartonshire) 937
Sir John Kennaway (Devonshire, Honiton) 943
Mr. Frederick Wilson (Norfolk, Mid.) 944
Major Evans Gordon (Tower Hamlets, Stepney) 945
Sir Walter Foster (Derbyshire, Ilkeston) 948
Sir Harry Seton-Karr (St. Helens) 953
Sir Carne Rasch (Essex, Chelmsford) 959
Mr. Courtenay Warner 961

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS.—The Clerk at the Table informed the House of the unavoidable absence of the Chairman of Ways and Means .. 964

ADJOURNMENT (UNDER STANDING ORDER NO. 10).—

POSITION OF SIR ANTONY MACDONNELL.

Mr. John Redmond (Waterford) 964
The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 978
Mr. John Morley (Montrose Burghs) 985

Feb. 23.] Page

The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) 991
Mr. William Moore (Antrim, N.) 996
Mr. Asquith (Fifeshire, E.) 998
Mr. T. P. O'Connor (Liverpool, Scotland) 1004

Question put.

The House divided :—Ayes, 223 ; Noes, 265. (Division List No. 7.)

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Adjourned debate on Amendment [22nd February] to Main Question [14th February] further adjourned till to-morrow.

NEW BILL.

HOUSING OF THE WORKING CLASSES ACTS AMENDMENT.—Bill to amend the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, and otherwise to facilitate the building of Houses for the Working Classes in rural districts, ordered to be brought in by Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Channing, Mr. Stevenson, Mr. Price, Mr. Broadhurst, Mr. Frederick Wilson, Mr. Herbert Samuel, and Mr. Soames.

Housing of the Working Classes Acts Amendment Bill.—"To amend the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, and otherwise to facilitate the building of Houses for the Working Classes in rural districts," presented accordingly, and read the first time ; to be read a second time upon Friday, April 14th, and to be printed. [Bill 55.] 1015

Adjourned at four minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS: THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23RD, 1905.

ADDRESS.—The King's Answer to the Address of Tuesday, the 14th instant, reported ; and Address and Answer to be printed and published 1017

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with :—Cardiff Railway [H.L.] ; Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation [H.L.] ; City of London Electric Lighting Company [H.L.] ; Cordoba and Rosario Railway [H.L.] ; East Cowes Gas [H.L.] ; Entre Rios Railways [H.L.] ; Gosport and Fareham Tramways [H.L.] ; Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment) [H.L.] ; Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District) [H.L.] ; Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers) [H.L.] ; North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply [H.L.] ; Truro Water [H.L.] ; West Cumberland Electric Tramways (Extension of Time) [H.L.] ; Workington Harbour and Dock [H.L.].

And also the Certificate that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have been complied with :—Clyde Navigation.

The same were ordered to lie on the Table 1017

Feb. 23.] Page

Clacton-on-Sea Commissioners Bill [H.L.]—Read 2^a, and committed: The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 1017

Hastings Harbour Bill [H.L.].—Read 2^a, and committed 1017

Mansfield Corporation Bill [H.L.].—Read 2^a, and committed: The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 1017

Municipal Corporations (Merthyr Tydfil Scheme Confirmation) Bill [H.L.].—Referred to the Examiners 1017

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

NAVY ESTIMATES.—Estimate for the year 1905–1906; with explanation of differences;

Statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty explanatory of the Navy Estimates, 1905–1906 1018

HOUSE OF COMMONS (VENTILATION).—Report and recommendations by Dr. M. H. Gordon 1018

JUDICIAL STATISTICS, ENGLAND AND WALES, 1903 (PART II. CIVIL JUDICIAL STATISTICS).—Statistics relating to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the House of Lords, the Supreme Court of Judicature, County Courts and other Civil Courts, edited by Sir John MacDonnell, C.B., LL.D., a Master of the Supreme Court 1018

COLONIES (GENERAL).—Further Papers relating to the proposed adoption of a metric system of weights and measures for use within the Empire (in continuation of [Cd. 1940], February, 1904).

Presented (by Command) and ordered to lie on the Table 1018

MOTOR CAR ACTS, 1896 AND 1903.—General Order made by the Local Government Board for Ireland, entitled "The Heavy Motor Car (Ireland) Order, 1905." 1018

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND) GENERAL ORDERS.—General Order entitled "The Union Accounts Order, 1905" 1018

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

Service of Militiamen Bill [H.L.]

The Earl of Wemyss 1018

Seamen's and Soldiers' False Characters Bill [H.L.].—House in Committee (according to Order).

Bill passed through Committee and reported without Amendment to the House.

The Under-Secretary of State for War (The Earl of Donoughmore) .. 1019

On Question, Standing Committee negatived, and Bill to be read 3^a to-morrow.

THE NEW SERVICE RIFLE.

Lord Tweedmouth 1019

Moved, That, in the opinion of this House, whatever convenience a shortened rifle may afford to mounted troops, it is inexpedient that the whole of His Majesty's forces should be armed with the recently approved short rifle. (Lord Tweedmouth.)

Earl Roberts 1034
The Earl of Erroll 1043
The Earl of Lonsdale 1045
The Under-Secretary of State for War (The Earl of Donoughmore) .. 1046
The Earl of Wemyss 1059
Earl Spencer 1061
The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (The Marquess of Lansdowne) 1066
Lord Tweedmouth 1069

On Question, their Lordships divided :—Contents, 22 ; Not-Contents, 55.

House adjourned at half-past Seven o'clock, till To-morrow, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: THURSDAY, 23RD FEBRUARY, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

SUBSTITUTED BILLS [LORDS] (STANDING ORDERS COMPLIED WITH).—MR. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in respect of the following Bill introduced pursuant to the provisions of The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, and which the Chairman of Ways and Means had directed to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with, viz.—
Clyde Navigation [Lords] 1071

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES, CONGESTED DISTRICTS, AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.—Petition from Kincardineshire, for continuance ; to lie upon the Table 1071

JUVENILE SMOKING.—Petition from Brighton, for legislation ; to lie upon the Table 1072

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

ARMY (ADDITIONAL ESTIMATE, 1904–5).—Estimate presented, of the amount required during the year ending 31st March, 1905, to meet expenditure on the military operations in Somaliland, for which no provision was made in the original Army Estimates for the year ; also to authorise the appropriation of certain receipts, in excess of those included in the original Army Estimates for the year, to defray expenditure in excess of the sums therein provided for Army services other than the Somaliland operations [by Command] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 57] 1072

Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, and Motor Car Act, 1903.—Copy presented, of General Order made by the Local Government Board for Ireland, entitled The Heavy Motor Car (Ireland) Order, 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table 1072

Railway, etc., Bills.—Copy ordered "of Report by the Board of Trade upon all the Bills and Provisional Orders of Session 1905, relating to Railways, Canals, Tramways, Harbours, and Tidal Waters, and the supply of Electricity, Gas, and Water."—(Mr. Gerald Balfour.) 1072

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Separation of Judicial, and Executive Functions in India.—Question, Mr. Herbert Roberts (Denbighshire, W.); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1073

Reduction of Establishments of West Indian Colonies.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1073

Vivisection of Cats.—Question, Mr. Tomkinson (Cheshire, Crewe), Sir Frederick Banbury (Camberwell, Peckham); Answers, Mr. Akers-Douglas 1073

Newcastle as Examination Centre for Naval Cadets.—Question, Sir Walter Plummer (Newcastle-on-Tyne); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 1075

Education—Payment of Grants.—Question, Mr. Soares (Devonshire, Barnstaple); Answer, Sir William Anson 1075

Building of By-Laws in Country Districts.—Question, Mr. Henry Hobhouse (Somersetshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 1076

Railway Construction in the Neighbourhood of the Persian Gulf.—Question, Mr. Reginald Lucas (Portsmouth); Answer, Earl Percy .. 1076

Income-Tax.—Question, Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1077

Suggested Import Duty on Diamonds and Gold from South Africa.—Question, Mr. Field; Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1077

Salt Tax in India.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1077

Indian Irrigation.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1078

Irish Education.—Question, Mr. Dillon (Mayo, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1078

Publication of Report of Irish Poor Law Reform Commission.—Questions, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.) and Captain Donelan (Cork, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1079

Assimilation of Taxation Arrangements in Great Britain and Ireland.—Question, Mr. Field; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1079

Distribution of Grazing Land on the Isadore Bourke Estate.—Question, Mr. John O'Donnell (Mayo, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1079

Feb. 23.] Page

GRAZING LANDS ON THE NOLAN-FARRELL ESTATE.—Question, Mr. John O'Donnell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1080

APPOINTMENT OF A MATERNITY NURSE FOR BALLYHAUNIS DISPENSARY DISTRICT.—Question, Mr. John O'Donnell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1081

ARMY RECRUITING.—Question, Mr. Marks (Kent, Thanet); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1082

OFFICERS TRANSFERRED TO THE MILITIA-MESS SUBSCRIPTIONS.—Question, Dr. Thompson (Monaghan, N.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1083

SENTENCES ON CHINESE LABOURERS.—Question, Mr. Herbert Samuel (Yorkshire, Cleveland); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1084

DUTY ON PRICE LISTS IN AUSTRALIA.—Question, Mr. Runciman (Dewsbury); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1085

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

NAVAL TRAINING SHIPS.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.); Answer, The Secretary of the Admiralty (Mr. Pretyman, Suffolk, Woodbridge) .. 1085

ROSYTH—EXPENDITURE ON NAVAL STATION.—Question, Mr. Bright (Shropshire, Oswestry) Mr. Edmund Robertson (Dundee) Mr. Eugene Wason (Clackmannan and Kinross); Answer, The Civil Lord of the Admiralty (Mr. Arthur Lee, Hampshire, Fareham) 1086

CASE OF COLONEL MORGAN.—Questions, Mr. Charles Hobhouse (Bristol, E.) and Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answer, The Secretary of State for War, (Mr. Arnold-Forster (Belfast, W.) and Mr. Speaker 1086

WATERFORD ARTILLERY HORSES—OUTBREAK OF SOUTH AFRICAN DISEASE.—Question, Mr. Power (Waterford, E.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster .. 1087

SOUTH AFRICAN SOLDIER CONVICTS.—Question, Mr. Patrick O'Brien (Kilkenny); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1088

ARTILLERY ARMAMENT ESTIMATE.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1091

MILITARY DEPOT OF ROSS-SHIRE REGIMENTS.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1091

STRENGTH OF THE AUXILIARY FORCES.—Question, Captain Ellice (St. Andrew's Burghs); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1091

CHINESE LABOUR RESTRICTION OF IMPORTATION INTO THE TRANSVAAL.—Questions, Dr. Macnamara (Camberwell, N.), Major Seely (Isle of Wight); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1092

GELDENHUIS DEEP MINE—DISCHARGE OF WHITE LABOUR.—Question, Mr. Shackleton (Lancashire, Chitheroe); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1093

ROSE DEEP MINE—DISCHARGE OF WHITE LABOUR.—Question, Mr. Shackleton, and Mr. Bayley (Derbyshire, Chesterfield); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton .. 1093

CHINESE RIOTS ON THE SIMMER AND JACK MINE.—Question, Mr. Shackleton; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1093

TRANSVAAL AND ORANGE RIVER COLONIES CONSTITUTION.—Questions, Dr. Macnamara, Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar), Mr. Bryce (Aberdeen), Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answers, The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) 1094

Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) 1096

MINERAL DEPOSITS IN INDIA.—Question, Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree (Bethnal Green, N.E.); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1097

CATHOLIC ARMY CHAPLAINS IN INDIA.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1097

INFANT MORTALITY IN EGYPT.—Questions, Mr. Weir; Answer, The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) 1098

NORTH SEA FISHERIES ARBITRATION.—Question, Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe); Answer, Earl Percy.. 1098

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK DEFICIENCY.—Questions, Dr. Macnamara, Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answers, The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) .. ..

INCOME TAX COLLECTION.—Questions, Mr. McCrae (Edinburgh, E.), Mr. Flynn (Cork, N.); Answers, Mr. Austen Chamberlain.. 1099

VACCINATION EXEMPTION CERTIFICATES.—Questions, Mr. Weir, Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answers, Mr. Akers-Douglas (Kent, St. Augustine's) 1100

POOR LAW FINANCE.—Question, Mr. Flynn; Answer, The President of the Local Government Board (Mr. Walter Long, Bristol, S.) 1101

HEAVY MOTOR-CAR REGULATIONS.—Questions, Colonel Lockwood (Essex, Epping), Mr. Walter Long; Answers, Colonel Lockwood, Mr. Walter Long .. 1101

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE OFFICER'S SUPERANNUATION.—Question, Mr. Duncan (Yorkshire, W.R.); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 1102

LOCAL AUTHORITIES AND THE MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC CLERKS.—Question, Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree; Answer, Mr. Walter Long 1102

SKIGERSTA PIER, ISLE OF LEWIS.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, The Lord-Advocate (Mr. Scott Dickson, Glasgow, Bridgton) 1103

ISLE OF LEWIS—REPORT ON SOCIAL CONDITION.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 1103

SKYE ROADS.—Question, Mr. John Dewar (Inverness); Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson. 1104

LABOUR DISPUTES IN DUBLIN PUBLIC WORKS.—Question, Mr. Nannetti (Dublin, College Green); Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 1105

Feb. 23.] Page

LAND PURCHASE IN TIPPERARY—MR. DELMEGE'S ESTATE.—Question, Mr. Lundon (Limerick, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1105

LAND PURCHASE IN COUNTY LIMERICK—SYANS ESTATE.—Question, Mr. Lundon; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1106

EXCHEQUER CONTRIBUTION—LABOURERS' COTTAGES.—Question, Mr. Lundon; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1106

FIREARM REGULATIONS IN COUNTY LONGFORD—GILLESPIE'S CASE.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell (Longford, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1106

EDGEWORTHSTOWN LOAN FUND SOCIETY.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1107

YOUGHAL AUXILIARY LUNATIC ASYLUM.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.), Captain Donelan (Cork, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1107

DERNAGEAS GRAZING FARM.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1109

SIR ANTONY MACDONNELL.—Questions, Mr. Pirie (Aberdeen, N.), Mr. Dillon (Mayo, E.); Mr. Sloan; Answers, Mr. A. J. Balfour, Mr. Wyndham .. 1109

IRISH FINANCE—THE POST OFFICE, AND INLAND REVENUE.—Question, Mr. Patrick O'Brien (Kilkenny); Answer, The Financial Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Victor Cavendish, Derbyshire, W.) 1110

DUBLIN POST OFFICE—LEARNERS' PAY.—Question, Mr. Nannetti; Answer, The Postmaster-General (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton) 1111

NEW BILLS.

Small Holdings (No. 2) Bill.—" To amend The Small Holdings Act, 1892," presented by Mr. Jesse Collings; supported by Colonel Long, Mr. Goulding, Sir Carne Rasch, Mr. Carlile, and Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence; to be read a second time upon Friday, 10th March, and to be printed. [Bill 56.] .. 1112

Nurses Registration Bill.—" To regulate the qualifications of trained Nurses, and to provide for their registration," presented by Mr. Munro Ferguson; supported by Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Haldane, Sir Thomas Wrightson, Sir James Joicey, Mr. Hugh Crawford Smith, Mr. Black, Mr. Eve, and Dr. Thompson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 17th March, and to be printed. [Bill 57.] 1112

Private Bill Procedure (Ireland) Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to Private Bill Procedure in Ireland," presented by Mr. O'Doherty; supported by Mr. Hemphill, Mr. Field, Mr. Patrick Kennedy, and Dr. Thompson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 7th April, and to be printed. [Bill 58.] 1112

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment [22nd February] to Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question to add the words, 'But humbly to represent to Your Majesty that the continuous and continuing changes in the War Office are destructive of the best interests of Your Majesty's Army, have gravely disordered the system upon which the regular forces at home and abroad are raised and trained, have discouraged the Militia and Volunteers, and disclose negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, more particularly as to the armament of the Artillery, whereby, in spite of the increased cost of the Army, its efficiency for the defence of the Empire has been diminished."—(Captain Norton.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Colonel Welby (Taunton) 1113
Sir Arthur Hayter (Walsall) 1116
Colonel Williams (Dorsetshire, W.) 1118
Mr. Charles Hobhouse (Bristol, E.) 1120
Sir John Colomb (Great Yarmouth) 1126
Mr. Lambert (Devonshire, South Molton) 1132
Colonel Pilkington (Lancashire, Newton) 1135
Sir H. Campbell Bannerman (Stirling Burghs) 1138
Sir John Gorst (Cambridge University) 1143
Mr. Fuller (Wiltshire, Westbury) 1145
Captain Jessel (St. Pancras, S.) 1149
Sir Mark Stewart (Kirkcudbrightshire) 1154
Captain Ellice (St. Andrew's Burghs) 1155
Mr. Peel (Manchester, S.) 1156
Mr. Llewellyn (Somersetshire. N.) 1160

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—

EVENING SITTING.

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment [February 22nd] to Main Question [February 14th], 'That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was, at the end of the Question, to add the words—

> "But humbly to represent to Your Majesty that the continuous and continuing changes in the War Office are destructive of the best interests of Your Majesty's Army, have gravely disordered the system upon which the regular forces at home and abroad are raised and trained, have discouraged the Militia and Volunteers, and disclose negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, more particularly as to the armament of the Artillery, whereby, in spite of the increased cost of the Army, its efficiency for the defence of the Empire has been diminished."—(Captain Norton.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. Hunt (Shropshire, Ludlow) 1162
Mr. Eugene Wason (Clackmannan and Kinross) 1164
Sir Albert Rollit (Islington, S.) 1165
Mr. Osmond Williams (Merionethshire) 1167
The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.) .. 1168
Mr. Winston Churchill (Oldham) 1191

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 207; Noes, 254. (Division List No. 8.)

And, it being after midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

Adjourned at Five Minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS: FRIDAY, 24TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificate from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have been complied with .—Highland Railway.

And also the Certificates that the further Standing Orders applicable to following Bills have been complied with :—Rhymney Railway [H.L.]; South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways [H.L.]; Commercial Union Assurance [H.L.].

The same were ordered to lie on the Table 1205

Clyde Navigation Bill [H.L.].—Presented, and read 1ª 1205

Barry Railway Bill [H.L.]; Hessle Gas Bill [H.L.]; Leeds and Liverpool Canal Bill [H.L.]—Read 2ª, and committed. The Committees to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 1205

Mortgage Insurance Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan District Railway Bill [H.L.].—Read 2ª, and committed 1205

NEW BILLS.

Congested Districts (Scotland) Bill [H.L.].—A Bill to amend the provisions of the Congested Districts (Scotland) Act, 1897, as to the style and title of the Commissioners, the execution of deeds by them, and the application of the fund constituted by the said Act. Was presented by the Marquess of Linlithgow; read 1ª; to be printed; and to be read 2ª on Tuesday next. [No. 14.] 1205

Advertisements Regulation Bill [H.L.].—A Bill for authorising local authorities to make bye-laws respecting the exhibition of advertisements. Was presented by the Lord Balfour; read 1ª; to be printed; and to be read 2ª on Thursday the 9th of March next. [No. 15.] 1205

STANDING ORDERS COMMITTEE.—Appointed. The Lords following, with the Chairman of Committees, were named of the Committee—

M. Salisbury (L. Privy Seal).
D. Bedford.
D. Marlborough.
D. Northumberland.
M. Lansdowne.
M. Bath.
E. Derby.
E. Denbigh.
E. Chesterfield.
E. Jersey.
E. Lauderdale.
E. Waldegrave.
E. Cadogan.
E. Howe.
E. Amherst.
E. Camperdown.
E. Dartrey.
E. Lytton.
E. Carrington.
E. Crewe.
V. Sidmouth.
V. Knutsford.
V. Churchill.
L. Zouche of Haryngworth.
L. Barnard.
L. Balfour.
L. Ribblesdale.
L. Colchester.
L. Poltimore.
L. Kintore (E. Kintore).
L. Belper.
L. Brougham and Vaux.
L. Kinnaird.
L. Fermanagh (E. Erne).
L. Herries.
L. Monkswell.
L. Newton.
L. Welby.
L. Ludlow.
L. Glanusk.

All petitions relating to the Standing Orders which shall be presented during the present session referred to the Committee unless otherwise ordered 1206

House of Lords Offices.—Select Committee appointed. The Lords following, with the Lord Chancellor, the Lord President, the Lord Privy Seal, and the Chairman of Committees, were named of the Committee :—

D. Northumberland.
M. Bath.
M. Cholmondeley.
M. Ripon.
M. Breadalbane.
E. Claredon (L. Chamberlain).
E. Chesterfield.
E. Waldegrave.
E. Spencer.
E. Mount Edgcumbe
E. Belmore.
E. Cawdor.
E. Camperdown.
E. Cranbrook.
E. Ancaster.
V. Gordon (E. Aberdeen).
V. Hampden.
V. Cross.
V. Peel.
V. Knutsford.
V. Churchill.
L. Windsor.
L. Balfour.
L. Ribblesdale.
L. Colchester.
L. Rosebery (E. Rosebery).
L. Kintore (E. Kintore).
L. Belper.
L. Tweedmouth.
L. Monk Bretton.
L. Macnaghten.
L. Welby.
L. Burghclere.

Committee of Selection—The Lords following, viz. :—

E. Chesterfield.
E. Waldegrave.
V. Churchill.
L. Ribblesdale.

with the Chairman of Committees, were appointed a Committee to select and propose to the House the names of the Five Lords to form a Select Committee for the consideration of each opposed Private Bill.

Standing Committee—Ordered, That a Standing Committee be appointed for the consideration of such Public Bills as may be committed to it by the House.

Committee of Selection for the Standing Committee—Appointed: The Lords following, with the Chairman of Committees, were named of the Committee—

E. Cowper.
E. Stanhope.
E. Waldegrave.
E. Carrington.
V. Churchill
L Balfour
L Ribblesdale
L. Kintore (E. Kintore). 1206

Reserve Forces Bill [H.L.].—Order of the Day for the Second Reading read.

The Under-Secretary of State for War (the Earl of Donoughmore) .. 1207

Moved, That the Bill be now read 2ª.—(The Earl of Donoughmore).

On question, Bill read 2ª, (according to order), and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Tuesday next.

Bishopric of Bristol Bill [H.L.].—Order of the day for the House to be put into Committee, read, and discharged 1207

Seamen's and Soldiers' False Characters Bill [H.L.].—Read 3ª (according to order), and passed, and sent to the Commons 1207

House adjourned at twenty-five minutes before Five o'clock, to Monday next, a quarter before Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: FRIDAY, 24TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

The House met at Twelve of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 62 COMPLIED WITH).—MR. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order 62 has been complied with, viz.: Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Bill; Brompton, Chatham, Gillingham, and Rochester Water Bill; Central London Railway Bill; Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Bill; Edgware and Hampstead Railway Bill; Epping Gas Bill; Gas Light and Coke, South Metropolitan, and Commercial Gas Companies Bill; Great Eastern Railway Bill; Great Northern (Ireland) and Midland Railways Bill; Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 1) Bill; Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 2) Bill; Great Northern Railway Bill; Great Western Railway (New Railways) Bill; Higham and Hundred of Hoo Water Bill; Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Junction Railway and Dock Bill; London and North Western Railway Bill; Midland Railway Bill; North Eastern Railway Bill; North Eastern Railway (Steam Vessels) Bill; Nottingham and Retford Railway Bill; Southampton and Winchester Great Western Junction Railway (Abandonment) Bill; South Metropolitan Gas Bill; South Suburban Gas Bill; Ulster and Connaught Light Railways Bill; Walker and Wallsend Union Gas Bill; Whitechapel and Bow Railway Bill; Wrexham Gas Bill. Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time 1208

Feb. 24.] Page

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That in the case of the following Bills referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order 63 has been complied with: Andover Lighting and Power Bill; Weybridge and Walton-upon-Thames Electric Supply Bill. Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time 1209

PETITIONS.

JURORS' SERVICE.—Petition from Streatham, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table 1209

JUVENILE SMOKING.—Two Petitions from Edinburgh, for legislation; to lie upon the Table 1209

LICENSED PREMISES (HOURS OF CLOSING).—Petition from Bath, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table 1209

OUT-DOOR RELIEF (DISFRANCHISEMENT).—Petition from Poplar, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table 1209

RE-VACCINATION.—Petition of the Cumberland County Council, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table 1209

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

RAILWAY, ETC., BILLS.—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 23rd February; Mr. Gerald Balfour]; to lie upon the Table; and to be printed. (No. 58) 1209

WOODS, FORESTS, AND LAND REVENUES.—Abstract Accounts presented, for the year ended 31st March, 1904, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. (No. 59) 1209

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

CLAIMS AGAINST VENEZUELA.—Question, Mr. Moon (St. Pancras, N.); Answer, Earl Percy 1210

ANNUAL REPORTS OF THE HAGUE TRIBUNAL.—Question, Mr. Moon; Answer, Earl Percy 1210

ARMOUR FOR CRUISERS.—Question, Mr. J. F. Hope (Sheffield, Brightside); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 1210

BELFAST POST OFFICE.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Lord Stanley 1210

BELFAST POST OFFICE MEDICAL OFFICER.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Lord Stanley 1211

ERECTION OF BUOY AT TUNS BANK, LOUGH FOYLE.—Question, Mr. O'Doherty (Donegal, N.); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1211

Feb. 24.] Page

RUSSIAN IMPORT DUTIES ON INDIAN AND CEYLON TEA.—Question, Mr. Partington (Derbyshire, High Peak); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1211

DREDGING OF BURTONPORT HARBOUR.—Question, Mr. Hugh Law (Donegal, W.); Answer, Mr. Victor Cavendish 1212

IRISH GROWN BEETROOT.—Question, Mr. O'Dowd; Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 1212

DUBLIN POLICE COMMISSIONER AND IRISH UNIVERSITY EDUCATION.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1213

MARINE WORKS IN IRELAND—EXPENDITURE OF GRANTS.—Question, Mr. O'Doherty; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1213

CASE OF NURSE HOLLAND OF MONAGHAN AND CAVAN ASYLUMS.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1213

NATIONALIST PROCESSION THROUGH COAGH.—Question, Mr. Doogan (Tyrone, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1214

ENCOURAGEMENT OF THRIFT IN THE ARMY.—Question, Sir Howard Vincent (Sheffield, Central); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1215

WHITES EMPLOYED IN THE TRANSVAAL GOLD MINES.—Question, Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1215

CHINESE LABOURERS AND KAFFIR WOMEN.—Question, Sir Brampton Gurdon (Norfolk, N.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1215

ADJOURNMENT.—Resolved, That this House, at the rising of the House this day do adjourn till Monday next.—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

> "Most Gracious Sovereign,
>
> "We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

Mr. Channing (Northamptonshire, E.) 1216
Mr. Whitley (Halifax) 1227

Amendment proposed—

> "At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But we humbly beg to represent to Your Majesty that, in view of the continued depopulation of rural districts and of the overcrowding and lack of employment in large towns, it is expedient to promote the more thorough cultivation of the land and to extend agricultural employment by legislative and administrative measures to give more security and freedom to agricultural tenants, and to encourage combination in the ffective and economical working of the agricultural industry.'"—(Mr. Channing.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

Lord Willoughby de Eresby (Lincolnshire, Horncastle) 1230
Mr. Munro Ferguson (Leith Burghs) 1236
Mr. Spear (Devonshire, Tavistock) 1239
Mr. Bright (Shropshire, Oswestry) 1242
Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes (Huntingdonshire, Ramsey) 1245
Mr. Brigg (Yorkshire, W.R., Keighley) 1250
Mr. Jesse Collings (Birmingham, Bordesley) 1251
Mr. Tomkinson (Cheshire, Crewe) 1255
Mr. Yerburgh (Chester) 1259
Mr. Lambert (Devonshire South Molton) 1262
Sir Carne Rasch (Essex, Chelmsford) 1266
Mr. J. H. Lewis (Flint Boroughs) 1268

Question put.

The House divided :—Ayes, 165 ; Noes, 241. (Division List No. 9.)

And, it being after half-past Five of the clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed upon Monday next.

NEW BILLS.

Public Entertainment.—Bill to amend the Law relating to Public Entertainment, ordered to be brought in by Captain Jessel, Mr. W. F. D. Smith, Sir Robert Mowbray, Sir Ernest Flower, Dr. Macnamara, Major Jameson, Mr. Crooks, and Mr. Shackleton,.

Public Entertainment Bill.– "To amend the Law relating to Public Entertainment," presented accordingly, and read the first time ; to be read a second time upon Monday, 6th March, and to be printed. [Bill 59.]

Adjourned at twenty-five minutes before Six o'clock till Monday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS: MONDAY, 27th FEBRUARY, 1905.

Introduced.—George Rodney, Lord Bishop of Wakefield, was (in the usua manner) introduced 1273

Sat First.—The Duke of Brandon (D. Hamilton) sat first in Parliament after the death of his kinsman 1273

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificate from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have been complied with :—

Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution).

And also the Certificates that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with :—South Lancashire Tramways [H.L.]; Western Valleys (Monmouthshire) Water and Gas [H.L.]; Metropolitan Railway [H.L.]; Medway and Thames Canal [H.L.]; Mexborough and Swinton Tramways (Extension of Time) [H.L.]; Oldham and Saddleworth District Tramways [H.L.]; Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation [H.L.]; Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads [H.L.]; Central Electric Supply [H.L.].

The same were ordered to lie on the Table 1273

Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation Bill [H.L.]; City of London Electric Lighting Company Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª, and committed. The Committees to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 1273

Cordoba and Rosario Railway Bill [H.L.].—Read 2ª, and committed .. 1273

East Cowes Gas Bill [H.L.].—Read 2 , and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 1273

Entre Rios Railways Bill [H.L.]; Gosport and Fareham Tramways Bill [H.L.] —Read 2ª, and committed 1274

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District) Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers) Bill [H.L.]; North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply Bill [H.L.]; Truro Water Bill [H.L.].—Read 2ª, and committed. The Committees to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 1274

West Cumberland Electric Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill [H.L.].—Read 2ª, and committed.

Workington Harbour and Dock Bill [H.L.].—Read 2ª, and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 1274

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

RUSSIA, NO. 3 (1905) NORTH SEA INCIDENT (INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY).—Despatch from the British Agent forwarding the Report of the Commissioners.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table 1274

UNIVERSITIES (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1889.—Annual report on the state of the finances of the University of Aberdeen, under the provisions of Section 30 of the Universities (Scotland) Act, 1889, for the year 1903–1904.

Annual statistical report by the University Court of the University of Aberdeen, to the Secretary for Scotland, under the provisions of Section 30 of the Universities (Scotland) Act, 1889, for the year 1903–1904.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 1274

BRIDLINGTON PIERS AND HARBOUR.—Abstract of the general annual account for the year ended 26th July, 1904. Delivered (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 1274

INEBRIATES.—Petition for amendment of law respecting; of Manchester, Salford, and District Temperance Union; read, and ordered to lie on the Table 1275

Feb. 27.] Page

NEW BILLS.

Sale of Intoxicants to Children Bill [H.L.].—A Bill to amend the law in relation to the sale of intoxicating liquors to children was presented by the Lord Dunboyne; read 1^{a}; to be printed; and to be read 2^{a} on Tuesday, the 7th of March next. [No. 16.] 1275

Newcastle Chapter Amendment Bill [H.L.].—A Bill to make further provisions for the foundation of a dean and chapter of Newcastle, and for other purposes connected therewith, was presented by the Lord Bishop of St. Albans; read 1^{a}; to be printed; and to be read 2^{a} on Monday next. [No. 17.] 1275

THE LATE EARL OF MORLEY.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (The Marquess of Lansdowne) .. 1275
Earl Spencer 1276
The Lord Chancellor (The Earl of Halsbury) 1276
The Lord Bishop of Rochester 1276

SOUTH AFRICAN (LABOUR IN THE MINES).

Lord Monkswell 1277

Moved, "That an Humble Address be presented to His Majesty for a Return of the number of white men employed in the erection and preparation of Chinese compounds in the Rand."—(Lord Monkswell.)

The Under Secretary of State for the Colonies (The Duke of Marlborough) 1280
Lord Harris 1285
The Marquess of Ripon 1289
Lord Monkswell 1291

Motion, by leave of the House, withdrawn.

House adjourned at twenty minutes before Six o'clock, till To-morrow, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS: MONDAY, 27TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

SUBSTITUTED BILLS [LORDS] STANDING ORDERS COMPLIED WITH).—MR. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in respect of the following Bill, introduced pursuant to the provisions of The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, and which the Chairman of Ways and Means had directed to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with, viz.:—Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution) Bill 1293

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 62 COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order 62 has been complied with, viz. :—Clay Cross Railway (Abandonment) Bill; Croydon Gas Bill; Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Bill; Sunderland and South Shields Water Bill.
Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time 1293

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order 63 has been complied with, viz. :—Aylesbury Gas Bill Dublin United Tramways Bill; Hitchin and District Gas Bill.
Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time 1294

PRIVATE BILLS (PETITION FOR ADDITIONAL PROVISION) (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the Petition for additional Provision in the following Bill, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz. :—Liverpool Corporation Bill.
Ordered That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders 1294

Aberdare Tramways Bill.—Accrington Corporation Bill; Accrington District Gas and Water Board Bill; Acton Sewage Bill; Birmingham Corporation Bill; Bolton Corporation Bill; Bootle Corporation Bill; Colne Corporation Bill; Croydon Corporation Bill; Dublin Corporation (Superannuation) Bill; Halifax Corporation Bill; Ilfracombe Harbour and Improvement Bill; Liverpool Corporation Bill. Read a second time, and committed 1294

London Building Acts (Amendment) Bill.—London County Council (General Powers) Bill; London County Council (Tramways) Bill. To be read a second time to-morrow 1294

London Gas Bill.—Loughborough Corporation Bill; North Sussex Gas Bill; Sale of Bread (London) Bill; Skegness Water Bill; Stockport Corporation Bill; Swansea Corporation Bill. Read a second time, and committed .. 1294

Highland Railway Bill.—" To extend the time for the completion of certain railways authorised by The Highland Railway (Additional Powers) Act, 1897, to enable the Highland Railway Company to provide and work steam and other vessels between Inverness and Fort Augustus; and to subscribe to the funds of Steamship Companies; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills 1295

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

CIVIL SERVICES AND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS ESTIMATES, 1905-6.—Copy presented, of Estimates for Civil Services and Revenue Departments for the year ending 31st March, 1906, together with a Copy of the Memorandum by the Financial Secretary to the Treasury relating thereto [by Command]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 64] 1295

PUBLIC REVENUE (INTERCEPTION).—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 21st February; Mr. Gibson Bowles] to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 58] 1295

Feb. 27.] Page

NATIONAL DEBT.—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 21st February ; Mr. Gibson Bowles] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 59] .. 1295

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.—Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 21st February ; Mr. Gibson Bowles] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 60] 1295

ARMY (ORDNANCE FACTORIES) (APPROPRIATION ACCOUNTS).—Appropriation Account presented, of the sums granted by Parliament for the expense of the Ordnance Factories, the cost of the productions of which have been charged to the Army, Navy, and Indian and Colonial Governments, etc., and the Statement of the Surpluses and Deficits upon the Grants for the year ended 31st March, 1904, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General thereon [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 61] 1295

RUSSIA (No. 3, 1905).—Copy presented, of Despatch from the British Agent forwarding the Report of the International Commission of Inquiry on the North Sea Incident [by Command] ; to lie upon the Table 1296

UNIVERSITY OF ABERDEEN.—Copy presented, of Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Aberdeen for 1903–4 [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 62] 1296

UNIVERSITY OF ABERDEEN.—Copy presented, of Abstract of Accounts of the University of Aberdeen for the year ending 15th September, 1904 [by Act] ; to lie upon the Table ; and to be printed. [No. 63] 1296

PAPER LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.—Bridlington Piers and Harbour. Copy of abstract of the General Annual Account for the year ending 26th July, 1904 [by Act] 1296

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND) (INSPECTORS AND AUDITORS).—Return ordered, " up to the 31st day of December, 1904, showing the number of (1) Inspectors, temporary and permanent, and (2) Auditors, appointed by the Local Government Board for Ireland from the 31st day of March, 1899, to that date, setting forth, in addition, the date of each appointment and the previous calling of each appointee." (Mr. J. P. Farrell) 1296

WINES IMPORTED.—Return ordered, " showing the quantity of Wines, at the various degrees of strength, which were imported into the United Kingdom in 1904 from Spain, Portugal, Madeira, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Australasia, and other countries (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 115, of Session 1904)."—(Mr. Gibbs) 1296

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

GOVERNMENT OF IRELAND—SUGGESTED ROYAL COMMISSION.—Question, Dr. Thompson (Monaghan, N.) ; Answer, Mr. A. J. Balfour 1297

SYSTEM OF ACCOUNTS OF NATIONAL EXPENDITURE—SUGGESTED ROYAL COMMISSION.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis) ; Answer, Mr. A. J. Balfour 1297

MISSIONS IN BAHR-EL-GHAZEL.—Questions, Mr. James O'Kelly (Roscommon, N.) ; Answer, Earl Percy 1297

Feb. 27.] Page

SOMALILAND FIELD FORCE.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1298

SHIPPING SEAMEN'S ACT, 1903 (New Zealand).—Question, Mr. Cathcart Wason (Orkney and Shetland); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1298

GERMAN TREATMENT OF BRITISH SHIPPING TRADING WITH THE MARSHALL ISLANDS.—Question, Mr. Kearley (Devonport); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton .. 1299

SELF GOVERNMENT FOR THE TRANSVAAL.—Question, The Master of Elibank (Edinburgh, Midlothian); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1299

COST OF DEFENCES OF HALIFAX AND ESQUIMALT—REPAYMENT BY CANADA.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1299

DECLINE OF NATIVE POPULATION IN UGANDA.—Question, Mr. MacVeagh (Down, S.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1300

AUXILIARY MOTOR POWER FOR FISHING BOATS—RESULT OF INQUIRY.—Question, Mr. Cathcart Wason; Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 1300

REBUILDING OF GRIMSAY SEA DYKES.—Question, Mr. John Dewar (Inverness); Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 1300

ACCOUNTS OF THE GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE FUND.—Question, Mr. Charles McArthur (Liverpool Exchange); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1301

NUMBER OF BOYS ENROLLED IN THE ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE.—Question, Sir Charles Dilke (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1302

RAILWAY COMPANIES AND THE HUMANE CATTLE CAR.—Question, Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1302

THE DONEGAL RAILWAY SYSTEM.—Question, Mr. O'Doherty (Donegal, N.); Answer, Mr. Victor Cavendish 1302

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION—CHURCH ATTENDANCE.—Question, Mr. Frederick Wilson (Norfolk, Mid.); Answer, Sir William Anson 1303

REVENUE FROM SOLICITORS' CERTIFICATE DUTY.—Question, Mr. Whitley Thomson (Yorkshire, W.R., Skipton); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain .. 1303

VERNACULAR EDUCATION OF CHILDREN ON INDIAN TEA PLANTATIONS.—Question, Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree (Bethnal Green, N.E.); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1303

IRISH POOR LAW COMMISSION.—Question, Mr. O'Doherty; Answer, Mr. Wyndham — 1304

AGRICULTURAL INSTRUCTORS IN COUNTY DONEGAL.—Question, Mr. O'Doherty; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1304

CLOSING OF POLICE STATION AT KILDALKEY, COUNTY MEATH.—Question, Mr. Sheehy (Meath, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1305

Feb. 27.] Page

CARRICKFERGUS LAND ARBITRATION AWARDS.—Question, Colonel McCalmont (Antrim, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1305

APPOINTMENT OF MANAGER OF LISLEA (NO. 1) NATIONAL SCHOOL.—Question, Mr. Lonsdale (Armagh, Mid.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1306

GRAZING LANDS AT MILE HILL, BALLINROBE.—Question, Mr. John O'Donnell (Mayo, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1307

THE ERNE ESTATE.—Question, Mr. John O'Donnell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 1307

IRISH TECHNICAL EDUCATION GRANTS.—Question, Mr. Sheehy; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1307

LOCAL AUTHORITIES ACCOUNTS—COUNTY COUNCIL OF NORTH TIPPERARY AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARDS.—Question, Mr. P. J. O'Brien (Tipperary, N.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1308

EXTRA POLICE TAX IN NORTH TIPPERARY.—Question, Mr. P. J. O'Brien; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1308

PURCHASE OF IRISH ESTATES—ACCOMMODATION OF LABOURERS.—Question, Mr. Cullinan (Tipperary, S.) Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1310

PURCHASE OF SOUTH AFRICAN RAILWAYS.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1311

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

DISCHARGES FROM NAVAL ESTABLISHMENTS.—Question, Mr. Kearley (Devonport); Answer, The Secretary to the Admiralty (Mr. Pretyman, Suffolk, Woodbridge) 1311

FLOGGING IN THE NAVY.—Questions, Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.) and Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis); Answers, Mr. Pretyman 1312

SELF-GOVERNMENT FOR THE TRANSVAAL.—Questions, Dr. Macnamara (Camberwell, N.), Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman (Stirling Burghs) Mr. Bryce (Aberdeen, S.) and Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar); Answer, The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester E.) 1312

BENGAL—LOCAL OPTION.—Question, Mr. Herbert Roberts (Denbighshire, W.); Answer, The Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) 1315

UGANDA.—Question, Mr. Cathcart Wason (Orkney and Shetland); Answer, The Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) 1315

NORTH SEA FISHERIES OUTRAGE—FINDING OF THE INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION.—Question, Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe); Answer, Earl Percy 1315

COST OF LIGHTING FOREIGN COASTS.—Question, Mr. Seymour Ormsby-Gore (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough); Answer, The President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) 1316

Feb. 27.]

Page

COMMITTEE ON PHYSICAL DETERIORATION—HOME OFFICE ACTION.—Question, Sir John Gorst (Cambridge University); Answer, The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers-Douglas, Kent, St. Augustine's) 1316

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD AND PHYSICAL DETERIORATION.—Question, Sir John Gorst; Answer, The President of the Local Government Board (Mr. Walter Long, Bristol, S.) 1317

THE EDUCATION DEPARTMENT AND THE PHYSICAL DETERIORATION REPORT.—Question, Sir John Gorst; Answer, The Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education (Sir William Anson, Oxford University) 1318

PAY OF PROVINCIAL NIGHT MESSENGERS—THE BRADFORD REPORT.—Questions, Mr. John Campbell (Armagh, S.), and Mr. Nannetti (Dublin, College Green); Answers, The Postmaster-General (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton) 1318

WORKHOUSE ACCOUNTS.—Question, Mr. Bright (Shropshire, Oswestry); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 1319

CANADIAN CATTLE INDUSTRY.—Question, Mr. Cathcart Wason; Answer, Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes (Huntingdonshire, Ramsey) 1320

DOGS BILL.—Question, Sir Edward Strachey (Somersetshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes 1320

SANITATION IN THE ISLAND OF LEWIS.—Question, (Mr. Weir, Ross and Cromarty); Answer, The Lord-Advocate Mr. Scott Dickson, (Glasgow, Bridgton) .. 1321

RAILWAY RATES FOR FISH.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson .. 1321

RENFREW SCHOOL TEACHER VACCINATION.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 1321

HIGHLAND CROFTING COUNTIES—MEDICAL OFFICERS OF HEALTH.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 1322

WESTERN HIGHLANDS FISHERIES.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 1322

LOCHBROOM MOTOR CAR INDUSTRY—SUGGESTED MOTOR CAR SERVICE.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, Mr. Scott Dickson 1323

LONGFORD—CHARGE FOR EXTRA POLICE.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell (Longford, N.); Answer, The Attorney-General for Ireland (Mr. Atkinson, Londonderry, N.) 1323

DRUMLISH CATTLE RESERVE CASE.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Atkinson 1324

LARKHILL SCHOOL, COUNTY SLIGO.—Question, Mr. O'Dowd (Sligo, S.); Answer, The Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Wyndham, Dover) 1324

DOMBSY ESTATE, ATHENRY.—Question, Mr. Duffy (Galway, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1325

GLOVES GRAZING FARM.—Question, Mr. Duffy; Answer, Mr. Wyndham .. 1325

Feb. 27.]

Page

EVICTED TENANTS IN COUNTY GALWAY.—Question, Mr. Roche (Galway, E.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1326

CLANRICARDE ESTATE EVICTED TENANTS.—Question, Mr. Roche; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1326

SLIGO LOCAL AUTHORITIES ACCOUNTS.—Question, Mr. O'Dowd, and Mr. Farrell; Answers, Mr. Wyndham 1327

SIR ANTONY MACDONNELL.—Questions, Mr. Charles Douglas (Lanarkshire, N.W.) and Mr. John Redmond (Waterford); Answers, Mr. Wyndham 1327

HIGHER EDUCATION IN IRELAND.—Questions, Mr. T. L. Corbett (Down, N.), and Mr. Austen Taylor (Liverpool, E. Toxteth) Answers, Mr. A. J. Balfour 1328

THE IRISH DEVOLUTION SCHEME.—Questions, Mr Charles Craig (Antrim, S.), and Mr. Lonsdale (Armagh, Mid); Answers, Mr. A. J. Balfour 1329

MOUNTMELLICK BOG.—Question, Mr. Delany (Queens County, Ossory); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1329

SISKIN EVICTED TENANT.—Question, Mr. Reddy (Kings County Birr); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1330

SEIZURES FOR RENT IN KINGS COUNTY.—Question, Mr. Reddy; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1330

ADMIRAL SINGLETON'S ESTATE.—Question, Mr. Sheehy (Meath, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1331

EVICTED TENANTS IN COUNTY ARMAGH.—Question, Mr. John Campbell; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1331

REPORT ON KNITTING AND HOSIERY IN LIMERICK SCHOOL.—Question, Mr. Joyce; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1332

KENVARRA HARBOUR.—Question, Mr. Duffy; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1333

LAND PURCHASE ADVANCES.—Question, Mr. Hayden (Roscommon, S.); Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1333

KILLADYSERT UNION ACCOUNTS.—Question, Mr. Sheehy; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1333

ARTERIAL DRAINAGE, IRELAND.—Question, Mr. Hayden; Answer, Mr. Wyndham 1334

APPOINTMENT TO OFFICE OF CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND.—Questions, Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answers, Mr. A. J. Balfour 1334

PAINTING WORK AT VICEREGAL LODGE, DUBLIN.—Question, Mr. Nannetti; Answer, The Financial Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Victor Cavendish, Derbyshire, W.) 1335

PILTOWN POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS.—Question, Mr. Patrick O'Brien (Klikenny); Answer, Lord Stanley 1335

Feb. 27.] Page

AGHNACLIFFE TELEGRAPHIC ARRANGEMENTS.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Lord Stanley 1336

IRISH-SPEAKING POSTMASTER.—Question, Mr. Hayden; Answer, Lord Stanley 1336

DEPORTATION OF PAUPERS TO IRELAND.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Walter Long 1337

TURKISH IMPORT DUTIES.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answer, Mr. A. J. Balfour 1337

GOVERNMENT MANUFACTORIES NEAR LONDON.—Question, Sir Howard Vincent (Sheffield, Central); Answer, Mr. A. J. Balfour 1339

BLOCKING MOTIONS—TRANSVAAL CONSTITUTION.—Questions, Mr. Swift MacNeill, Dr. Macnamara, Mr. John Ellis, Mr. Gibson Bowles, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman; Answers, Mr. John Stroyan (Perthshire, W.) and Mr. A. J. Balfour 1339

PREFERENTIAL TRADING.—Question, Mr. Pike Pease (Darlington); Answer, Mr. Winston Churchill (Oldham) 1343

MAGISTERIAL JURISDICTION IN IRELAND.—Questions, Captain Donelan; Answers, Mr. Atkinson 1343

NEW BILLS.

Metropolitan Police Provisional Order Bill.—"To confirm a Provisional Order made by one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State under The Metropolitan Police Act, 1886, relating to lands in the parishes of Erith and Barking," presented by Mr. Cochrane; supported by Mr. Secretary Akers-Douglas; read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, and to be printed. [Bill 59] 1345

Congested Districts (Scotland) Act (1897) Amendment Bill.—"To amend the provisions of the Congested Districts (Scotland) Act, 1897, as to the application of the fund constituted by the Act; and for other purposes," presented by Mr. Ainsworth; supported by Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Cathcart Wason, Mr. Weir, and Mr. Harmsworth; to be read a second time upon Monday next and to be printed. [Bill 60] 1346

Crofters' Holdings (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill.—"To amend the Acts relating to Crofter Holdings in Scotland," presented by Mr. Ainsworth; supported by Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Cathcart Wason, Mr. Weir, and Mr. Harmsworth; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, March 7th, and to be printed. [Bill 61] 1346

School Board Electorate (Scotland) Bill.—"To admit to the School Board Electorate of Scotland persons entitled to vote for the county council election," presented by Mr. Weir; supported by Mr. Leveson-Gower, Mr. Ainsworth, Mr. Cathcart Wason, Mr. John Dewar, Sir Arthur Bignold, Mr. Harmsworth, and Mr. Caldwell; to be read a second time upon Thursday next, and to be printed. [Bill 62] 1346

Crofters' Holdings (Scotland) Act (1886) Amendment Bill.—" To amend the Crofters' Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886," presented by Mr. Weir; supported by Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Leveson-Gower, Mr. Cathcart Wason, Sir Arthur Bignold, Mr. Harmsworth, Mr. Ainsworth, and Mr. Caldwell; to be read a second time upon Wednesday next, and to be printed. [Bill 63] .. 1346

Osborne Estate Act (1902) Amendment Bill.—" To amend the Osborne Estate Act, 1902, with respect to the purposes to which Osborne House may be devoted," presented by Mr. Victor Cavendish; supported by Lord Balcarres; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 64] 1346

Small Holders (Scotland) Bill.—" To amend the Law relating to the tenure of Small Holdings in Scotland, presented by Mr. Black; supported by Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Crombie, Mr. Weir, Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Eugene Wason, and Mr. Ainsworth; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 22nd March, and to be printed. [Bill 65] 1346

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February], " That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth—

" Most Gracious Sovereign,

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament. —(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

Mr. Stevenson (Suffolk, Eye) 1347
Sir John Kennaway (Devonshire, Honiton) 1355

Amendment proposed—

" At the end of the Question, to add the words, ' but humbly represent to Your Majesty that, in view of the prevalent insecurity of life and property in many provinces of the Ottoman Empire, the inadequacy of the measures hitherto adopted, and the incontrovertible obligations incurred by this country and the other signatories of the Treaty of Berlin, the time has arrived when further steps should be taken for the purpose of placing the execution of reforms in those provinces in the hands of a governor or governors, or other officers, responsible to the Powers."—(Mr. Stevenson.)

Question proposed, " That those words be there added."

Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice (Wiltshire, Cricklade) 1357
Mr. Bond (Nottinghamshire, E.) 1366
Mr. Hugh Law (Donegal, W.) 1367

Page
Mr. Moon (St. Pancras, N.) 1369
The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.) 1373
Mr. Bryce (Aberdeen, S.) 1385
The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) 1392

Question put and negatived.

Main Question again proposed.

Mr. Kearley (Devonport) 1396

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament." —(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

Mr. Kearley (Devonport) 1399
Sir J. Dickson Poynder (Wiltshire, Chippenham) 1408

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that Your Majesty's Government in committing the country to the policy of the Brussels Sugar Convention have inflicted heavy losses upon trade, diminished employment of labour, enormously increased the cost of a necessary food to consumers, without any compensatory advantage ; and we humbly submit to Your Majesty that these evil results call for an immediate remedy ; and that the Convention should be denounced at the earliest possible moment.'" —(Mr. Kearley.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

Sir Walter Palmer (Salisbury) 1412
Mr. Edmund Robertson (Dundee) 1418
Mr. J. Chamberlain (Birmingham, W.) 1424

And, it being Midnight, the debate stood adjourne

Debate to be resumed to-morrow

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'cloc

HOUSE OF LORDS: TUESDAY, 28TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with:—Metropolitan and Great Central Railway Companies [H.L.]; Southend and Colchester Light Railways [H.L.]; County of London Electric Supply Company [H.L.]; Dearne Valley Railway [H.L.].

The same were ordered to lie on the Table 1441

BARRYMORE ESTATE.—Petition of the right hon. Arthur Hugh Baron Barrymore, praying leave to introduce a Bill "To enable the Baron Barrymore to restore certain forfeited leases in the town of Tipperary, and for other purposes;" together with a copy of the proposed Bill annexed thereto; read, and referred to the Examiners 1441

Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution) Bill [H.L.].—Presented and read 1^a .. 1441

Cardiff Railway Bill [H.L.].—Read 2^a; and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 1441

Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment) Bill.—Read 2^a; and committed 1441

Rhymney Railway Bill [H.L.]; Commercial Union Assurance Bill [H.L.]; Clyde Navigation Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a, and committed. The Committees to be proposed by the Committee of Selection 1441

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.—Fifty-seventh Report from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England; with an Appendix. Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table 1441

PIERS AND HARBOURS (PROVISIONAL ORDERS).—Report by the Board of Trade of their proceedings under the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, and the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, Amendment Act. Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table 1442

Naval Works (Portsmouth Barracks Site) Bill [H.L.].—Report from His Majesty's Attorney-General received, and ordered to lie on the Table .. 1442

Street Betting Bill [H.L.]. [SECOND READING.]—Order of the Day for the Second Reading read.

Lord Davey 1442

Moved, That the Bill be now read 2^a.—(Lord Davey.)

On Question, Bill read 2^a and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

Congested Districts (Scotland) Bill [H.L.].—Order of the day for the Second Reading read.

The Secretary for Scotland (The Marquess of Linlithgow) 1443

Moved, that the Bill be now read 2^a.—(The Marquess of Linlithgow.)

On Question, Bill read 2^a, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Monday next.

Reserve Forces Bill.—House in Committee (according to order).

[The Earl of ONSLOW in the Chair.]

Bill reported without Amendment.

The Under Secretary of State for War (The Earl of Donoughmore) .. 1444

Moved, "That the Standing Committee be negatived."—(The Earl of Donoughmore).

On Question, Standing Committee negatived; and Bill to be read 3^a on Thursday next.

House adjourned at twenty minutes before Five o'clock, to Thursday next half-past Ten o'clock

---

HOUSE OF COMMONS: TUESDAY, 28TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH).—Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order 63 has been complied with, viz.:—Great Berkhampstead Gas Bill; Norwich Union Life Insurance Society Bill; South Oxfordshire Water and Gas Bill.
Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time 1445

Metropolitan Pneumatic Despatch Bill; Morley Corporation Bill (by Order); Rhondda Urban District Council Bill (by Order), Otley Gas and Improvement Bill (by Order). Read a second time, and committed 1445

STANDING ORDERS.

Resolutions reported from the Select Committee:—

1. "That, in the case of the Heckmondwike Improvement, Petition for Bill, the Standing Orders ought to be dispensed with. That the parties be permitted to proceed with their Bill, provided that Clauses 10 and 11, and so much of the Preamble as relates thereto, be struck out of the Bill. That the Committee on the Bill do report how far such Order has been complied with."

Feb. 28.]

2. "That, in the case of the Wigan Corporation, Petition for Bill, the Standing Orders ought to be dispensed with. That the parties be permitted to proceed with their Bill, provided that the powers to construct Tramway No. 2 be struck out of the Bill, unless the consent of the Aspull Urban District Council be proved before the Committee on the Bill. That the Committee on the Bill do report how far such Order has been complied with."

3. "That, in the case of the Coventry Electric Tramways, Petition for Bill the parties have stated their intention not to proceed with their Bill."

First Two Resolutions agreed to.

Report to lie upon the Table 1445

PETITIONS.

Deorikar, Kesho Rao Balvant.—Petition of Kesho Rao Balvant Deorikar, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table 1446

Illegitimate Births in Worhkouses.—Petition from Bradfield, for legislation; to lie upon the Table 1446

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

British Museum.—Petition of the Trustees of the British Museum (King's Recommendation signified), for grant in aid; to lie upon the Table 1446

Ecclesiastical Commission.—Copy presented, of Fifty-seventh Report from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, with an Appendix [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1446

Prisons (Scotland).—Copy presented, of Rule made by the Secretary for Scotland as to the appointment of Visiting Committees to the Prisons at Barlinnie, Perth, and Peterhead [by Act]; to lie upon the Table and to be printed. [No. 67.] 1447

Agricultural and Technical Instruction Schemes (Ireland). Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 27th June 1904: Mr. Sullivan]; to lie upon the Table 1447

Piers and Harbours (Provisional Orders).—Copy presented, of Report by the Board of Trade of their Proceedings under the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, and the General Pier and Harbour Act (1861) Amendment Act, Session 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 68.] 1447

Treaty Series (No. 5, 1905).—Copy presented, of Convention between the United Kingdom and France respecting Newfoundland and West and Central Africa. Signed at London, 8th April, 1904. Ratifications exchanged at London, 8th December, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1447

Treaty Series (No. 6, 1905).—Copy presented, of Declaration between the United Kingdom and France respecting Egypt and Morocco. Signed at London, 8th April, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1448

TREATY SERIES, (No. 7, 1905).—Copy presented, of Declaration between the United Kingdom and France concerning Siam, Madagascar, and the New Hebrides. Signed at London, 8th April, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table 1448

CIVIL SERVICES (SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1904-5).—Estimate presented of the Further Amount required in the year ending 31st March, 1905, for the Irish Land Commission [by Command]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 69.] 1448

DEER FORESTS (HIGHLAND CROFTING COUNTIES).—Return ordered, "giving the name of each Deer Forest in the six Highland Crofting Counties, the amount of its assessment, its acreage for the years 1883, 1898, and 1904, and showing the increase or decrease in the acreage between the years 1898 and 1904, in the following form :—

County.	Name of Deer Forest.	Assessment.	Acreage, 1883.	Acreage, 1898.	Acreage, 1904.	Between 1898 and 1904—		Remarks.
						Increase.	Decrease.

—(Mr. Weir.) 1448

REVENUE (COLLECTION OF TAXES). Return ordered, "showing for each of the three Kingdoms (1) the amount charged for Income Tax, Land Tax, and Inhabited House Duty for the financial years 1903, 1904, 1905; and (2) the amounts and percentage of same collected in each country by the 31st day of January and the 28th day of February respectively in each of the said years."—(Mr. M'Crae.) 1447

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

REPORT OF THE ROYAL COMMISSION ON LONDON TRAFFIC.—Question, Mr. Schwann (Manchester, N.); Answer, Mr. Akers-Douglas 1448

SALE OF SURPLUS DISCHARGED SOLDIERS' CLOTHING.—Question, Sir Edward Strachey (Somersetshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1449

CASE OF PRIVATE T. COUGHLAN, ROYAL DUBLIN FUSILIERS.—Question, Mr. Patrick O'Brien (Kilkenny); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1449

CHANGES NECESSITATED BY ADOPTION OF NEW GUNS.—Question, Colonel Nolan (Galway, N.); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1450

BRIGADING OF HIGHLAND LIGHT INFANTRY.—Question, Mr. Malcolm (Suffolk, Stowmarket); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1450

ABANDONMENT BY THE ADMIRALTY OF MINE FIELDS AND QUICK-FIRING BATTERIES.—Question, Sir Charles Dilke (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 1451

COST OF SENDING SEAMEN FROM UNITED KINGDOM TO THEIR HOMES ABROAD. —Question, Mr. Lawrence (Liverpool, Abercromby); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1451

Feb. 28.] Page

CHANNEL FLEET—SUGGESTED VISIT TO PORTREE.—Question, Mr. John Dewar (Inverness); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 1452

WEI-HAI-WEI—EXPENDITURE—Question, Mr. Bright (Shropshire, Oswestry); Answer, Mr. Pretyman 1452

AUDIT OF IRISH PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—TRANSFER TO DUBLIN.—Question, Mr. Field (Dublin, St. Patrick); Answer, Mr. Victor Cavendish 1453

IRISH POST OFFICE ACCOUNTS—TRANSFER TO DUBLIN.—Questions, Mr. Field; Answers, Lord Stanley 1453

PRINTING OF IRISH POST OFFICE DOCUMENTS ON IRISH PAPER IN DUBLIN.—Question, Mr. Field; Answer, Lord Stanley 1454

DELAY IN BELFAST TO LONDONDERRY TELEPHONE EXTENSION.—Question, Mr. O'Doherty; Answer, Lord Stanley 1454

REDUCTION OF TRUNK TELEPHONE CHARGE.—Question, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.); Answer, Lord Stanley 1455

POST OFFICE—PROMOTION OF SECOND CLASS ENGINEERS.—Question, Mr. Schwann; Answer, Lord Stanley 1455

POST OFFICE WAGES COMMITTEE—ALLEGED FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH TERMS OF REFERENCE.—Question, Mr. Shackleton (Lancashire, Clitheroe); Answer, Lord Stanley 1486

INSPECTION OF MEAT.—Question, Mr. Field; Answer, Mr. Walter Long 1457

ARSENICAL POISONING—ADOPTION OF THE RECOMMENDATION OF THE ROYAL COMMISSION.—Question, Sir Cuthbert Quilter (Suffolk, Sudbury); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 1458

AGRICULTURAL RATING BILL—DATE OF INTRODUCTION.—Question, Sir Walter Thorburn (Peebles and Selkirk); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 1458

DEATH CERTIFICATES FOR MEMBERS OF TRADE UNIONS AND FRIENDLY SOCIETIES —ASSIMILATION OF CHARGES.—Question, Colonel Sadler (Middlesbrough); Answer, Mr. Walter Long 1458

CASE OF MR. JOHN GODDEN.—Question, Mr. Ernest Flower (Bradford, W.); Answer, Earl Percy 1459

PRICE OF SUGAR IN GREAT BRITAIN, ARGENTINA AND THE CONTINENT.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles (Lynn Regis); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour .. 1459

SUGAR IMPORTS.—Question, Mr. Gibson Bowles; Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour .. 1460

WORLD'S PRODUCTION OF BEET AND CANE SUGAR.—Question, Mr. Partington (Derbyshire, High Peak); Answer, Mr. Gerald Balfour 1461

ATTENDANCE AT CHURCH AS SCHOOLS ATTENDANCES.—Question, Mr. Frederick Wilson (Norfolk, Mid.); Answer, Sir William Anson 1461

BISHOP'S STORTFORD COLLEGE—DISMISSAL OF MR. KITCHENER.—Question, Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.); Answer, Sir William Anson 1462

Feb. 28.] Page

COAL EXPORTS—REVENUE AND EXEMPTIONS FROM COAL TAX.—Question, Sir Walter Plummer (Newcastle-on-Tyne); Answer, Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1462

CLOSING OF COOPERS HILL COLLEGE—INSTRUCTIONS FOR INDIAN FOREST SERVICE.—Question, Sir John Gorst (Cambridge University); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1465

INDIAN ARMY REORGANISATION—LORD KITCHENER'S PROPOSALS.—Question, Mr. Buchanan (Perthshire, E.); Answer, Mr. Brodrick 1465

DREDGING OF GALWAY DOCKS.—Question, Mr. Charles Devlin (Galway); Answer, Mr. Victor Cavendish 1465

SWINE FEVER—DR. GIBBON'S HERD—COMPENSATION FOR LOSSES.—Question, Mr. Ffrench; Answer, Mr. Atkinson 1466

YEOMANRY AMMUNITION ALLOWANCES.—Question, Sir John Kennaway (Devonshire, Honiton); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1467

SOMALILAND FIELD FORCE.—Question, Mr. Buchanan; Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1467

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

SKYE AND BARRA—ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE BATTERIES.—Question, Mr. John Dewar (Inverness); Answer, The Secretary to the Admiralty (Mr. Pretyman, Suffolk, Woodbridge) 1468

FLOGGING ON H.M.S. "BERWICK."—Questions, Mr. Swift MacNeill (Donegal, S.); Answers, Mr. Pretyman 1468

BLOEMFONTEIN FIRE.—Question, Mr. Whitley (Halifax); Answer, The Secretary of State for War (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.) 1469

COLONEL MORGAN.—Questions, Mr. Charles Hobhouse (Bristol, E.), and Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answers, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1469

ALTCAR RIFLE RANGE.—Question, Colonel Pilkington (Lancashire, Newton); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Foster 1470

VOLUNTEER CAPITATION GRANT.—Question, Mr. Fuller (Wiltshire, Wistbury); Answer, Mr. Arnold-Forster 1470

TRANSVAAL WAR LOAN.—Questions, Mr. McCrae (Edinburgh, E.), Mr. Whitley, Sir Albert Rollit (Islington, S.), and Dr. Macnamara (Camberwell, N.); Answers, The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington) 1471

TRANSVAAL MINING PROFITS.—Questions, Mr. Whitley and Mr. Rose (Cambridge, Newmarket); Answers, Mr. Lyttelton 1473

LASCAR SEAMEN'S CONVICTION AT SYDNEY.—Question, Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree (Bethnal Green, N.E.); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1473

LORD MILNER.—Question, Mr. John Ellis (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1474

Feb. 28.] Page

EDUCATION IN CEYLON.—Question, Mr. Weir (Ross and Cromarty); Answer, Mr. Lyttelton 1474

LORD CURZON.—Questions, Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answers, The Secretary of State for India (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford) 1475

COST OF BRITISH GARRISON IN EGYPT.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.).. 1476

FINANCE.—Question, Mr. McCrae; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) 1477

LONDON UNEMPLOYED.—Question, Dr. Macnamara; Answer, The President of the Local Government Board (Mr. Walter Long, Bristol, S) 1477

HEAVY MOTOR CAR REGULATIONS.—Questions, Mr. Gardner (Berkshire, Wokingham); Mr. Cathcart Wason (Orkney and Shetland), and General Laurie (Pembroke and Haverfordwest); Answers, Mr. Walter Long 1477

AUSTRALIAN MAIL SERVICE.—Questions, Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree and Mr. Cathcart Wason; Answers, The Postmaster-General (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton) 1479

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.—Questions, Mr. Sloan (Belfast, S.) and Mr. Swift MacNeill; Answers, The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Akers Douglas, Kent, St. Augustine's) 1480

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN BY-LAWS.—Question, Dr. Macnamara; Answer, Mr. Akers Douglas 1481

BOYS IN THE MERCANTILE MARINE.—Questions, Mr. Charles McArthur; Answers, The President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) .. 1481

UNDERFED CHILDREN.—Questions, Dr. Macnamara; Answers, The Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education (Sir William Anson, Oxford University) 1483

WATER SUPPLY FOR ROSS-SHIRE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—Question, Mr. Weir; Answer, The Lord-Advocate (Mr. Scott Dickson, Glasgow, Bridgton) 1484

NORWEGIAN TRAWLERS IN DORNOCK FORTH.—Questions, Mr. Weir, and Captain Ellise (St. Andrews Burghs); Answers, Mr. Scott Dickson 1484

LONGFORD MAGISTRACY.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell (Longford, N.); Answer, The Attorney-General for Ireland (Mr. Atkinson, Londonderry, N.) .. 1485

EXPENDITURE ON POLICE REMOVALS IN COUNTY LONGFORD.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Atkinson 1458

IRISH NATIONAL SCHOOL TEACHERS PENSION FUND.—Question, Mr. Sloan; Answer, The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Victor Cavendish, Derbyshire, W.) 1485

DUNDRUM ASYLUM SHOEMAKER.—Questions, Mr. Mooney (Dublin County, S.); Mr. Hayden (Roscommon, S.), and Mr. Crooks (Woolwich); Answers, Mr. Atkinson 1486

KERRY COUNTY COUNCIL AUDIT.—Question, Mr. Thomas O'Donnell (Kerry, W.); Answer, Mr. Atkinson 1487

Feb. 28.] Page

CAPTAIN CALDBECK'S ESTATE, QUEEN'S COUNTY.—Question, Mr. Delany (Queen's County, Ossory); Answer, Mr. Atkinson 1488

NEW IRISH LOCAL GOVERNMENT ORDERS.—Questions, Mr. Cullinan (Tipperary, S.) and Mr. Flavin (Kerry, N.); Answers, Mr. Atkinson 1489

CLAUSE 6 OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) AMENDMENT ACT, 1902.—Question, Mr. Cullinan; Answer, Mr. Atkinson 1490

DRAINAGE OF THE LIFFEY.—Question, Mr. J. P. Farrell; Answer, Mr. Victor Cavendish 1490

SIR ANTONY MACDONNELL.—Question, Mr. Whitley; Answer, The Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) .. 1491

MARINE INSURANCE (CODIFICATION) BILL.—Question, Mr. Charles McArthur; Answer, Mr. A. J. Balfour 1491

ALIENS IN IRELAND.—Questions, Mr. Sloan and Mr. Delany; Answers, Mr. A. J. Balfour 1491

NEW MEMBER SWORN.—John Sutherland Harmood-Banner, esquire, for the Parliamentary Borough of Liverpool (Everton Division) 1492

SELECTION (UNOPPOSED BILL COMMITTEE) (PANEL).—Mr. WODEHOUSE reported from the Committee of Selection; That they had selected the following eight Members to be the Panel to serve on Unopposed Bill Committees under Standing Order No. 109:—Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. Carvill, Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. Paulton, Mr. Parker Smith, Mr. Worsley-Taylor, Mr. Crombie, and Mr. Bousfield. 1492

Report to lie upon the Table.

SELECTION (STANDING COMMITTEES) (CHAIRMEN'S PANEL).—Mr. WODEHOUSE reported from the Committee of Selection; That they had selected the following six Members to be the Chairmen's Panel and to serve as Chairmen of the two Standing Committees to be appointed under Standing Order No. 49:—Mr. John Ellis, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Sir James Ferguson, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, Mr. Laurence Hardy, and Mr. Stuart-Wortley 1492

Report to lie upon the Table.

SELECTION (PRIVATE LEGISLATION PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899) (COMMISSIONERS).—Mr. WODEHOUSE reported from the Committee of Selection That in pursuance of the provisions of The Private Legislation Procedur (Scotland) Act, 1899, they had selected the following fifteen Members to form the Parliamentary Panel of Members of this House to act as Commissioners:—Mr. Charles Hobhouse, Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. A. K. Loyd, Mr. McCrae, Mr. William Maxwell, Mr. Pym, Mr. Parker Smith, Sir Walter Thorburn, Sir John Tuke, Mr. Levy, Mr. James Reid, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. John Wilson (Falkirk), Mr. Wylie, and Mr. Charles Douglas 1493

Report to lie upon the Table.

MESSAGE FROM THE LORDS.—That they have passed a Bill, intituled, "An Act to amend the Law relating to the falsification of Seamen's and Soldiers' Certificates of Service or Discharge, and to false statements made, used, or given in connection with Entry or Enlistment into His Majesty's Naval, Militiary, or Marine Forces." [Seamen's and Soldiers' False Characters Bill [Lords.]] 1493

NEW BILLS.

Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment Bill.—"To amend the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1894 to 1900," presented by Mr. Louis Sinclair; supported by Sir Frederick Carne Rasch; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed [Bill 67] 1493

Minister of Commerce and Industry Bill.—"To establish a Bureau for a Minister of Commerce and Industry," presented by Mr. Louis Sinclair; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed [Bill 68] .. 1493

Trawlers' Certificates Suspension Bill.—"To enable Courts to suspend the Certificates of Trawlers convicted of illegal trawling," presented by Mr. Weir; supported by Mr. Ainsworth, Mr. Leveson-Gower, Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Harmsworth, Sir Arthur Bignold, Mr. Cathcart Wason and Mr. Black; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, March 8th, and to be printed. [Bill 69] 1494

Closing of Licensed Premises (Christmas Day) (Ireland) Bill.—"To amend the Law as to the hours of closing of Licensed Premises on Christmas Day in Ireland," presented by Mr. Nannetti; supported by Mr. Harrington, Mr. Mooney, Mr. Field, Mr. Charles Devlin, Mr. Sloan, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, Mr. Joyce, Mr. Crean, Mr. Waldron, Mr. O'Mara and Mr. John Gordon; to be read a second time upon Monday, March 20th, and to be printed. [Bill 70] 1494

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [February 27th] to Main Question [February 14], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

> "At the end of the Question to add the words, 'But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that Your Majesty's Government in committing the country to the policy of the Brussels Sugar Convention have indicted heavy losses upon trade, diminished employment of labour, enormously increased the cost of a necessary food to consumers, without any compensatory advantage; and we humbly submit to Your Majesty that these evil results call for an immediate remedy; and that the Convention should be denounced at the earliest possible moment.'" —(Mr. Kearley.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. Lloyd-George (Carnarvon Boroughs) 1495
Mr. Lawrence (Liverpool, Abercromby) 1503
Mr. McKenna (Monmouthshire, N.) 1507
Sir Walter Thorburn (Peebles and Selkirk) 1511
Mr. Bryce (Aberdeen, S.) 1515
The Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade (Mr. Bonar Law, Glasgow, Blackfriars) 1521
Mr. Lough (Islington, W.) 1533
Mr. David Morgan (Essex, Walthamstow) 1543
Sir James Joicey (Durham, Barnard Castle) 1544
Mr. James Reid (Greenock) 1548
Mr. Ashton (Bedfordshire, Luton) 1550

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).—Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [27th February] to Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign.

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that Your Majesty's Government in committing the country to the policy of the Brussels Sugar Convention have inflicted heavy losses upon trade, diminished employment of labour, enormously increased the cost of a necessary food to consumers, without any compensatory advantage; and we humbly submit to Your Majesty that these evil results call for an immediate remedy; and that the Convention should be denounced at the earliest possible moment.'" —(Mr. Kearley.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Mr. Ashton 1552
Mr. Seymour Ormsby-Gore (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough) 1556
Mr. Crooks (Woolwich) 1560
Mr. Louis Sinclair (Essex, Romford) 1562
Mr. Sydney Buxton (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) 1564
The President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) 1750
Mr. Runciman (Dewsbury) 1579

Feb. 28.] Page

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 211; Noes, 256. (Division List No. 10.)

Main Question again proposed.

Debate arising; and, it being after Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF MR. WYNDHAM.—Questions, Mr. Runciman and Mr. Winston Churchill; Answer, Sir A. Acland Hood 1586

Adjourned at twelve minutes after Twelve o'clock.

END OF TABLE OF CONTENTS TO VOLUME CXLI.

An Asterisk ( ) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member.

THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

(AUTHORISED EDITION)

IN THE

SIXTH SESSION OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH PARLIAMENT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND, IN THE FIFTH YEAR OF THE REIGN OF

HIS MAJESTY KING EDWARD VII.

FIRST VOLUME OF SESSION.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, 14th February, 1905.

BLACK ROD.

The LORD GREAT CHAMBERLAIN acquainted the House "That His Majesty had appointed Admiral Sir Henry Frederick Stephenson, K.C.B., G.C.V.O., to be Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod in the room of General Sir Michael Anthony Shrapnel Biddulph, G.C.B., deceased, and that he was at the door ready to receive their Lordships' commands"; whereupon the House directed he should be called in; accordingly he was called in and officiated in his place.

THE KING'S SPEECH.

THE KING, being seated on the Throne, and the Commons being at the Bar with their Speaker, His Majesty was pleased to make a most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, and then retired.

His Majesty's Speech was as follows:—

My Lords and Gentlemen,

My relations with foreign Powers continue to be of a friendly description.

It gave Me particular satisfaction to receive as My guests during the past autumn the King and Queen of Portugal, a country which has for centuries been connected with Great Britain by ties of the closest friendship.

The war which has been in progress since February last between Russia and Japan unhappily continues. My Government have been careful to observe in the strictest manner the obligations incumbent upon a neutral Power.

The condition of the Balkan Peninsula continues to give cause for anxiety. The measures adopted at the instance of the Austro-Hungarian and Russian Governments have been instrumental in bringing about some amelioration of the state of the disturbed districts. Progress has notably been made in the reorganisation of the gendarmerie, to which officers belonging to My Army have contributed valuable assistance. These measures have still to be supplemented by radical reforms, especially of the financial system, before any permanent improvements can be effected in the administration of these provinces of the Turkish Empire. I note with satisfaction that the Austro-Hungarian and Russian Governments have lately addressed to the Porte proposals for this purpose. My Government is in communication with those of the other Powers mainly concerned upon this important subject.

The Convention entered into between My Government and that of the French Republic for the amicable settlement of questions involving the interests of both countries has been approved by the French Legislature and duly ratified. It will, I believe, operate in a manner advantageous to both countries, while it cannot fail to strengthen the friendly relations which so happily subsist between them.

Agreements, under which international questions of a certain class will be referred to arbitration, have been concluded between My Government and the Governments of Sweden and Norway, Portugal, and Switzerland.

My Government has also come to an Agreement with that of Russia under which an International Commission of Inquiry, assembled in comformity with the principles of The Hague Convention of 1899, has been entrusted with the duty of investigating the circumstances connected with the disaster to British trawlers which resulted from the action of the Russian fleet in the North Sea; and of apportioning the responsibility for this deplorable incident.

The steps to be taken for establishing a Representative Constitution in the Transvaal are receiving the earnest consideration of My Government and of those administering the Colony, and will, I hope, result in substantial progress towards the ultimate goal of complete self-government.

An Agreement, the provisions of which are calculated to place the relations of the Tibetan Government and the Government of India on a satisfactory footing, was concluded at Lhasa on the 7th September. The great difficulties which the Mission encountered were brilliantly surmounted by the civil and military authorities responsible for its conduct.

The Chinese Government have sent a Commissioner to Calcutta to negotiate a Convention of Adhesion on their part to the Agreement with the Tibetan Government. Papers on the subject have been laid before you.

The Amir of Afghanistan has sent his son, the Sirdar Inayatulla, to pay a complimentary visit to the Viceroy and Governor-General of India at Calcutta, and a high officer of the Government of India has been deputed to Cabul to discuss with His Highness the Amir questions affecting the relations of the two Governments.

A situation has arisen connected with the administration of the property belonging to certain ecclesiastical bodies in Scotland which requires legislative intervention. With a view to the wise consideration of such a measure I have appointed Commissioners, who are engaged in making an inquiry into all the circumstances of the case, and whose Report may enable you to frame such proposals as will, I trust, tend to the efficient administration of ecclesiastical funds, and the promotion of peace and goodwill.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

The Estimates for the service of the ensuing year will be laid before you. They have been framed with the utmost economy which the circumstances of the present time admit.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Your attention will be directed to proposals for diminishing the anomalies in the present arrangement of electoral areas which are largely due to the growth and movement of population in recent years.

A Bill to mitigate the evils arising out of alien immigration into the United Kingdom will be laid before you.

Legislation will be submitted to you for the establishment of authorities to deal with the question of the unemployed. I have noticed, with profound regret and sympathy, the abnormal distress which has been caused by the want of employment during the present winter. Arrangements of a temporary character have been made to meet the difficulty, but it is expedient now to provide machinery for this purpose of a more permanent character.

You have already partially considered provisions for amending the laws relating to Education in Scotland. They will again be brought before you.

A Bill to amend and extend the Workmen's Compensation Acts will be submitted for your consideration.

Proposals for improving the status of the Local Government Board and the Board of Trade, and for establishing a Minister of Commerce and Industry, will be laid before you.

Bills will also be introduced for amending the law with respect to Valuation Authorities, and the procedure for making Valuations; for consolidating the enactments relating to Naval Prize of War; for amending the law relating to the notification of industrial accidents; for the renewal of the Agricultural Rates Acts and other temporary Acts affecting certain classes of ratepayers; for the prevention of the adulteration of butter; and for the amendment of the law with regard to cases stated for the Court of Crown Cases reserved.

I pray that Providence may guide all your deliberations for the good of My people.

SAT FIRST.

The Earl of Hardwicke sat first in Parliament after the death of his nephew.

The Viscount Ridley sat first in Parliament after the death of his father.

The Lord Ranfurly (E. Ranfurly) took the oath.

Watkin Herbert Lord Bishop of Bangor was (in the usual manner) introduced.

The Lord Clinton sat first in Parliament after the death of his father.

ROLL OF THE LORDS.

Garter King of Arms attending, delivered at the Table (in the usual manner) a List of the Lords Temporal in the Sixth Session of the Twenty-seventh Parliament of the United Kingdom. The same was ordered to lie on the Table.

SELECT VESTRIES.

Bill, pro formâ, read 1ª.

ADDRESS IN REPLY TO HIS MAJESTY'S MOST GRACIOUS SPEECH.

*THE MARQUESS OF WINCHESTER: My Lords, I rise to move that an humble Address be presented to His Majesty in reply to the gracious Speech from the Throne. Happily, the paragraph which we always look forward to at the commencement of the gracious Speech appears again this year—"My relations with foreign Powers continue to be of a friendly description." However familiar that paragraph may be, it is nevertheless received by the people of this great Empire with heartfelt thankfulness. The recent visit of their Majesties the King and Queen of Portugal to this country has been another guarantee of the friendly relations which have long subsisted between that kingdom and the people of this country.

The great struggle which is now entering into its second year of existence in the Far East has occupied the attention of all. There was a time when the early successes of our ally Japan were described as being the results of a combination of fanaticism and civilisation. I think the recent history of the war has shown that there is nothing of fanaticism about it, and that it is the outcome of an altruistic spirit, possessed by the Japanese in a more than common degree. Their general treatment of the negotiations which preceded the war, and of those prisoners of war who have fallen into their hands, has been of such a nature as to commend itself to the civilised nations of the world. I think the alliance which this country made with Japan has been largely instrumental in keeping the peace of the world and in securing the integrity of the Chinese Empire during this great struggle. During the time that the war has been in operation the responsibility of a neutral Power has been the chief thing to occupy the attention of His Majesty's Ministers. At the commencement of the war, you will remember, Russia applied rather wide terms to articles contraband of war, especially in the case of coal, which were not strictly in accordance with the views held by His Majesty's Government, who preferred to accept the interpretations contained in the Treaty of Paris rather than the wider terms which the Russian Government proposed. My Lords, there never can be any question of mediation by the Powers in this great struggle, however much we may deplore the sacrifice and loss of life, so long as it is not desired by either of the belligerents.

The condition of the Balkan Peninsula has so often occupied the attention of this House, and has been so ably dealt with on many occasions by noble Lords who have had peculiar facilities for becoming well versed in this question, that I feel I should weary your Lordships in traversing the ground again; but I should like to say a few words with reference to the recent Agreement made between Austria and Russia. Your Lordships may remember that in 1902 Count Lamsdorff visited Vienna, and as a result of that visit we had what was known as the Vienna Programme. This did not, however, produce the results that it was hoped it would produce, for in the spring of 1903 there was a serious rising of the insurgents and rather harsh treatment of them by the Turkish troops, which led to several debates in this Chamber. After that Russia and Austria came to an agreement which is known as the Mürzsteg Agreement. This has entailed the appointment of a Russian and an Austrian official, whose duty it is to accompany the Inspector-General whereever he goes, and report upon the working of the reforms generally throughout the country. Although this scheme has not, perhaps, met with the entire success which the framers of it desired, there has been, owing to the division of the country into districts and the action of the officers of the gendarmerie, considerable amelioration in the treatment of these unhappy people. An especially satisfactory feature, so far as this country is concerned, is that the Province of Djama, which is under the able direction of Colonel Fairholme, late Military Attaché to the Court of Vienna, is in a much more satisfactory condition than it has been before.

I turn from this well-worn topic to the paragraph in the gracious Speech with reference to the establishment of a representative Constitution in the Transvaal. Your Lordships will agree with me that that is a very difficult question to solve, and one which must be approached with the very greatest care. The immediate establishment of representative government is not the view held by His Majesty's Ministers. There are precedents for various forms of government in South Africa. There is the form of an elective majority subject to an executive veto, which existed in the Cape in the early fifties, and from then to 1872, and afterwards the same system existed in Natal. It may not be the easiest form of government, perhaps, but it has this great advantage, that it does bring the people forward to express their views, and thereby it enables those who are charged with the maintenance of the Government of the country to see both sides of the question.

I turn to what concerns the Government of India. It has always been the policy of His Majesty's Government to maintain friendly relations with neighbouring States on the Indian frontier, and in this connection I am sure it is a great satisfaction to see that the Amir of Afghanistan has sent his son, the Sirdah Inayatulla, to Calcutta, and that His Highness has permitted a visit to be paid him at Cabul by an experienced officer of the Government of India to discuss questions affecting the relations of the two Governments. We hope that this will result in a continuance of those neighbourly relations which have existed with the State of Afghanistan in the past.

The question of alien immigration will again occupy the attention of Parliament during the coming session. The question is a far-reaching one. As your Lordships know, it occupied the attention of a Special Committee as long ago as 1888, and that Committee reported in 1889. I think it will be within your Lordships' recollection that the late Marquess of Salisbury introduced legislation into this House, I think in 1894, dealing with the subject. That Bill, however, did not get very far. In 1898 the Unionist Government again introduced legislation on this subject, and in 1903 they appointed a Royal Commission, presided over by the noble and learned Lord who sits below me, to inquire into it. It may strike some noble Lords who can trace their lineage back to the landing of William the Conqueror as somewhat strange to find that they have been regarded by that Commission as interloping aliens, for I find on the first page—

> "The alien immigrant is no newcomer to this country. Following the Norman Conquest many foreigners sought a home here."

Nevertheless, my Lords, those of us who are satisfied that our lineage carries us back to that far-off day, will derive some comfort from finding that we are not described as either criminal or undesirable. Those who represent constituencies in this country which are pressed in the fields of the lower forms of industry, find that the competition of alien immigrants does affect them very seriously. In districts in the East End of London, and in some of our larger cities, the alien immigrant is found in large and ever-increasing numbers. I know that this is a question which raises many issues, and it has raised the issue to which I have just referred, as to who are desirable immigrants and who are not. The proposals of the Government will be limited to that class of aliens who are refused admission into the United States because they are paupers, and are landed on the first piece of land at which the ship touches, and that is in all probability this country. We have the evidence of His Majesty's Judges and of police magistrates that the criminal alien is a thoroughly undesirable person, and I trust that the Bill which His Majesty's Government will introduce for the consideration of Parliament, and which will deal with this class of alien, will receive your earnest consideration.

The question of the unemployed must, I think, interest all. It is one which is not confined entirely to this country. Other countries — America and Germany especially—have their unemployed problem, and I believe they are carefully watching the working of the scheme which was started this year by the President of the Local Government Board with a view to ameliorating the position of those who, unfortunately, are unable to find employment. The position of the pauper is this. He is not born to pauperism. He becomes a pauper owing, possibly, to long periods of frost or trade depression, which make it impossible for him to obtain work. He gradually sinks lower and lower in the social scale until he becomes what may be called the flotsam and jetsam of a great city, drifting here and there, but unable to obtain any work, and almost unable to do any when he obtains it. The great thing is to have some machinery by means of which these men can be prevented from falling into that deplorable position, and I think the constitution of a Central Committee in London, composed of representatives of the various boroughs together with representatives of certain charitable organisations, has done untold good for the case of the unemployed.

Perhaps it might interest your Lordships to hear my own personal experience of employing these unfortunate people. In order to relieve the great pressure which existed in Southampton among the unemployed, I took some twenty men from the Church Army for the purpose of afforestation and other estate work. These men, by the way in which they have attended to their work and the willingness with which they have carried it out, have more than recompensed me for the little I was able to do for them. Their condition immediately improved. They came in a ragged and shoeless condition, and although they have only been working there since the beginning of January, they look quite as well as any of the ordinary employees on my estate, who, I think, enjoy always regular work and good wages. Moreover, these men have done everything in their power to rehabilitate themselves as citizens. The money which they have earned has been spent in clothing themselves properly, and they have also, I am glad to say, so far as the drink question is concerned, behaved in a most exemplary manner. I have had no trouble at all with them. They have lodged in the cottages, and the cottagers themselves speak very highly of them. The unemployed question is a very difficult one, and I am afraid we shall frequently have to face it during severe winters. Therefore, I trust that the appointment by the President of the Local Government Board of a Central Committee will prove to be a permanent piece of machinery, inestimable in its advantages to this class.

A Bill to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act will be presented. The Act has been in force for some years now and has proved of great value to the working classes, but owing to certain litigation which has arisen it is necessary that various Amendments should be made, and this is the reason why a Bill is to be presented again this session dealing with this subject. Proposals for improving the status of the Local Government Board and the Board of Trade and for establishing a Minister of Commerce and Industry will be laid before you, but I do not intend to trouble your Lordships with any remarks upon these proposals. There will also be a Bill to amend the law with respect to valuation authorities and the procedure for making valuations. At the present time, as your Lordships are aware, there are various bodies dealing with assessments in this country. There is the borough council, the county council, and the board of guardians. The idea is that this work should be under one authority, so as to secure equality of assessments of property. The renewal of the Agricultural Rates Act is merely the renewal of a measure with which your Lordships are thoroughly acquainted, and which needs no words of explanation from me.

The proposal for the amendment of the law with regard to cases stated for the Court of Crown Cases Reserved is the result of an unfortunate case which attracted considerable attention recently and which was one of the saddest we have ever read. As a result of that case a Bill will be presented which will enable a Court to reverse the decisions of a Judge if he has refused to state a case. I could not commence my speech this evening with the plea for indulgence which is usual on these occasions on the ground of addressing your Lordships for the first time, for I had forfeited my "maiden allowance" by advocating a policy which I know does not meet with the approval of noble Lords opposite, but I am sure the House will accept my most sincere thanks for the reception which they have given to me, and for the indulgence with which my remarks have been listened to. I beg to move.

LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE: My Lords, I must preface my remarks by craving to the fullest extent that kind indulgence which your Lordships invariably extend on these occasions to those to whom has been entrusted the honourable but somewhat onerous task of moving and seconding the Address in reply to the gracious Speech from the Throne. Your Lordships will have observed with satisfaction that the Chinese Government have sent a Commissioner to Calcutta to negotiate a Convention of Adhesion on their part to the Agreement with Tibet, which was concluded at Lhasa in September. My Lords, it was only owing to the action of the Tibetans in disregarding their obligations under the Convention of 1890 and the Trade Regulations of 1893, in treating the Government of India with studied insolence by repeated delays, and in refusing to send Ambassadors of sufficient importance to treat with the Commissioner who had been appointed to regulate the matter, that His Majesty's Government determined towards the end of 1903 to send a Mission to Gyangtze, which Mission, as your Lordships are well aware, was forced eventually to proceed to Lhasa.

This expedition naturally created much interest in the public mind. It was felt that this was not a mere frontier war in which we were engaging to punish some marauding tribe. It was something much more serious and much more wonderful than that. It was a journey into an unknown land, into Tibet the Mystic, the Mysterious, of which strange travellers' tales were told, but of which little or nothing was known with certainty. It was a visit to be paid to the Grand Lama in his palace fortress to convince his ignorant and superstitious followers that not even a Buddha re-incarnate could resist the power of Britain. My Lords, we followed with intense interest the steps of our soldiers as they crossed the snow-clad passes of the forbidden land. We saw them attacked and attacked again, and, ever victorious, pursuing their way till the goal was reached, and Lhasa, the Unknown, the Holy City, lay before them.

The description, my Lords, reads like a page from some fairy tale. The hill rising abruptly from the plain whereon stands the mighty Palace of the Potolah, a gigantic pile with its innumerable windows, its countless terraces, rising tier above tier; its golden cupolas, gleaming in the Eastern sun, while its yellow-robed monks flit peacefully to and fro murmuring their ceaseless prayer. For six short weeks our newspapers teemed with accounts of the strange city, hitherto unknown to Europeans, and then, my Lords, His Majesty's Government decided that the curtain which they had raised must be dropped again, and Lhasa sank back into the darkness in which she has been enveloped for centuries. But in the meantime, my Lords, the objects of the expedition had been gained, and the Tibetans have learnt that England will not allow solemn obligations to be lightly disregarded, and that she has the power, as well as the will, if she deems it necessary, to take steps to enforce them. And, my Lords, the world at large has learnt that while England insists that others should be bound by their obligations, she is equally ready herself to abide by the undertaking she has given. She has not taken advantage of her unique position at Lhasa to alter by one jot or one tittle the conditions that were laid down when His Majesty's Government sanctioned the expedition in November, 1903, when it was said—

> "As soon as reparation is obtained, the Mission will be withdrawn."

And this was further emphasised by the noble Marquess the Leader of the House, a few days later, for the benefit of the Russian Ambassador in these words—

> "I had therefore wished that His Excellency should be able to explain that the measures we were taking did not denote any intention on our part to occupy or annex territory."

And apart from all this, my Lords, we must not forget the new page of glory which has been added to the annals of the Army in India by the bravery and endurance shown by the gallant troops under the command of General Macdonald.

I cannot pass from this subject without rendering homage to the consummate skill with which the arduous work of concluding the Agreement with the Tibetans was conducted by Sir Frank Younghusband. The safety of the Mission depended on its departure from Lhasa in time to regain India before its way was blocked by the winter snows, and in the short time at his disposal he had, in the absence of the Grand Lama, who had fled, to deal with disorganised and superstitious officials, who would only treat with him on certain propitious days, and whose views as to the best manner to raise the money required to pay the indemnity demanded were not such as would recommend themselves to the highest financial authorities in this country. Yet, in spite of these difficulties, he managed to remain on the best possible terms with Government and people of Tibet alike, and to conclude an Agreement whose only fault appears to be that it is too favourable to England. But, my Lords, if we heave a sigh of regret that His Majesty's Government have decided that Lhasa is still outside the sphere of British influence, and that the Chumbi Valley is not to remain permanently in our possession, let us be proud of the fact that in spite of all temptations to the contrary, they determined to abide by the pledges they had given. And, my Lords, do not let us forget that if we abstain from interference in the internal affairs of Tibet, it is only on the condition that similar abstention is practised by other Powers, and that, should occasion arise, where Englishmen have been once, there they can go again.

Let me now, my Lords, turn to another subject. I think nothing shows more clearly the progress which has been made in the acceptation of the principle of arbitration than the Commission which is now sitting in Paris to inquire into the question of the terrible event which took place last autumn during the passage of the Russian Baltic Fleet through the North Sea, and to apportion the blame for the slaughter of British seamen and the destruction of British property. Rarely have the people of this country been so deeply moved as when the news of the disaster reached them; seldom have they shown more calm or self-restraint; and I think, my Lords, that His Majesty's Government will be the first to acknowledge that this calm and this self-restraint were of the greatest assistance to them in the very delicate negotiations which were so successfully carried on by the noble Marquess, and which fortunately resulted in a peaceful solution being found. And, my Lords, I think we may congratulate ourselves especially that this Commission is holding its sittings in Paris, under the presidency of a distinguished French Admiral. We all rejoice at everything which tends to improve and cement the good relations which now so happily exist between this country and the French Republic, and I am sure, my Lords, that we are all much gratified to learn from the gracious Speech that the Convention entered into between His Majesty's Government and that of the French Republic for the amicable settlement of questions involving the interests of both counties has been approved by the French Legislature and duly ratified.

My Lords, reference is made in the Speech from the Throne to the Commission which has been appointed, under the Presidency of Lord Elgin, to inquire whether legislation is necessary, and, if so, what that legislation should be, in the unhappy dispute which has arisen between two branches of the Presbyterian Church in Scotland. I think noble Lords from beyond the Tweed will bear me out when I say that it is difficult for noble Lords not connected with Scotland to realise the consternation and surprise caused by the decision of your Lordships' House in that historic case. When some years ago the Free Church, by 643 votes against twenty-seven, decided to amalgamate with the United Presbyterian Church, I think most people considered that both bodies were heartily to be congratulated on a union which must effect economy and tend to efficiency, and which they believed must further the advancement of religion by diminishing the number of those unhappy divisions which unfortunately divide Christians in this country; they quite overlooked, however, a small but resolute body of men, represented by the minority of twenty-seven, who strenuously affirmed that the Free Church had no power to unite with a body holding the doctrines of the United Presbyterian Church. I fear, my Lords, that the majority attempted to ride rough-shod over these men, and that no compromise was suggested which would have allowed them to retain a reasonable portion of the funds of the Church. The consequence was that legal proceedings were instituted which, by a decision of your Lordships' House in a test case, proved that the minority was in the right, and that the whole funds of the Church belonged to them. We cannot but feel some sympathy and some admiration for these men who contended for what they held to be the faith delivered to their fathers, and who, with little money, fought an uphill battle from Court to Court, till at last it was crowned with success in your Lordships' House. But the position so created was intolerable. On the one hand, a whole Church driven penniless into the wilderness; on the other twenty-four ministers with scanty flocks, principally in the Highlands, in possession of over £1,000,000 in money, besides property valued at several millions more, scattered throughout the length and breadth of Scotland, from John o' Groats to Solway Firth. They have manses without ministers, churches without congregations, academical chairs without professors, colleges without students, missions without directors.

It is evident that some way out of the impasse must be found, and this the Commission is trying to do, if in the meantime the "Wee Kirk," as it is lovingly called by its adherents, does not cut the Gordian knot by removing the money in dispute beyond the jurisdiction of the Courts. But, my Lords, let us hope that the good sense and good feeling for which Scotsmen are noted will aid the Commission in finding a solution of the difficulty which will be honourable and satisfactory to both parties; and, as I have Scotch blood in my veins, may I express the hope that out of evil good may come, and that in the end we may not only see reconciliation between the two conflicting parties, but that some effort may be made for the reunion of both with the Church of Scotland, from which they have both sprung, with which both hold so much in common, and to which they both owe the establishment of the Presbyterian form of Government in Scotland, for which their forefathers, the Covenanters, were ready to sacrifice both their goods and their lives.

Whilst I am on the subject of Scotland, I should like to refer very briefly to the Bill which is to be re-introduced dealing with education in that country. Your Lordships are aware that satisfactory progress was made with it last year in another place, but time did not allow of its completion. It is really a complement to the Education Statute of 1902 for England and Wales, but fortunately in this Bill the odium theologicum, which played such a part in the discussion of that measure, will not be aroused, as Scotsmen, though they are keen theologians, are fortunately agreed as to the religious pabulum which it is desirable to give to their children. There is, therefore, every reason to hope that this measure, which will be of immense service to the cause of education in Scotland, may be passed into law this session.

Amongst the domestic legislation foreshadowed in the gracious Speech, I am glad to see that the place of honour is occupied by a Bill which is euphemistically termed "a proposal for diminishing the anomalies prevailing in the present arrangement of electoral areas, largely due to the growth and movement of population of late years." There is no Party in the country, my Lords, which ought not to rejoice at the announcement that this Bill is to be introduced, and, I trust, pressed forward till it is passed into law. It must appeal to noble Lords on this side of the House, because nearly every Unionist Member stands pledged to a measure which will, to a certain extent at least, remove the glaring anomalies which exist in our system of representation. I doubt not that it will appeal to noble Lords opposite, for it is an attempt to reduce into practice a catchword which is heard on every Liberal platform, "One vote, one value." I think it will appeal to them still more forcibly because they know that a Redistribution Bill is invariably postponed till a Parliament is well advanced in old age, and that if they assist the Government to the best of their ability to pass it into law, they may be hastening the day of that dissolution from which they expect so much. And, my Lords, if I may say a word for my native land, it appeals above all to every Irish Unionist. It would be in the highest degree unseemly were I, in the position I occupy to-night, to criticise the action of His Majesty's Government in that country; but this I may say, that the announcement of the introduction of this measure will be glad tidings to every loyal man in the sister isle, and we shall feel that when Ireland's representation is reduced to what is her proper number on the basis of population, there will be less temptation for either Party to court the Nationalist vote, or to play the fatal game of killing Home Rule with kindness.

My Lords, there is no subject to which more attention has been directed during the last twelve months, on which more speeches have been made, on which more pamphlets have been written, than that of the condition of the commerce and industries of this kingdom. I do not wish this evening even to approach the question of the respective merits and demerits of free imports and Protection, but there is an announcement in the gracious Speech which must gratify all who are interested in this great question, whatever may be their political views. It is the proposal to create a Minister of Commerce and Industry. For some time it has been considered desirable that the status of the Local Government Board and the Board of Trade should be improved with a view to convert these offices into offices of the first class, which at present they are not. Last year a Departmental Committee inquired into and reported on the subject, and as legislation is required to carry out its recommendations, it is proposed to introduce a Bill dealing with the subject. I do not think I am wrong in saying that this will probably secure the approval of your Lordships on both sides of the House.

My Lords, I must not detain you longer. The duty of the proposer and seconder of the Address is, if I may paraphrase the words of Doctor Pangloss, to declare that the best of all possible measures are being introduced by the best of all possible Governments. But on the present occasion I think these measures speak for themselves, and that they will commend themselves, not only to your Lordships' House, but to the sober, good sense of the people of this country. It only remains for me, my Lords, to thank you very heartily for the patience with which you have listened to me, and formally to second the Address.

*EARL SPENCER: My Lords, in commencing the somewhat difficult task that has always fallen to the person who stands in my position in this House, I will on this occasion follow precedent by referring to the speeches of the mover and seconder of the Address. The mover, if I may venture so to call him, is an old friend whom I have known in a very different sphere. If he has in this House the same valour, the same energy, the same independence which brought him always to the front where I knew him, your Lordships will find him a very interesting and useful fellow-member. The seconder of the Address not only used effectively his privilege as a representative of Ireland, but as one having some Scottish blood he has entered into one of the most difficult and intricate questions which have engaged the attention of the country for many years. I admired the noble Lord's courage; I admired the language and the grace of his speech, and I feel that he followed the traditions of many Irishmen in the way in which he put forward his views.

Coming to the King's Speech, I rejoice, like the noble Lord, in the customary first paragraph in which there has happily been only the trifling variation of one or two words for many years past. Nothing is more calculated to make us rejoice than the feeling that this country is in friendly relations with other nations. We all rejoice that the well-known hospitality of Their Majesties enabled a visit to be made to this country by the King and Queen of Portugal, a visit which will cement still further the ties between us and our ancient ally. The next paragraph of the gracious Speech refers to a subject of intensely painful interest. We have all watched for many months past the progress of the terrible war in the East, the losses at sea and the still greater losses occurring in collisions between mighty forces on land. I hardly know whether in the history of the world such enormous forces have ever been brought together. We lament that terrible war; we admire the courage, patriotism, and energy of those who have fought on both sides; but I am sure there is no more earnest desire among the people of this country at this moment than to see some prospect of an end to this terrible combat. I am quite aware of the difficulty and delicacy of any intervention in such a matter; but I trust His Majesty's Government will not lose any fair and proper opportunity which may occur with other Powers of trying to bring this conflict to a peaceful termination.

Whenever a great war like this occurs each belligerent is apt to take his own view as to belligerent rights and neutral rights. This war was no exception to that rule. Russia and Japan alike claimed certain rights; and it became necessary for the Government to see that our rights as neutrals, which are of enormous importance to us, having regard to our extensive commerce and the way in which it might be affected in any future war in which we might ourselves be engaged, were respected. I believe His Majesty's Government, under the guidance of the noble Marquess opposite, dealt with these subjects with firmness and at the same time with great prudence and patience. I venture to think he was able to secure for us the recognition of the rights claimed and to conduct extremely difficult negotiations without any rupture with other Powers.

I have read the paragraph referring to Macedonia in the gracious Speech with some disappointment. It contains a confession that very little has been done; and it seems to me almost a scandal that after so many years the Turkish Government has still been blind to its own interests and has not consented to bring into force changes and reforms so absolutely necessary in order to remove the grievances existing among the populations under their control and to restore and establish peace and order among them. The noble Marquess said last February that if the schemes then before us should fail to produce the desired results, His Majesty's Government reserved to themselves entire liberty to take into consideration and propose alternative and more far-reaching measures. I hope the noble Marquess will confirm this assurance now, and, in concert with other Powers, will bring pressure to bear on the Turkish Government and try to bring about some prompt and thorough reform in the government of Macedonia.

It is satisfactory to learn, and I read with great pleasure, that the French Government have ratified the Convention between France and England. I heartily rejoice in that; and I sincerely trust that the difficulties which have existed for so many years between us, and which might at any moment have given rise to serious disagreement between us, will now be satisfactorily arranged, and that we shall enjoy that friendship which ought to exist between two great countries geographically placed so near each other, having so many interests in common, and having so many liberal and other views in which they are agreed. I notice with satisfaction that terms of arbitration have been settled with four other European Powers. I regret that, according to the public Press, there appear to been have difficulties in regard to the Convention with the United States. I hope there may have been exaggeration in what we have seen, and that possibly even now some arrangement may be come to whereby we may get the advantage of a Convention with that country.

I would refer in a very few words to what is called the North Sea incident. I do not think it would be desirable or proper to go into this matter in detail, because the whole question is now sub judice; but I may be allowed to say that I believe the Government have used their powers with the same prudence and patience in this matter as they did with regard to the difficulties connected with contraband; and that they have found a peaceable solution which may bring out all the facts and probably bring to a successful issue the whole matter.

Next I would refer to the passage in the Speech from the Throne relating to the Transvaal. I wish the Speech had given us more information, not only as to the proposals to which it refers as to the establishment of a representative constitution in the Transvaal, but also as to other matters of great importance in connection with South Africa. I think I am rightly representing the views of those with whom I generally act when I say that we attach enormous importance to getting, as soon as it can safely be done, that country under complete self-government. We do not know under the terms of the Speech what the Government proposals are, but we shall criticise them with care. The only curious thing I notice in the Speech with regard to this matter is that it refers to giving self-government to the Transvaal only. No mention whatever is made of the Orange Free State. That may be an involuntary omission; but the difficulties with regard to self-government, as far as I know, are far less in the Orange Free State than they are in the Transvaal. We are also most anxious to know how the Government in S. Africa are getting on in their work of putting back the people on to the farms. We further want to know the financial position in the Transvaal, and what is being done with regard to the large loans which were made during the time of the late Colonial Secretary. There is a certain £10,000,000 which was to be guaranteed or paid by the rich mine-owners of Johannesburg. We want to know what has been done about that, and when that sum is to be paid. These and other subjects, such as the number of troops that have been withdrawn from South Africa and the number of troops that remain there, are questions of great and material importance, which it will be necessary for Parliament to hear about before very long. On the question of Chinese labour, too, we shall certainly press for information as to how it has been carried out, and what has been the result of its introduction in the mines.

Now I come to the question of Tibet. I, of course, rejoice that the difficulties of our forces there have been overcome, and I join in admiration of the valour and perseverance of the soldiers who took part in the Mission. I also feel that the negotiations were carried out under enormous difficulties. Sir Frank Younghusband exceeded his instructions in many respects, but he did very fine work, and deserves our sincere thanks. In the despatches which have been submitted the Home Government blamed very seriously Sir Frank Younghusband in some particulars and praised him in others. Sir Frank Younghusband was placed in very great difficulties. He was directly instructed by the Government of India. We all know that that Government wanted to do a great deal more than the Secretary of State here did. I at once say that I believe it is of the utmost importance that any decision made by the Government and declared to be the policy of the Government should be adhered to. Sir Ernest Satow, our Minister at Peking, and our Ambassador at St. Petersburg, gave most specific assurances to the Chinese and Russian Governments as to what His Majesty's Government intended to do with regard to Tibet. His Majesty's Government most distinctly repudiated any notion of having an agent at Lhasa or of occupying permanently any of the territory of Tibet. But under the actual terms that were signed at Lhasa we practically were to occupy an important part of the country for seventy-five years. That was at once contrary both to the spirit and the letter of what the noble Marquess opposite stated; and for the sake of the public honour of this country it is absolutely indispensable that it should be laid down that the Home Government could not agree.

I still think that Sir Frank Younghusband may have been somewhat hardly treated, considering the enormous difficulties with which he had to contend, and the manner in which he overcame them. Knowing as he did the views of the Government of India, which directly gave him his instructions, I think that if anybody is to blame, it is rather the Government of India, who differed from the Home Government, than Sir Frank Younghusband. On this subject I have one more question I should like to ask. In His Majesty's Speech it is said that the Chinese Government have sent a Commissioner to Calcutta to negotiate a Convention of Adhesion on their part to the Treaty with Tibet. We should very much like to know what has happened about that. It is not stated that the Commissioner has arrived. There is another matter of considerable importance—namely, the question of Afghanistan. We do not know what the negotiations which are going on are, but we know that they may be of very great importance; and I hope that at the earliest possible date we shall have full Papers with regard to them.

Turning to the Scottish ecclesiastical question, it would be very improper for me to impugn the judgment of the highest Court of Appeal, but I do recognise that that judgment has had the most profound effect in Scotland, and stirred feeling to an enormous degree. It is absolutely necessary in some way to deal with the question, probably by an Act of Parliament; and I am glad that the Government have taken that view, and have appointed a Commission of Inquiry. I am afraid I must refer to other matters which are of considerable public importance. It is stated in His Majesty's Speech to another place that the Estimates "have been framed with the utmost economy which the circumstances of the present time admit." All I can say is that, whatever the circumstances have been, economy has not been the result. Moreover, we all know what "circumstances" mean, they mean the policy of the country, it is that which really influences and finally directs the financial requirements of the country. Of late years we have seen time after time a policy pursued which has led to gigantic expenditure, which has stopped many improvements, and has affected the country very greatly. It is curious that no allusion whatever is made in the Speech to the two branches of administration which have involved the greatest expense—the Navy and the Army.

With regard to the Navy we have had Papers showing us that very great changes have taken place, and the rumours go to show that it was hoped these changes will tend not only to greater efficiency, but also to greater economy. I sincerely trust that will be the case. The principles involved must be of supreme importance, and I am sure the noble Earl at the head of the Admiralty will fully answer questions hereafter.

The question of the Army is of even greater importance. Last year great changes in the Army were foreshadowed. Unfortunately, during the last few years we have had many changes in the Army, and schemes have been rushed into one after the other, several of which have been torn to ribbons. We know there has been enormous expenditure; and a great deal of this has been almost entirely thrown away owing to the change of principle on which the expenditures have been made. Some of the changes proposed last year were carried out, I believe, in the autumn. I refer to the proposal with regard to the term of enlistment, but we do not know yet how that worked out, although it is important. We ought to know whether that change has been effectual. But there are other changes of still greater moment which have stirred feeling in the country to the utmost—I mean radical changes with regard to the Auxiliary Forces, the Militia and Volunteers, as to which we do not know what is the position of the Government. It seems somewhat strange that these subjects should have found no place in the Speech, and certainly when the proper time comes we shall have to raise these questions.

As to the measures of legislation proposed, if an attempt is to be made to carry them, we must complain that the Government has not called Parliament together at an earlier time, for I believe the programme put forward would fill up even a longer time than has been occupied during the longest session we have had in modern days. With regard to alien immigration, I believe the evils have been grossly exaggerated. I believe it is a fact that, with the exception of Spain, the percentage of foreign aliens entering this country to population is lower than in any other country. There may be some slight competition between some of the aliens and some of our population in the Metropolis, but I believe it is a very trifling thing indeed. The Opposition were accused last year of having thrown out the Bill, but I maintain it was not the Opposition, but the Government. In the first place, the Government took the most unusual course of sending this controversial measure to a Grand Committee; and, secondly, when a compromise was proposed—namely, that the clause with regard to criminal and diseased aliens should be maintained—the Government rejected it. If the new measure is only framed to deal with the criminal and diseased aliens, or perhaps for strengthening the measures against sweating and overcrowding, there will be practically no difficulty. But if it is proposed to abolish what we consider one of the most sacred principles in this country, the right of asylum for political aliens flying from persecution abroad, then the Party to which I belong will, I am sure, give the most determined opposition to the proposal.

I am glad that the Government propose to deal with the very difficult subject of the unemployed. The increase in the number of unemployed in large towns and counties throughout the country is increasing, and unless this is dealt with by special means we may be face to face with a very grave question. I need hardly say that we in this House will give very careful attention, and, if necessary, assistance to the Government, in regard to any sound measure on this subject.

I notice one very curious measure. What is the meaning of the proposal to establish a Minister of Commerce and Industry? The Board of Trade, one of the most efficient and able of the Departments, deals with these two questions. Is the Board of Trade to be entirely suppressed or converted into a new Department? Will the new Minister take some of the work of the Local Government Board as well as that of the Board of Trade? The present Government are very fond of large Cabinets, although great authorities, I have always heard, rather denounce them; and the creation of a new office of great importance means that there will be a new Minister of Cabinet rank. On the subject of agricultural rating the views we hold are very well known; we feel that it ought to be dealt with in a broad and comprehensive spirit. I have always hoped that the subject might be dealt with somewhat on the lines laid down by the Commission presided over by Lord Balfour of Burleigh.

I now come to a very large subject—the proposals which the Government intend to make "for diminishing the anomalies in the present arrangement of electoral areas, which are largely due to the growth and movement of population in recent years." That, in Governmental language, is simply, as I understand it, what is popularly called a Redistribution Bill. No one will find the Party to which I belong in opposition to a just and comprehensive measure for this purpose. I quite agree that the great movement of population and other changes require legislation from time to time. But there are other matters—such as the question of the plurality of votes, better registration, and certain other subjects connected with the question—which in our opinion ought to be dealt with in any great measure of what amounts to Parliamentary Reform. What is it the Government propose to do? Do they propose to follow the precedent of 1885, when, before the redistribution measure was acted upon, Commissions were appointed to carry out the details in each constituency of the principles laid down in the general measure? That is absolutely essential. As far as I am concerned I shall oppose, with all the power I possess, the introduction at this moment of a Redistribution Bill. And why? Because, if it were carried, it would postpone till next year that appeal to the country which I think is at this moment indispensable. The agitation which has now been carried on for nearly two years by a very distinguished and eminent statesman, the late Colonial Secretary, has disturbed all the relations of those engaged in trade and commerce. If the measures which he proposes with regard to fiscal reform were passed and a new tariff were established, every trade would be effected and in the present position no one in trade knows what his position would be two or three years hence, or when these measures are passed.

I therefore say, with regard to the proposals of Mr. Chamberlain, it is indispensable that this doubt and uncertainty should be set at rest, and the only way in which that can be done is by an appeal to the country. The Prime Minister claims to be a free-trader and says he is not a protectionist, but I cannot help thinking that his views and sentiments are very nearly allied to those of Mr. Chamberlain, and that, with a very little time—and we have been told that time should be given for opinion to ripen on this subject—we might find the Prime Minister proposing measures which we should oppose as being inconsistent with free trade. For these reasons, then, I should strongly, and with the utmost determination, oppose the introduction of a measure which must prolong the life of the present Parliament and postpone the appeal to the country on this momentous question.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (The Marquess of LANSDOWNE): My Lords, my noble friends who moved and seconded the Address have received from the noble Earl opposite well-deserved congratulations with which we, on this side of the House, desire to associate ourselves. The noble mover, although he has been but a short time a Member of this House, has already addressed us on more than one occasion, and has got the ear of the House. The noble Lord who seconded belongs to that little phalanx of Irish Peers who contribute so much to the interest and animation of our debates, and to whom we always listen with pleasure even when we do not agree with them, and who have lately contributed to the Treasury Bench a recruit to whom no exception can possibly be taken. May I venture to repeat the often-expressed hope that neither of my noble friends, after their successful appearance this evening, will be content to resume that attitude of silence and self-effacement into which so many successful movers and seconders of the Address have, within my own recollection, relapsed?

We regard with deep feelings of compassion and concern the continuance of the war in the Far East. The noble Earl expressed the hope that His Majesty's Government would lose no opportunity of taking steps to bring that war to a close. I need not assure your Lordships that should that opportunity present itself we should avail ourselves of it with alacrity. On the other hand, I do not think your Lordships will differ from me when I say that ill-considered intervention is likely to be fraught with the worst possible results. It is not only that those who intervene run the risk of a rebuff—that is a comparatively small matter—but that such untimely interference may have the effect of retarding the very consummation which you desire to accelerate. Meanwhile it has been our duty, and we have endeavoured to observe it faithfully—to maintain for this country an attitude of the strictest and most impartial neutrality. I hope the Papers which we have lately laid on the Table of the House will convince your Lordships that we have not been unsuccessful in that respect.

Let me say, with regard to the most difficult and embarrassing question of contraband of war, that we have endeavoured to uphold what I believe to be the wise and time-honoured policy of this country and to obtain the narrowest possible restrictions of the definition of those articles which are liable to seizure as contraband. That I believe to be the wisest, I might almost say the only policy which a great peace-loving and commercial country like this can pursue; and I believe it to be a policy consonant with considerations of common sense and of humanity. It is, I think, satisfactory that during the progress of a protracted and anxious controversy, the record of which your Lordships will find in these Papers, we have so far been able to find a reasonable modus vivendi with those concerned that since the month of July last not a single British vessel has been interfered with except where it has been clearly engaged in the practice of blockade-running. Once, and once only, we found ourselves apparently near to being drawn into the vortex of war. That occasion, I need not say, arose in connection with what we now speak of as the North Sea incident, and I refer to the matter merely because I desire to acknowledge the considerate and kindly character of the remarks that fell from the noble Earl, the Leader of the Opposition, in reference to the conduct of His Majesty's Government in connection with that incident. The question is still before the International Commission at Paris, and it would be clearly improper for me to make any further reference to it this evening.

The noble Lord spoke at some length on the question of Macedonia and expressed the disappointment with which he had read the paragraph in the gracious Speech from the Throne describing the condition of things in that part of South-Eastern Europe. My Lords, I share the disappointment which the noble Earl has expressed. I deplore as much as he does the condition of things that prevails in many parts of Macedonia, and I am as deeply convinced as he can be that that condition of things will not be improved unless we can secure the application of reforms of a much more thorough-going character than any which have yet been attempted. I can give the noble Earl one or two grains of comfort. I do not think it is fair to say that nothing has been accomplished since we last met in this Chamber. There has been, in the first place, no serious uprising of the kind which many people anticipated. There have been deplorable incidents of regrettable frequency, but there has been no general outbreak. Then I think it is fair to say that some progress has been made with the work of the repatriation of the refugees; and, last but not least, the gendarmerie scheme has been successfully launched. It is satisfactory to know that within the last few weeks the Turkish Government has given its consent to the appointment of a considerable number of additional European gendarmerie officers; and I wish to confirm what was said by my noble friend behind me as to the credit due to Colonel Fairholme and the British officers serving with him for the mark which they have made upon the particular district placed under their charge. But, after all, the reorganisation of the gendarmerie is a measure which is ancillary to other reforms rather than itself a reform of an administrative character; and I do not in the least object to being reminded, as I was by the noble Earl, of the statement which I made in this House last year to the effect that if the scheme put forward by the two Powers proved to disappoint the expectations of its framers, His Majesty's Government would be prepared to recommend the adoption of more radical and far-reaching measures. We have not forgotten that reservation, and I may be permitted to say that we have not allowed others to forget it. But I think the position is one in which it is fair to urge that a certain amount of patience may be asked for.

What the Powers are dealing with in Macedonia is not a mere temporary outbreak or effervescence; it is an inveterate trouble. It is not merely, as we are sometimes told, a case of Turkish misgovernment which can be put an end to by a stroke of the pen. You have in Macedonia a state of things for which I think it would be probably vain to search the rest of the civilised world. You have a condition of things in which men of the same race are ready to cut one another's throats on account of religious differences, and men of the same religion are ready to cut one another's throats on account of racial differences. That is not a state of things which, with any amount of goodwill and energy, you can put an end to in a few months. It is, I think, satisfactory to know that at this moment there exists among the Powers an absolute consensus in favour of the introduction of wider and stronger reforms, and particularly of reforms of a financial character, because until the financial system of Macedonia is set in order, it is idle to expect that you will have decent administration or an untainted course of justice, or any of the advantages which one looks for in a well-administered community.

At this moment Russia and Austria, upon whom the other Powers conferred last year a kind of mandate to deal with the Macedonian problem, have put forward a new scheme of reform going very far beyond anything that they have yet propounded. That scheme is under discussion; it is a complicated one, and I am not in a position to pass a judgment upon it this evening. But I will say two things of it—in the first place, that it marks a considerable step in advance, and, in the second place, that we shall not hesitate to exercise our right of criticism and suggestion upon it, and that we have good reason for knowing that such criticisms and suggestions as we may put forward will not be taken amiss.

I will not pause to speak at length of the ratification of the Anglo-French Agreement, of which, again, the noble Earl spoke in commendatory terms. I agree with him that the ratification of that Convention is of the utmost importance; and I venture to say that the existence of that agreement at a moment like the present, when great tension exists in many parts of the world, has been of no little value in securing peace and good understanding among the Powers.

The noble Earl asked me several questions with regard to the paragraph in the Speech which deals with affairs in the Transvaal. We have always made plain our intention of travelling by gradual stages in the case of these South African Colonies along the road leading to eventual self-government; and we are ready at the present time to take in the case of the Transvaal a very important step in that direction—I mean the step, not of giving it self-government in a complete form, but of giving it representative institutions. The noble Earl wished me to enlighten him as to the financial situation in South Africa, as to the number of troops that we intend to retain in the country, and as to the progress which is being made in the work of restoring the agriculturists to their homes. I am afraid I must leave these matters until some other occasion, when they will no doubt be dealt with by my colleagues who represent the departments concerned with these subjects.

*EARL SPENCER: I also referred to the omission of the Orange Free State.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: The noble Earl commented on the omission of the Orange River Colony. I understand that, as these proposals are of a tentative character, they are to be introduced in the first instance in the case of the Transvaal, and not in the case of the other colony. On the question of Chinese labour, I will only say that such information as I possess leads me to believe that many, at all events, of the sinister prophecies which were made when this question was discussed last year have not been fulfilled, and are not likely to be fulfilled. Amongst other things, we know that the importation of a large number of Chinese labourers, instead of leading to any diminution in the number of white labourers employed, has actually led to an increase of the number of white labourers.

Then the noble Earl passed to the question of Tibet, and touched upon our policy in that country. My Lords, our policy towards Tibet has been absolutely consistent from the time that the question of sending a Mission into Tibet was first discussed. If your Lordships will carry in your minds the telegram which was sent to the Government of India on 6th November, 1903—the telegram in which we announced that the Mission was to enter Tibet for the purpose of obtaining reparation, and that we had no intention of annexing the country or remaining there permanently — you will find that to that policy, thus clearly put before this country, and, indeed, before the whole world, we have scrupulously and strictly adhered.

The noble Earl referred to the instructions given to the Government of India and by them to Colonel Younghusband. Those instructions were founded upon the policy which I have just described. If your Lordships will look at the Blue-book which has lately been laid upon the Table, and if you will refer to the telegrams of July 6th and 27th, you will find that in the clearest possible language it was explained to the Government of India, and no doubt by them explained to Colonel Younghusband, that it was our desire that the terms which he was to demand from the Tibetans should be of a character which would enable the Mission to retire from the Chumbi Valley in three years. This was communicated by the Government of India to Colonel Younghusband; and it was because Colonel Younghusband, acting no doubt as he believed for the best, disregarded those instructions and made an arrangement which would have compelled us to remain in the Chumbi Valley, not for three years, but for seventy-five years, that we found it absolutely necessary, much as we regretted in any way to discourage so valuable and brilliant an officer, to point out to him that he had transgressed his instructions and that his action must be repudiated by His Majesty's Government.

There can be no mistake about the facts, because Colonel Younghusband himself, with a frankness which does him great credit, in his published defence admits that his action was not covered by his instructions, and the Government of India, defending, as I think they had a right to defend, Colonel Younghusband, and making the best case they possibly could for him, were constrained to admit that he had fallen into an error of judgment—and not only an error of judgment, but a serious one, for they said "it involved the occupation of the Chumbi Valley for a period of seventy-five years in contravention of the undertaking of His Majesty's Government." There can be no doubt about it. Whatever differences there might have been in the first instance between His Majesty's Government and the Government of India, the Government of India at that time understood fully what our policy was, and faithfully, as we have every reason to believe, carried out the instructions which they had received from us. Before I leave this subject, let me say that I for one regard Colonel Younghusband's achievement as one of the most brilliant of the many brilliant achievements which have illustrated the history of the Indian frontier, and that, while I am obliged to admit that at this one point he placed himself in the wrong, I believe that the memory of the great feat of arms and diplomacy which he and those with him accomplished will live long after the censure we have been obliged to pass upon him has been forgotten.

The noble Earl desires information as to the progress of negotiations with Afghanistan, but I am afraid that it is not a request I can comply with at present. The negotiations are still in progress; they are extremely difficult and intricate in character, and it would be most undesirable at the present moment to lay on the Table Papers on the subject.

The noble Earl made some complaint because the Speech from the Throne did not contain more detailed reference to military and naval subjects. I do not know whether I can trust my recollection, but I am under the impression that it is not usual in the Speech to enter into detailed discussion of matters of this kind. I do not mean to say by that that they do not present a very natural and legitimate field for discussion, and no doubt they will be discussed in this House.

The noble Earl did not perhaps sufficiently realise how much has indeed been accomplished by my right hon. colleague the Secretary for War in the short time he has held that most difficult office. He has completely reorganised the War Office itself. I am in the recollection of the House, but I think it has always been assumed that reform of the War Office was a matter to be attacked first before the wider problem of Army organisation could be profitably approached. Not a moment has been lost. The Committee presided over by Lord Esher reported in January last year, and within three months my right hon. friend had organised and brought his Army Council together, and set it to work on the duties devolving upon it. The noble Earl asked me a question as to the manner in which the recent change in the terms of enlistment has operated. I understand it is a temporary change, but I believe it has operated with great success, and that the number of men coming in under the nine years engagement continues to be in every way satisfactory.

The noble Earl reviewed some of the measures which are enumerated in the gracious Speech, and told us he believed that the case for the Aliens Bill had been grossly exaggerated. Now, my Lords, there may have been exaggeration in regard to statistics of immigration, but I am sure there has been no exaggeration in regard to the depth of feeling with which this question is regarded throughout the whole of the country. The subject has not been sprung on Parliament; it has been dealt with by Committees, by Royal Commissions, and learned Judges, and police magistrates have given valuable evidence as to the extent of the evil. The subject has been debated in the other House, and last year a Bill was carried by an enormous majority. It seems to us therefore that if there is any subject indicated as one with which we ought to deal thoroughly, it is this question of alien immigration. I hope we may be able to deal with it without interfering in any way with the free movement of those who desire for legitimate objects to resort to this country; and we certainly approach the subject with no desire whatever to exclude the legitimate competition of imported labour.

As to the question of the unemployed, I was glad to observe that the noble Earl welcomed the announcement that we propose to deal with the subject. It is impossible to withhold our sympathy from the many deserving persons who, through no fault of their own, have been suffering from the absence of employment. The President of the Local Government Board has obtained very encouraging results from his action, results that justify us in dealing with the subject by means of legislation. At the same time we realise thoroughly the difficulties by which such a measure is attended; we realise the danger of finding ourselves compelled to create work where work is not wanted; and the danger of creating a class which will remain in a chronic state of expectation of such work; but we nevertheless hope it will be possible to devise permanent machinery for the purpose of bringing the men and the work together, and of doing it in a manner that will supersede the somewhat clumsy, inelastic arrangements which obtain under the operation of the present Poor Law.

The noble Earl ended his speech with some strong observations in reference to the question of redistribution. He admitted the anomalies with which we desire to deal, but he entered, as I understood, a very strong protest against any attempt to pass a Redistribution Bill during the present session of Parliament. I am under the impression that it is physically impossible to do anything of the kind. We shall no doubt act on the lines usually followed in similar circumstances, and which are, unless I misunderstand the case, the only lines upon which action is possible. Such a procedure, of course, presupposes the possibility of His Majesty's Government passing a Redistribution Bill next year. That is an eventuality which the noble Earl regards with feelings of dismay. I am afraid we cannot allow the noble Earl to give us summary notice to quit. Is the noble Earl quite sure that, supposing we were to obey his command and to vacate these Benches immediately, he and his friends are ready to undertake the responsibilities of Government? We have had some enlightenment on this subject within the last few days. A rather remarkable document appeared in The Times three or four days ago, and for a few hours was known as the noble Earl's manifesto. We received it—I certainly did—with feelings of the utmost thankfulness and gratitude; for I regarded it as signifying two things, that the noble Earl had by those around him been placed in a position which I think we should all like to see him occupy, that of head of a Party which has apparently of late been headless; and, in the next place, I rejoiced at the noble Earl's pronouncement because it seemed to afford us what we had so long desiderated, something like an authoritative exposition of the political doctrines held by that Government which we are so confidently told will before long take our place.

But our satisfaction was shortlived. Before the evening had come the noble Earl's pronouncement turned out to be not a Party manifesto, but a mere expression of his own opinions.

*EARL SPENCER: Hear, hear.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: We were reminded of those beautiful lilies which flower expansively in the early part of the day and fade at sundown. But I assure the noble Earl that I treat the pronouncement, though it comes from himself alone and does not commit others with whom he associates, with the utmost respect. I am bound, however, to say in frankness I look to it in vain for that precision of statement he desires from us, and that enlightenment as to the future conduct of the Liberal Party which we should be so glad to obtain from noble Lords opposite. When the noble Earl repudiates with abhorrence the idea that we shall possibly be found sitting on these Benches next year, I cannot help retorting to him that unless his trumpet sounds a somewhat clearer note the walls of Jericho may still stand for a considerable time, and that we may, after all, be able to proceed with those preliminary operations which, I believe, are usual in reference to a measure of redistribution, and even be able to give effect to them in another session of Parliament.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN: My Lords, I will not detain your Lordships for more than two minutes, and the few remarks I shall make will be more in the nature of a notice than of comment. It is interesting to note that the gracious Speech from the Throne contains not the slightest allusion—perhaps it could not—to the greatest of all the topics occupying the attention of the country. The noble Lord who seconded the Address ingeniously found some slight connection between the fiscal controversy and the appointment of a Minister of Commerce. With reference to this appointment let me say this, that I hope there will be no swopping of horses till the stream is crossed. The Board of Trade have been issuing admirable memoranda. They have facilitated the inquest of the nation to the best of their ability, and I trust that that great department will not be disorganised and no change will take place until after they have finished the work on which they are engaged. Although this question cannot be discussed on the present occasion, silence must not be misconstrued. It will certainly be the duty of some of us who take an interest in this question to embrace an early opportunity of complying with the request that has been made by the Government to continue the inquest of the nation in regard to it. The inquest of the nation should take place in this House and in the House of Commons, as well as on the platforms of the country. I say with all friendliness that there are certain points which we propose to bring before the Government in a friendly spirit, provided His Majesty's Government will continue to consider that free-trade Unionists are friendly and not brand them as disloyal. I hope that in this controversy, which we are bound to continue, the Government will treat Unionist free-traders with the same consideration as is extended to those who are called tariff reformers.

On Question, Motion agreed to, nemine dissentiente, and ordered to be presented to His Majesty by the Lords with White Staves.

ALIEN IMMIGRATION FROM THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE.

Return of the number of aliens that arrived from the Continent at ports in the United Kingdom in each month of the year 1905. Ordered to be laid before the House.—(The Lord Wolverton.)

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS (RECESS.)

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that the following Papers having been commanded to be presented to this House by His Majesty had been so presented on the following dates by delivery to the Clerk of the Parliaments, pursuant to Standing Order No. CXI., viz. :—

TRADE REPORTS.—I. ANNUAL SERIES.

No. 3256. Brazil (Bahia). (August 16.)

No. 3257. Greece (Ionian Islands).

No. 3258. Chile. (August 23.)

No. 3259. Costa Rica. (August 26.)

No. 3260. Austria-Hungary (Fiume).

No. 3261. Morocco (Dar-al-Baida). (August 27.)

No. 3262. Mexico (Vera Cruz).

No. 3263. Zanzibar (Zanzibar and Pemba). (August 30.)

No. 3264. Portugal (Laurenço Marques). (August 31.)

No. 3265. Italy (Lombardy). (September 3.)

No. 3266. Turkey (Damascus). (September 7.)

No. 3267. Persia (Khorassan and Sistan).

No. 3268. Italy (Sardinia).

No. 3269. Japan (Nagasaki).

No. 3270. China (Canton). (September 9.)

No. 3271. Portugal (Angola).

No. 3272. Russia (Consular District of Riga, 1903).

No. 3273. Portugal (Madeira, 1903).

No. 3274. Egypt (Alexandria, 1903). (September 14.)

No. 3275. Belgium, 1903. (September 20.)

No. 3276. Japan (Consular District of Tainan (S. Formosa, 1903). (September 17.)

No. 3277. Russia (Odessa). (September 21.)

No. 3278. Russia (Finland).

No. 3279. United States of America. (September 22.)

No. 3280. China.

No. 3281. Peru. (September 27.)

No. 3282. Turkey (Crete). (September 29.)

No. 3283. Brazil (Rio de Janeiro). (October 4.)

No. 3284. Colombia (Barranguilla).

No. 3285. Mexico (Mexico).

No. 3286. Siam (Bangkok). (October 5.)

No. 3287. Germany.

No. 3288. Portugal (Goa). (October 6.)

No. 3289. France (Society Islands). (October 7.)

No. 3290. China (Chungking).

No. 3291. Siam (Chiengmai).

No. 3292. Panama. (October 8.)

No. 3293. China (Kiukiang).

No. 3294. Japan (Kobe and Osaka). (October 11.)

No. 3295. Tunis.

No. 3296. Germany (German Colonies). (October 12.)

No. 3297. Austria - Hungary (Bosnia and The Herzegovina). (October 13.)

No. 3298. Borneo (Brunei, Sarawak, and British North Borneo). (October 14.)

No. 3299. Russia (Archangel). (October 15.)

No. 3300. France (Martinique). (October 20.)

No. 3301. France. (October 26.)

No. 3302. Greece. (November 3.)

No. 3303. China (Amoy). (November 11.)

No. 3304. Russia (Reval). November 18.)

No. 3305. Persia (Ispahan).

No. 3306. Turkey (Bengazi and Derna). (November 23.)

No. 3307. Chile.

No. 3308. Persia (Azerbaijan). (November 29.)

No. 3309. Russia (Agriculture in the Trans-Caucasus in 1904). (December 5.)

No. 3310. France (Dahomey).

No. 3311. Netherlands (Dutch Guiana).

No. 3312. France (Senegal).

No. 3313. France (French Guinea). (December 8.)

No. 3314. Switzerland. (December 9.)

No. 3315. Cuba. (December 13.)

No. 3316. France (Ivory Coast). (December 14.)

No. 3317. China (Foochow). (December 16.)

No. 3318. Italy (Ancona). (December 20.)

No. 3319. Italy (Elba). (December 29.)

No. 3320. Foreign Trade of Italy. (January 4.)

No. 3321. Somaliland Protectorate. (January 21.)

No. 3322. Morocco (Tangier). (February 2.)

No. 3323. South Italy. (February 8.)

II. MISCELLANEOUS SERIES.

No. 619. Commercial Instruction in Germany. (September 15.)

No. 620. United States (Chicago Summer Vacation). (September 21.)

No. 621. Art Trade Schools in Germany. (December 20.)

No. 622. German Machinery Import and Export Trade and Industry.

No. 623. Mining and Metallurgical Industries of Spain in 1903. (December 30.)

No. 624. German Cement. (January 5.)

No. 625. Rice Industry in the United States. (January 12.)

No. 626. Iron and Steel Exhibits at the St. Louis Exhibition. (February 2.)

No. 627. United States Railways. (February 7.)

No. 628. Cultivation of Tea in the Caucasus. (February 8.)

REFORMATORY AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

I. (Ireland). Forty-second Report of the Inspector appointed to visit the Reformatory and Industrial Schools of Ireland. (August 17.)

II. (Great Britain). Forty-seventh Report, for the year 1903, of the Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools. Part II. General Report and Appendices III. to XI. (September 15.)

BOARD OF AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES.

I. Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to investigate experimentally and to report upon certain questions connected with the dipping and treatment of sheep—

Report.

Minutes of Evidence with Appendices. (August 18.)

II. Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to inquire into and report upon the working in Great Britain of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1893—

Report. (January 28.)

Minutes of Evidence with Appendices and Index. (February 13.)

BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (EDUCATION).

Annual report on the distribution of grants for agricultural education and research in the year 1903–1904; with statements respecting the several colleges and institutions aided; the experiments conducted; together with a summary of the agricultural instruction provided by county councils in 1903–1904, and the expenditure on the same in 1902–1903. (November 29.)

TRANSVAAL.

Correspondence relating to the position of British Indians in the Transvaal. (August 18.)

COLONIES.—I. ANNUAL.

No. 423. Sierra Leone (Report for 1903). (August 18.)

No. 424. Gambia (Report for 1903). (August 18.)

No. 425. Ceylon (Report for 1903). (August 26.)

No. 426. Gold Coast (Report for 1903). (September 2.)

No. 427. Lagos (Report for 1903). (September 7.)

No. 428. Bahamas (Report for 1903–1904). (September 13.)

No. 429. Northern Territories of the Gold Coast (Report for 1903). (September 19.)

No. 430. Mauritius. (September 28.)

No. 431. Seychelles (October 1.)

No. 432. Barbados. (October 3.)

No. 433. Southern Nigeria (Report for 1903). (October 11.)

No. 434. Fiji (Report for 1903). (November 7.)

No. 435. Straits Settlements (Report for 1903). (November 8.)

No. 436. Grenada (Report for 1903). (November 21.)

No. 437. Northern Nigeria (Report for 1903). (November 26.)

No. 438. Jamaica (Report for 1903–1904). (December 7.)

No. 439. Malta (Report for 1903–1904). (December 10.)

No. 440. Bechuanaland Protectorate (Report for 1902–1903 and 1903–1904). (December 13.)

No. 441. British Guiana (Report for 1903–1904). (December 20.)

No. 442. Trinidad and Tobago (Report for 1903–1904). (December 21.)

No. 443. St. Lucia (Report for 1903). (December 29.)

No. 444. Basutoland (Report for 1903–1904). (February 9.)

II. MISCELLANEOUS.

No. 28. Reports on Rubber in the Gold Coast and Sierra Leone. (November 28.)

No. 29. Ceylon: Reports on the results of the mineral survey in 1903–1904, by Professor W. R. Dunstan, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.

COLONIES (PREFERENTIAL TRADE).

Papers relating to Resolutions passed by Colonial Legislatures since 1890 in favour of preferential trade relations with the United Kingdom. (December 29.)

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE (INDIAN SECTION).

Annual Report for the year 1903-1904. (August 22.)

LUNACY (IRELAND).

Fifty-third Report, with Appendices, of the Inspectors of Lunatics in Ireland, for the year 1903. (August 23.)

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

I. Statistics of proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1897 and 1900, and the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, during the year 1903. (August 24.)

II. Report of the Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to inquire into the Law relating to compensation for injuries to workmen. Vol. II. Minutes of Evidence, with Index. (December 9.)

AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS (IRELAND).

I. Abstracts showing the acreage under crops and the number of live stock in each county and province, 1903–1904. (August 24.)

II. Migratory Labourers. Report and tables relating to Irish migratory, agricultural, and other labourers, for the year 1904. (November 29.)

III. Tables showing the extent, in statute acres, and the produce of the crops for the year 1904. (December 30.)

TREATY SERIES.

No. 6. (1904.) Agreement between the United Kingdom and Germany, providing for the settlement by arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments; signed at London, 12th July, 1904. (August 30.)

No. 7. (1904.) Convention between the United Kingdom and China respecting the employment of Chinese labour in British Colonies and Protectorates; signed at London, 13th May, 1904. (September 22.)

No. 8. (1904.) Convention between the United Kingdom and Sweden and Norway providing for the settlement by arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the respective Governments; signed at London, 11th August, 1904. (Ratifications exchanged at London, 9th November, 1904.) (November 18.)

No. 9. (1904.) Agreement between the United Kingdom and Switzerland providing for the settlement by arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments; signed at London, 16th November, 1904. (November 26.)

No. 10. (1904.) Agreement between the United Kingdom and Portugal providing for the settlement by arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments; signed at Windsor, 16th November, 1904. (November 26.)

No. 11. (1904.) Accession of Sweden to the International Copyright Convention, 9th September, 1886, and Declaration of 4th May, 1896. 1st August, 1904. (November 26.)

No. 12. (1904.) Accession of Cuba to the Industrial Property Convention, 1883, etc.; 17th November, 1904. (November 28.)

No. 13. (1904.) Declaration between the United Kingdom and Russia relating to the constitution of an International Commission of Inquiry on the subject of the North Sea Incident; signed at St. Petersburg, 25th (12th) November, 1904. (December 12.)

No. 1. (1905.) Accession of Cuba to Arrangements respecting False Indications of Origin on Goods and the International Registration of Trade Marks (Industrial Property Union). 1st January, 1905. (January 24.)

No. 2. (1905.) Agreement between the United Kingdom and Russia respecting Joint Stock Companies and other Commercial Industrial and Financial Associations; signed at St. Petersburg, 19th (16th) December, 1904. (February 10.)

AFRICA.

I. Somaliland. Despatches, etc., regarding the Military Operations in Somaliland, from the 18th January, 1902, to the 31st May, 1904. (August 31.)

II. Correspondence relating to the construction of Railways in Sierra Leone, Lagos, and the Gold Coast. (December 7.)

INDIA.

I. (Excise). Papers relating to the Excise Administration in Assam. (August 31.)

II. (Trade). Review of the Trade of India in 1903–1904. (October 28.)

III. (Statistical Abstract). Statistical Abstract relating to British India from 1893–94 to 1902–03. Thirty-eighth Number. (November 2.)

IV. (Sanitary Measures). Report on sanitary measures in India in 1902–1903. Vol. 36. (November 2.)

V. (Tibet). Further Papers relating to Tibet, No. III. (in continuation of [Cd. 2054]). (January 27.)

ARMY.

I. List of exceptions to the Army Regulations as to pay, non-effective pay, and allowances sanctioned by the Commissioners of the Treasury, pursuant to the Royal Warrant dated 27th October, 1884, during the year 1903–1904. (September 1.)

II. Amendments in the Rules of Procedure under the Army Act. (October 8.)

III. Report on the trial of the short rifle by the Army and Navy. (December 7.)

IV. Order in Council defining the duties of the Army Council. (August 16.)

V. Approximate estimate of expenditure under the Military Works Acts of 1897, 1899, and 1901. (September 13.)

FIJI.

Correspondence relating to Native taxation and the communal system in Fiji. (September 9.)

POLICE (METROPOLIS).

Report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, for the year 1903. (September 13.)

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).

Report of the Commissioners of Prisons and the Directors of Convict Prisons, for the year ended 31st March, 1904. (September 13.)

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

I. Report of the Board of Education for the year 1903–1904. (September 13.)

II. Special Reports on Educational Subjects. Special reports on the educational systems of the chief Crown

Colonies and Possessions of the British Empire, including reports on the training of Native races—

Vol. 12 (Part I.). West Indies and Central America, St. Helena, Cyprus, and Gibraltar.

Vol. 13 (Part II.). West Africa, Basutoland, Southern Rhodesia, East Africa Protectorate, Uganda, Mauritius, Seychelles.

Vol. 14 (Part III.). Federated Malay States, Hong Kong, Straits Settlements, Fiji, Falkland Islands. (February 6.)

III. Regulations relating to the Royal College of Science, the Royal College of Art, and to Museums under the Board of Education (from 1st August, 1904, to 31st July, 1905). (November 3.)

IV. Report for the year 1903, on the museums, colleges, and institutions under the administration of the Board. (November 15.)

V. List of Secondary Schools under the administration of the Board 1902–1903. (November 29.)

VI. Grants under Section 97, etc.—

Grants paid to school boards under Section 97, Elementary Education Act, 1870.

School board accounts.

List of loans. (December 22.)

VII. Reports from University Colleges, 1904. (January 18.)

CONGESTED DISTRICTS BOARD (IRELAND).

Report of the Board, for the year ending 31st March, 1904. (September 19.)

IRISH LAND COMMISSION (PROCEEDINGS).

Return for the months of March, April, May, and June, 1904. (September 22.)

Return for the month of July, 1904. (October 31.)

Return for the month of August, 1904. (November 2.)

Return for the month of September, 1904. (November 14.)

CROWN AGENTS FOR THE COLONIES.

Accounts of the Crown Agents' Office Funds, for the years 1900, 1901, and 1902. (September 23.)

AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND).

Manual of Fisheries (Ireland) Acts. (September 23.)

BANKING, RAILWAY, AND SHIPPING STATISTICS (IRELAND).

Report for June, 1904. (September 27.)

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

Reports on the Federated Malay States for 1903. (September 28.)

BRITISH CENTRAL AFRICA.

Report on the trade and general condition of the British Central Africa Protectorate for 1903–1904. (September 28.)

MILITARY PRISONS.

Report on the discipline and management of the Military Prisons, 1903. (October 4.)

PETERHEAD HARBOUR.

Reports respecting Peterhead Harbour Works. (October 5.)

PERSIA.

Report on the condition and prospects of British trade in Oman, Bahrein, and Arab ports in the Persian Gulf; by H. W. Maclean, Special Commissioner of the Commercial Intelligence of the Board of Trade. (October 13.)

TURKEY.

No. 3. (1904.) Correspondence respecting the Asiatic Provinces of Turkey. (October 8.)

No. 4. (1904.) Further correspondence respecting the affairs of South Eastern Europe (in continuation of Turkey, No. 2. (1904)). (October 28.)

MINES AND QUARRIES (GENERAL REPORT AND STATISTICS FOR 1903. PART II. LABOUR).

I. General report and statistics relating to persons employed and accidents at mines and quarries in the United Kingdom, and to the enforcement of the Mines and Quarries Acts. (October 10.)

II. General report and statistics relating to the output and value of the minerals raised in the United Kingdom, the amount and value of the metals produced, and the exports and imports of minerals. (October 25.)

CHINA, No. 5 (1904).

Report by Consul-General Hosie on the Province of Ssuch'uan. (October 20.)

LAND LAW (IRELAND) ACT, 1887 (EVICTION NOTICES).

I. Return of the number of Eviction Notices filed during the Quarter ended the 30th day of September, 1904. (October 21.)

II. Return of the number of Eviction Notices filed during the Quarter ended 31st December, 1904. (January 27.)

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP.

I. (Draft Regulations: Docks, Wharves, and Quays.) Report to His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department by Chester Jones, Esquire, on the Draft Regulations for Docks, Wharves, and Quays. (October 26.)

II. Annual Report of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Workshops, for the year 1903. Part II.—Tables. (November 30.)

INEBRIATES ACTS (INSPECTOR'S REPORT).

Report of the Inspector under the Inebriates Acts, 1879 to 1900, for the year 1903. (October 28.)

SHERIFF COURT PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND).

Report of a Departmental Committee appointed by the Secretary for Scotland to inquire into Sheriff Court Procedure; with minutes of evidence, appendix, and index. (October 28.)

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACTS, 1896.

Orders made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade—

I. Authorising the construction of a light railway in the county of East Suffolk from Melton to Bromeswell, Sutton, Shottisham, Hollesley, Alderton, and Bawdsey.

II. Authorising the construction of light railways in the parish of Northam and the parish and borough of Bideford in the county of Devon in extension of the Bideford, Westward Ho!, and Appledore Railway, and the working of that railway as a light railway under the Light Railways Act, 1896.

III. Amending the Maidstone and Faversham Junction Light Railway Order, 1901.

IV. Authorising the construction of an additional light railway in the county of Gloucester, in the borough of Cheltenham, and the abandonment of the construction of part of another light railway already authorised in the same borough.

V. Amending the Axminster and Lyme Regis Light Railway Order, 1899.

VI. Amending the Brackenhill Light Railway Order, 1901.

VII. Amending the Tickhill Light Railway Order, 1901.

VIII. Authorising the construction of light railways in the county of Essex from Southend by way of Rochford, Creeksea, Burnham, Southminster, Asheldham, Dengie, Tillingham, Bradwell-juxta-Mare, and West Mersea to Colchester. (October 28.)

EVICTIONS (IRELAND).

I. Return of evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 30th September, 1904. (October 29.)

II. Return of evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 31st December, 1904. (January 31.)

ROYAL UNIVERSITY OF IRELAND.

Annual Report for the year 1903. (November 2.)

METEOROLOGY.

Report of the Meteorological Council, for the year ended 31st March, 1904, to the President and Council of the Royal Society. (November 3.)

UNEMPLOYED IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Report to the Board of Trade on agencies and methods for dealing with the unemployed in certain foreign countries, by Mr. David F. Schloss. (November 4.)

IRELAND DEVELOPMENT GRANT ACT (1903).

Report of the Lord Lieutenant of all his proceedings under the Act for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1904. (November 7.)

AFRICA.

No. 12. (1904.) General Report on the Uganda Protectorate, for the year ending 31st March, 1904. (November 9.)

No. 13. (1904.) Report by Mr. A. E. Butter on the survey of the proposed frontier between British East Africa and Abyssinia. (With a map.) (December 1.)

No. 14. (1904.) Correspondence respecting slavery in the Islands of Zanzibar and Pemba (in continuation of Africa, No. 6 (1902).) (December 29.)

No. 15. (1904.) Report on East Africa Protectorate, for the year 1903–1904. (January 7.)

No. 16. (1904.) Report on the construction and working of the Mombasa-Victoria (Uganda) Railway and Steamboat Service on Lake Victoria, 1903–1904. (January 10.)

No. 1. (1905.) Further correspondence respecting the administration of the Independent State of the Congo (in continuation of Africa, No. 7 (1904).) (December 17.)

ADOLF BECK (COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY).

Report of the Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to inquire into the case of Mr. Adolf Beck; together with minutes of evidence, appendix, and facsimiles of various documents. (November 18.)

BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES (SCOTLAND).

Forty-eighth Detailed Annual Report of the Registrar-General for Scotland of Births, Deaths, and Marriages in Scotland. (Abstracts of 1902.) (November 19.)

JUDICIAL STATISTICS (SCOTLAND).

Report on the Judicial Statistics for Scotland, for the year 1903. (November 23.)

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS (ROYAL COMMISSION).

Report on the Manuscripts of—

I. The Earl of Egmont. Vol. I.

II. The Marquess of Lothian, preserved at Blickling Hall, Norfolk. (November 24.)

III. Lady du Cane. (January 19.)

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND).

Annual Report for the year ended March, 1904. (November 28.)

BRITISH AND FOREIGN TRADE AND INDUSTRY (SECOND SERIES).

Second series of memoranda, statistical tables, and charts, prepared in the Board of Trade, with reference to various matters bearing on British and Foreign Trade and Industrial Conditions. (December 12.)

MISCELLANEOUS, No 2 (1904).

Warrant issued by the Secretary of State on 4th December, 1904, authorising the detention of the ship "Captain W. Menzell" at Cardiff. (December 12.)

JUDICIAL STATISTICS (ENGLAND AND WALES), 1900.

(Part I. Criminal Statistics.) Statistics relating to criminal proceedings, police, coroners, prisons, reformatory and industrial schools, and criminal lunatics, for the year 1903. (December 13.)

CYPRUS.

Annual Report for 1903–1904. (January 4.)

RAILWAY SERVANTS (HOURS OF LABOUR).

Return in pursuance of Section 4 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1889, of railway servants of certain classes who were on one or more occasions during the month of October, 1903, on duty on the railways of the United Kingdom for more than twelve hours at a time; or who, after being on duty more than twelve hours, were allowed to resume work with less than nine hours rest. (January 12.)

FOREIGN IMPORT DUTIES, 1904.

Statement of the Rates of Import Duties levied in European countries, in the United States, in Japan, China, and Persia, upon the produce and manufactures of the United Kingdom. (Duties in force, so far as notified to the Board of Trade, at date of preparation of this Return, November, 1904). (November 5.)

NATIONAL EDUCATION (IRELAND).

I. Appendix (Section III.) to the Annual Report of the Commissioners for the year 1903.

II. Appendix (Section IV.) to the Annual Report of the Commissioners for the year 1903. (January 14.)

III. Appendix (Section I.) to the Annual Report of the Commissioners for the year 1903. (January 28.)

IV. Appendix (Section II.) to the Annual Report of the Commissioners for the year 1903. (January 28.)

COAL SUPPLIES (ROYAL COMMISSION).

Final Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of the coal resources of the United Kingdom. Parts I. to XIII. (January 18.)

EXPLOSIVES (EXPLOSION IN A SHOP AT NEWCASTLE EMLYN).

Report to the right hon. the Secretary of State for the Home Department by Captain J. H. Thomson, His Majesty's Chief Inspector of Explosives, on the circumstances attending an explosion which occurred in an ironmonger's shop at Newcastle Emlyn, Carmarthenshire, on the 25th November, 1904. (January 19.)

NAVY.

Distribution and mobilisation of the fleet. (January 24.)

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

I. Returns of accidents and casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several railway companies in the United Kingdom during the three months ended 30th June, 1904, in pursuance of the Regulation of Railways Act (1871), together with reports of the inspecting officers, assistant inspecting officers, and sub-inspectors of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain accidents which were inquired into. (November 10.)

II. Returns of accidents and casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several railway companies in the United Kingdom during the three months ending 30th September, 1904, in pursuance of the Regulation of Railways Act (1871); together with the reports of inspecting officers, assistant inspecting officers, and sub-inspectors of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain accidents which were inquired into (January 25.)

COMMERCIAL, No. 1 (1905).

Further findings of the Permanent Commission established under the Sugar Convention of 5th March, 1902; reports of the British delegate and appeal of His Majesty's Government against certain of those findings. (January 31.)

AGRICULTURAL LABOURERS.

Second Report by Mr. Wilson Fox on the wages, earnings, and conditions of employment of agricultural labourers in the United Kingdom; with statistical tables and charts. (February 3.)

CANCER RESEARCH (COLONIES).

Correspondence relating to cancer research in the colonies. (February 9.)

MISCELLANEOUS, No. 1 (1905).

Reports on the laws in force in certain foreign countries in regard to the emission of smoke from chimneys. (February 10.)

The same were ordered to lie on the Table.

RUSSIA.

No. 1. (1905.) Correspondence respecting contraband of war in connection with the hostilities between Russia and Japan.

No. 2. (1905.) Correspondence relating to the North Sea Incident.

POST OFFICE.

I. (Increase of Maximum). Additional Articles to the Money Order Convention of the 7th—14th of October, 1871, between the General Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the General Post Office of the Netherlands.

II. (Money Orders—Mexico). Agreement between the Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Post Office of the United States of Mexico. Dated 4th February—18th March, 1904.

IRISH LAND COMMISSION (PROCEEDINGS).

Return for the months of October, November, and December, 1904.

EDUCATION (SCOTLAND).

Minute of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland, dated 30th

January, 1905, providing for the establishment of committees for the training of teachers (with explanatory memorandum).

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

COUNTY COURTS.

Rules, dated 19th December, 1904.

COUNTY COURTS ACT, 1888 (SALFORD REGISTRY).

Order of the Lord Chancellor that Robert Forrester Addie, the Registrar of the County Court of Lancashire held at Salford, shall, so long as he holds his office as such registrar, be excluded from private practice as a solicitor, and with the concurrence of the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, that Section 20 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Officers) Act, 1879, shall not apply to the office of Robert Forrester Addie as such registrar of the County Court of Lancashire held at Salford.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Account of the receipts and expenditure of the Paymaster-General on behalf of the Supreme Court of Judicature in respect of the Funds of Suitors of the Court in the year ended 29th February, 1904; also account of the National Debt Commissioners for the same period in respect of funds held by them on behalf of the Supreme Court of Judicature; together with the report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon.

DEEDS OF ARRANGEMENT ACT.

I. Rule, under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887.

II. Rule, dated 1st October, 1904.

LUNACY.

Returns to the Lord Chancellor of—

I. The number of visits made, and the number of patients seen, by the several Commissioners in Lunacy during the six months ended 31st December, 1904.

II. All sums received by the visitors of lunatics for travelling expenses or upon any other account from the 1st January to the 31st December, 1904.

III. The number of visits made, the number of patients seen, and the number of miles travelled by the visitors of lunatics from the 1st April, 1904, to the 30th September, 1904.

MILITIA ACT, 1882 (DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS).

Returns of descriptions of qualifications of deputy-lieutenants lodged during 1904, as furnished to the Chief Secretary for Ireland.

LOAN SOCIETIES.

Abstract of accounts of loan societies in England and Wales, furnished to the central office for the registry of friendly societies, for the year ended 31st December, 1903.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

I. Accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland for the year ended 31st December, 1903; together with the report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon.

II. Additional rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland as to the French course. Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland for the examination in music. Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland making an addition to Rule 9 (a) of the Rules and Programme for 1905.

III. Time-table of examinations for the year 1905.

BANK OF ENGLAND.

I. Return of the amount of notes issued more than forty years and outstanding on 26th October, 1904, which have been written off.

II. Annual accounts of Exchequer Bills and other Government securities purchased.

SUPERANNUATION.

I. Treasury Minute, dated 5th October, 1904, awarding a special pension to Sir Augustus W. L. Hemming, G.C.M.G., late Governor of Jamaica.

II. Treasury Minutes, granting retired allowances under Section 2 of the Superannuation Act, 1887, to—

Robert Henderson, lineman, Engineer-in-Chief's Department, Post Office. (September 2, 1904.)

Alfred Webster, clerk, Derby Post Office. (September 6, 1904.)

Samuel J. Morton, assistant superintendent, Boston Post Office. (September 6, 1904.)

Joseph Levingston, engineer, 1st class, Engineer-in-Chief's Department, Post Office. (November 21, 1904.)

Tom F. Dickinson, sorting clerk and telegraphist, Post Office. (November 28, 1904.)

Alfred H. Beaumont, town postman, Leeds Post Office. (January 6, 1905.)

John Still, inspector, Post Office, London. (January 11, 1905.)

Henry G. Bartlett, second division clerk (higher grade), Admiralty. (January 17, 1905.)

Charles F. Williams, second division clerk, Admiralty. (January 17, 1905.)

III. Treasury Minutes, declaring that the following persons were appointed without a civil service certificate through inadvertence on the part of the heads of their departments—

Richard Leaney, labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office. (September 3, 1904.)

John W. Ginno, Royal Laboratory, War Office. (October 14, 1904.)

Benjamin Banks, boy artificer, Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield, War Office. (October 21, 1904.)

John Foster, boy labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office. (October 21, 1904.)

William Gregory, carpenter, Royal Carriage Department, War Office. (October 29, 1904.)

Frederick G. Postons, Postmaster of Newmarket, Post Office. (November 4, 1904.)

IV. Professional Qualifications. Treasury Minute, declaring that for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the office of Professor of Zoology in the Royal College of Science, Dublin, professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired on the public service are required. (August 26, 1904.)

DUCHY OF CORNWALL.

Account of the receipts and disbursements of the Duchy Cornwall, in the year ended 31st December, 1904.

CHELSEA HOSPITAL (ARMY PRIZE MONEY AND LEGACY FUNDS, 1903-1904).

Account of the receipts and expenditure of the Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital (for services other than those voted by Parliament), in the year ended 31st March, 1904; together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Rules, dated 1st October, 1904.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN GUARANTEED LOAN OF 1855.

Account for the year ended 31st December, 1904.

WINTER ASSIZES (IRELAND).

Four Orders in Council, dated 2nd November, 1904, for holding winter assizes in Ireland.

PHARMACY (IRELAND) ACTS, 1875 AND 1890.

Order in Council, dated 2nd November, 1904, approving of a regulation made by the Pharmaceutical Society.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND).

Two Orders with respect to the urban county districts of Ballymena and Omagh.

GENERAL PRISONS (IRELAND) ACT, 1877.

Order closing the prison at Wexford.

AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND) ACT, 1899.

Fifty-five minutes by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland sanctioning forms of instruction for certain county boroughs, counties, and urban districts.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP.

I. (Dangerous and Unhealthy Industries.) Regulations, dated 24th October, 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 79 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, in respect of the processes of loading, unloading, moving, and handling goods in, on, or at any dock, wharf, or quay, and the processes of loading, unloading, or coaling any ship in dock, harbour, or canal.

II. (Special Exception: Overtime.) Order, dated 15th November, 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 49 of the Factory and Workshop Act, extending the special exception under that section to non-textile factories and workshops, or parts thereof in which the making-up of any article of table linen, bed linen, or other household linen is carried on.

III. (Special Exception: Night Work.) Order, dated 9th August, 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 54 (4) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception in that section to male young persons of the age of sixteen years and upwards employed on the system of three shifts of not more than eight hours each in the processes of pressing and reeling cordite and nitrating and moulding gun cotton carried on in non-textile factories.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS, 1853 TO 1891 (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Licences granted by His Majesty to—

I. Kate Ellen Shoesmith, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of Compassion, 63, Sutherland Street, Pimlico.

II. Alice Robinson, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley.

III. Sarah Wildman, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Elizabeth Fry Refuge, Hackney, E.

IV. Elizabeth Ann Holden, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Elizabeth Fry Refuge, Hackney, E.

V. Lucy Gould, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of St. John the Baptist, Pimlico, S.W.

VI. Mary Ann Murray, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley.

VII. Ada Hauson, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley.

CERTIFIED INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES (REGULATIONS FOR MANAGEMENT).

Regulations made, with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the management and discipline of the certified inebriate reformatory at East Hailing, Norfolk.

POLLING DISTRICTS.

Order made by the—

County council of the county of Southampton, altering certain polling districts in the Andover, New Forest, and Fareham parliamentary divisions.

Council of the borough of Devonport, altering certain polling districts in the borough.

Council of the borough of Salford, altering certain polling districts in the borough.

County council of the county of Lancaster, altering certain polling districts in the Ince, Lancaster, and Westhoughton parliamentary divisions.

County council of the county of Lancaster, altering certain polling districts in the Middleton, Stretford, and Widnes parliamentary divisions.

County council of the county of Durham, altering certain polling districts in the county.

County council of the county of Berks, altering the polling districts for the several parliamentary divisions of the county.

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANIES.

Statements of accounts and of life assurance and annuity business and abstracts of actuarial reports deposited with the Board of Trade under Section 10 of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870, during the year ended 31st December, 1904.

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE FUND.

Account of the General Lighthouse Fund under the Acts 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60. s. 679, and 61 & 62 Vict. c. 44, showing the income and expenditure for the year ended 31st March, 1904.

WEST HIGHLAND RAILWAY (EXTENSION FROM BANAIRE TO MALLAIG).

Third annual report by the Board of Trade as to the condition and working of the Banaire to Mallaig Railway, the rates and charges for traffic, and the receipts and expenditure of any company in working the railway, for the year 1903–1904.

RAILWAYS (PRIVATE SIDINGS) ACT, 1904.

Rule made by the Railway and Canal Commissioners in pursuance of the 20th Section of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, in relation to applications to the Commissioners made under Section 3 of the Railways (Private Sidings) Act. 1904.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

Regulations to be observed by the admirals, masters, and crews of fishing vessels, and carriers forming the fleets belonging to the Port of Kingston-upon-Hull, made pursuant to the provisions of Section 417 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

INDIA.

I. (Examinations). Regulations for examination for the civil service of India.

II. (Loans raised in India). Return of all loans raised in India chargeable on the revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ended on the 30th September, 1904, with the rates of interest and total amount payable thereon, and the date of the termination of each loan, the debt incurred during the half-year, the moneys raised thereby during the half-year, the loans paid off or discharged during the half-year, and the loans outstanding at the close of the half-year, stating, so far as the public convenience will allow, the purpose or service for which moneys have been raised during the half-year.

III. (Loans raised in England). Return of all loans raised in England under the provisions of any Acts of Parliament, chargeable on the revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ended on the 30th September, 1904, with the rates of interest and total amount payable thereon, and the date of the termination of each loan, the debt incurred during the half-year, the moneys raised thereby during the half-year, the loans paid off or discharged during the half-year, and the loans outstanding at the close of the half-year, stating, so far as the public convenience will allow, the purpose or service for which moneys have been raised during the half-year.

DOCKYARD PORTS REGULATION ACT, 1865.

Order in Council of 24th October, 1904, amending the regulations affecting the Dockyard Port of Plymouth.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

I. Order in Council of 10th February, 1905, confirming certain by-laws made by the Trinity House of Kingston-upon-Hull, fixing the rates of pilotage between the ports of Hull and Goole.

II. Order in Council of the 4th October, 1904, directing that registries of sea-fishing boats be kept at Port Talbot and Methil.

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890.

I. Order in Council of 4th November, 1904, entitled, "The British Protectorates Neutrality (Amendment) Order in Council, 1904."

II. Order in Council of 10th February, 1905, entitled, "The East Africa and Uganda (Currency) Order in Council, 1905."

III. Orders in Council of the 24th October, 1904, entitled respectively—

"The British Protectorate Neutrality Order in Council, 1904."

"The Foreign Jurisdiction Neutrality Order in Council, 1904."

"The China and Corea Order in Council, 1904."

"The Southern Nigeria Order in Council, 1904," and

"The Cyprus Telegraphs Order, 1904."

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACTS, 1878 TO 1904.

I. Order in Council of 12th December, 1904, approving a new denomination of standard measure of length of twenty metres.

II. Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, specifying new fees to be taken in respect of the verification and stamping by inspectors of weights and measures, and weighing and measuring instruments.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1858.

Order in Council of 12th December, 1904, approving a statement of proposed new and revised appointments and alterations of salaries in the establishment of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

COPYRIGHT ACTS, 1844 TO 1886.

Order in Council of the 12th December, 1904, giving effect to the accession of Sweden to the International Copyright Convention, 1886.

BISHOPRICS ACT, 1878, AND BISHOPRICS OF SOUTHWARK AND BIRMINGHAM ACT, 1904.

Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, for the foundation of the Bishopric of Birmingham.

EXPLOSIVES ACT, 1875.

Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, prohibiting, except under certain conditions, certain fireworks of a dangerous nature.

LEEWARD ISLANDS.

Amended prison rule relating to the employment of female prisoners.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877.

I. Statute made by the Governing Body of Magdalen College, Oxford, on 11th May, 1904, amending the existing Statutes of the College.

II. Two Statutes made by the Governing Body of Balliol College, Oxford, on 26th May, 1904, amending (i) Statute III., and (ii) Statute IV. and Schedule B. of the College Statutes.

III. Statute made by the Governing Body of New College, Oxford, on the 15th June, 1904, amending Statute XV. (Pension Fund) of the Statutes of the College.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and to be printed. (No. 1.)

COMMITTEE FOR PRIVILEGES.

Appointed.

COMMITTEE FOR THE JOURNALS.

Appointed.

STOPPAGES IN THE STREETS.

Order to prevent, renewed.

APPEAL COMMITTEE.

Appointed.

MARGATE PIER AND HARBOUR COMPANY.

Report and statement of accounts, for the year ended 5th April, 1904.

MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR BOARD.

Accounts for the year ended 1st July, 1904.

Delivered (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

ALIEN IMMIGRATION FROM THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE.

Return (in part) respecting. Laid before the House (pursuant to Order of this day), and to be printed. (No. 2.)

House adjourned at ten minutes before Seven o'clock, to Thursday next, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 14th February, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

Message to attend His Majesty,

The House went; and, being returned.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House, That he had issued Warrants for New Writs during the Recess, for County of Kent (Isle of Thanet Division), in the room of The Right Hon. James Lowther, deceased; County of Monmouth (Western Division), The Right Hon. Sir William George Granville Venables Vernon Harcourt, deceased; County of Sussex (West or Horsham Division), John Heywood Johnstone, esquire, deceased; Borough of Stalybridge, The Hon. Matthew White Ridley, called to the House of Peers; Borough of Tower Hamlets (Mile End Division), Spencer Charrington, esquire, deceased; County of Dorset (Northern Division), John Kenelm Digby Wingfield-Digby, esquire, deceased; County of Kildare (Northern Division), Edmund Leamy, esquire, deceased.

NEW MEMBERS SWORN.

John Frederick Cheetham, esquire, for Borough of Stalybridge; Edward Turnour, esquire, commonly called Viscount Turnour, County of Sussex (North Western or Horsham Division); Thomas Richards, esquire, County of Monmouth (Western Division); Colonel Harry Lawson Webster Lawson, commonly called The Hon. Harry Lawson Webster Lawson; Parliamentary Borough of the Tower Hamlets (Mile End Division); Arthur Walters Wills, esquire, County of Dorset (Northern Division); Harry Hananel Marks, esquire, County of Kent (Isle of Thanet Division).

ELECTIONS.

Ordered, That all Members who are returned for two or more places in any part of the United Kingdom do make their Election for which of the places they will serve, within one week after it shall appear that there is no question upon the Return for that place; and if any thing shall come in question touching the Return or Election of any Member, he is to withdraw during the time the matter is in debate; and that all Members returned upon double Returns do withdraw till their Returns are determined.

Resolved, That no Peer of the Realm, except such Peers of Ireland as shall for the time being be actually elected, and shall not have declined to serve, for any county, city, or borough of Great Britain, hath any right to give his vote in the Election of any Member to serve in Parliament.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That it is a high infringement of the liberties and privileges of the Commons of the United Kingdom for any Lord of Parliament or other Peer or Prelate not being a Peer of Ireland at the time elected, and not having declined to serve for any county, city, or borough of Great Britain, to concern himself in the election of Members to serve for the Commons in Parliament, except only any Peer of Ireland, at such Elections in Great Britain respectively where such Peer shall appear as a candidate, or by himself, or any others, be proposed to be elected; or for any Lord-Lieutenant or Governor of any county to avail himself of any authority derived from his Commission, to influence the Election of any Member to serve for the Commons in Parliament." —(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

SIR WILFRID LAWSON (Cornwall, Camborne) rose to oppose the Order, saying that in so doing he was following the action of a similar kind taken during many years by the late Mr. James Lowther. Mr. Lowther, he said, opposed the Order as a sham. It was a perfectly innocuous Resolution and there was nothing in it which enabled the "policeman on the beat" to prevent any Peer taking any part in any election. To-day the grounds for opposing the Resolution were stronger than ever. During the recess there was an election in North Dorset, and Lord Alington, who as Mr Sturt had occupied a seat in that House and had actually voted in favour of this Sessional Order, wrote a letter desiring his tenants to vote for the Unionist candidate. Lord Alington had also announced his intention of writing a similar letter at all future elections in Dorset. He therefore wished to ask whether the Government intended to take any notice of the proceedings of this young man. If the right hon. Gentleman would say that he proposed to take any action, then it would not be necessary to put the House to the trouble of a division, but if he proposed to do nothing then it only remained for them to indicate their appreciation of the absurdity of the Order by dividing the House and trying to prevent it making a fool of itself.

The PRIME MINISTER and FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.): The hon. Baronet has reminded the House that this is not a new question and that it has often been raised by a right hon. friend of mine who is no longer with us. Now I have no other answer to give the hon. Baronet than that I have so often given in this place. I shall not defend or criticise the conduct of Lord Alington, who was very recently a Member of the House of Commons, and who probably has supported the Government in rejecting Motions similar to that of the hon. Baronet. [Sir Wilfrid Lawson: He voted for the Order.] I can only suppose that as soon as any gentleman is translated to another and a higher sphere, a process of rapid deterioration sets in and he forgets the principles which animated him in the House of Commons. As to the practical question whether or not this Order should be abolished, my views are quite unchanged. If the House of Commons in a formal way cares to delete the rule from its Standing Orders, it will be taken, and must be taken, as an intimation to every Peer that, as far as the House of Commons is concerned, they will welcome his intervention in electoral contests. I do not remember the exact proportion of Unionists to Radical Peers in the House of Lords; but the balance is considerably in our favour. Therefore, from the Ministerial point of view, it would be an advantage to take the step suggested; because, if the intervention of Peers has any effect at all, that Party must gain which can enlist the greater number of Peers on its side. It is, therefore, on purely constitutional grounds, and against the interests of his Party that the hon. Baronet acts; and I will stand between the hon. Baronet and his self-denying procedure. I am sufficiently enamoured of the old constitutional principles of this country to see with reluctance the appearance of noble Lords on our electoral platforms. Such assistance may be extremely useful in relieving the labour thrown on candidates; but I do not believe it would be expedient. I will admit that there is no sanction behind this Order. The House cannot censure a noble Lord; and, if it did, he would probably treat the censure with ridicule. Therefore, the most dignified course is to take no steps to enforce the Rule. But the fact that this Order is retained by the House will prevent the great mass of Peers from taking an active part during the brief period in which an election is going on, and that is to the advantage of the House at large and of the hon. Baronet and his Party. In those circumstances I hope the opposition to the Order will not be pressed.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 345; Noes, 65. (Division List, No. 1.)

AYES.

Agnew, Sir Andrew Noel
Allen, Charles P.
Allhusen, Augustus Henry E.
Allsopp, Hon. George
Arkwright, John Stanhope
Arnold-Forster, Rt. Hn. H. O.
Arrol, Sir William
Asher, Alexander
Asquith, Rt. Hn. Herbert H.
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Aubrey-Fletcher, Rt. Hn. Sir H.
Bagot, Capt. J. FitzRoy
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Bain, Colonel James Robert
Balcarres, Lord
Balfour, Rt. Hn. A. J. (Manch'r)
Balfour, Rt Hn Gerald W (Leeds)
Balfour, Kenneth R. (Christch.)
Barran, Rowland Hirst
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Barry, Sir F. T. (Windsor)
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Bell, Richard
Bhownaggree, Sir M. M.
Bigwood, James
Black, Alexander William
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Boland, John
Bond, Edward
Boulnois, Edmund
Bowles, Lt. Col. H. F. (Middlesex)
Brassey, Albert
Brigg, John
Bright, Allan Heywood
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brotherton, Edward Allen
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Brymer, William Ernest

Burdett-Coutts, W.
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Robert
Campbell, Rt. Hn. J. A. (Glasgow)
Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin Univ.
Campbell, John (Armagh, S.)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Carlile, William Walter
Carson, Rt. Hon. Sir Edw. H.
Causton, Richard Knight
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbysh.
Cawley, Frederick
Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. (Birm.
Chamberlain, RtHnJ. A (Worc.)
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Chapman, Edward
Cheetham, John Frederick
Churchill, Winston Spencer
Coates, Edward Feetham
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Rt. Hn. Sir John C. R.
Compton, Lord Alwyne
Cook, Sir Frederick Lucas
Craig, Robert Hunter (Lanark)
Crombie, John William
Crossley, Rt. Hn. Sir Savile
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, Alfred (Carmarthen)
Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan
Devlin, Charles R. (Galway)
Dewar, John A. (Inverness-sh.
Dickson, Charles Scott
Dickson-Poynder, Sir John P.
Dimsdale, Rt. Hn. Sir Joseph C.
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. Dixon
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Dorington, Rt. Hn. Sir John E.
Doughty, Sir George
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark)
Doxford, Sir William Theodore
Duke, Henry Edward
Duncan, J. Hastings
Dunn, Sir William
Durning-Lawrence, Sir Edwin
Ellice, Capt EC (S. Andrw'sBghs.
Elliot, Hn. A. Ralph Douglas
Emmott, Alfred
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Evans, Sir Francis H (Maidstone
Fardell, Sir T. George
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J. (Manc'r.
Finch, Rt. Hon. George H.
Findlay, Alex. (Lanark, N. E.
Finlay, Sir R. B. (Inv'rn'ss B'ghs
Firbank, Sir Joseph Thomas
Fisher, William Hayes
FitzGerald, Sir Robert Penrose-
Fitzroy, Hon. Edw. Algernon
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Flower, Sir Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Foster, P. S. (Warwick, S. W.)
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry
Freeman-Thomas, Captain F.
Galloway, William Johnson
Gardner, Ernest
Garfit, William
Gibbs, Hon. A. G. H.
Gladstone, Rt. Hn. Herbert J.
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Gordon, Hn. J. E. (Elgin&Nairn)
Gordon, Maj Evans-(T'r H'ml'ts
Gore, Hon. S. F. Ormsby-
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Hon. George Joachim
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Grant, Corrie
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Greene, Sir E W (B'ry S Edm'nds
Greene, Henry D. (Shrewsbury
Grey, Rt. Hn. Sir E. (Berwick)
Griffith, Ellis J.
Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton
Hain, Edward
Halsey, Rt. Hon. Thomas F.
Hambro, Charles Eric
Hamilton, Marq. of (L'nd'nd'y)
Harrington, Timothy
Harris, F. Leverton (Tynem'th)
Haslam, Sir Alfred S.
Hatch, Ernest Frederick Geo.
Hay, Hon. Claude George
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir Arthur D.
Heath, Arthur Howard (Hanley
Heaton, John Henniker
Helder, Augustus
Helme, Norval Watson
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Henderson, Sir A. (Stafford, W.
Henderson, Arthur (Durham)
Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T.
Hoare, Sir Samuel
Hobhouse, RtHn H (Somers't, E
Hogg, Lindsay
Horner, Frederick William
Hoult, Joseph
Houston, Robert Paterson
Howard, J. (Midd., Tottenham
Hozier, Hon. James Henry Cecil
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hutchinson, Dr Charles Fredk.
Jebb, Sir Richard (Claverhouse
Jeffreys, Rt Hon Arthur Fred
Jessel, Capt Herbert Merton
Jones, D Brynmor (Swansea)
Jones, William (Carnarvonsh)
Kennedy, V. P. (Cavan, W.)
Kenyon-Slaney, Rt. Hn. Col. W.
Kerr, John
Kimber, Sir Henry
Kitson, Sir James
Knowles, Sir Lees
Lambert, George
Lambton, Hon. Frederick Wm.
Langley, Batty
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Law, Andrew Bonar (Glasgow)
Lawrence, Sir Joseph (Monm'th)
Lawson, Hn. H. L. W. (Mile End
Layland-Barratt, Francis
Lee, A. H. (Hants., Fareham)
Lees, Sir Elliott (Birkenhead)
Leese, Sir Joseph F. (Accrington
Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage
Levy, Maurice
Lewis, John Herbert
Llewellyn, Evan Henry
Lloyd-George, David
Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. C. W. (Evesham)
Long, Rt. Hn. W. (Bristol, S.)
Lonsdale, John Brownlee
Lowe, Francis William
Lowther, C. (Cumb., Eskdale)
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lucas, Col. Francis (Lowestoft)
Lucas, R. J. (Portsmouth)
Lyttelton, Rt. Hon. Alfred
Macdona, John Cumming
M'Arthur, Charles (Liverpool)
M'Arthur, William (Cornwall)
M'Crae, George
M'Iver, Sir Lewis (Edinburgh W
Majendie, James A. H.
Malcolm, Ian
Marks, Harry Hananel
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.
Maxwell, W. J. H. (Dumfriessh.)
Milvain, Thomas
Montagu, Hn. J. Scott (Hants.)
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Mooney, John J.
Morgan, D. J. (Walthamstow)
Morrison, James Archibald
Moulton, John Fletcher
Mowbray, Sir Robert Gray C.
Muntz, Sir Philip A.
Murnaghan, George
Nannetti, Joseph P.
Newnes, Sir George
Nicholson, William Graham
Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)
Norman, Henry
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, N.)
O'Connor, James (Wicklow, W.)
Palmer, Sir Walter (Salisbury)
Parker, Sir Gilbert
Parkes, Ebenezer
Parrott, William
Partington, Oswald
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, Herbert Pike (Darlington
Pease, J. A. (Saffron Walden)
Pemberton, John S. G.
Percy, Earl
Pierpoint, Robert
Pilkington, Colonel Richard
Pirie, Duncan V.
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Purvis, Robert
Pym, C. Guy
Randles, John S.
Rasch, Sir Frederick Carne
Ratcliff, R. F.
Redmond, John E. (Waterford
Reid, James (Greenock)
Remnant, James Farquharson
Renwick, George
Rickett, J. Compton

Ridley, S. Forde
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Rolleston, Sir John F. L.
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Rose, Charles Day
Rothschild, Hn. Lionel Walter
Royds, Clement Molyneux
Runciman, Walter
Rutherford, J. (Lancashire)
Rutherford, W. W. (Liverpool)
Sadler, Col. Samuel Alexander
Samuel, H. L. (Cleveland)
Sassoon, Sir Edward Albert
Schwann, Charles E.
Seely, Charles Hilton (Lincoln)
Seely, Maj. J. E. B. (Isle of Wight
Seton-Karr, Sir Henry
Shackleton, David James
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick B.)
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Slack, John Bamford
Sloan, Thomas Henry
Smith, Abel H. (Hertford, East)
Smith, H. C. (North'mb. Tynesd.
Smith, RtHnJ. Parker (Lanarks
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Soames, Arthur Wellesley
Spear, John Ward
Spencer, Rt. Hn. C. R. (Northants
Spencer, Sir E. (W. Bromwich)
Stanley, Rt. Hn. Lord (Lancs.)
Stevenson, Francis S.
Stewart, Sir Mark J. M'Taggart
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Strachey, Sir Edward
Stroyan, John
Talbot, Rt. Hn. J. G. (Oxf'd Univ.
Taylor, Austin (East Toxteth)
Taylor, Theodore C. (Radcliffe
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, Sir A. (Glamorgan, E.
Thomas, JA (Glamorgan, Gower
Thomson, F. W. (York, W. R.)
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Sir Wm. Edw. M.
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Tuff, Charles
Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward
Tuke, Sir John Batty
Turnour, Viscount
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Waldron, Laurence Ambrose
Wallace, Robert
Walrond, Rt. Hn. Sir William H
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wason, Eugene (Clackmannan
Wason, John Cathcart (Orkney
Weir, James Galloway
Welby, Lt.-Col. A. C. E. (Taunt'n
White, Luke (York, E. R.)
White, Patrick (Meath, North)
Whiteley, H. (Ashton und. Lyne
Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, Osmond (Merioneth)
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Wills, Arthur Walters, N. Dorset)
Wilson, F. W. (Norfolk, Mid.)
Wilson, John (Glasgow)
Wilson, J. W. (Worcestersh. N.)
Wilson-Tod, Sir W. H. (Yorks.)
Wodehouse, Rt. Hn. E. R. (Bath
Woodhouse, Sir J. T. (Huddersfd
Worsley-Taylor, Henry Wilson
Wortley, Rt. Hn. C. B. Stuart-
Wrightson, Sir Thomas
Wylie, Alexander
Wyndham, Rt. Hon. George
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—Sir Alexander Acland-Hood and Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.

NOES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N.E.
Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Agg-Gardner James Tynte
Ambrose, Robert
Atherley-Jones, L.
Barlow, John Emmott
Bartley, Sir George C. T.
Blake, Edward
Broadhurst, Henry
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Channing, Francis Allston
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Cremer, William Randal
Dalkeith, Earl of
Delany, William
Devlin, Joseph (Kilkenny, N.
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Dillon, John
Eve, Harry Trelawney
Fenwick, Charles
Field, William
Flynn, James Christopher
Hardie, J. Keir (Merthyr Tydvil)
Heath, Sir James (Staffords. NW
Higham, John Sharpe
Hope, J. F. (Sheffield, Brightside
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C.
Isaacs, Rufus Daniel
Jacoby, James Alfred
Labouchere, Henry
Lough, Thomas
Lundon, W.
Macnamara, Dr. Thomas J.
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
MacVeagh, Jeremiah
M'Hugh, Patrick A.
M'Killop, W. (Sligo, North)
Morgan, J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
Morpeth, Viscount
Nolan, Col. John P. (Galway, N.)
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Malley, William
Perks, Robert William
Price, Robert John
Rea, Russell
Reckitt, Harold James
Reid, Sir R. Threshie (Dumfries
Richards, Thomas (W Monm'th)
Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, John
Russell, T. W.
Sackville, Col. S. G. Stopford)
Stanhope, Hon. Philip James
Sullivan, Donal
Toulmin, George
Welby, Sir Charles G. E. (Notts.
White, George (Norfolk)
Wilson, Chas. Henry (Hull, W.)
Wilson, John (Durham, Mid.)
Wilson, John (Falkirk)
Wood, James

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—Sir Wilfrid Lawson and Mr. Kearley.

PRIVILEGE.

MR. DALZIEL (Kirkcaldy Burghs) rose to draw attention to what he regarded as a question of Privilege, and to move:

> "That Lord Alington, a Peer of Parliament, has, by his action in connection with the recent election in North Dorset, been guilty of a breach of the Privileges of this House."

The House had by an overwhelming majority declared its opinion that for a Peer to interfere in a Parliamentary election was a breach of its Privileges, and he thought that when he produced the evidence on which he based his Motion, it would be obvious that there had been committed a breach of Privilege. During a recent election in North Dorset, Lord Alington, after the issue of the Writ, sent the following letter to his tenants—

> "Though I am unable to take any active part in the coming election in North Dorset, I should wish the very good feeling which has always existed between my family and yourself to be further maintained by the support of Sir Randolf Baker, who,"—[he presumed "whom" was meant]—"I hope to see successful."

Now that was not a letter written without due knowledge that it was a breach of Privilege, for subsequently to sending it out, Lord Alington made a speech in which he declared that he had done nothing unconstitutional, nothing to be ashamed of, but something to glory in, and every time an election came he would issue a similar letter. Clearly the Rule had been broken in this particular case, and if no notice were taken of this proceeding the adoption of the Resolution which the House had just passed would be a sham and a farce. This was a broad question of principle, and Lord Alington, who formerly was one of the most popular Members of the House of Commons, by his own action in voting for the Sessional Order, showed that he attached importance to it. Now what was the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the House going to do in reference to this matter? For him to decide to do nothing after the decision just come to was to take up an untenable position. Lord Alington had been using his powers as a Peer and as a landlord to induce his tenants to support a certain candidate, and they were bound to take notice of that fact. If they did not they would simply be inviting Peers to come on every platform and take part in every election. They ought emphatically to condemn the action of Lord Alington. He did not suggest that the noble Lord should be brought to the Bar of the House, although he would like to point out that if some unfortunate journalist had written a paragraph reflecting on the honour of any hon. Member, he would have been promptly summoned to the Bar and threatened with imprisonment in the Clock Tower for having been guilty of a breach of the Privileges of the House. Why should they make a difference in the case of a Peer who openly violated an Order of the House? In view of the fact that there would probably be a general election in the near future—he was glad to see that the Member for West Birmingham nodded his head in favour of that proposition——

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN (Birmingham, W.): I should like to know what I nodded my head at.

MR. DALZIEL: I understood the right hon. Gentleman to assent to what I was saying—that he was desirous of a general election.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I do not admit that I assented to that.

MR. DALZIEL: I am sorry I misinterpreted the right hon. Gentleman. I can only repeat that if we take no notice of Lord Alington's conduct, the Order becomes a sham and a farce, and it is ridiculous for the Leader of the House, session after session, to ask us to pass it.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON seconded.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Lord Alington, a Peer of Parliament, has, by his action in connection with the recent Election in North Dorset, been guilty of a breach of the Privileges of this House."—(Mr. Dalziel.)

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I do not think the House would gain anything by pursuing this matter further. I remember that some years ago Lord Rosebery was attacked, after making a speech when an election was proceeding, and Sir William Harcourt, who was then leading the House, moved the previous Question. That, I think, is the course the House ought now to adopt. If the House adopts the Motion of the hon. Gentleman we can take no further action. We announce publicly that our Privileges have been violated, but we can do nothing more; we call public attention to the evil, but we do nothing to redress the injury which we have publicly advertised. We cannot summon a Member of the other House to attend at the Bar, and we cannot give him into custody. I therefore object to the House passing this Resolution. I regard the Standing Order as being, in practice, merely an indication of the view of the House that Peers ought not to act as commoners in the ordinary political contests of the country. It suggests that they should not so act after a Writ has been issued. But surely the hon. Member opposite does not wish to press the Order to its logical conclusion and to say that no Peer shall have any part at any time in dealing with affairs of the county or electoral division in which he resides, or in which his property is situated? All that is desired is to maintain the contention—it is nothing more than that—that it is desirable overt action shall not be taken by any Peer while an election is actually in progress. It would not be a dignified proceeding for this House to announce publicly that an injury has been done it, and that it can do nothing to redress it. Under these circumstances, and bearing in mind that the Standing Order does practically attain the object for which it was framed, I beg to move the previous Question.

Question put, "That the Question be not now put."

The House divided:—Ayes 257; Noes, 191. (Division List No. 2.)

AYES.

Agg-Gardner, James Tynte
Agnew, Sir Andrew Noel
Aird, Sir John
Allhusen, Augustus Henry E.
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Arkwright, John Stanhope
Arnold-Forster, Rt. Hon. H. O.
Arrol, Sir William
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Aubrey-Fletcher, Rt. Hn Sir H.
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Bain, Colonel James Robert
Balcarres, Lord
Balfour, Rt. Hn. A. J. (Manch'r)
Balfour, RtHnGeraldW (Leeds)
Balfour, Kenneth R. (Christch.
Banbury, Sir Frederick George
Barry, Sir Francis T. (Windsor)
Bartley, Sir George C. T.
Bhownaggree, Sir M. M.
Bigwood, James
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bond, Edward
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith-
Boulnois, Edmund
Bousfield, William Robert
Bowles, Lt.-Col. H. F. (Middles'x
Bowles, T. Gibson (King's Lynn
Brassey, Albert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brotherton, Edward Allen
Brown, Sir Alex. H. (Shropsh.)
Brymer, William Ernest
Burdett-Coutts, W.
Campbell, Rt. Hn. J A. (Glasgow)
Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin Univ.
Carlile, William Walter
Carson, Rt. Hon. Sir Edw. H.
Cautley, Henry Strother
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbyshire)
Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. (Birm.)
Chamberlain, RtHnJ. A. (Worc.
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Chapman, Edward
Coates, Edward Feetham
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Rt. Hn. Sir John C. R.
Compton, Lord Alwyne
Cook, Sir Frederick Lucas
Corbett, T. L. (Down, North)
Craig, Charles C. (Antrim, S.)
Crossley, Rt. Hon. Sir Savile
Dalkeith, Earl of
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Davenport, William Bromley-
Denny, Colonel
Dickson, Charles Scott
Dimsdale, Rt. Hn. Sir Joseph C.
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. Dixon
Dorington, Rt. Hn. Sir John E.
Doughty, Sir George
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
Doxford, Sir William Theodore
Duke, Henry Edward
Durning-Lawrence, Sir Edwin
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Elliot, Hon. A. Ralph Douglas
Fardell, Sir T. George
Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J. (Manc'r
Finch, Rt. Hon. George H.
Finlay, Sir R. B. (Inv'rn'ss B'ghs
Firbank, Sir Joseph Thomas
Fisher, William Hayes
Fitzroy, Hon. Edw. Algernon
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Flower, Sir Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Foster, P. S. (Warwick, S. W.)
Galloway, William Johnson
Gardner, Ernest
Garfit, William
Gibbs, Hon. A. G. H.
Gordon, Hn. J. E. (Elgin &Nairn)
Gordon, Maj Evans-(T'rH'mlets
Gore, Hon. S. F. Ormsby-
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Hon. George Joachim
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Greene, Sir EW (B'rySEdm'nds)
Greene, Henry D. (Shrewsbury)
Hain, Edward
Halsey, Rt. Hon. Thomas F.
Hambro, Charles Eric
Hamilton, RtHnLordG (Midd'x
Hamilton, Marq. of (L'nd'nd'y)
Hardy, L. (Kent, Ashford)
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Harris, F. Leverton (Tynem'th
Haslam, Sir Alfred S.
Hay, Hon. Claude George
Heath, A. Howard (Hanley)
Heath, Sir James (Staffords. NW
Heaton, John Henniker
Helder, Augustus
Henderson, Sir A. (Stafford, W.
Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T.
Hoare, Sir Samuel
Hobhouse, RtHnH. (Somers't E
Hogg, Lindsay
Hope, J. F. (Sheffield, Brightside
Hornby, Sir William Henry
Horner, Frederick William
Hoult, Joseph
Houston Robert Paterson
Howard, J. (Midd. Tottenham
Hozier, Hon. James Henry C.
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hutton, John (Yorks. N.R.)
Jebb, Sir Richard Claverhouse
Jeffreys, Rt. Hon. Arthur Fred.
Jessel, Capt. Herbert Merton
Kenyon-Slaney, Rt. Hn. Col. W.
Kerr, John
Keswick, William
Kimber, Sir Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles Sir Lees
Lambton, Hon. Frederick Wm.
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Law, Andrew Bonar (Glasgow)
Lawrence, Sir Joseph (Monm'th)
Lawson, Hn. H. L. W. (Mile End)
Lawson, J. Grant (Yorks., N.R.
Lee, Arthur H. (Hants., Fareham
Lees, Sir Elliott (Birkenhead)
Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage
Llewellyn, Evan Henry
Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. Chas. W. (Evesham)
Long, Rt. Hn. Walter (Bristol, S.
Lonsdale, John Brownlee
Lowe, Francis William
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lucas, Col. Francis (Lowestoft)
Lucas, R. J. (Portsmouth)
Lyttelton, Rt. Hon. Alfred
Macdona, John Cumming
MacIver, David (Liverpool)
M'Arthur, Charles (Liverpool)
M'Iver, Sir Lewis (Edinburgh, W

Majendie, James A. H.
Malcolm, Ian
Marks, Harry Hananel
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.
Maxwell, W.J.H(Dumfriesshire
Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
Mildmay, Francis Bingham
Milvain, Thomas
Montagu, G. (Huntingdon)
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Moore, William
Morgan, D. J. (Walthamstow)
Morpeth, Viscount
Morrison, James Archibald
Morton, Arthur H. Aylmer
Mowbray, Sir Robert Gray C.
Muntz, Sir Philip A.
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Nicholson, William Graham
Palmer, Sir W. (Salisbury)
Parker, Sir Gilbert
Parkes, Ebenezer
Pease, Herbert P. (Darlington)
Pemberton, John S. G.
Percy, Earl
Pierpoint, Robert
Pilkington, Colonel Richard
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Purvis, Robert
Pym, C. Guy
Randles, John S.
Rasch, Sir Frederic Carne
Ratcliff, R. F.
Reid, James (Greenock)
Remnant, James Farquharson
Renwick, George
Ridley, S. Forde
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Rolleston, Sir John F. L.
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Rothschild, Hon. Lionel Walter
Round, Rt. Hon. James
Royds, Clement Molyneux
Rutherford, John (Lancashire)
Rutherford, W. W. (Liverpool)
Sackville, Col. S. G. Stopford-
Sadler, Col. Samuel Alexander
Sassoon, Sir Edward Albert
Seely, Charles Hilton (Lincoln)
Seton-Karr, Sir Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Sloan, Thomas Henry
Smith, Abel H.(Hertford, East)
Smith,H.C (North'mb.Tynesde
Smith,RtHnJ Parker(Lanarks)
Spear, John Ward.
Spencer, Sir E. (W. Bromwich)
Stanley, Rt. Hon. Lord (Lancs.
Stewart, Sir Mark J.M'Taggart
Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Stroyan, John
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Taylor, Austin (East Toxteth)
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Sir Wm. Edw. M.
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Tuff, Charles
Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward
Tuke, Sir John Batty
Turnour, Viscount
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent,Col.Sir C.EH(Sheffield)
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Walrond, Rt. Hn. Sir W. H.
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Welby, Lt.-Col.A.C.E(Taunton
Welby,SirCharles G.E. (Notts.)
Wharton, Rt. Hon. John Lloyd
Whiteley,H.(Ashton und. Lyne
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Wilson, John (Glasgow)
Wilson-Todd,SirW.H. (Yorks.)
Wodehouse, Rt.Hn.E.R.(Bath)
Worsley-Taylor, Henry Wilson
Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B.Stuart-
Wrightson, Sir Thomas
Wylie, Alexander
Wyndham, Rt. Hon. George

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—Sir Alexander Acland - Hood and Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.

NOES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N.E.)
Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Ainsworth, John Stirling
Allen, Charles P.
Ambrose, Robert
Asher, Alexander
Asquith,Rt.Hn. HerbertHenry
Atherley-Jones, L.
Barlow, John Emmott
Barran, Rowland Hirst
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Bell, Richard
Black, Alexander William
Blake, Edward
Boland, John
Brigg, John
Bright, Allan Heywood
Broadhurst, Henry
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Butcher, John George
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Robert
Campbell, John (Armagh, S.)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Causton, Richard Knight
Cawley, Frederick
Channing, Francis Allston
Cheetham, John Frederick
Churchill, Winston Spencer
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Craig, Robert Hunter (Lanark)
Cremer, William Randal
Crombie, John William
Davies, Alfred (Carmarthen)
Davies,M.Vaughan- (Cardigan)
Delany, William
Devlin, Chas. Ramsay (Galway
Devlin, Joseph (Kilkenny, N.)
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Dillon, John
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark)
Duncan, J. Hastings
Dunn, Sir William
Ellice,CaptEC(S Andrw's Bghs
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Emmott, Alfred
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Evans,SirFrancisH (Maidstone
Eve, Harry Trelawney
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Field, William
Findlay, Alex. (Lanark, N. E.)
Flynn, James Christopher
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry
Freeman-Thomas, Captain F.
Gladstone,Rt.Hn.Herbert John
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Grant, Corrie
Grey, Rt. Hn. Sir E. (Berwick)
Griffith, Ellis J.
Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton
Haldane, Rt. Hon. Richard B.
Harcourt, Lewis Vernon
Hardie,J.Keir(Merthyr Tydvil)
Harrington, Timothy
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir Arthur D.
Helme, Norval Watson
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Henderson, Arthur (Durham)
Higham, John Sharpe
Hobhouse, C.E.H. (Bristol, E.)
Holland, Sir William Henry
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C.
Hutchinson, Dr. Charles Fredk.
Isaacs, Rufus Daniel
Jacoby, James Alfred
Jones, David B. (Swansea)
Jones, William (Carnarvonsh.)
Kearley, Hudson, E.
Kennedy, V. P. (Cavan, W.)
Kilbride, Denis
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Langley, Batty
Layland-Barratt, Francis
Leese,Sir Joseph F (Accrington)
Levy, Maurice
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George, David
Lough, Thomas
Lundon, W.
Lyell, Charles Henry
Macnamara, Dr. Thomas J.
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
MacVeagh, Jeremiah
M'Arthur, William (Cornwall)

M'Crae, George
M'Hugh, Patrick A.
M'Killop, W. (Sligo, North)
Mooney, John J.
Morgan,J.Lloyd (Carmarthen)
Morley,Rt.Hn. John(Montrose)
Moulton, John Fletcher
Murnaghan, George
Nannetti, Joseph P.
Newnes, Sir George
Nolan,Col. John P. (Galway,N.)
Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)
Norman, Henry
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, N.)
O'Connor, J. (Wicklow, W.)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Dowd, John
O'Malley, William
O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
Parrott, William
Partington, Oswald
Paulton, James Mellor
Perks, Robert William
Pirie, Duncan V.
Price, Robert John
Rea, Russell
Reckitt, Harold James
Redmond, John E. (Waterford)
Richards, T. (W. Monmouth)
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, John
Rose, Charles Day
Runciman, Walter
Russell, T. W.
Samuel, H. L. (Cleveland)
Schwann, Charles E.
Seely,Maj.J.E.B.(Isle of Wight
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick, B.)
Sinclair, John (Forfarshire)
Slack, John Bamford
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Soames, Arthur Wellesley
Spencer,Rt.Hn.C.R.(Northants
Stanhope, Hon. Philip James
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Sir Edward
Sullivan, Donal
Taylor, T. C. (Radcliffe)
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, A. (Carmarthen, E.)
Thomas, Sir A. (Glamorgan, E.
Thomas, D. A. (Merthyr)
Thomas,J.A.(Glamorgan,Gow'r
Thomson, F. W. (York, W. R.)
Toulmin, George
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Waldron, Laurence Ambrose
Wallace, Robert
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wason, Eugene (Clackmannan)
Wason, John C. (Orkney)
Weir, James Galloway
White, George (Norfolk)
White, Luke (York, E. R.)
White, Patrick (Meath, North)
Whiteley, George (York, W.R.)
Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, Osmond (Merioneth)
Wills, Arthur W. (N. Dorset
Wilson, Chas. Henry (Hull, W.)
Wilson, Fred. W. (Norfolk,Mid.
Wilson, John (Durham, Mid.)
Wilson, John (Falkirk)
Wilson, J.W.(Worcestersh., N.)
Wood, James
Woodhouse,SirJT (Huddersf'd)
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—Mr. Dalziel and Sir Wilfrid Lawson.

ELECTIONS.

Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath been elected or returned a Member of this House, or endeavoured so to be, by bribery, or any other corrupt practices, this House will proceed with the utmost severity against all such persons as shall have been wilfully concerned in such bribery or other corrupt practices.

WITNESSES.

Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath been tampering with any witness, in respect of his evidence to be given to this House, or any Committee thereof, or directly or indirectly hath endeavoured to deter or hinder any person from appearing or giving evidence, the same is declared to be a high crime or misdemeanour; and this House will proceed with the utmost severity against such offender.

Resolved, That if it shall appear that any person hath given false evidence in any case before this House, or any Committee thereof, this House will proceed with the utmost severity against such offender.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Ordered, That the Commissioners of the Police of the Metropolis do take care that, during the session of Parliament, the passages through the streets leading to this House be kept free and open, and that no obstruction be permitted to hinder the passage of Members to and from this House, and that no disorder be allowed in Westminster Hall, or in the passages leading to this House, during the Sitting of Parliament, and that there be no annoyance therein or thereabouts; and that the Serjeant at Arms attending this House do communicate this Order to the Commissioners aforesaid.

VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.

Ordered, That the Votes and Proceedings of this House be printed, being first perused by Mr. Speaker; and that he do appoint the printing thereof; and that no person but such as he shall appoint do presume to print the same.

PRIVILEGES.

Ordered, That a Committee of Privileges be appointed.

OUTLAWRIES BILL.

"For the more effectual preventing Clandestine Outlawries," read the first time; to be read a second time.

JOURNAL.

Ordered, That the Journal of this House, from the end of the last session to the end of the present session, with an Index thereto, be printed.

Ordered, That 500 copies of the said Journal and Index be printed by the appointment and under the direction of Sir Courtenay Peregrine Ilbert, K.S.C.I., C.I.E., the Clerk of this House.

Ordered, That the said Journal and Index be printed by such person as shall be licensed by Mr. Speaker, and that no other person do presume to print the same.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS (RECESS).

The following Papers, presented by His Majesty's Command during the Recess, were delivered to the Librarian of the House of Commons during the Recess, pursuant to the Standing Order of the 14th August, 1896:—

1. Explosions (Newcastle Emlyn).—Copy of Report by Captain J. H. Thomson, His Majesty's Chief Inspector of Explosives, to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, on the circumstances attending an Explosion which occurred in an ironmonger's shop at Newcastle Emlyn, Carmarthenshire, on the 25th November, 1904.

2. Beck (Adolf) (Committee of Inquiry).—Copy of Report of the Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to inquire into the case of Mr. Adolf Beck, together with Minutes of Evidence, Appendix, and facsimiles of various Documents.

3. Coal Supplies (Royal Commission).—Copy of Final Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject of the Coal Resources of the United Kingdom. Parts I. to XIII.

4. Historical Manuscripts (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report on the Manuscripts of the Earl of Egmont, Vol. I.

5. Historical Manuscripts (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report on the Manuscripts of the Marquess of Lothian, preserved at Blickling Hall, Norfolk.

6. Historical Manuscripts (Royal Commission).—Copy of Report on the Manuscripts of Lady du Cane.

7. Mines and Quarries.—Copy of General Report and Statistics for the year 1903; Part II., Labour; General Report and Statistics relating to persons employed and Accidents at Mines and Quarries in the United Kingdom, and to the enforcement of the Mines and Quarries Acts.

8. Mines and Quarries.—Copy of General Report and Statistics for the year 1903; Part III., Output; General Report and Statistics relating to the Output and Value of the Minerals raised in the United Kingdom, the amount and value of the metals produced, and the exports and imports of Minerals.

9. (Prisons (England and Wales).—Copy of Report of the Commissioners of Prisons and the Directors of Convict Prisons, with Appendices, for the year ended 31st March, 1904.

10. Factories and Workshops.—Copy of Report of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Workshops for 1903. Part II. Tables.

11. Factory and Workshop (Draft Regulations — Docks, Wharves, and Quays).—Copy of Report to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, by Chester Jones, esquire, on the Draft Regulations for Docks, Wharves, and Quays.

12. Reformatory and Industrial Schools (Great Britain).—Copy of Forty-seventh Report of His Majesty's Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools for 1903. Part II. General Report and Appendices III. to XI.

13. Police (Metropolis).—Copy of Report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for the year 1903.

14. Inebriates Acts (Inspector's Report).—Copy of Report of the Inspector under the Inebriates Acts, 1879 to 1900, for the year 1903.

15. Workmen's Compensation.—Copy of Statistics of Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1897 and 1900, and the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, during the year 1903.

16. Workmen's Compensation.—Copy of Report of the Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to inquire into the Law relating to Compensation for Injuries to Workmen. Vol. II., Minutes of Evidence, with Index.

17. Judicial Statistics (England and Wales).—Copy of Judicial Statistics, Part I., relating to Criminal Proceedings, Police, Coroners, Prisons, Reformatory and Industrial Schools, and Criminal Lunatics, for England and Wales for 1903.

18. East India (Trade).—Copy of Review of Trade of India for 1903–4.

19. East India (Statistical Abstract).—Copy of Statistical Abstract relating to British India from 1893–4 to 1902–3. Thirty-eighth Number.

20. East India (Sanitary Measures).—Copy of Report on Sanitary Measures in India in 1902–3 (Vol. XXXVI.).

21. Imperial Institute (Indian Section).—Copy of Annual Report of the Imperial Institute (Indian Section) for the year 1903–4.

22. East India (Tibet). — Copy of Further Papers relating to Tibet (No. III.).

23. East India (Excise). — Copy of Papers relating to the Excise Administration in Assam.

24. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of an additional Light Railway, in the county of Gloucester, in the borough of Cheltenham, and the abandonment of the construction of part of another Light Railway already authorised in the same borough (Cheltenham and District Light Railway (Extension No. 3) Order, 1904).

25. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of a Light Railway in the county of East Suffolk, from Melton to Bromeswell, Sutton Shottisham, Hollesley, Alderton, and Bawdsey (Woodbridge and Bawdsey Light Railway Order, 1904).

26. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending The Brackenhill Light Railway Order, 1901 (Brackenhill Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1904).

27. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending The Tickhill Light Railway Order, 1901 (Tickhill Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1904).

28. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending The Maidstone and Faversham Junction Light Railway Order, 1901 (Maidstone and Faversham Junction Light Railway (Extension of Time) Order, 1904.

29. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the county of Essex from Southend by way of Rochford, Creeksea, Burnham, Southminster, Asheldham, Dengie, Tillingham, Bradwell-juxta-Mare, and West Mersea, to Colchester (Southend and Colchester Light Railways Order, 1904).

30. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, amending the Axminster and Lyme Regis Light Railway Order, 1899 (Axminster and Lyme Regis Light Railway (Further Capital Powers) Order, 1904).

31. Light Railways Act, 1896.—Copy of Order made by the Light Railway Commissioners, and modified and confirmed by the Board of Trade, authorising the construction of Light Railways in the parish of Northam and the parish and borough of Bideford, in the county of Devon, in extension of the Bideford, Westward Ho! and Appledore Railway, and the working of that railway as a Light Railway under The Light Railways Act, 1896 (Bideford, Westward Ho! and Appledore Light Railway Order, 1904).

32. Railway Accidents. — Copy of Returns of Accidents and Casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several Railway Companies in the United Kingdom during the three months ending 30th June, 1904, together with Reports of the Inspecting Officers of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain Accidents which were inquired into.

33. Railway Accidents. — Copy of Returns of Accidents and Casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several Railway Companies in the United Kingdom during the three months ending 30th September, 1904, together with Reports of the Inspecting Officers of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain Accidents which were inquired into.

34. Railway Servants (Hours of Labour).—Copy of Return, in pursuance of Section 4 of The Regulation of Railways Act, 1889, of Railway Servants of certain classes who were on one or more occasions during the month of October, 1903, on duty on the railways of the United Kingdom for more than twelve hours at a time; or who, after being on duty more than twelve hours, were allowed to resume work with less than nine hours rest.

35. Foreign Import Duties.—Copy of Statement of the Rates of Import Duties levied in European Countries, in the United States, in Japan, China, and Persia, upon the Produce and Manufactures of the United Kingdom in 1904.

36. British and Foreign Trade and Industry. — Copy of Second Series of Memoranda, Statistical Tables, and Charts, prepared in the Board of Trade, with reference to various matters bearing on British and Foreign Trade and Industrial Conditions.

37. Muscat Region (Trade).—Copy of Report on the condition and prospects of British Trade in Oman, Bahrein, and the Arab Ports in the Persian Gulf by H. W. Maclean, Special Commissioner of the Commercial Intelligence Committee of the Board of Trade.

38. Unemployed in Foreign Countries. —Copy of Report to the Board of Trade on Agencies and Methods for dealing with the Unemployed in certain Foreign Countries by Mr. David F. Schloss.

39. Earnings of Agricultural Labourers. —Copy of Second Report by Mr. Wilson Fox on the Wages, Earnings, and Conditions of Employment of Agricultural Labourers in the United Kingdom, with Statistical Tables and Charts.

40. Irish Land Commission (Proceedings).—Copy of Return of Proceedings during the months of March, April, May, June, July, August, and September, 1904.

41. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Seventieth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1903. Section I.

42. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Seventieth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1903. Section II.

43. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Seventieth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1903. Section III.

44. National Education (Ireland).—Copy of Appendix to the Seventieth Report of the Commissioners, being for the year 1903. Section IV.

45. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Tables showing the extent in statute acres and the produce of the Crops for the year 1904.

46. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Abstracts showing the Acreage under Crops and the number of Live Stock in each county and province of Ireland, for the year 1903–4.

47. Agricultural Statistics (Ireland) (Migratory Labourers).—Copy of Report and Tables relating to Irish Migratory Agricultural and other Labourers for the year 1904.

48. Evictions (Ireland). — Copy of Return of Evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 30th September, 1904.

49. Evictions (Ireland). — Copy of Return of Evictions in Ireland for the quarter ended 31st December, 1904.

50. Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887 (Eviction Notices).—Copy of Return of Eviction Notices filed during the quarter ended 30th September, 1904.

51. Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887 (Eviction Notices).—Copy of Return of Eviction Notices filed during the quarter ended 31st December, 1904.

52. Banking, Railway, and Canal Statistics (Ireland).—Copy of Report on the Banking, Railway, and Canal Statistics of Ireland for the half-year ended 30th June, 1904.

53. Reformatory and Industrial Schools (Ireland).—Copy of Forty-second Report of the Inspector for the year 1903.

54. Lunacy (Ireland).—Copy of Fifty-third Report, with Appendices, of Inspectors of Lunatics (Ireland) for the year 1903.

55. Congested Districts Board (Ireland).—Copy of Thirteenth Report of the Board, being for the year ending 31st March, 1904.

56. Royal University of Ireland.—Copy of Twenty-second Report of the Royal University of Ireland, being for the year 1903.

57. Local Government Board (Ireland).—Copy of Annual Report of the Local Government Board for Ireland, for the year ended 31st March, 1904.

58. Ireland Development Grant Act, 1903.—Copy of Report of the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland of all his Proceedings under the Act, for the year ended 31st March, 1904.

59. Fisheries (Ireland) Acts.—Copy of Manual prepared for the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction, Ireland, on the Fisheries (Ireland) Acts.

60. Army (Pay, Non-effective Pay, and Allowances).—Copy of List of Exceptions to the Army Regulations as to Pay, Non-effective Pay, and Allowances sanctioned during the year 1903–4.

61. Military Prisons.—Copy of Report on the Discipline and Management of Military Prisons in 1903.

62. Army.—Copy of Amendments in the Rules of Procedure under the Army Act.

63. Army.—Copy of Approximate Estimate of Expenditure under the Military Works Acts of 1897, 1899, and 1901.

64. Army.—Copy of Order in Council defining the duties of the Army Council.

65. Army.—Copy of Order in Council defining the duties of the Inspector-General of the Forces.

66. Army.—Copy of Order in Council defining the duties of the Director of Army Finance.

67. Army.—Copy of Report on the trial of the Short Rifle by the Army and Navy.

68. Somaliland (Despatches).—Copy of Despatches, etc., regarding the Military Operations in Somaliland from the 18th January, 1902, to the 31st May, 1904.

69. Board of Education (Special Reports).—Copy of Special Reports on Educational Subjects, Vol. 12. Educational Systems of the Chief Crown Colonies and Possessions of the British Empire, including Reports on the Training of Native Races. Part I. West Indies and Central America, St. Helena, Cyprus, and Gibraltar.

70. Board of Education (Special Reports).—Copy of Special Reports on Educational Subjects, Vol. 13. Educational Systems of the Chief Crown Colonies and Possessions of the British Empire, including Reports on the Training of Native Races. Part II. West Africa, Basutoland, Southern Rhodesia, East Africa Protectorate, Uganda, Mauritius, Seychelles.

71. Board of Education (Special Reports).—Copy of Special Reports on Educational Subjects, Vol. 14. Educational Systems of the Chief Crown Colonies and Possessions of the British Empire, including Reports on the Training of Native Races. Part III. Federated Malay States, Hong Kong, Straits Settlements; Fiji, Falkland Islands.

72. Board of Education.—Copy of Regulations relating to the Royal College of Science, the Royal College of Art, and to Museums under the Board of Education from 1st August, 1904, to 31st July, 1905.

73. Board of Education.—Copy of Reports from University Colleges, 1904.

74. Board of Education.—Copy of (1) Grants paid in respect of School Boards under Section 97 of Elementary Education Act, 1870, (2) School Board Accounts, (3) List of Loans, for 1903–4.

75. Board of Education.—Copy of Report on the Victoria and Albert Museum, the Royal College of Science and Art, the Geological Survey and Museum, and on the work of the Solar Physics Committee for the year 1903.

76. Board of Education.—Copy of Lists of Secondary Schools, Science and Art Classes, and Evening Schools and Schools of Art, under the administration of the Board of Education, for the school year 1902–3.

77. Board of Education.—Copy of Report of the Board of Education for the year 1903–4.

78. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (Distribution of Grants).—Copy of Annual Report on the Distribution of Grants for Agricultural Education and Research in the year 1903–4, etc.

79. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (Departmental Committee).—Copy of Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to investigate experimentally and to report upon certain questions connected with the Dipping and Treatment of Sheep.

80. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (Departmental Committee). — Copy of Minutes of Evidence taken before the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to investigate experimentally and to report upon certain questions connected with the Dipping and Treatment of Sheep, with Appendices.

81. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (Departmental Committee).—Copy of Report of the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to inquire into and report upon the working in Great Britain of The Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1893.

82. Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (Departmental Committee).—Copy of Minutes of Evidence taken before the Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to inquire into and report upon the working in Great Britain of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1893, with Appendices and Index.

83. Judicial Statistics (Scotland).—Copy of Report on the Judicial Statistics of Scotland for the year 1903.

84. Births, Deaths, and Marriages (Scotland).—Copy of Forty-eighth Detailed Annual Report of the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages in Scotland (Abstracts of 1902).

85. Sheriff Court Procedure (Scotland) (Departmental Committee).—Copy of Report of a Departmental Committee appointed by the Secretary for Scotland to inquire into Sheriff Court Procedure, with Minutes of Evidence, Appendix, and Index.

86. Navy.—Copy of Memorandum relating to the Distribution and Mobilisation of the Fleet.

87. Peterhead Harbour.—Copy of Reports respecting Peterhead Harbour Works.

88. Meteorology.—Copy of Report of the Meteorological Council to the Royal Society for the year ended 31st March, 1904.

89. Colonial Reports (Annual).—Copies of Reports, Nos. 423 (Sierra Leone, Annual Report for 1903), 424 (Gambia, Annual Report for 1903), 425 (Ceylon, Annual Report for 1903), 426 (Gold Coast, Annual Report for 1903), 427 (Lagos, Annual Report for 1903), 428 (Bahamas, Report for 1903–4), 429 (Northern Territories of the Gold Coast, Annual Report for 1903), 430 (Mauritius, Annual Report for 1903), 431 (Seychelles, Annual Report for 1903), 432 (Barbados, Report for 1903–4), 433 (Southern Nigeria, Annual Report for 1903), 434 (Fiji, Annual Report for 1903), 435 (Straits Settlements, Annual Report for 1903), 436 (Grenada, Annual Report for 1903), 437 (Northern Nigeria, Annual Report for 1903), 438 (Jamaica, Report for 1903–4), 439 (Malta, Report for 1903–4), 440 (Bechuanaland Protectorate, Report for 1902–3 and 1903–4), 441 (British Guiana, Report for 1903–4), 442 (Trinidad and Tobago, Report for 1903–4), 443 (St. Lucia, Annual Report for 1903), 444 (Basutoland), Report for 1903–4).

90. Colonial Reports (Miscellaneous).—Copies of Reports, Nos. 28 (Reports on Rubber in the Gold Coast and Sierra Leone), 29 (Ceylon, Reports on the Results of the Mineral Survey in 1903–4 by Professor W. R. Dunstan, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.).

91. Straits Settlements.—Copy of Reports on the Federated Malay States for 1903.

92. Transvaal (British Indians).—Copy of Correspondence relating to the position of British Indians in the Transvaal.

93. Cyprus.—Copy of Annual Report on Cyprus for 1903–4.

94. Cancer Research (Colonies).—Copy of Correspondence relating to Cancer Research in the Colonies.

95. Fiji.—Copy of Correspondence relating to Native Taxation and the Communal System in Fiji.

96. Colonies (Preferential Trade).—Copy of Papers relating to Resolutions passed by Colonial Legislatures since 1890 in favour of Preferential Trade Relations with the United Kingdom.

97. West Africa.—Copy of Correspondence relating to the construction oe Railways in Sierra Leone, Lagos, and thf Gold Coast.

98. Crown Agents.—Copy of Accounts of the Crown Agents' Office Funds for the years 1900, 1901, and 1902.

99. British Central Africa.—Copy of Report on the Trade and general condition of the British Central Africa Protectorate for 1903–4.

100. Treaty Series (No. 6, 1904).—Copy of Agreement between the United Kingdom and Germany, providing for the settlement by Arbitration of certain classes of Questions which may arise between the two Governments. Signed at London, 12th July, 1904.

101. Treaty Series (No. 7, 1904).—Copy of Convention between the United Kingdom and China, respecting the employment of Chinese Labour in British Colonies and Protectorates. Signed at London, 13th May, 1904.

102. Treaty Series (No. 8, 1904).—Copy of Convention between the United Kingdom and Sweden and Norway, providing for the settlement by Arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the respective Governments. Signed at London, 11th August, 1904. Ratifications exchanged at London, 9th November, 1904.

103. Treaty Series (No. 9, 1904).—Copy of Agreement between the United Kingdom and Switzerland, providing for the settlement by Arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments. Signed at London, 16th November, 1904.

104. Treaty Series (No. 10, 1904).—Copy of Agreement between the United Kingdom and Portugal, providing for the settlement by Arbitration of certain classes of questions which may arise between the two Governments. Signed at Windsor, 16th November, 1904.

105. Treaty Series (No. 11, 1904).—Copy of Accession of Sweden to the International Copyright Convention, 9th September, 1886, and the Declaration of 4th May, 1896. 1st August, 1904.

106. Treaty Series (No. 12, 1904).—Copy of Accession of Cuba to the Industrial Property Convention, 1883, etc., 17th November, 1904.

107. Treaty Series (No. 13, 1904).—Copy of Declaration between the United Kingdom and Russia relating to the Constitution of an International Commission of Inquiry on the subject of the North Sea Incident. Signed at St. Petersburg, 25th (12th) November, 1904.

108. Treaty Series (No. 1, 1905).—Copy of Accession of Cuba to Arrangements respecting False Indications of Origin on Goods, and the International Registration of Trade Marks (Industrial Property Union). 1st January, 1905.

109. Treaty Series (No. 2, 1905).—Copy of Agreement between the United Kingdom and Russia respecting Joint Stock Companies and other Commercial, Industrial, and Financial Associations. Signed at St. Petersburg, 29th (16th) December, 1904.

110. Africa (No. 12, 1904).—Copy of General Report on the Uganda Protectorate for the year ending 31st March, 1904.

111. Africa (No. 13, 1904).—Copy of Report by Mr. A. E. Butter, on the Survey of the Proposed Frontier between British East Africa and Abyssinia, with a map.

112. Africa (No. 14, 1904).—Copy of Correspondence respecting Slavery in the Islands of Zanzibar and Pemba.

113. Africa (No. 15, 1904).—Copy of Report on the East Africa Protectorate for the year 1903–4.

114. Africa (No. 16, 1904).—Copy of Report on the Construction and Working of the Mombasa-Victoria (Uganda) Railway and Steamboat Service on Lake Victoria, 1903–4.

115. Africa (No. 1, 1905).—Copy of Further Correspondence respecting the Administration of the Independent State of the Congo.

116. Turkey (No. 3, 1904).—Copy of Correspondence respecting the Asiatic Provinces of Turkey.

117. Turkey (No. 4, 1904).—Copy of Further Correspondence respecting the Affairs of South Eastern Europe.

118. China (No. 5, 1904).—Copy of Report, by Consul General Hosie, on the Province of Ssŭch'uan, with two Maps.

119. Russia (No. 1, 1905).—Copy of Correspondence respecting Contraband of War in connection with Hostilities between Russia and Japan.

120. Russia (No. 2, 1905).—Copy of Correspondence relating to the North Sea Incident.

121. Sugar Convention (Commercial, No. 1, 1905).—Copy of Further Findings of the Permanent Commission established under the Sugar Convention of 5th March, 1902, Report of the British Delegate, and Appeal of His Majesty's Government against certain of those Findings.

122. Detention of the "Captain W. Menzell" (Miscellaneous, No. 2, 1904).—Copy of a Warrant issued by the Secretary of State on 4th December, 1904, authorising the detention of the ship "Captain W. Menzell" at Cardiff.

123. Emission of Smoke (Foreign Regulations) (Miscellaneous, No. 1, 1905).—Copy of Reports on the Laws in Force in certain Foreign Countries in regard to the Emission of Smoke from Chimneys.

124. Trade Reports (Annual Series).—Copies of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, Nos. 3256 to 3323.

125. Trade Reports (Miscellaneous Series).—Copies of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Miscellaneous Series, Nos. 619 to 628.

Ordered, That the said Papers do lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

IRISH LAND COMMISSION (PROCEEDINGS).

Copy presented, of Return of Proceedings during the months of October, November, and December, 1903 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND).

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 7th July, 1904; Mr. Joyce]; to lie upon the Table.

AGRICULTURE AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND) ACT, 1899.

Copy presented, of Fifty-five Minutes by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland sanctioning Forms of Instruction for certain County Boroughs, Counties, and Urban Districts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PHARMACY ACTS (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Order in Council, dated 2nd November, 1904, approving of a Regulation made by the Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

MILITIA ACT, 1882 (DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS, IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Return of descriptions of qualifications of Deputy Lieutenants lodged during 1904, as furnished to the Chief Secretary for Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

WINTER ASSIZES (IRELAND).

Copies presented, of Four Orders in Council, dated 2nd November, 1904, for holding Winter Assizes in Ireland [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Time Table of Examinations for 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Additional rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, making an addition to Rule 9 (a) of the Rules and Programme for 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland for the Examination in Music [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Additional Rule made by the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland as to the French Course [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Two Orders of the Local Government Board for Ireland with respect to the Urban County Districts of Ballymena and Omagh [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PRISONS (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Order closing the Prison at Wexford under The General Prisons (Ireland) Act, 1877 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

LEEWARD ISLANDS.

Copy presented, of Amended Prison Rule relating to the employment of female prisoners [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POSTAL AGREEMENT (MEXICO).

Copy presented, of Agreement between the Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Post Office of the United States of Mexico for the Exchange of Money Orders, dated 4th February–18th March, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

POSTAL CONVENTION (NETHERLANDS).

Copy presented, of Additional Articles relating to increase of maximum to the Money Order Convention of the 7th–14th October, 1871, between the General Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the General Post Office of the Netherlands [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

POST OFFICE (MONEY ORDERS).

Copy presented, of the Postal Order (Colonial) Regulations, 1904, dated 29th September, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POST OFFICE (MONEY ORDERS).

Copy presented, of the Postal Order (Colonial) Amendment (No. 1) Regulations, 1904, dated 28th December, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (SPECIAL EXCEPTION—OVERTIME).

Copy presented, of Order, dated 15th November, 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 49 of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception under that section to non-textile factories and workshops, or parts thereof, in which the making-up of any article of table linen, bed linen, or other household linen is carried on [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (SPECIAL EXCEPTION—NIGHTWORK.)

Copy presented, of Order, dated 9th August, 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 54 (4) of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception in that section to male young persons of the age of sixteen years and upwards, employed on the system of three shifts of not more than eight hours each in the processes of pressing and reeling cordite and nitrating and moulding guncotton carried on in non-textile factories [[by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (DANGEROUS AND UNHEALTHY INDUSTRIES).

Copy presented, of Regulations, dated 24th October, 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 79 of The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, in respect of the processes of loading, unloading, moving and handling goods in, on, or at any dock, wharf, or quay, and the processes of loading, unloading, or coaling any ship in any dock, harbour, or canal [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES (REGULATIONS).

Copy presented, of Regulations made with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the management and discipline of the certified

Inebriate Reformatory at East Hasling, Norfolk [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POLLING DISTRICTS (BOROUGH OF SALFORD).

Copy presented, of Order made by the Council of the Borough of Salford, altering certain Polling Districts in the Borough [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF LANCASTER).

Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of the County of Lancaster altering certain Polling Districts in the Middleton, Stretford, and Widnes Parliamentary Divisions [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF SOUTHAMPTON).

Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of Southampton altering certain Polling Districts in the Andover, New Forest, and Fareham Parliamentary Divisions [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF DURHAM).

Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of the County of Durham altering certain Polling Districts in the county [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF LANCASTER).

Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of Lancaster altering certain Polling Districts in the Ince, Lancaster, and Westhoughton Parliamentary Divisions [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POLLING DISTRICTS (BOROUGH OF DEVONPORT).

Copy presented, of Order made by the Council of the borough altering certain Polling Districts in the borough [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF BERKS).

Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of the County of Berks altering certain Polling Districts for the several Parliamentary Divisions of the County [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Copy presented, of Licence granted to Mary Ann Murray, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Copy presented, of Licence granted to Ada Hanson, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Copy presented, of a Licence to be at large granted to Elizabeth Ann Holden, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Elizabeth Fry Refuge, Hackney, E. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Copy presented of a Licence to be at large granted to Lucy Gould, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of St. John the Baptist, Pimlico, S.W. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Copy presented, of a Licence granted to Kate Ellen Shoesmith, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Home of Compassion, 63, Sutherland Street, Pimlico, S.W. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Copy presented, of Licence granted to Alice Robinson, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the East End Refuge, Finchley [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACTS (CONDITIONAL LICENCE).

Copy presented, of a Licence granted to Sarah Wildman, a convict under detention in Aylesbury Prison, permitting her to be at large on condition that she enter the Elizabeth Fry Refuge, Hackney, E. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE AUTHORITIES, ETC.

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 11th August, 1904; Mr. Charles McArthur]; to lie upon the Table.

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANIES.

Copy presented, of Statements of Accounts, and of Life Assurance and Annuity Business and Abstracts of Actuarial Reports, deposited with the Board of Trade during the year ended 31st December, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 1.]

RAILWAYS (PRIVATE SIDINGS) ACT, 1904 (RULE).

Copy presented, of Rule made by the Railway and, Canal Commissioners in relation to applications made under Section 3 of The Railways (Private Sidings) Act, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE FUND.

Account presented, of the General Lighthouse Fund, showing the income and expenditure for the year ended 31st March, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 2.]

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

Copy presented, of Regulations to be observed by the Admirals, Masters, and Crews of Fishing Vessels and Carriers forming the fleets belonging to the Port of Kingston-upon-Hull under Section 417 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

WEST HIGHLAND RAILWAY (EXTENSION FROM BANAVIE TO MALLAIG).

Copy presented, of Third Annual Report by the Board of Trade as to the condition and working of the Banavie and Mallaig Railway, the rates and charges for traffic, and the receipts and expenditure of any Company in working the Railway, for the year 1903–4 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 3.]

EAST INDIA (EXAMINATIONS).

Copy presented, of Regulations for Examinations for the Civil Service of India [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

EAST INDIA (LOANS RAISED IN INDIA).

Copy presented, of Return of all Loans raised in India, chargeable on the Revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ending 30th September, 1904, etc. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 4.]

EAST INDIA (LOANS RAISED IN ENGLAND).

Copy presented, of Return of all Loans raised in England, chargeable on the Revenues of India, outstanding at the commencement of the half-year ending on the 30th September, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 5.]

BISHOPRICS OF SOUTHWARK ND BIRMINGHAM ACT, 1904.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, for the foundation of the Bishopric of Birmingham [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

COPYRIGHT ACTS, 1844 TO 1886.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 12th December, 1904, giving effect to the Accession of Sweden to the International Convention, 1886 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

DOCKYARD PORTS REGULATION ACT, 1865.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 24th October, 1904, amending the Regulations affecting the Dockyard Port of Plymouth [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

EXPLOSIVES ACT, 1875.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, prohibiting, except under certain conditions, certain Fireworks of a dangerous nature [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (OXFORD).

Copy presented, of Statutes made by the Governing Body of Magdalen College, Oxford, on 11th May, 1904, amending the existing Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 6.]

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (OXFORD).

Copy presented, of Statute made by the Governing Body of New College, Oxford, on 15th June, 1904, amending Statute XV. (Pension Fund) of the Statutes of the College [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 7.]

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1877 (OXFORD).

Copy presented, of Statutes made by the Governing Body of Balliol College, Oxford, on 26th May, 1904, amending (1) Statute III., and (2) Statute IV., and Schedule B. of the College Statutes [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 8.]

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACTS, 1878 TO 1904.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 12th January, 1905, specifying New Fees to be taken in respect of the Verification and Stamping by Inspectors of Weights and Measures, of Weights, Measures, and Weighing and Measuring Instruments [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT, 1878, AND WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (METRIC SYSTEM) ACT, 1897.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 12th December, 1903, approving a New Denomination of Standard Measure of length of Twenty Metres [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890.

Copy presented, of Orders in Council of 24th October, 1904, entitled The British Protectorates Neutrality Order in Council, 1904, The Foreign Jurisdiction Neutrality Order in Council, 1904, The China and Corea Order in Council, 1904, The Southern Nigeria Order in Council, 1904, and The Cyprus Telegraphs Order, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 10th February, 1905, entitled The East Africa and Uganda (Currency) Order in Council, 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of the 14th November, 1904, entitled the British Protectorates Neutrality (Amendment) Order in Council, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1858.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 12th December, 1904, approving a statement of proposed new and revised appointments and alterations of salaries in the establishment of the Secretary of State for India in Council [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 24th October, 1904, directing that Registries of Sea Fishing Boats be kept at Port Talbot and Methil [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

Copy presented, of Order in Council of 10th February, 1905, confirming certain Bye-laws made by the Trinity House of Kingston-upon Hull fixing the Rates of Pilotage between the ports of Hull and Goole [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

EDUCATION (SCOTLAND).

Copy presented, of Minute of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland, dated 30th January, 1905, providing for the establishment of Committees for the Training of Teachers [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

ROYAL IRISH CONSTABULARY PENSIONS.

Copy presented, of Return showing the names of all Constabulary Officers now in receipt of Pensions, of all Head Constables, Sergeants, and Constables, and of all Widows and Children to whom Pensions have been granted since the Constabulary Estimate for 1904–5 was prepared, with the amount and date of Pension in each case [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN GUARANTEED LOAN OF 1855.

Copy presented, of Account for the year 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

BANK OF ENGLAND.

Copy presented, of Return of the amount of Notes issued more than forty years which have not been presented for payment, and which have been written off on the 8th December, 1904, from the total amount of Notes issued from the Issue Department of the Bank of England [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

CHELSEA HOSPITAL.

Account presented, for the year ended 31st March, 1904, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 9.]

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Account presented, of Receipts and Expenditure of the Paymaster-General on behalf of the Supreme Court of Judicature in respect of the Funds of Suitors of the Court in the year ended 29th February, 1904, and of Account of the National Debt Commissioners for the same period in respect of Funds held by them on behalf of the Supreme Court of Judicature, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 10.]

POST OFFICE TELEGRAPHS.

Account presented, showing the gross amount received and expended on account of the Telegraph Service during the year ended 31st March, 1904, etc. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 11.]

DUCHY OF CORNWALL.

Account presented, of the Receipts and Disbursements of the Duchy of Cornwall for the year ended 31st December, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 12.]

LAND REGISTRY (NEW BUILDINGS) ACT, 1900.

Account presented, showing the Money issued from the Consolidated Fund, under the provisions of The Land Registry (New Buildings) Act, 1900, and of the Expenditure; the Money expended and borrowed and the Securities created under the said Act, for the period ended 31st March, 1904, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 13.]

PUBLIC OFFICES SITE (DUBLIN) ACT, 1903.

Account presented, showing the Money issued from the Consolidated Fund under the provisions of The Public Offices Site (Dublin) Act, 1903, and of the Expenditure; the Money expended and borrowed and the Securities created under the said Act for the period ended 31st March, 1904, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

CONSOLIDATED FUND.

Abstract Account presented, showing the Issues made from the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom in the financial year ended 31st March, 1904, for the Interest and Management of the Debt, for the Civil List, and for all other Issues in the financial year for services charged directly on the said Fund; with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 14.]

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 28th November, 1904, granting to Tom F. Dickinson, Sorting Clerk and Telegraphist, Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 21st November, 1904, granting to Joseph Livingston, Engineer, 1st Class, Engineer-in-Chief's Department, Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 17th January, 1905, granting to Charles F. Williams, Second Division Clerk, Admiralty, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 6th September, 1904, granting to Alfred Webster, Clerk, Derby Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 2nd September, 1904, granting to Robert Henderson, Lineman, Engineer-in-Chief's Department, Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 11th January, 1905, granting to John Still, Inspector, Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 6th September, 1904, granting to Samuel J. Morton, Assistant Superintendent, Boston Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 6th January, 1905, granting to Alfred H. Beaumont, Town Postman, Leeds Post Office, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1887.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 17th January, 1905, granting to Henry G. Bartlett, 2nd Division Clerk (Higher Grade), Admiralty, a retiring allowance under the Act [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATIONS.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 26th August, 1904, declaring that for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the office of Professor of Zoology in the Royal College of Science, Dublin, professional or other peculiar qualifications not ordinarily to be acquired on the Public Service are required [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1859.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 5th October, 1904, awarding a Special Pension to Sir Augustus W. L. Hemming, G.C.M.G., late Governor of Jamaica [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 3rd September, 1904, declaring that Richard Leamy, Labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 14th October, 1904, declaring that John W. Ginno, Royal Laboratory, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 21st October, 1904, declaring that Benjamin Banks, Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 4th March, 1904, declaring that Frederick George Postans, Postmaster of Newmarket Post Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 29th October, 1904, declaring that William Gregory, Carpenter, Royal Carriage Department, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 21st October, 1904, declaring that John Foster, Boy Labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service Certificate through inadvertence on the part of the Head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

COUNTY COURTS ACTS, 1888, AND SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (OFFICERS) ACT, 1879.

Copy of Order made by the Lord Chancellor, dated 25th August, 1904, directing that the Registrar of the County Court of Lancashire, held at Salford, shall not practise as a solicitor, and that Section 20 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Officers) Act, 1879, shall not apply to the office of Registrar of the said County Court [by Act].

SUPREME COURT (RULES).

Copy of Rules of the Supreme Court, dated 1st October, 1904 [by Act].

DEEDS OF ARRANGEMENT ACT, 1887, (RULE).

Copy of Rule under the Act, dated 1st October, 1904 [by Act].

LUNACY.

Copy of Report to the Lord Chancellor of the number of visits made, the number of Patients seen, and the number of miles travelled by the Visitors of Lunatics between 1st April, 1904, and 30th September, 1904 [by Act].

LUNACY.

Copy of Return to the Lord Chancellor of the number of visits made and the number of Patients seen by the several Commissioners in Lunacy during the six months ending on the 31st December, 1904 [by Act].

BANK OF ENGLAND.

Accounts of Exchequer Bills and other Government Securities purchased, and of the amount of Balances of Sums issued for the Payment of Dividends, etc., for the year ending 5th January, 1905 [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 15.]

COUNTY COURT RULES.

Copy of County Court Rules, 1904 [by Act].

LUNACY.

Copy of Return of all sums received by the Visitors of Lunatics for travelling expenses, or upon any other account, from 1st January to 31st December, 1904 [by Act].

MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR BOARD.

Copy of Accounts of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board for the year ending 1st July, 1904 [by Act].

POSTMASTER-GENERAL AND NATIONAL TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Copy ordered, "of Memorandum of the Postmaster-General dated the 14th February, 1905, setting forth an Agreement dated 2nd February, 1905, between the Postmaster-General and the National Telephone Company, Limited."—(Lord Stanley.)

Copy presented accordingly; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed.

KING'S SPEECH.

Mr. SPEAKER reported His Majesty's Speech, and read it to the House. (See page 1.)

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

*MR. MOUNT (Berkshire, Newbury) in moving

"That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which

Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament;" said he was sure the House would extend to him a full measure of that indulgence which it had never failed to grant to those who, in preceding years, had been privileged to undertake the difficult and delicate task entrusted to him. The House would have listened with satisfaction to the opening sentences of the Speech from the Throne. The announcement that our relations with foreign countries were of a friendly character would be none the less welcome because of late years it had been not unfamiliar; and their earnest prayer was that for many years to come on these occasions a similar statement might be made. No lesson was necessary to convince this country of the advantages of peace, but had an object-lesson been needed in the horrors of war between two powerful nations, equipped with all the armaments which modern military science can devise, one had only to look at the struggle which, unfortunately, was still progressing in the Far East. However much they might admire the courage and gallantry of the soldiers and sailors engaged in that conflict, they could not shut their eyes to the sorrow and suffering which every battle, every skirmish, inevitably brought to many homes far removed from the scene of combat. In the course of that war there must have been many a moment of anxiety to other countries, lest they also should be involved in the contest raging in Manchuria. It was only by the strictest observance of the somewhat ill-defined obligations incumbent upon neutral Powers that such a danger could be averted, and the House must have noted with much satisfaction that His Majesty's Government had done all in their power in that direction. There was much in the Gracious Speech from the Throne which gave reason to hope that for many years to come peaceful and, what was more, friendly relations between this country and foreign Powers would be maintained.

A considerable portion of the passage dealing with foreign affairs was taken up by a narration of Agreements concluded between this country and other Powers, by which questions of possible controversy had been removed, he hoped, from all danger of decision by the dread arbitrament of war to the more peaceful solution by mutual agreement or reference to arbitration. It could hardly be supposed that the time would ever come when nations would be satisfied to submit to the decision of a Court of arbitration on all matters, no matter how important; but any extension of the principle of arbitration would be gladly welcomed by that House, and it would have been noted with satisfaction that His Majesty's Government had lost no opportunity of putting into practice those principles of which, in theory at any rate, all Members expressed so high an admiration. The House would have heard with pleasure the announcement of the ratification by the French Legislature of the convention between France and England. It would be out of place on the present occasion for him to say anything as to the differences for which a solution was found in that convention, or to deal in detail with the convention itself. All would admit that the true value of that convention was not confined to the fact that by it a solution was found of outstanding differences, but that it also lay in the discovery which was made by France and by this country that both nations were mutually anxious to find a solution of those differences mutually satisfactory to both. From that discovery had come a better understanding between the two countries, and the House would welcome the better feeling of friendship which had resulted from that convention and which had already borne valuable fruit. He felt sure the House would receive with scarcely less gratification the further announcement that Agreements with other countries had been made, by which certain matters upon which a dispute might possibly arise in future would be referred to arbitration.

In regard to the International Commission now sitting at Paris, His Majesty's Government had shown the same anxiety to maintain, wherever possible, amicable relations with all other countries. He would not venture to say a word as to the events the investigation of which had been entrusted to that inquiry, that would be highly improper while the question was still under consideration; but he did not think he would be going too far when he said that both the House and the country learnt, with intense relief, of the possibility of a peaceable and honourable solution of an event which had deeply stirred the whole of the British Empire. In regard to all these matters—the International Commission now sitting at Paris, the ratification by France and this country of the Anglo-French Convention, and the conclusion of arbitration Agreements with other nations—they saw the same desire on the part of His Majesty's Government to find an amicable solution upon matters of controversy before they reached an acute stage; and in all of them they found evidence upon which they might base the hope that for many years to come they would maintain friendly relations with all foreign Powers.

There was one part of Europe which, he regretted to say, still gave cause for anxiety, and from which their attention had been unduly taken by more stirring events happening further afield. The Balkan Peninsula had long been an unfortunate country, torn with racial and religious dissension, and, therefore, it was satisfactory to learn that something had been done to ameliorate the condition of that unfortunate country. Much was being done by the valuable work of the officers of the gendarmerie to which allusion was made, but much still remained to be done, and there was a not unnatural impatience at the slow progress which had been made there. It should, however, be more fully realised what the difficulties were and what the nature of the obstacles were which had to be removed. No reforms in that unfortunate country could be effective unless they had behind them not one or two Powers, but the whole Concert of Europe. However efficient or powerful that Concert might be, when it had determined on the specific reform it desired to initiate, it could not fail from its nature to be slow to set in motion, and he thought that they might congratulate themselves upon the fact that some improvement had been made and that the Powers were working in harmony in their endeavour to restore order out of chaos in that distracted district.

Turning from the Continent of Europe to India, he was sure the whole House would join in congratulations upon the successful issue of the political Mission to Lhasa. He would not discuss the causes which led to that Mission, they had been the subject of debate in the House, nor would he say anything as to the reasons which, in his opinion, more than amply justified its dispatch. But whatever hon. Members might think as to the inception of that Mission he thought all would join in congratulations upon the admirable way in which it had been carried out, and as to the gallantry and fortitude of the soldiers, whether belonging to the native Army from India or to the British Army, who fought side by side in that campaign. Had they wanted any proof of the manner in which the British soldiers or the soldiers of the native Indian Army were ready and willing to put up with the varying conditions which the service of the British Empire might demand, they could hardly have a better example than the two last expeditions in which they had taken part. Whether upon the burning sands of Somaliland or the snow-clad hills of Tibet, the soldiers had shown themselves ready to endure the greatest hardships in a manner well worthy of the praise and commendation of the House and the country.

Turning from foreign politics to domestic policy the House had heard, not with much surprise, that His Majesty's Government intended to lay before the House a proposal to remedy the inequalities which existed in the arrangement of the electoral areas in this country. It was more than twenty years since the last Redistribution Bill was passed by the House of Commons, and during that period there must have been many changes in the distribution of the population throughout these islands. Many towns had outgrown the Parliamentary boundaries whilst others had failed to keep pace with the rest of the country, and there were many other inequalities to which he did not need to allude. Whilst these inequalities remained unremedied he thought the House could hardly feel that it had done all in its power to ensure that equal distribution of representative power in the country which a country with a representative Assembly ought to have. To cure these evils would no doubt entail some self-sacrifice on the part of some hon. Members of the House, but he hoped that he should not be considered presumptuous or over-sanguine when he expressed his belief that that self-sacrifice would be willingly made.

He felt sure the House would desire to associate itself with the regret and sympathy expressed in His Majesty's gracious Speech with the distress and suffering occasioned by lack of employment during the past winter, and they all gladly welcomed the steps taken by the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Local Government Board to meet those evils. It should not, however, be forgotten that the want of employment during the winter, though it was this year abnormal, was an evil which almost invariably recurred, but he was sure that any proposal to put upon a permanent basis those temporary provisions which, even during the short time they had been in operation, had been shown to be of some value to meet the evils which they all deplored would be cordially welcomed by the Members of the House.

Among the remaining measures mentioned in His Majesty's gracious Speech were two dealing with local taxation, one a proposal to renew the Agricultural Rating Act and the other to amend the law of valuation. As he represented a constituency mainly dependent, directly or indirectly, on agriculture he desired to say a few words upon that question, which was one of much importance to that great industry. The expenditure charged upon local taxation was ever increasing and was such as would be a serious burden even upon a prosperous industry. It could easily be imagined how heavily such burdens pressed upon a declining industry like agriculture. But this was not all, because the incidence of the local rates not only pressed with relatively greater weight, in country districts, upon occupiers of land than on other classes of the community, but the proportion of the burden they were called upon to bear was actually heavier. If the national expenditure increased the Chancellor of the Exchequer was able to apportion the taxes in a fair and equitable manner among the various classes of taxpayers, but this was not so in regard to local taxation, for however much the expenditure on local rates increased there was no alteration made in the apportionment of the burden, and in country districts the principal portion of that burden was placed upon the shoulders of those who derived their livelihood from the occupation of land. Would any one contend that these were the people best able to bear it? If he were to go into the question of the incidence of local taxation on the agricultural industry he feared that he should trespass unduly upon the time of the House and he would be travelling outside the proposals mentioned in His Majesty's Speech; he would, therefore, not deal with it further. But whatever hon. Members might think as to the form which a reform of local taxation ought to take, he thought they would all agree that any such reform should be accompanied by some simplification and co-ordination of the law of valuation, and that co-ordination and simplification he ventured to hope would be found in the Bill which would be laid before the House. In conclusion he thanked with all sincerity hon. Members for the patient manner in which they had listened to him and the kind indulgence they had extended to him in the responsible position which he had occupied that afternoon.

MR. SAMUEL ROBERTS (Sheffield, Ecclesall) said that, in rising to second the Motion so ably proposed by his hon. friend, he was very conscious of his own inability to do justice to the honour conferred upon him, but he gladly accepted the duty as an honour paid to the great constituency and city which three years ago sent him as one of its representatives to that House. Since he had had the privilege of being a Member he had received nothing but the greatest kindness and consideration from all sides of the House, and he did not think that kindness would be lacking during the few minutes in which he had to discharge his difficult and delicate task. His hon. friend had very ably alluded to their foreign relations, and he did not propose to trouble the House in going over the same ground, but he desired to associate himself with what had fallen from him as to their sense of thankfulness that their relations were peaceful with all the world. His hon. friends had alluded to the Arbitration Treaties and the French Agreement, which the Prime Minister described last session as "one of the greatest international transactions which we have to record," concluded by Lord Lansdowne and M. Delcassé, whose continuance in office they all rejoiced to notice. The great statesmen of both political Parties had recognised the great importance of a good understanding with their nearest neighbour. The late Lord Beaconsfield said—

> "A good understanding between England and France is simply this, that so far as the influence of these two great Powers extends, the affairs of the world shall be conducted by their co-operation instead of by their rivalry. But co-operation requires not merely identity of interest, but reciprocal good feeling."

They must all rejoice that that good feeling had been attained, and trust that it might long endure to the great advantage of both countries and to the peace of Europe.

He came now to the paragraph dealing with the form of representative government to be given to the Transvaal, which was receiving the earnest attention of the Government and of those administering the colony, and in so doing, he hoped he was not trespassing beyond his province if he ventured with great respect to tender to the Colonial Secretary their hearty congratulations on the manner in which he had discharged the important duties of the office since he was so suddenly called upon to take them up, owing to the resignation of his very eminent predecessor; and though, perhaps, those sitting on the opposite side of the House might not have agreed with all he had done he felt sure they would acknowledge the courtesy and consideration which he had always shown. In accordance with pledges given both in the terms of surrender that representative institutions leading up to self-government would be introduced, and also by the right hon. Gentleman the late Colonial Secretary, His Majesty's Government were prepared to take another step towards granting that full self-government to the Transvaal, which was their ultimate gaol. But the pledges given were that they would proceed gradually as circumstances allowed. Their desire was, while retaining an Executive nominated by the Crown, to concede the utmost liberty compatible with safety, and to remember that the inhabitants affected belonged to nations accustomed to freedom.

He would now venture to refer to one or two measures mentioned in His Majesty's gracious Speech. The first he would mention was rather a delicate one, namely, the difficulty which had arisen in Scotland with regard to ecclesiastical matters. He approached this delicate subject with much fear and doubt. English Members rather liked to leave Scotch matters for their own Members to deal with. A very difficult and unfortunate position had, no doubt, arisen and he thought almost all Parties agreed that some legislation was necessary for the efficient administration of the funds involved, and to promote peace and goodwill among all parties. A Royal Commission was inquiring into all the circumstances, and when their Report was received the House would be in a better position to judge the lines on which legislation should proceed.

With regard to Scotch education he believed there would not be much difference of opinion.

He came now to the paragraph in the gracious Speech dealing with the proposals for diminishing the anomalies prevailing in the arrangement of electoral areas consequent upon the growth and movement of population in recent years; and perhaps, as representing a large and increasing city, he could more forcibly voice the opinions of those large centres of industry than his hon. friend. In order to avoid injustice it was evident that from time to time it was necessary to make fresh arrangements, not too frequently, but when the disproportion had become flagrant. At the present time the disproportion was urgent and pressing, especially owing to the large increase of population round London, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, Lancashire, the counties of Durham and Northumberland, Glasgow and surrounding area, Staffordshire, Glamorganshire, Leeds, Sheffield, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and other cities. As an illustration, he had taken the fifteen largest constituencies, and the fifteen smallest in England and Wales returning one Member. In the fifteen largest there were, according to the register in force on 1st January, 1904, 372,426 voters returning fifteen Members; in the smallest fifteen, 47,951 voters returning fifteen Members. If an elector lived in one of the fifteen big, prosperous, and increasing districts his voting power was only one-eighth of that of the man who lived in one of the small and stationary boroughs. That was to say, it took 24,828 to return one Member in the one case, and only 3,197 in the other. He would not trouble the House with any further figures, but it was evident that there was a great injustice, and he could not think that the small boroughs could be so self-seeking as to desire that they should have a continuance of the anomaly.

The second place in legislative proposals was given to the evils arising from alien immigration, and on account of what happened to the Bill of last session he felt sure he should have the sympathy of the House in dealing with the question. There was nothing new to be said, but the evils continued. Undesirable aliens, mostly from Eastern Europe, were continually admitted into this country without let or hindrance. They brought with them destitution, crime, uncleanness and disease. They drove out the native dweller, and many, being unskilled and in a state of poverty, worked for a rate of wages below a standard upon which a native workman could fairly live. These were real grievances, especially to the native population in the East End of London. The Royal Commission had recommended that the State should regulate this traffic. Other countries and our own Colonies did so, and consequently we, who did not, got the refuse who could not comply with their standards.

Referring to the paragraph in the gracious Speech as to the establishment of authorities to deal with the unemployed, the hon. Member said we had had this question before us for many years. In all our centres of industry it recurred almost every winter, but until the present movement in London there had been no action taken to deal with it on a systematic basis. The end to be sought was this: to create some machinery by which our honest and hard-working men could be temporarily provided for without having to seek relief from the Poor Law, carrying with it disenfranchisement and loss of home. The scheme for London of the President of the Local Government Board had resulted in very admirable work. By it the Poor Law and local authorities had been brought together in joint committees which had been set up to separate applicants for employment into two classes (1) those who were temporarily out of work through no fault of their own, and (2) the ordinary applicants for Poor Law relief, and to endeavour to find work for the first of these classes. There was also a central committee so as to secure uniformity of action, which had done very useful work. The subject was a delicate and difficult one and care must be taken neither to interfere with the proper operation of the Poor Law nor to erect a permanent class of unemployed.

Another important measure promised was one to amend and extend the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897. The House would remember that that Act introduced an entirely new principle, and one of very far-reaching importance, into the law regulating compensation for accidents, namely, that mere accident occurring in the course of employment should of itself, irrespective of proof of negligence or of defective machinery or plant, entitle the injured workman, or his dependents in case of death, to receive compensation according to the scale prescribed. The operation of the Act was restricted to certain of the more dangerous occupations. The scheme of the Act was to avoid litigation and that the amount of compensation should be amicably settled between the parties. The working of the Act had proved a great success and, though there had been litigation arising out of the wording of the Act, according to the Report of a Departmental Committee appointed in 1903 to inquire into its operations.

> "The amount of litigation has been very small when compared with the great number of cases settled by agreement."

The Committee have made a great many suggestions with the view of clearing up doubtful points of construction, and they have also recommended that the benefits of the Act should be further extended (as they were in 1900 to agricultural labourers) to certain other classes, including seamen (by Amendment of Merchant Shipping Act), carriers, workers in workshops where five or more were employed, with power to the Secretary of State to extend an inquiry to other kinds of employment. He believed that the Bill to be introduced would be found to largely carry out the recommendations of the Committee and trusted it would receive the generous support of the House.

The promise in the gracious Speech for legislation for remodelling the Board of Trade under a Minister of Commerce would be welcomed by the commercial world and by the chambers of commerce, who had for some time urged the necessity of having a Minister more directly in touch with the trade of the country, and with the Consular service. He had now only to thank the House very warmly for the kind way in which they had listened to him. They were told that this session was to be a tumultuous and bitter one. He hoped that the prophecy might prove to be untrue. They heard of wars and rumours of wars, and warfare was an essential element in their Party system; but during the short period he had had the honour of a seat in that Assembly he had noticed that it was not the speech spoken with venom and personal attack that carried weight and conviction, but that spoken with moderation and reasoned argument. Might he humbly, and with great deference and respect, plead that their deliberations might be more and more marked by patience and forbearance, and that they might all endeavour to put into practice the prayer which Mr. Speaker's chaplain so beautifully said at the commencement of each of their sittings, that in all their dealings with one another they might be influenced by the law of Christian charity.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): Mr. Speaker, my first and most pleasing duty is to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address on the manner in which they have executed the task entrusted to them. We have always been accustomed to speak of that task as one of unusual difficulty and delicacy. They are required with that very imperfect knowledge of the policy of the Government which private Members must have, to defend it, partly by direct assertion and chiefly by respectful anticipation and suggestion. I cannot imagine any occasion upon which that task could have been rendered more difficult than it was to-day. But I think that the time has come when, perhaps, we ought to modify the terms in which we tender the deserved guerdon of praise to the mover and seconder, and for this reason: we are no longer surprised to find among unobtrusive and, for the most part, silent Members of the House a great power of addressing the House, as we have seen to-day, with force and clearness. For it is, I think, one of the most noticeable Parliamentary facts of our day that, from practice in their constituencies, or some other reason, there are a largely-increased number of Members who have acquired that enviable art of which both the hon. Members have certainly shown themselves possessed; and I think that the House will agree with me that they deserve our approbation and our thanks.

I wish to interpose one word before I turn to make some comments upon the difficult situation we are now approaching. Since last we met we have lost from among us one I should not be wrong in calling of the most conspicuous and most illustrious of our number. Sir William Harcourt was a devoted Member of Parliament. He loved the House of Commons. He coveted nothing so much as to stand well with the House of Commons. He lived and died in its service, and in turn he commanded the admiration and respect and affection of nearly all its Members. Our debates will be the poorer by the absence, not only of a skilful orator and a learned constitutional authority, but of a fine sample—the last, I fear, that lingered in it—of the grand old type of statesmen.

Well, in opening the interrogatories with which the sitting of this day must necessarily be commenced, I would first invite the right hon. Gentleman to explain why Parliament is summoned so late? Now, I may be told that Easter is late; but what has that to do with it? If Easter is late it would only have given us the more time to discharge some of our most necessary duties. We have to examine the financial position of the country, which never more required careful examination. We have to master the Estimates which were passed, many of them in much confusion last year; and if there were any time over from this purpose, then there would have been a convenient opportunity of giving consideration to those legislative measures which we are led to believe that the Government reluctantly, and at great sacrifice to themselves, are maintaining themselves in office in order to pursue. Why, then, take a fortnight off our time? What was the urgent reason compelling that delay, and forcing the Government to deprive the House of Commons of a large part of its opportunity for discharging its most essential duties? The right hon. Gentleman will, of course, explain what the urgent reasons were for calling Parliament together later than usual.

In one respect we stand very much as we did this time last year; in this respect, at least, that the fiscal question still overshadows everything else; and it is not a little astonishing and significant that the two hon. Members to whom we have just been listening, have not said one word from beginning to end on the only question that the country is truly anxious and concerned about. I have no doubt that instructions were communicated to them to that effect, because no politician, left to himself, could make a speech at this time of day without touching incidentally, if not systematically, on the fiscal question. The country is still waiting—only, as events show, with increased impatience—for an opportunity of expressing its judgment on that issue. The country is still groping in the dark for the policy of the right hon. Gentleman; still wondering what may be the real bearing of those aspirations and desires so compactly expressed by the right hon. Gentleman, and which he, with a simple faith which nothing can quench, insists in regarding as a policy. Last session, as hon. Members will remember, we were put off with the plea that all this is outside the competence of the present Parliament, and we witnessed a series of lobby evolutions which were of no avail to the Government in the country, but which did much to damage the reputation and standing of the House of Commons. I hope that when we press—as we must, from the outset press—for a candid declaration of the meaning and intention of the Prime Minister, we shall not be put off by a reference to the aspirations and the desires expressed at this place and the other place, and that we shall not be met by any of those extraordinary Ministerial Resolutions to which we were accustomed last year, expressing the most unbounded confidence in every utterance of the Prime Minister, however inconsistent, on these matters, and at the same time our unflinching belief in the legislative capacity of His Majesty's Ministers. I say we shall press for more information in this House. We shall do more: we shall take the earliest opportunity of inviting the House to express its opinion that, in the interests of the trade and the prosperity of the country, the country should be relieved as early as possible from the confusion which metaphysical sophistications have caused, and that recourse should be had to the country in order that this matter should be decided in the public interest. You cannot go on with your formulas and Resolutions for ever. You cannot go on feeding the country on these Dead Sea apples, to offer which to the country is almost an insult. Sir, a situation so unthinkable as that of the Government at the present moment is unknown in our Parliamentary history. The feeling of the country has been demonstrated beyond all doubt or dispute, but the Prime Minister apparently holds that he need take no heed of it, and that he can go on in the feebleness and uncertainty which his position involves as long as his followers in this House do not mutiny against him. A Parliamentary majority is, no doubt, a great instrument and a necessary instrument for the Executive Government, but it is not everything. There is something behind any Parliament or any majority in any Parliament from which both Parliament and the majority derive their authority. I remember two lines from an old writer, in somewhat archaic language, which were once quoted with great effect by John Bright—

> "There is on earth a more auguster thing,
> Veiled though it be, than Parliament or King."

That "auguster thing" is the public conscience. The public concsience is greater than any constitutional machinery, and no man san say in this case that the public conscience is vague. But the line taken by the right hon. Gentleman is ill-advised in the interests of the Government themselves—it is as ill-advised as it is unconstitutional. That is disputed by some hon. Gentlemen, but I have a very good authority. Here is a statesman who says—

> "I have never observed in the history of this country that any Party or any Government have gained credit from hanging on to office, in the vulgar sense without power and with only the insignia of office, from hanging on to their places when they were deprived of all real influence on the course of events and when the general trend of public opinion was against them. Under such circumstances the Government may possibly do good administrative work"—possibly—"it may possibly continue to hold its tenure of office for one month, two months, six months, or even a year or more, but you will never find in the history of this country that this had the result of increasing the credit of a Government with those on whose favour their fortunes ultimately rest."

That was the opinion of the right hon. Gentleman only ten years ago almost to the day, on 11th February, 1895.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): 1895? What was your majority in 1895?

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: We never tried to stick to office. [AN HON. MEMBER: You could not.] What did we do? How did we show that we tried to stick to office? We did not attempt to stick to office when the feeling of the country was going against us. I say the Government, having put themselves in a false position, have no right to involve the House and the country with themselves; and in the observations I shall make I shall found myself upon the proposition that the political situation to-day is of such ingrained falsity, that it is so fraught with danger to the public interest, that to prolong it is a betrayal and usurpation of power. I do not say, Sir, that the fiscal controversy is alone responsible for the present state of things. I do not forget that behind it we have the fact that the Government have stretched their general commission from the country to the breaking point. What was the assurance given by the right hon. Gentleman to the constituencies in 1900? These are his words—that the electors had nothing to consider except the paramount interest which events in South Africa had necessarily excited. I could quote bushels of observations to the same effect, but these words are quite enough for me. This is no question of a mandate. I have never stood upon a mandate. A Government, of course any Government, has a general authority for ordinary purposes besides the particular purpose which is paramount at the time of the election. No doubt of it; but what was this case? It was a case of votes sought, and in good faith given, exclusively for one purpose — [HON. MEMBERS: Oh!]—exclusively for one purpose—and then faith broken and the majority used for stealing a settlement of most strongly contested questions. I pass by the inquiry what the value, what the efficacy, what the life of a settlement so obtained is likely to be; I will not enlarge upon that now, except to contrast the scanty attention which, after all, has been paid since then to the question of South Africa with the efforts made to extort from Parliament measures of the most momentous kind which were never hinted at in 1900. Can we wonder that a Ministry with such a career should be demoralised? The Prime Minister, indeed, is so satisfied with himself, and so satisfied that he is personally indispensable to the safety of the Empire that it would be a waste of time to dispute the fact with him; but the country is not so satisfied; and it is not satisfied especially when it sees him devoting as much zeal and conviction to pulling down his own schemes as to setting them up, creating Army Corps one day to destroy them the next, equally happy and equally claiming credit when building ships or when removing them from the effective list.

How completely the Ministry is out of hand is evidenced by a most—in his presence I have no hestitation in saying it —a most improper speech made by a subordinate member of the Board of Admiralty. He was apparently tired of his obscurity, and resolved to make a name for himself, and he has succeeded. Thousands of people who never heard of him now know of his existence. He became at once a European celebrity, and that was something gained, although it may have been at the cost of the damage that he did to the interests, and to the pockets, of the taxpayers of this country, and of other countries as well. Or take their relations with their fellow-countrymen. Now I come to the Secretary of State for War. We had the Secretary of State for War the other day passing judgment upon the by-elections. He attached no importance to them. [HON. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.] Quite so. With himself and his colleagues, or some of his colleagues perhaps, to be more correct, or with himself in office—we need not mind colleagues—what do the country want more? He said they had been overborne by classes of voters who were not friendly to England. Those who vote against the War Minister are enemies of England. L'Etat, c'est moi. But I would not attach more importance to this dictum of his than it deserves; and I wish to reassure my hon. friends, rebels and disloyalists, who have taken their seats to-day that there is no chance of the War Minister endeavouring to dominate the polling stations with his artillery, when he gets it, or his new shortened rifle. But it is significant that a Minister, a Secretary of State, makes a speech like that. It is significant of the state of mind of a Government which has gone on month after month against the opinion of the country. It is an admission, although an involuntary one, that this Ministry of destiny, graced with all the talents and enjoying a monopoly of patriotism—I am endeavouring to put in colourless language what I observe in their own speeches—that it has ceased to be a British Ministry in the sense in which we have known the term hitherto.

This is not an occasion on which to go far in the discussion of the fiscal question; but there is one new element in the fiscal entanglement which has been imported into it since the House rose last summer. In the month of August the right hon. Gentleman refused the request of the Member for Birmingham for a specially summoned Colonial Conference, on the ground that the machinery of periodical Conferences would suffice for the discussion of any outstanding questions between this country and the Colonies—a most sensible view to take. But in the month of October, only two months later, he suddenly announced that the calling of such a Conference, in which India was to be included, was to form a large part of the question which would be submitted to the country at the next election. So the right hon. Gentleman not only changed his views, but elevated his new view to a cardinal principle, in two months. I never knew a more thorough or rapid conversion, and it must have been effected under some overpowering influence. I hope the right hon. Gentleman will explain what led him to change his mind. Another critical incident has been the publication of a letter from the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham to a friend of his, Mr Dooley, in which he said—

> "I do not myself recognise any difference between Mr. Balfour and myself. If we do differ at all, it is only a question of methods and tactics, but Mr. Balfour has advocated the great objects which I have in view as strongly as any tariff reformer could desire."

That is a very plain, expressive, comprehensive, and vitally important statement. What we complain of is, that the Prime Minister resorts to methods and tactics calculated to obscure this alliance, to disguise his real aims, to baffle this House—not to speak of the Opposition Members only—and delude the country, and that in his zeal for clever tactics he has so little consideration for the peace and welfare of the country, that he does not hesitate to prolong by his mystery and comparative silence on this point an agitation that is injurious. Let me say that if the question of tactics is introduced —as if the word "tactics" constituted an excuse—I am not sure it does not make the matter a great deal worse. Military tactics may be a very fine art, but to the ordinary man the word "tactics" suggests the art of deceiving those who are hostile to you. Such being the case, I do not think an appeal to tactics, as an excuse for a certain course of action, is likely to be successful. Now and here, in the presence of the House of Commons, let us have a considered answer from the right hon. Gentleman. If the policy of the Prime Minister is identical with that of the Member for Birmingham, as that right hon. Gentleman asserts——

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN (Birmingham, W.): No.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Yes.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN The quotation is not perfectly correct. Though I do not know that it makes any difference, I will give it to the right hon. Gentleman in its verbal form. What I said was that I could see no difference in principle between my right hon. friend and myself. The word "principle" was omitted in the right hon. Gentleman's reading of the passage.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN; I do not know that that improves the matter very much. If the Prime Minister is agreed with the right hon. Gentleman in principle, the principle will include the general aims of the right hon. Gentleman. If the two policies are identical in principle why does the Prime Minister suffer it to be believed that men who reject the policy of the Member for Birmingham—not his methods or his immediate means of attaining his object, but his general policy—have only to go to the Prime Minister to find something which differs from it in kind? The right hon. Gentleman cannot have it both ways. If there is no difference in principle that is a thing we can all understand. Identity and difference existing simultaneously no man can understand. I observed a letter from the noble Lord the Member for Ealing, who can both speak and write in a very forcible and clear way which we all admire, regarding this same point—

> "There are," he said, "two sections of the Unionist Party, who hold irreconcilably opposed views on tariff questions—namely, the fiscal reformers, headed by Mr. Chamberlain, and the free-traders, headed by the Duke of Devonshire. Neither are stupid nor malevolent. Each of these two Parties, after a perusal of Mr. Balfour's speech at Edinburgh, contend that the opinions therein expressed are in accordance with the views they hold. One of the two sections clearly is wrong. Which is it?"

Well, which is it? That is a simple question, an answer to which would stop the whole of this controversy, so far as it concerns the immediate attitude of the right hon. Gentleman. Which is it of these two sections? I do not find that they follow quite the same lines. One section beseeches him to give an explanation, but the other section appears quite content that this preposterous spectacle should continue. We can gather from that circumstance which section gains by the transaction. Then what does the Prime Minister do? He falls back upon himself. He has no light or guidance or leadership to offer; his followers must take him as they find him and make what they can of him. He says, "You may examine everything I have said and written and you will find one consistent train of thought running through it, perfectly clear, perfectly intelligible, perfectly self-contained." Will the right hon Gentleman pardon me if I tell him there is no question of vindicating his consistency? What we want to know is what his opinions are. If a general gave an order which was followed by the two wings of his army attacking each other until the stronger one, headed by his most doughty warrior, was very near annihilating the weaker section, he would be a remarkable commander if he excused himself from giving any instructions that would terminate the mischief on the ground that it was only due to a misconception, as his orders from the first had been perfectly clear, perfectly intelligible, and perfectly consistent. We are entitled to press this aspect of the question from this side of the House. Is that doughty warrior to whom I have referred the effective, the authorised interpreter of the leader's will, or is it the noble Lord the Member for Ealing, or the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich? After all, the fighting will not all be done on one side, and the country as well as the House ought to know whom they have to meet. Until we get some definite light from the Prime Minister—and now is his opportunity for giving it—we shall conclude that the policy we have to fight is that announced by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham, and discerned by him in the announcement of the Prime Minister.

Are we to be told that none of these arguments and questions are relevant, and that the fiscal question is not before Parliament at all? I altogether challenge this view, and it appears to have gone pretty well out of sight. Even if it were technically true, this House is the grand inquest of the nation still, and it would be its duty to endeavour to prevent the wanton and protracted injury in which the Government's attack on free trade is involving the nation. What is the Government here for at all? What is its policy? Why was this Government reconstructed? It was to discredit and undermine the old fiscal system. Is not that a subject on which we are entitled to interrogate the Government and expect a straightforward declaration of their intentions? It is a wide question as well as a deep one. Do they contend that the prodigious rate of expenditure has nothing to do with this fiscal question? Here is a Government so hungry for revenue, owing to their own policy in other matters, that it has exhausted well nigh every source of taxation upon which it can lay its hands, short of protective duties. Is it to lead us up to the very brink of the precipice and then to escape criticism because it has not pushed us over? Are the protectionists on that Bench and behind it unaware of the origin of high tariffs in other countries? High tariffs were not brought about by heroic methods or arguments. Did anybody in any of these countries deliberately set himself to reverse, annul, and delete the maxim that taxes should be levied for revenue purposes only? Not at all. All that was required was to spend public money so fast that more and more revenue had to be raised somehow, and little by little revenue tariffs changed into protectionist tariffs. Nothing could be simpler. It is the universal story, and it could not be better put than it was put—I am afraid hon. Members will not think much of the place—at a dinner of the Cobden Club. The chairman said—

> "On the Continent of Europe Governments committed to an excessive military expenditure have naturally enough lent their aid to tariffs which conceal while they increase the burden of taxation."

It is not only on the Continent that this is taking place. The speaker went on to say—

> "But the arguments against this system by which the few are enabled to enrich themselves at the expense of the many remain absolutely unshaken, and I do not doubt that in the long run truth and reason will prevail."

That is to say that in protective countries the people will come to see what folly protection is. This chairman of the Cobden Club was the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. Poor Mr. Cobden's memory has been discredited, because his prophecies did not turn out true. But here is a Saul also among the prophets, and equally wrong. It is not only this fiscal agitation which has turned the world upside down that demands attention, it is the actual operation of the Government; and here I invite the attention of the Prime Minister to a consideration which seems to have completely escaped him when as Minister of the Crown he seeks to wash his hands of all effective complicity in the campaign against free trade. The policy which at long intervals he recites to his audiences outside the House is not only a matter of aspirations and desires and of half-sheets of notepaper and addresses for a general election. It is a living fact. It is a policy. It is in operation; it has been put into operation by the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. It is a brilliant success. It has wholly stopped the dumping of cheap sugar. Judging from their public utterances, neither of these right hon. Gentlemen appears to be particularly delighted with this chicken of theirs. If it be disputed that this is the effect of their policy, I fall back upon another authority, who is the leading retaliator, the right hon. Member for West Bristol. He is even more strenuous as a retaliator than the Prime Minister, because he wants to put the system in force without waiting for an election and with no nonsense whatever about additional powers. Speaking on the Address last year, he said—

> "The principle of the Prime Minister's policy was tried in the Sugar Convention, and I venture to say that it has been assented to in that convention by this House and by the country."

There are a good many Members on both sides who are thanking their stars that they did not give their consent. The right hon. Gentleman goes on—

> "I do not quite see why we should wait for a general election to try it in another instance."

I know nothing more creditable to the Prime Minister in the whole of this business than the fact that he resisted that most alluring invitation. He did not try it in another instance, and how thankful he must be now that he did not. But it is not a question of opinion; it is a question of fact. Under the convention what do you find? You find the canon that taxes should be raised for revenue only reversed, annulled, deleted; it does not bring one farthing into the Exchequer. Then you find retaliation adopted—

> "against the importation of those foreign goods which, because they are bounty-fed or tariff protected abroad, are sold below cost price here."

I quote those words from the sacred document itself, and they are an exact description of the material dealt with by the Sugar Convention. You find in a little protected backwater a shelter snugly provided for sugar refiners. Finally, the grand Imperial idea of the Member for West Birmingham comes in and you have the West India planter for whose benefit this fiscal curiosity was brought into existence. What more do you want? It is a microcosm; it is an express image of the policies of both right hon. Gentlemen. Of course, we admit that other things have entered into this matter that were not foreseen. It turned out that sugar was a food—a most unfortunate discovery for a Government which shrinks from putting a question of food taxation before the people of this country on the ground that they are not likely to accept it. But then it turned out also that sugar is a raw material. That is a still more unfortunate circumstance, because all fiscal reformers unite in a perfect chorus of disclaimers if any one suggests that they have their eye on raw material. Then, again, it sent prices up in consequence of limiting the sources of supply, which they have not foreseen—a not unusual consequence. They have said over and over again that prices would not go up. They tried to look as if they were unconcerned with that little fact. I have heard of a chemistry professor who, in a lecture to his class, invited their special attention to an interesting experiment. He had some sort of fluid in one glass and another fluid in another, and he said—

> "You will observe if I pour this into that the contents will become a vivid red."

He performed the experiment, and the result was a dark green, but he was equal to the occasion. He said—

> "Ah, gentlemen, a dark green, that is still more remarkable."

For our consideration the Prime Minister has written once more on the document which we are to carry bound about our hearts, misunderstanding at our peril,

> "I do not desire to raise prices for the purpose of aiding home productions."

I cannot quite accurately say he has done that in this case, because he has ruined a good many home productions. The Prime Minister's motives are beyond question, and the fact that prices have gone up contrary to his express wishes only shows what a slender safeguard the best of men's motives and aspirations are against the operations of natural laws and economic forces. On a famous occasion on the sea shore the courtiers desired that the tide should not rise, but the powers of nature went on notwithstanding. When we look at the Sugar Convention we understand why it is that the case for retaliation is kept so entirely in the abstract and kept in the future also. I desire to ask some questions as to the operation of the Sugar Convention. This may be very unpleasant, but I am afraid I cannot help it. Is all going smoothly with the Sugar Convention? The Permanent Commission in Brussels determines the countries to be met by countervailing duties—that is in our case total prohibition. Russia, Denmark, Argentina, and San Domingo have been placed under this ban. But now I understand that our ports are to be opened to sugar from San Domingo. Is this a change in mind on the part of the Brussels Commission? If this process is to be inverted we had better select some country from which we get a considerable quantity—Russia, for instance. I believe Russia has requested that she should be relieved from it. Is that course supported by the Government? Again, there are seventeen countries which the Commission has decided to put under restriction, and in accordance with our legislation their exports ought to have been prohibited. But the Papers laid on the Table show that we have appealed against that decision, and the matter is hung up until April. Surely the Government are not running away from their own masterpiece. I have endeavoured to show why the House is directly and immediately concerned, and the Government directly and immediately implicated in this great question which they have assured us is not to be touched or prejudiced or threatened by His Majesty's present advisers. But above the House and the Government and Parliament, and free from all technicalities and conventional relations and procedure stands the country insisting, with no doubtful voice, that an end shall be put to an unreal and mystifying controversy which is full of mischief from end to end. I apologise to the House for speaking upon a subject which was not referred to by the hon. mover and seconder, but I have already explained that it is the most important subject of the moment and that is why I have dwelt so long upon it.

Turning our eyes abroad, the absorbing event has been the deplorable war in the East. While admiring the courage and endurance of the combatants on both sides, the world has been shocked by the murderous nature of the conflict. I feel sure that both his duty and his disposition will lead the Foreign Minister to embrace the earliest available opportunity of throwing the influence of this country on the side of peace, and in the meantime to adhere to the strictest neutrality. I have nothing but commendation for the attitude of Lord Lansdowne in the Dogger Bank incident, in the arrangement of which matter we owe much to the friendly offices of France, and I trust that the submission of the ground of possible quarrel to a tribunal may be a fresh step up the staircase leading to a general system of international arbitration. In the Nearer East also, while there is no actual state of war, the condition of things is far from reassuring. The Mürzsteg programme hangs fire and works slowly, and the question is whether we and the other Western Powers ought not to endeavour to press some more drastic remedy for the flagrant misgovernment of Macedonia.

But we have not been without a little war of our own, which was a tragic comedy from beginning to end. The King's Speech makes allusion naturally to the question of the Tibet Expedition. We are all glad that the expedition has returned in safety, and we all recognise with a full meed of admiration the conduct of the officers and men engaged, but what we say is that it ought never to have been despatched. The more we learn of the circumstances of the case and of the inception of the transaction, and of the way in which the Government of India set themselves to use it, contrary to the instructions and solemn pledges of this country, for effecting a permanent interference in Tibet, the clearer we are on that score. I give the Secretary for India full credit for refusing to ratify the arrangement made at Lhasa, but it would have been better still if the Government had put down their foot earlier. Knowing the objective of the Indian authorities, and being strongly opposed to it, they yet suffered themselves to be goaded into proceedings which brought damage to the prestige of the country and involved the massacre of unarmed men. The officer in civil charge of the enterprise has been rebuked. But why rebuke the agent? Why was not your censure carried higher to the principal? Colonel Younghusband was well aware of the reasons of the enterprise, and evidently regarded the permanent occupation of the Chumbi Valley as the minimum to be obtained. Can we wonder then that he failed to understand at the eleventh hour that the countermanding of this plan was seriously intended. He is perfectly frank. "To limit the period of occupation to the Chumbi Valley," he says, "is a very serious sacrifice of the interests of the Government of India. The Chumbi Valley is the key to Tibet itself, and also the most difficult part of the road to Lhasa. With the Chumbi in our possession we have a clear run into Tibet." He evidently had this fixed idea in his mind, and knew it was also in the minds of the Indian authorities. But the House will remember when we discussed the matter last summer we heard nothing of that as an object of the expedition. We heard of one or two shepherds carried off, of one or two boundary pillars pulled down, of these naughty and recalcitrant Tibetans not being willing enough to come into our markets to trade. These were the reasons for the expedition given to us, and not that which evidently was from the first the main object. I do not think that is treating the House or the country fairly. But it is not Colonel Younghusband's fault.

Regarding Afghanistan I should like to know more about the precise objects of these two mutually complementary Missions. What are the main subjects for discussion? This is the more interesting because the Prime Minister has been making inflammatory and alarming speeches as to our dangers in that quarter—speeches not characterised by any special diplomatic graces; speeches of the "I could tell if I dare" order. Let him dare. We wish he would. There are cases in which plain words are less dangerous than cloudy hints.

I turn to South Africa, and I am glad to see the Colonial Secretary, because I have a long catechism to put to him. First of all, as to this new representative Constitution. Why is the Orange River Colony not to have the same treatment as the Transvaal? I have no opinion on the merits of this Transvaal scheme, for the reason that we do not know it; but surely it is advisable to avoid drawing distinctions between the two States. The Treaty of Vereeniging said as soon as circumstances permitted a representative system tending towards autonomy should be introduced. Of course, these words are applicable to both the Colonies. Why do we hear always of a mysterious system which is to be introduced into the Transvaal and nothing of the other, which formerly enjoyed complete self-government of a representative kind, and was an entremely well-governed country? Information is wanted also regarding the constitutional change in the Transvaal. The House should have an opportunity of discussing this new Constitution before it takes place. I hope the right hon. Gentleman will undertake that the House shall have a full opportunity of discussing this new Constitution before any step has been taken on the spot which precludes any alteration at the will of the House afterwards.

With regard to Chinese labour I would ask, Has any limit of numbers been fixed for the importation, and, if not, have the Government any intention of fixing a limit? Are they satisfied with the effect of the importation on the general peace, security, and morality of the country? The Colonial Secretary wrote a letter the other day in which he said there were only two Chinese women brought over from China. He was, nevertheless, pleased with the reports, which showed no ground for anxiety as to the spread of vice. But private accounts give a different complexion to the matter. I shall be glad if he will tell us all he knows of the matter. Assuming the Government are well pleased with the result of their policy, are they so well satisfied as to regard Chinese labour as a permanent institution in South Africa? Permanent, that is, so long as gold lasts. Is that the view of the Government, and, if not, when is the temporary experiment to come to an end?

On another subject, I would ask the Colonial Secretary, When does he anticipate that the claims for compensation will be adjusted and the free grants apportioned, and how are matters proceeding with regard to the refunding to persons on the spot of what they had to sacrifice for the convenience of the troops? Where notes had been given by British officers and others of the number of cattle, horses, and other property received—how far has he got in settling these questions? The last question I would put is this. Is there any information as to the first instalment of £10,000,000 of the Transvaal war contribution now a year overdue?

Now I venture to come, and I am glad to come very near home, in more senses than one. I come to the Scottish paragraph. That paragraph expresses substantially a course which I have no reason to disapprove of. I think the general idea is good, but I must say it is slovenly. It may seem to be a small point, but it is one of importance. The Speech says—

Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman.

> "A situation has arisen connected with the administration of the property belonging to certain ecclesiastical bodies in Scotland which requires legislative intervention."

Why should you speak of ecclesiastical bodies? In Scotland we call them churches. It is a shorter and, I think, a nicer word. A man likes to think himself a member of a church and not of an ecclesiastical body. He is not so proud of being a member of an ecclesiastical body. Is this an intimation that the State Church is the only institution which deserves that name? Then at the end of the paragraph it says—

> "The King trusts the proposals will tend to the efficient administration of ecclesiastical funds and the promotion of peace and goodwill."

Why, it treats Scotland as though it were the Balkan Peninsula, where you get everything in confusion. The Scottish people are more concerned about something else than the distribution, however much they may be interested in that of ecclesiastical funds. They care a great deal about the interests of religion. And unless the word "religion" is as improper to attribute to the Church as the word "church" itself, I do not see why it should have been put on so low a ground as this. While the purpose of the clause seems to be good, the language ill-c[illegible]is a supercilious feeling which is greatly to be condemned.

Under the head of Estimates and expenditure we come to the great question of the administration of the two great spending Departments. In regard to the Navy, we shall expect full explanation of the sweeping attack and disqualification pronounced against a large part of the Fleet. The Government since 1885 down to the present day have built many vessels which are now to be discarded. This may be good policy, but we await the professional statement of opinion. The country was not a little surprised to find that costly ships built and launched amidst their own plaudits by the present Government are pronounced by the Prime Minister to exist merely to embarrass British admirals and discredit the Navy. If that is so, there must be some discredit somewhere else than among the admirals. And as to the Army, we are entitled surely to assume that the Government, and especially the Secretary of State for War, are now prepared to lay before us their scheme of reorganisation, fully and absolutely approved by the Government. They will also endeavour to prove and vindicate the efficiency of the recast War Office. On this point most disquieting reports reach us; and these most important questions ought to be amply discussed, for they have excited an interest in the country which has passed through the stage of alarm and is rapidly approaching that of despair.

Of the other legislative references in the Speech, I notice that sometimes we are told there is to be a Bill, and sometimes a proposal. Is there any subtle difference between the two? Or is it merely for the sake of variety that one word is used in one clause and a different word in another? I would only single out one Bill for observation—namely, that on the subject of the unemployed. We all warmly share the sympathy which His Majesty expresses with those who have suffered from want of work so severely, and I can assure the President of the Local Government Board that it is our earnest desire to assist him in his efforts to make some permanent provision for meeting this great difficulty. Now, we have the unemployed at one end, and you are going to make alterations in the functions of Ministers at the other end; but I am astonished that in midway you have left out from your programme anything referring to the status of trade unions, and the whole of a question which so greatly interests the mind of the great mass of the regular working classes of the country. The rest of the programme is plainly intended for show rather than for work. Everything done in this session, save when done by consent, will lack complete authority, and the burden of our demand is that a state of things so prejudicial to the public interest shall as speedily as possible come to an end.

Sir HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central) said he rose to call attention to an omission on the part of the Leader of the Opposition in his speech. The right hon. Gentleman had not said one word upon the proposal of the Government to deal with the great evils of alien immigration. It was quite certain that that paragraph in the King's Speech had attracted the sympathy of every single Member on the Government side of the House, and of every supporter of the Unionist Party in the country. They had heard not one word of excuse from the Leader of the Opposition for the attitude of his followers towards the Bill introduced by the Government last session. Had it not been for that attitude, they would have had already on the Statute-book effective legislation to deal with this great evil which affected the working classes of this country. It not only affected the East End of London, it was a question which required a rapid settlement in Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, and other great towns. It was a subject in which the working classes had a legitimate and justifiable interest. He was aware that the matter had long been before Parliament; and he had never hesitated to state that it was greatly to be regretted that the Government had not dealt with it before. Happily, it had been mentioned three or four times in Speeches from the Throne; and they also had the declaration of a Secretary of State that he proposed to introduce a Bill on the subject. He expressed the earnest wish, which was not only that of himself and his constituents, but of the great proportion of his hon. friends, that that Bill should be introduced as soon as possible, and that it should be pressed forward day by day until it was passed. If the Opposition renewed their tactics of last session, he hoped the Government would not hesitate for a single moment to appeal to the country on this issue. If they did, he knew perfectly well what the answer would be to the tactics of the Opposition in endeavouring to frustrate a measure of this character.

The right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition referred to the paragraph in the Speech from the Throne with reference to the abnormal distress caused by want of employment during the present winter. The Government, however, had announced that arrangements of a temporary character had been made to meet the difficulty, and also to provide machinery of a more permanent character. That was the situation, and he was glad to hear that the Government would have the support of the Opposition. At the opening of Parliament in 1893, when the Opposition were responsible for the administration of the country, he moved an Amendment to the Address on this subject; but right hon. Gentlemen and hon. Gentlemen who were then in the House voted against it. It was not only expedient to provide machinery of a permanent character to deal with this evil; they were also bound to inquire how it was that large masses of the people were unemployed last winter. Last year was an exceedingly bad year in his own constituency, 40,000 to 50,000 persons having to be supported by charitable relief funds organised by the Lord Mayor. Not only that, but in other parts of Yorkshire the distress was terrible. The people did not want charity; what they wanted was permanent employment. It was lamentable to read of the number of people in the country who were dependent on indoor and outdoor relief; and he rejoiced that the President of the Board of Trade had taken an intelligent interest in this deplorable condition of affairs. The policy of his right hon. friend was the policy which he had advocated in that House for many years. It was a policy they were entitled to ask the Government to pursue; and one on which he had not the slightest fear as to what the opinion of the country would be. It might be that in some constituencies it might not be successful at once; but in other constituencies which had studied the question for years, and which had felt the actual distress resulting from it, they would not have anything to fear. He rejoiced that the Government proposed to give effect to the repeated declarations of the chambers of commerce on this subject.

He regretted there was nothing with reference to the Army in the Speech from the Throne, especially with reference to the Militia and Volunteers. The Secretary of State for War stated at Liverpool last year that only a little common sense was necessary in order to realise the great services which the Volunteers had rendered to the country. He frankly said that the right hon.

Gentleman was not fair to the Militia and Volunteers. The responsibility was not with the Royal Commission but with the War Office; and he appealed to the right hon. Gentleman to put an end to the present suspense, which was operating so seriously on the efficiency of the Militia and the Volunteer Forces. They did not want the sympathy of words; they wanted the sympathy of acts.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

SIR JOHN GORST (Cambridge University) said he desired to occupy some little of the time that must necessarily elapse before the Prime Minister replied on the debate, in calling attention to a subject of immense national importance; a subject which was not in any way alluded to in the Speech from the Throne, and which had not been alluded to by the Leader of the Opposition when he addressed the House. He referred to the physical condition of the people of this country. Just before the House rose last year a Report was laid upon the Table, together with a large body of evidence, dealing with this matter. It was the Report of a Committee which had been sitting for about twelve months before that date to consider the question of the physical deterioration of the people of this country. The Committee took an immense amount of valuable evidence and reported unanimously, making many excellent practical recommendations, some of which might be carried out by administrative methods, but some of which required legislation by this House. He could not at the present moment go at great length into the Report of the Committee, though he hoped he would have an opportunity of doing so this session; but if he did not speak now, he might never have a chance of doing so.

The conclusion to which the Committee came was, that there were causes, most of them preventable and all of them capable of treatment, which resulted in an enormous amount of physical degeneration. The medical evidence given before the Committee showed that children were almost all of them born healthy, notwithstanding the privations which their mothers might have had to suffer, but that the moment the child was born into the world the deterioration began. The first thing modern society did was to separate the child from the mother. The exigencies of modern industry necessitated the mother going to work, and she was therefore unable to perform those duties to her child which it was necessary to perform if the child was to grow up into a healthy man or woman. Although this country joined in the Congress at Berlin it was far behind the other countries who had joined in that Congress in the measures taken to prevent physical degeneration. In this country we had nothing beyond the law, seldom put into force, which required a woman to abstain from labouring in a factory or a workshop for one month after her confinement. Apart from the fact that a mother was taken away from her child by the exigencies of modern industry, it was a remarkable fact that those who were the mothers of the present day had mostly been educated in our public elementary schools, and yet hardly any one of them knew how to manage a child. He could not help thinking that a little less grammar and geography and a little more attention given to this subject would greatly benefit the country.

But even if the mothers knew how to manage a child they were unable to get a good substitute for human milk. The best substitute for mother's milk was pure cow's milk, but it was almost impossible in many places for the poor of the towns to obtain pure cow's milk, notwithstanding the fact that there were powers vested in the Local Government Board which could compel a supply of pure cow's milk to the poor in towns. As a rule, however, those powers were not put into force, and the result was that children from their birth grew up imperfectly and improperly fed; subject to all diseases, notably rickets, and suffering all kinds of ailments brought about entirely by want of sufficient and proper food.

When these children were three years old they were invited, and when five, were compelled, to come into the elementary schools, and the public authorities became cognisant of their condition. But they did not take the trouble to have a medical examination of these children when they came to school, and the result was that they came to school suffering from all sorts of complaints which rendered them physically unfit to take advantage of the instruction they received. In his opinion there ought to be a power, vested in the Central Education Authority, enabling them to withhold the payment of a grant until it was proved that the child was fit to take advantage of, and profit by, the instruction given. When Minister of Education he had frequently to tell the House that the greater part of the money devoted to education would be thrown away because the greater part of the children were not fit to receive the instruction for which the House voted millions of money every year. He was, however, never listened to, but, in the evidence given, there was a concrete case brought before the Committee which could not be overlooked. There was a school in Lambeth, ten minutes walk from that House, every child in which had been medically examined for the purpose of that Committee, and the evidence given of that examination was that 90 per cent. of the children attending that school were unfit to receive instruction. That might be a very bad case, but in various centres in the northern counties, medical examinations of the children had resulted in the finding of 50 per cent. of them being unfit to receive instruction. The most deplorable and melancholy fact about the whole subject was that while the child was still young and growing the mischief was done. If they could only ensure that at the time it was at school a child had its body well cared for, they could bring up a perfectly strong and healthy generation.

The remedy was so simple and so easy that they had only to adopt it, and in the existing generation they would have on the whole a greatly improved standard of young men and young women growing up. A great many admitted that it would be a most admirable thing, but said that they must not interfere with the liberty of the parents in this matter. His point was that as the law stood at present, although the parents were bound to maintain their children, no attempt was made to protect the child against its parents. The only society which was at present interested in these matters was a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, a very excellent society in its way, but the existence of which was a reproach to the State, which ought to be the society to protect the children. No new right for the children was asked for; they had now the right to be maintained by their parents in the first instance, and failing that they ought to be maintained by the State. All he asked was that this right should be made more effective, and that the State should perform its duties to the children as against the parents. When the children were under the control of the educational authorities, there was no difficulty in bringing pressure to bear on parents.

Upon the question of food the evidence before the Committee was that all the causes operating to produce degeneration in children paled before the one great cause of insufficient and improper food, and that it was of no use to remove other causes if this was not removed. There was no difficulty in ensuring that children attending school should be properly fed. It was not suggested that all the children in the country should be fed, but only those whose parents, after pressure, had been found to be unable to provide properly for them. He did not believe that the percentage of such parents was very large, because he observed that, as a fact, the Jews, the poorest community in this country, never sent a child to school underfed or improperly fed. The fact was, it was part of the Jewish religion to take care of the children. The Jewish mother suckled her child, and the Jewish father, instead of drinking his wages, would rather go without food himself than see his child do so. If the Jews could do that, he thought with a little pressure Christians could do the same. If parents could not feed their children, it seemed to him only reasonable that the local education authority should have the power to spend some of its money in feeding the children preparatory to teaching them, because it was the greatest cruelty to make a child pass through this training unless it was properly fed. That was the part upon which legislation was necessary. It was recommended by this Committee that power should be given to the local authority, if it saw fit, to spend some of its own money, some of the school funds in feeding those children who the local authority were satisfied could be fed in no other way. He thought it was a question of great importance to the community—quite as important a question as that of the adulteration of butter. He should have thought that the Government might have arrived at the conclusion that a short and simple Act giving this power to the local authorities would be beneficial to the Empire. How could they carry on this great Empire, if they allowed causes of this kind which affected the physical condition of the people to continue to operate, and thus prevent their having soldiers and sailors fit to serve for the protection of the Empire? He hoped some step would be taken this session to carry out the recommendations of the Committee, and put an end to this thing which was a scandal to the race.

COLONEL PILKINGTON (Lancashire, Newton) was of opinion that the parents were not altogether to blame in this question of underfeeding. The defect was mainly noticeable in half-a-dozen centres of population. No doubt the majority of parents in the United Kingdom did feed their children properly, and in the case of the minority who were either too selfish or from some other cause did not provide their children with proper nourishment before sending them to school, the remedy, he thought, might be found in giving the children food and charging their parents with the cost. Wherever the race was found to be deteriorating, it was certainly the clear duty of the Government to take steps to stop the evil.

He congratulated the Government on their foreign policy, which had led to such friendly relations with the brave and plucky Japanese. It was a matter for congratulation that the foreign policy of the Government, in this respect at any rate, had been crowned with complete success; not that he liked to see a great nation humbled, but it was satisfactory that when attacked by an overwhelming and aggressive force our plucky ally had come out successful. Amongst the other matters referred to in the gracious Speech from the Throne he would like to point to the position in which we stood with regard to France. France was our nearest neighbour and he wished that in addition she were our warmest friend. It was difficult to see why she should not be. With so much in common, with institutions resembling each other so much, he looked forward to seeing the two countries bound together in bonds of closest unity.

He congratulated the Government on having at last recognised that the present arrangement of electoral areas required attention, and he trusted there would be such a Redistribution of Seats Bill as would deal justly with each part of the United Kingdom. It was not fair that in one district one man should represent 40,000 voters and that in another part of the kingdom another man should represent only 2,000. He trusted the Government would find time to deal effectually with this question. He rejoiced to find that the Aliens Bill was again to come before the House. It was of vital importance for the welfare of this country to exclude the inefficient, the immoral, and the diseased foreigner. This Bill, he trusted, would be dealt with in the House and not sent to a Grand Committee, where there was no machinery for dealing with obstruction. It was gratifying to see that it was proposed to extend the benefits conferred by the Workmen's Compensation Act. The Bill of 1896, introduced by Mr. Chamberlain, had proved an excellent measure. Its provisions, however, were confined to certain trades, and he hoped to see these extended. The proposal to establish a Ministry of Commerce met with his warmest support. It was one of the best ideas brought forward for a long time. Whatever was said about the fiscal policy, one thing was clear, viz., the necessity for watching over our industries in foreign countries. The Prime Minister was to be congratulated on the measure he had indicated his intention of introducing, and he (the speaker) trusted there would be no obstruction. If all would put their shoulders to the wheel and try to carry through the programme placed before them he believed the country would be the better and the happier in the end.

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): said that, judging from the King's Speech, a younger, a more hopeful, and a more enthusiastic Government had never existed in this country. The session had been shortened by a fortnight, and, in view of the multifarious character of the work the House were expected to do and the number of Bills it was hoped they would pass, either the Government must be very full of hope as to the work to be done, or peradventure were looking forward to a dissolution and desired to place the country in possession of their programme for the future. His hon. friend who had just spoken had referred with delight to the prospect of a Redistribution Bill. But no such thing was promised in the Speech, nor did he believe there was the slightest prospect of such a measure being introduced this session—first of all, because the Government must be well aware of the difficulties of passing it, and, secondly, because there had been none of the precedent inquiries necessary. As one of the certain victims of any scheme which had been suggested, he would have to raise his voice in kindly but strenuous criticism, and perhaps less kindly and more strenuous opposition would come from the Nationalist Benches. If the proposal survived the opposition of the representatives of those small constituencies which in former times had sent most illustrious Members to this House, it would be fortunate indeed. The Government, doubtless, intended to propose certain Resolutions, not to introduce a Bill; those Resolutions would have to receive the most kindly and candid consideration, and he hoped they would get nothing more.

The inevitable allusion to the war between Russia and Japan prompted him to say that of the many lessons taught by the war—such as that the use of the sword and the bayonet was not at an end, that troops might still carry their colours into battle with advantage, and so forth—the greatest was that to-day, as of old, the sea was mistress of the land. It was to the acquisition and the retention of sea-power the success of Japan was due; it was because Russia had lost the sea, although she retained the power of transport by land, that the course of the war had been such as it had, and, as he believed, would be to the end. He recognised that the Government had "been careful to observe in the strictest manner the obligations incumbent upon a neutral Power," but many of His Majesty's subjects, disregarding the strict injunction of His Majesty's Proclamation, had entered upon a trade in contraband of war which was the less creditable to this country, because engaged in for the advantage of the country not allied to our own. In August last he referred to the shocking and flagrant case of outrage on the British flag—the sinking of the "Knight Commander," without examination or trial, upon the mere fiat of the commander of the cruiser that stopped her, on July 24th. Cases long subsequent to that had been tried and decided in the Prize Courts, but of the case of the "Knight Commander" nothing had yet been heard. The Government undertook that proper reparation should be immediately demanded, and there was no matter more urgently demanding explanation. As to the North Sea incident, although at first very doubtful as to the effectual nature of the representations made by the country, he in the end was convinced and still believed that the arrangement arrived at by Lord Lansdowne was a sufficient and proper one, that the tribunal to which the matter was referred was an admirable one for the purpose, and that we could await with confidence its decision to do justice between the parties.

With regard to Tibet, a certain disagreement had arisen. The Government had sought to abide by their undertaking that there was no idea of appointing a permanent Resident or annexing any territory, but Colonel Younghusband had departed from it, and had been censured for that. He still feared that it would be found impossible to continue a policy of abstention after warlike acts.

His belief was that when they went into a country like Tibet and destroyed the moral authority, the physical power of the Government of that country, and in fact the Government itself, they incurred a responsibility which in the end would force them to take further steps, and eventually to send a Resident and occupy territory. He did not wonder that a disagreement had arisen between the Secretary of State for India and, not Colonel Younghusband, but Lord Curzon. Lord Curzon was a very ambitious Viceroy, who, when he saw all the world annexing territory, said—"I will go one better; I will annex not territory, but the incarnate Buddha; I will have a divinity in my service. That is what I will do for my country." There was no doubt that it was with Lord Curzon's knowledge and acquiescence that this "defiance" of the authority of the Home Government by Colonel Younghusband had been carried on, and the attempt made to force down their throats a treaty, convention, or arrangement known to be contrary to their policy; and he thought that the hard words "defiance," "disobedience," and "disregard of authority," might more properly have been applied to the Viceroy than to the able and gallant officer who conducted the expedition.

According to the Speech, the Estimates had been framed "with the utmost economy which the circumstances of the present time admit." If that was so it would mean a saving of many millions. The finances of the country had got into such a state that if the expenditure went on during the next ten years at the same rate as during the last we should be face to face with national bankruptcy. He had put down an Amendment dealing with this matter, and no one would be more pleased than he if assurances were forthcoming that an entire change of our financial system was to be entered upon, and some better provision made for our monstrous Debt, funded and unfunded.

One paragraph in the Speech troubled him much. The improvement of the status of a public department simply meant an increase in the Estimates for that department—an increase in the Minister's salary and an increase of expense. A brand new Minister of Commerce was also promised—he supposed with a seat in the Cabinet. One objection to that proposal would be that it would increase the already too large Cabinet. But what in the name of wonder was a Minister of Commerce going to do for commerce? Commerce had flourished in the past not because of Ministers, but in spite of them. The shipping trade had managed to drag out its existence, not because of the action of the President of the Board of Trade, but because that Minister sometimes forgot there was a shipping trade. There was nothing a Minister of Commerce could do for commerce that commerce could not do better for itself.

There were two matters not mentioned in the Speech in which his constituents took a great interest. One was the Undersized Fish Bill. He hoped its omission meant that the Government had given that subject up. The other matter was the question of whether we were to go on with free trade or to have imposed upon us a system of protection whereby £21,000,000 of extra Customs duties was to be levied, £6,000,000 remitted, and the remainder left as a charge, which it was fondly believed would fall on the foreigner. Personally, he thought the position had been considerably cleared. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham could see no difference in principle between the Prime Minister and himself. But there was all this difference in principle, that the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham was for protection, while the Prime Minister was against it. There had been too much ambiguity and uncertainty too long over this matter, but the Prime Minister's declaration at Edinburgh was plain and unambiguous that he was against protection and that he would never be the leader of a Party bound to protection. He (the hon. Member) congratulated himself upon that, because certainly if the Prime Minister were to become the leader of a Party by which protection was countenanced he (the hon. Member) would not have the advantage of being among his followers. But he took note of the Prime Minister's declaration and accepted it, as all were bound to do. He would not now argue the merits of the questions but he would read a most interesting account of a personal experience—not an expression of opinion—related by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. In November, 1885, the right hon. Gentleman said—

"I will tell you something that I do not think I ever have told in public before—a very curious incident in my commercial experience. The Americans had a duty of about 100 per cent. upon screws to protect that poor industry, to keep it in the country for the benefit of the working classes. In spite of the duty of 100 per cent. we were able to send screws there, and we did send very large quantities. What happened? The American manufacturers came over here and they said, 'We are making 100 per cent. upon our capital. If you continue to send screws to America we should, of course, be obliged to reduce our prices. That will shut you out, but will reduce our profits. That will not be good for either of us. Now let us make a bargain. We will pay you so much a year to sit still and not send a screw to America.' Well, they did it, and my firm received a handsome income for years. From the American manufacturers, protected as they were by the folly and stupidity of this protectionist legislation, we received a very considerable income to sit still with folded hands and send no screws to America. But after a little while these American manufacturers went to Congress, and they said, 'Here is a native manufacture deserving protection, employing a lot of the working people, in danger of being ruined by competition from abroad. You must raise the duties.' And they did raise the duties to about 120 or 150 per cent., and then, of course, our income ceased and we were shut out. But now I want you to see who are the losers in this thing. Not the American manufacturers, who were able to make 100 per cent. upon their capital and to pay a handsome subsidy, and not the foreign manufacturers who received the handsome subsidy. The only people who suffered were the working classes of the United States, who had to pay more for every screw that they used, and every manufacture in which they were engaged. Hampered and trammelled by the additional cost that was put upon their materials, they, and they alone, bore the burden of this tax upon their industry and their labour. Well, if other people chose to cut off their tails, are you going to be so foolish? I tell you that any proposal to tax commerce [I think that word should be "corn"] is a proposal to put rent in the pockets of landlords, and any proposal to tax manufactures is a proposal to put profits in the pockets of particularly-favoured manufacturers. I do not think that you will be led away by these absurdities."

The House would observe that that was not a question of individual opinion but a statement of fact in regard to certain things that occurred, and certain inevitable inferences to be drawn from them. Whatever the opinion of the right hon. Gentleman might be, unless he could explain away this story of the screws, it would remain as an object-lesson of the utmost importance in this question which was now before the country. Meantime, to this new religion of preference and protection and of duties which no one was to pay unless it was the foreigner, certain sacrifices were to be offered up. He was one of them. The noble Lord the Member for Greenwich was another, and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Cambridge University was a third. If they were sacrificed, no doubt others would be found, far more competent, to take their places, and do that work which they had tried to do. Yes, Sir, but they were not going without a struggle. Whatever might be the temptation to accept other seats, they could not abandon the people in their constituencies who had stood true to them. It would not be honourable to do so, and they did not mean to do so. They would not die without a struggle, and he was not quite sure that, as time went on, and the dissolution came about, their prospects might not change and the probabilities entirely alter. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham knew that his plan was rejected, not only by the people, but by the First Lord of the Treasury, in the most explicit terms, and it was because the First Lord had rejected it that he should continue to give his right hon. friend that support which he had hitherto given to him.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I was not able to hear the whole of my hon. friend's speech. Had I done so, no doubt I should have seen that he was gradually leading up to that promise of support with which he concluded his observations. The few phrases I heard before that did not seem to me to be enthusiastically in favour of the present Government, but I daresay——

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: You are wrong.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I agree that it is not fair to judge a speech from a few sentences, and I abstain from inferential criticism. I content myself with thanking him for the promise of support, his accustomed support, which I gratefully receive. I am sorry that, through exigencies of time, which the House fully understands, I was not able to rise immediately after the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition and do my best to reply to the very numerous questions he put to me in his speech, but I do not know that any serious inconvenience has occurred to the right hon. Gentleman or the House through my observations being delayed. I am sorry I was not able, as it were, to give at once that meed of applause to the two speeches of my hon. friends who moved and seconded the Address, and that I am reduced to paying them a somewhat belated, but most well-deserved, compliment on the admirable manner in which they fulfilled their responsible duties. And, Sir, before I come to the necessarily controversial portions of my speech I should like to associate myself with the right hon. Gentleman in expressing on behalf of my hon. friends on this side of the House as well as on my own our regret on account of the departure from among us of one of the greatest Parliamentary figures that we have known in our experience. This is not the time to attempt any appreciation of the great Parliamentary abilities of Sir William Harcourt; but this I may say, with the assurance that it will receive the sympathetic support of every man in every quarter of the House, he was a vigorous controversialist; but in the utmost height of Party controversy, when feeling was running strongly, when he himself perhaps was taking, as was his wont, a leading place in the fighting line, he never allowed Party differences to mar the perfection of personal friendship, and no dialectical display, no strength of Party attack, made him forget for one moment that native and ineradicable kindliness which characterised the man. I am proud to say that he honoured me with his friendship for many years, and never was that friendship clouded even when our political differences were in their most acute stage. My experience is the experience of many men in this House; and the result is that I believe he is as much regretted by Gentlemen who sit upon this side of the House, and who throughout their whole political lives have differed from him in matters of public policy as he can be by those with whom he was politically associated.

Mr. Speaker, a very large number of questions were put to me by the right hon. Gentleman relating to many subjects, and touching upon many different parts of the world. He asked me about Tibet, and he seemed to indicate that in his view the Government at home should have passed a vote of censure upon the Government of India. I see no ground for that suggestion. The Government of India recognised, as I am sure they always will recognise, that the Government at home in these matters must be supreme, and they never for one instant departed from a correct attitude in regard to the policy to be pursued. On that, I think, I need say no more. With regard to Afghanistan, negotiations are now proceeding with the Ameer, and we hope that they will have a successful termination. The right hon. Gentleman indicated that in his view the Government were pursuing a provocative policy or something in the nature of a provocative policy in regard to Afghanistan. If that is, or was, his view, I can assure him that he is profoundly mistaken. It is a cardinal element, in my judgment, in any sound policy for the Indian Government that they should be on good terms with their neighbour on the North-West Frontier. That neighbour lies between them and a more powerful military empire. The friendship of the Ameer may do much for us; we can do still more for the Ameer. There is every motive, therefore, for a friendly relation between the two countries; and that friendly relation it is the earnest desire of His Majesty's Government to maintain and, if possible, to increase.

Hurrying hastily through the list of points the right hon. Gentleman made I find that he asked me a great many questions about South Africa. He asked me, to begin with, why we had delayed giving constitutional government to the Orange Free State while we were giving representative, not responsible, government to the Transvaal. Well, I will venture to point out that it is a case of one thing at a time. It is no small matter to frame a new Constitution, a wholly new Constitution, for a new colony. The task has weighted—I had almost said overweighted—the capacities of Lord Milner and his assistants; and it is premature, I think, even to suggest that we should deal with the Orange Free State until we have dealt thoroughly and satisfactorily with the more important and higher problem presented by the Transvaal. Then, Sir, the right hon. Gentleman asked me whether there would be an opportunity of discussing the Constitution which it is proposed to give to the Transvaal before any final step is taken. I do not intend to give any final answer on that point at present. My right hon. friend the Colonial Secretary informs me that, so far as he knows, there is no precedent for such a course; and in these circumstances I certainly should not bind myself by any premature and unnecessary pledge. Then the right hon. Gentleman asked whether any limit had been placed to the number of Chinese employed in indentured labour. No, Sir, no limit has been placed upon it; but the experiment of using Chinese labour is being most carefully watched by the responsible authorities on the spot, and if it should be found that the immigration of these labourers from any point of view was on the whole producing a balance of ill, the right hon. Gentleman may rest assured that we without hesitation should prevent any augmentation of their numbers. I may say—it is an interesting point—that the introduction of Chinese labour so far has been accompanied not only by an increase of white labour in the mines but by an increase of Kaffir labour.

Sir JOHN BRUNNER (Cheshire, Northwich): Will the right hon. Gentleman say "in the mines?"

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: In the industries connected with the mines. The right hon. Gentleman further asked me whether we had heard any reports that the introduction of these Chinese labourers had produced any effects on the morality of the colony, or had indeed been associated with any manifestations of immorality. No such reports have reached us at all. He then asked me whether this was a permanent arrangement. Certainly I am not going to place a limit of time beyond which Chinese labourers should not be allowed to enter the country. But representative government is about to be given to the colony, and they will be able to give us most valuable advice upon the continuing need of these immigrant labourers. Then the right hon. Gentleman asked me whether the claims for compensation had been adequately dealt with. I am given to understand that the Commission which is dealing with these claims has nearly reached the term of its labours; but more precise information, I am sorry to say, I am not in a position to give him.

Then the right hon. Gentleman asked me one or two questions about the Sugar Convention. He asked me whether sugar from San Domingo is prohibited from entering the United Kingdom. It is not prohibited, because San Domingo has ceased to give a bounty. The second question he asked me was whether Russia had asked to be relieved from the penalty attaching to bounties under the Convention, and, if so, has this country supported that application. No application, so far as we know, has been made by Russia during the course of the last year, and there is no doubt whatever, according to our information, that Russia does give a bounty upon the export of sugar. I think the right hon. Gentlemen asked me about Brazil and some other countries. We have appealed against the decision because we do not think that these countries give too big a bounty. At any rate, we do not think it has been proved, and it ought to be clearly proved before the sugar from those sources is prohibited in this country. These are the questions which the right hon. Gentleman asked me in the course of his speech.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: I should like to have an answer to the first question I asked the right hon. Gentleman—namely, why have we met so late?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I remember the question, but I was not aware that the right hon. Gentleman attached importance to it. There is nothing abnormal in the date on which we have met. There are plenty of precedents for a date of this kind. If a vote were taken by ballot as to whether we should meet on the 14th or the 7th or the 1st of February, I believe that the majority in favour of meeting on the 14th would be overwhelming, and I further believe that, if the secrecy of the ballot could have been broken, it would have been found that the right hon. Gentleman voted in the majority. As the right hon. Gentleman truly observed, the question which he has so good-naturedly interjected is not precisely germane to sugar. Let me go back to the Sugar Convention. It is a question which I think hon. Gentlemen opposite dwell upon with great pleasure. They think that this is a matter in which, to use the vulgar phrase, they have got the Government into a hole.

AN HON. MEMBER: The Government have got themselves into a hole.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I think that is a more accurate way to put it. They think the Government, by endeavouring to abolish bounties, have got themselves into a hole; and they rejoice in seeing their opponents in that agreeable position. I take an entirely different view of the Convention, and if I wanted to show the absolute incompetence of hon. Gentlemen opposite to deal with an economic question, I should select the treatment of this question by the right hon. Gentleman and his friends, because I do not on this occasion dissociate them. The right hon. Gentleman evidently thinks that a policy intended to abolish foreign bounties for imports into this country is contrary to sound national policy and sound political economy. I venture to say he has against him every authority worth considering, past and present, whether they be politicians or whether they be economists, whether they be men looking at this problem with the impartiality of science, or men looking at it as a practical problem. Hon. Gentlemen opposite have against them the whole body of authority, and they have against them the authority of the right hon. Gentleman himself. I remember that the right hon. Gentleman made a speech in this House in which he told us that bounties were as bad as protective duties.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: To the country in which they are applied.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: That is not the view of the right hon. Gentleman. He said—

> "These bounties appear to me to be bad; to dislocate trade, and so forth; above all, to punish the very nations who employ them."

The nations who suffer most, of course, are the nations who impose the bounties. But they are not the only sufferers, and they are not the only sufferers according to the right hon. Gentleman, and according to every economist who knows his trade.

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): The right hon. Gentleman did not deny that foreign bounties had the effect of cheapening sugar here.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Who ever denied it? But is the hon. Gentleman so ignorant both of what great men in whom he believes, like Mr. Gladstone, have said upon this subject, and of the elementary economic aspects of the case, as not to know that the temporary benefit which the consumer may derive from the bounties is held by favour of the country which gives them, and that the bounty has the effect of restricting the area of production? Is it not in the power of nations who have put on bounties to take them off, in which case the British consumer loses all the benefit he derived from the bounty and all the benefit he might have derived from the increased area of production which would have existed if the bounty had not been imposed? I do not know, individually, that I rate the economic authority of Lord Farrer very high. He was, however, an able man, and he said what I have told you we all agree with, that these bounties are a shameful thing, and that they ought to be abolished, even though they raise the price of sugar. I do not know that I should say that if the rise in the price of sugar was to be a permanent rise, I would not allow other nations to give us sugar permanently cheaper. But the argument turns on the word permanently. It is surely the poorest kind of statesmanship which looks at the price of sugar in a given month or two months or three months, and does not look at the total production of the commodity throughout the world, and does not encourage free trade in that commodity for the benefit of the consumers in this country; and those Gentlemen opposite—who are ready to encourage what the right hon. Gentleman describes as a fiscal expedient as bad as protection, who are anxious to see this kind of expedient adopted by foreign countries so that we may obtain for a few months or years benefit from it—call themselves free-traders! They do not know what free trade is. There is not an economist, from Adam Smith downwards, who would not repudiate with contempt and indignation, the doctrines I have heard put forth and cheered to-night from that side of the House.

Now I come to what is perhaps an even more important subject than the attack upon the Sugar Convention. It is more important because it touches upon what is or is not the sound constitutional practice of this country. The right hon. Gentleman has repeated in this House the accusations which he and his friends have gone about the country repeating almost ad nauseam through the whole recess. And what is the nature of the charge they make against us in respect of constitutional usage? It comes under three heads. In the first place, the right hon. Gentleman says that this Government is so feeble and discredited that it cannot carry out any effective policy. But how is that to be reconciled with the other charges made against us—that we are always carrying out very effectively measures to which the strongest objection is taken by the other side? I quite agree that a Government which exists only by the sufferance of an Opposition, which dare not produce a measure which the Opposition does not approve of down to the last comma, can hardly be called a Party Government at all; and certainly I should never consent to be a member of a Government who depended, not upon the loyal support of their friends, but upon the grudging and contemptuous assistance occasionally tossed to them by their opponents. But that is not the condition of this Government at present. It certainly was not its condition last session, in which, according to another portion of the diatribes of the hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite, we were constantly and tyrannically trampling upon the Opposition. That may show great wickedness, but it does not show great weakness. I therefore venture respectfully to submit that the charge of feebleness—immorality if you like—may be dismissed for the present. Then the second charge against us is that we are carrying on the Government while the by-elections are going against us. I believe the by-elections have been going against us, and there is not the least doubt that we are carrying on the Government; so that the two propositions are quite accurate. But the question is, Are we in so carrying on the Government violating either the spirit or the letter or the practice of the Constitution? I do not think anybody who has considered the question can doubt what the answer should be. I will not discuss the Conservative Administrations. I will take my illustration from Radical Administrations. When Mr. Gladstone came into office in 1869 he disestablished a Church, he passed an Education Bill, he revolutionised the Army, and he did other things. I am not for the moment criticising or complaining of any of these measures. But in the years during which he performed these legislative and administrative feats he lost on the balance of elections no less than twenty-four seats. We have lost sixteen. Did Mr. Gladstone resign because he was losing by-elections? He not only did not resign because he was losing by-elections, but he said that would be a most improper reason for resigning. We will skip over the next Tory Administration and go to Mr. Gladstone's next Government. [AN HON. MEMBER: All wrong.] Well, I admit I have not checked these figures myself but I have no doubt that they are correct. But I go on to Mr. Gladstone's Government of 1880, which came to an end in 1885.

MR. JOHN MORLEY (Montrose Burghs): I only wish to be allowed to say that the loss of by-elections was given to the Queen as a reason for advising dissolution.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I do not think that gets over the letter Mr. Gladstone wrote to Lord Granville, in which he said it was not a sufficient reason, and that it would be a bad precedent for a Government to go out simply because by-elections had gone against it without considering other motives. Now I come to Mr. Gladstone's Government of 1880, the last considerable stretch of power he enjoyed. That Government passed a Coercion Act, a Land Act, made the Kilmainham treaty, bombarded Alexandria, abandoned Gordon ["Oh, oh!"] —I am not attacking Mr. Gladstone. After all, why should I? I am narrating incidents which made that Government, for good or for evil—we need not quarrel over which it is—very remarkable in the history of the country. In the course of the tenure of office by that Government Mr. Gladstone lost on the balance nineteen seats at by-elections, and we have lost, as I have said, only sixteen. [AN HON. MEMBER: But how many have come over?] Of course hon. Members may have changed their opinions though constituents have not. Some Gentlemen who have sat on this side now sit on that, and in Mr. Gladstone's time there were times when similar events, regrettable or not, occurred. But that is totally irrelevant to the constitutional question. Is a Government at liberty to go on while the balance of by-elections is against it? I say all precedent, all law, all common sense shows that it is for the House of Commons, and for the House of Commons alone, to determine whether a Government shall receive that measure of support which will enable it to carry out the duties entrusted to it by the Sovereign and expected from it by the country.

There is one further argument which has been used. We have been told we have no mandate; and by a mandate I understand is meant that some kind of bargain was made by the then Government that they would do nothing in the way of legislation—["Cries of No, no"]—then what is meant by it?—nothing in the way of legislation—and that they would only finish the war in South Africa, and as far as they could carry out a settlement there. We have been told that we went to the country on a single issue, and that we have no right to go beyond it. [AN HON. MEMBER: Hear, hear!]. That is exactly what I say. Now really this argument transcends both common sense and history. In the first place, the election was in 1900, and I do not believe that you will find an instance of that argument being used until hon. Gentlemen came to express their dislike of the Education Act of 1902, and then they furbished up this strange weapon of political warfare. I have already said on another occasion that if this apocryphal bargain ever had been made between the Government and the country in 1900, the time to call attention to it was when, after the Speech from the Throne, business began; but, as I have already pointed out, the chief or only complaint was not that the legislative programme was too full, but that it was too meagre. Then I come to 1902, and refer to the right hon. Gentleman's speech in the discussion on the Address. He said of the Education Bill that it would lead to a great deal of controversy, but there was not a word about its being ultra vires, not a suggestion that we had no right to bring it forward. That you cannot bring forward an Education Bill without a great deal of controversy is quite true; but there is a total absence of any thought of this argument, which was not invented until some months later. But that is not all. The National Liberal Federation passed a resolution at the end of 1901, or early in 1902, complaining of the abortive Education Bill of 1901, and saying there ought to be a big Bill passed. Really it is absurd in the face of facts like these to try to make out that there was a pledge between the Government and the constituencies. What did the right hon. Gentleman say in his election address? He said the question now before the electors in this Kingdom is not the narrow question which concerns the war, or the South African question; it is the question of the spirit in which the legislative affairs of the country should be carried on.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: The important thing there is not what I said, but what you said.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I do not wish to say who is the more important person. At all events, the right hon. Gentleman's words are worthy of some consideration—even he will admit that. I cannot hope that this absurd constitutional mare's-nest has been completely destroyed; no doubt it will appear in Liberal leaflets and Radical placards all over the country; but I think that any man who knows the constitutional history of the country for the last thirty or forty years will see that no more hollow pretence was ever made than this, that for the sake of the emoluments of office we are violating constitutional precedent and practice.

Then I come to what I suppose the right hon. Gentleman thought the main portion of his speech, that which dealt with the fiscal controversy. He fell foul of my two hon. friends the mover and the seconder of the Address because they did not anticipate his bad example, and drag quite irrelevantly into a debate on the King's Speech of 1905 what can, as a practical matter, only concern Parliaments to which that Speech is not addressed. If they had gone outside the four corners of the King's Speech and if they had anticipated the example of the right hon. Gentleman, and plunged into this subject, in my opinion they would have transgressed the practice and precedent of the House, and would have gone very far beyond what I think is relevant to our debates. I have protested more than once against this practice of dragging the fiscal question into the discussions of a Parliament which is not going to deal with it, because quite obviously it is as utterly irrelevant as a debate, let us say, on Home Rule. Indeed, it is more irrelevant and for this reason. The right hon. Gentleman tells us, indeed it is the whole basis of his speech, that we do not in any sense represent the country, and that when the election comes he and his friends will come into office. Therefore, if we are to discuss any policy which is not to be dealt with by this Parliament, the policy we ought to discuss is not our policy but his policy. And while the right hon. Gentleman professed himself very much befogged as to what is our policy on the fiscal question, I truly and sincerely from my heart and conscience assure him he cannot be nearly so befogged as I am as to what policy of Home Rule is held by hon. Gentlemen opposite. I do not in the least know how that argument is to be answered. Perhaps the right hon. Member for East Fife will give me an answer. Why is it more relevant to the debate on the King's Speech in 1905 to discuss differences or supposed differences on the fiscal question on this side of the House than on the same Speech and at the same time to discuss Home Rule and the differences, real or supposed, that prevail among hon. Gentlemen opposite? There is absolutely no distinction of theory or practice between the two, and if one may be discussed so may the other. However, I propose to say a few words in answer to the right hon. Gentleman's observations on this question, though I think it necessary to put in this caveat as to their relevancy. They are not relevant, but I will deal with them. The right hon. Gentleman, I notice, does not say that he is unable to understand the policy which I have recommended to the country. He leaves that depth of ignorance to be professed by the right hon. Member for Montrose, whom I have never been able to enlighten, great as have been the efforts which I have devoted to the task. The Leader of the Opposition does understand, but he says my policy is a policy of aspirations. That is a very old criticism. Every policy is, I presume, a policy of aspirations until it is carried into effect. His policy as regards Home Rule is a policy of aspirations. He does not agree with the Member for Fife that Home Rule is an academic question. He thinks it a vital and important question. Yes, but it is a question of aspirations, the aspirations, in fact, of the Irish Party and those whom they represent. What criticism of a policy is it to say that it is a policy of aspirations?

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: I never said so.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Excuse me. The right hon. Gentleman may not have intended to say so, but I can assure him that he did say so. It is the only thing in the nature of criticism of my policy that I can find in his speech.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman will allow me to repeat the question, which I call a plain question, that I asked. Is it according to his idea of what is right that when an hon. Member or anyone else—when anyone who differs entirely from the principle of fiscal policy recommended by the Member for Birmingham comes to the right hon. Gentleman and imagines that he has found at his hands a policy of another kind altogether, does he think it right that he should allow him to understand that that is so, while practically and substantially the principle of his policy and that of the right hon. Member for Birmingham are identical?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I confess I should like to have that on half a sheet of notepaper. Can anything reasonably be asked of the Leader of a Party more than that he should, to the very best of his ability, explain, in the clearest language he can command, his own position? You may say that my language is obscure and that I indulge in metaphysics, but I do my best. Is it not extraordinarily inconsistent—when the gravamen of your charge against me is that I cannot explain my own position—to ask me to explain somebody else's? If my poor powers of expression are totally inadequate to the first task how can you throw upon me the burden of the second? I really do not think that anybody, except the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose, has failed to understand what it is I recommended to the country. [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh, oh!"] At all events, having devoted much time to it, I am, from the lack of the necessary gifts, or the necessary education, or the necessary practice, incapable of putting it either more briefly, or clearly, or more precisely. I believe any man, with an impartial mind, can understand it without the smallest doubt.

AN HON. MEMBER: What is it?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I have given it you on half a sheet of notepaper. I cannot imagine any way of bringing it home to hon. and right hon. Gentlemen if the ways I have used are ineffective. If I had had time I would have put it in words of one syllable.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: "Yes" or "No" would do.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: "Yes" or "No" is not an answer to that question; and, failing that method, I entirely decline to attempt—although I admit it is my duty to explain my policy to the best of my ability, I do not admit that it is my business to explain anybody else's policy. Who are these gentleman who, in view of what is going to happen after the next election, are putting us through this course of cross-examination, and subjecting us to these inquiries? Why is the process not to be reversed? I have, at all events, honestly tried to explain my policy. Have you tried honestly to explain your policy? There was one happy period of about eight hours in which a rejoicing country thought they had the utterance of a Liberal Leader on this question. But the timid bathers withdrew their reluctant feet from the cold water and before the day was out there was a storm and flood of denial with regard to it from which we learned that that which everybody—including the right hon. Gentleman's best friends—had blessed as an authoritative statement of Liberal policy was really no more than notes of undelivered speeches by a gentleman of position. If Lord Spencer's statements are repudiated as an authoritative statement of Liberal policy. [OPPOSITION cries of "No."] No? I thought they were—who was the man to whom it was addressed?—let somebody else with greater authority step into Lord Spencer's shoes and tell us what it is that the country, which they say is clamouring for their advent to power, wishes them to do. There are plenty of questions about which we are in doubt. You have not told us what you are going to do with the Education Act. You do not know, or at least you have not told us, what are your plans for dealing with the Licensing Act. I am sure you have made no plan as to what you mean to do in respect of Chinese labour. We have not the smallest conception whether you still think you ought to disestablish the Welsh Church, which you tried to do before. You have not told us whether you still desire local veto, which you tried to pass. You have not told us whether you mean to pass Home Rule, with which you have wasted two Parliaments in trying to deal. This is a degree of ignorance which surely requires some illumination from some person, if there be such a person. I have put a few questions we should like answered. I believe half a sheet of note-paper would do it, properly applied. For my part, I entirely reject the idea that we stand here to be cross-examined as to what is to be done in the next Parliament, while hon. Gentlemen opposite are to sit there merely in the position of cross-examiners, and not in the position either of witnesses or criminals in the dock.

Mr. A. J. Balfour.

I have now, I think, adequately dealt with every part of the right hon. Gentleman's speech, except one, and that was, as I thought, a most unnecessary and gratuitous attack upon my hon. friend the Member for Hampshire. My hon. friend has not been very long in an official position, but he has been long enough to show how valuable his great abilities and industries are and can be, to this country; and why the right hon. Gentleman, who has plenty of people to attack on this side—there is always my right hon. friend the Member for Birmingham—should have singled out my hon. friend for this most ungenerous animadversion I am unable to understand. As I came into the House a friend of mine gave me a quotation from the late Mr. Bright which seems to me to be absolutely relevant to this issue, and with which I shall conclude my observations to-night. It runs as follows. He is dealing with an Opposition anxious to get into office and of whom the Leaders made an attack on one of the junior members of the Government. Mr. Bright said—

> "If I were the hungriest of the hungry I would scorn to get into office over the prostrate body of the youngest member of the Administration."

Motion made, and Question, "That the debate be now adjourned."—(Mr. Asquith)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

ADJOURNMENT.

Motion made, and Question, "That this House do now adjourn"—(Sir A. Acland-Hood)—put, and agreed to.

Adjourned at ten minutes after Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 15th February, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

NEW WRIT.

New Writ for the Borough of Liverpool (Everton Division), in the room of Sir John Archibald Willox (Chiltern Hundreds). — (Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The Chairman of Ways and Means reported, That, in accordance with Standing Order 79, he had conferred with the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords, for the purpose of determining in which House of Parliament the respective Private Bills should be first considered, and they had determined that the Bills contained in the following List should originate in the House of Lords, viz.:—

Abertillery Urban District Water.

Administrative County of London and District Electric Power Company.

Alexandra Park and Palace.

Bangor (County Down) Water and Improvement.

Barry Railway.

Blackpool Improvement.

Blackpool, St. Anne's, and Lytham Tramways.

Bridgewater Canals.

Bristol Blind Asylum.

Buenos Ayres Grand National Tramways.

Cardiff Railway.

Central Electric Supply.

Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation.

City of London Electric Lighting Company.

Clacton Improvement.

Clacton-on-Sea Commissioners.

Commercial Union Assurance.

Cordoba and Rosario Railway.

County of London Electric Supply Company.

Dearne Valley Railway.

East Cowes Gas.

East London and Lower Thames Electric Power.

Entre Rios Railways.

Formby Township.

Gosport and Fareham Tramways.

Great Central Railway.

Great Central Railway (Pension Fund).

Hastings Harbour.

Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment).

Hastings Tramways.

Hessle Gas.

Hessle Urban District Council.

Humber Conservancy.

Hythe Corporation.

Leeds and Liverpool Canal.

Littlehampton Urban District Council.

Llandrindod Wells Urban District Council.

London and India Docks Company.

London Squares and Enclosures (Preservation).

Mansfield Corporation.

Marylebone Chapels.

Matlock Bath Improvement.

Medway and Thames Canal.

Metropolitan and Great Central Railway Companies.

Metropolitan District Railway.

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District).

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers).

Metropolitan Railway.

Mexborough and Swinton Tramways (Extension of Time).

Mortgage Insurance Corporation.

Naval Works (Portsmouth Barracks Site).

Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation.

Nine Mile Point Railway.

North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply.

Nottingham Corporation.

Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation.

Oldham and Saddleworth District Tramways.

Orphan Working School and Alexandra Orphanage.

Preston Corporation (Ribble Navigation).

Rhymney Railway.

Sandgate Urban District Council.

Sheffield University.

Shepton Mallet Gas Company (Electric Lighting).

South Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways.

Southend and Colchester Light Railways.

South Lancashire Tramways.

Southport, Birkdale, and West Lancashire Water Board.

Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation).

Tees Valley Water Board.

Torpoint Urban District Water.

Tralee Urban District Council.

Truro Water.

Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.

University College, London (Transfer).

Weaver Navigation.

Wellingborough and District Tramroads and Electricity Supply.

West Cumberland Electric Tramways (Extension of Time).

Western Valleys (Monmouthshire) Water and Gas.

West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers.

Whitby Urban District Council.

Workington Harbour and Dock.

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES CONGESTED DISTRICT AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.

Petition from Wester Ross, for continuance; to lie upon the Table.

MACRAE, JOHN JACOB ANDREW.

Petition of John Jacob Andrew MacRae, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table.

REDDI, ARJANA.

Petition of Arjana Reddi, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table.

SUGAR TAX,

Petitions for repeal; from Blackburn; Glasgow (two); Halifax (two); London; and Peterborough; to lie upon the Table.

VARATHANUNTHAJEE, VIJAGA, SAHIB.

Petition of Vijaga Varathanunthajee, Sahib, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

PATENTS, DESIGNS, AND TRADE MARKS ACTS, 1883 TO 1902.

Copy presented, of the Patent Rules, 1905, dated 20th October, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.

Copy presented, of Report on the state of the Finances of the University, made by the University Court, for the year 1903–4 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 17.]

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.

Copy presented, of Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Edinburgh for the year 1903–4 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 18.]

UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW.

Copy presented, of Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Glasgow for 1903–4 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 19.]

PRISONS (SCOTLAND).

Copy presented, of Regulations, dated 20th August, 1904, made by the Secretary for Scotland for the Measuring and Photographing of Prisoners [by Act]; to lie upon the Table

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS ACT, 1896, AND MOTOR CAR ACT, 1903.

Copy presented, of the Heavy Motor Car (Scotland) Order, 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL AND TRAVERS' FOUNDATION.

Accounts presented, for the year ended 31st March, 1904, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 20.]

DISEASES OF ANIMALS ACTS, 1894 TO 1903.

Copy presented, of an Order, entitled, The Hull (Channel Islands Animals) Landing Place Revocation Order of 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Loan Societies.—Abstract of Accounts for Loan Societies in England and Wales to 31st December, 1903, furnished to the Central Office for the Registry of Friendly Societies [by Act].

Intermediate Education (Ireland).—Accounts of Receipts and Expenditure for 1903, with Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 21.]

Royal University of Ireland.—Copy of Account of Receipts and Expenditure of the Royal University of Ireland for the year ended 31st March, 1904, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 22.]

PARLIAMENTARY CONSTITUENCIES (ELECTORS, ETC.) (UNITED KINGDOM).

Address for "Return showing, with regard to each Parliamentary Constituency in the United Kingdom, the total number and, as far as possible, the number in each class of Electors on the register now in force; and also showing the Population and Inhabited Houses in each Constituency (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 69, of Session 1904)."—(Sir Charles Dilke.)

SANITARY INSPECTORS AND INSPECTORS OF WORKSHOPS.

Return ordered, "showing what local authorities in the year 1904 had appointed (1) in London (a) female Sanitary Inspectors, distinguishing those whose duties consist entirely or principally of duties under the Factory and Workshops Act, and (b) male Sanitary Inspectors whose duties are solely duties under that Act; and (2) in the rest of England and Wales (a) female Inspectors and Assistant Inspectors of Nuisances, and (b) male and female Inspectors of Workshops who are not also Inspectors of Nuisances; the number and salaries of the officers appointed to be shown in each case."—(Sir Charles Dilke.)

BREWERS' LICENCES.

Return ordered, "of Accounts of the number of persons in each of the several Collections of the United Kingdom licensed as Brewers for sale, i.e., Common Brewers, Victuallers, Retailers of beer to be drunk on the premises, Retailers of beer not to be drunk on the premises, and Brewers of beer not for sale, particularising each class in each Collection; and of the number of Licences issued to Victuallers and Retailers of beer to be drunk on the premises and not to be drunk on the premises; and stating also the quantities of malt, unmalted corn, rice, etc., sugar, including its equivalent of syrups, etc., hops and hop substitutes, used by Brewers of beer for sale, and of malt and sugar used by Brewers not for sale, from the 1st day of October, 1903, to the 30th day of September, 1904."

"Of the amount of Licence Duty paid and Beer Duty charged from the 1st day of October, 1903, to the 30th day of September, 1904, distinguishing Brewers for sale from other Brewers."

"Of the number of Brewers for sale (i.) who use malt and hops, or hop substitutes only, and (ii.) who use malt with substitutes for same and hops or hop substitutes paying for Licences, from the 1st day of October, 1903, to the 30th day of September, 1904, separating them into classes, according to the number of barrels of beer charged with duty calculated at 1·055 degrees gravity, viz.: under 1,000 barrels; 1,000 and under 10,000; 10,000 and under 20,000 20,000 and under 30,000; 30,000 ar under 50,000; 50,000 and under 100,0(100,000 and under 150,000; 150, and under 200,000; 200,000 and under 250,000; 250,000 and under 300,000; 300,000 and under 350,000; 350,000 and under 400,000; 400,000 and under 450,000; 450,000 and under 500,000; 500,000 and under 600,000; 600,000 and under 700,000; 700,000 and under 800,000; 800,000 and under 900,000; 900,000 and under 1,000,000; 1,000,000 and under 1,500,000; 1,500,000 and under 2,000,000; 2,000,000 barrels and over; showing separately, in each class, the quantities of malt, unmalted corn, rice, etc., sugar, including its equivalent of syrups, etc., hops and hop substitutes used; and stating also the number of bulk barrels of beer produced, and the amount of Licence Duty paid and Beer Duty charged in each class."

"And, of the number of barrels of beer exported from the United Kingdom, and the declared value thereof, and where exported to, from the 1st day of October, 1903, to the 30th day of September, 1904, distinguishing England, Scotland, and Ireland (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 37, of Session 1904)."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish).

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND).

Copy ordered, "of Account of the Receipts and Payments of the Accountant-General of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland, in respect of the Funds of Suitors in the said Court, including therein Funds to the credit of Lunacy Accounts, in the year to the 30th day of September, 1904; together with a Statement of Liabilities and Assets, and Particulars of Securities in Court, on the 30th day of September, 1904."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.)

NATIONAL GALLERY (REPORT).

Copy ordered, "of the Report of the Director of the National Gallery for the year 1904, with Appendices." — (Mr. Victor Cavendish.)

CIVIL CONTINGENCIES FUND, 1903–4.

Copy ordered, "of Accounts of the Civil Contingencies Fund, 1903–4, showing (1) the receipts and payments in connection with the fund in the year ended the 31st day of March, 1904; (2) the distribution of the capital of the fund at the commencement and close of the year; together with Copy of the Correspondence with the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon."—(Mr. Victor Cavendish.)

TRADE AND NAVIGATION.

Copy ordered, "of Accounts relating to Trade and Navigation of the United Kingdom for each month during the year 1905."—(Mr. Gerald Balfour.)

ALIEN IMMIGRATION FROM THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE.

Return ordered, "of the number of Aliens that arrived from the Continent at Ports in the United Kingdom in each month of the year 1905."—(Mr. Gerald Balfour.)

POST OFFICE TELEGRAPHS.

Copy ordered, "of Account showing the gross amount received and the gross amount expended in respect of the Telegraph Service from the date of the transfer of the telegraphs to the State to the 31st day of March, 1904 (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 49, of Session 1904)."—(Lord Stanley.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

The Unfunded Debt.

MR. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, what is the total amount of the Unfunded Debt, and what are the separate amounts in Exchequer Bonds under The Capital Expenditure Act, 1904, and under other Acts, in Treasury Bills, and in other securities.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) The total amount of the Unfunded Debt at the present moment is £81,633,000. It is made up as follows:—Exchequer Bonds, Issued under The Capital Expenditure Money Act, 1904, £6,000,000; and raised for the War, £20,500,000; Treasury Bills, Including £13,000,000 raised for the War, £21,133,000; and of the Bills issued to meet deficiency of Revenue, which have to be repaid before 31st March, 1905, there are still outstanding, £4,000,000; War Loan, which has to be redeemed in 1910, £30,000,000; Total £81,633,000.

Land Purchase in the West of Ireland.

MR. JAMES O'KELLY (Roscommon, N.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether, in view of the failure of the Land Purchase Act to effect the re-settlement of the people on the grass lands in the West of Ireland, he will bring in a Bill to confer on the Congested Districts Board and the Estates Commissioners compulsory powers of purchase.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) It is premature to allege that the Act, which has been little more than a year in operation, has failed to effect the occupation of untenanted lands in the West of Ireland. The last published Report of the Congested Districts Board shows that satisfactory progress had been made during the year ended 31st March, 1904, in the acquisition of lands in scheduled districts with a view to the provision of new holdings and the improvement and enlargement of existing holdings. I have no doubt that this satisfactory rate of progress will be accelerated in future years. The reply to the second part of the Question is in the negative.

Case of de Tiége.

MR. EMMOTT (Oldham): To ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether His Majesty's Government have received a Copy of the judgment of the Appeal Court at Boma in the case of de Tiége; and, if so, whether they will communicate it to the House.

(Answered by Earl Percy.) It appears, on inquiry, that Monsieur de Tiége is not a British subject, and His Majesty's Government have therefore no right to prosecute special inquiries into the case.

BALLOT FOR BILLS AND MOTIONS.

Ordered, "That no Bills, other than Government Bills, be introduced in anticipation of the ballot, and that all Members who desire to ballot, whether for Bills, or for Motions, for Tuesday, 21st February, and Tuesday, 28th February and Wednesday, 22nd February, and Wednesday, 1st March, do hand in their names at the Table during the sitting of the House on the first and second day of the session, and that a copy of such Notices be handed in, at the latest, during the sitting of the House on the third day of the session.

"That the ballot for the precedence of the said Bills and Motions be taken on the third day on which the House sits at a convenient time and place, to be appointed by Mr. Speaker, and that the presentation of Bills on the fourth sitting day to be taken as soon after Twelve o'clock as Mr. Speaker may deem convenient."—(Mr. A. J. Balfour.)

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

*MR. ASQUITH (Fifeshire, E.): I propose to conclude my speech by proposing the following Amendment which stands in my name on the Paper—

> "And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that, the various aspects of the fiscal question having now been fnlly discussed in the country for nearly two years, the time has come for submitting the issue to the people without further delay,"

Before I proceed to say anything about the Amendment I should like to offer one or two comments on some passages in the remarkable speech which was delivered by the Prime Minister last night. I regret I do not see the right hon. Gentleman in his place. The Prime Minister appeared to be very much shocked at two things—in the first place at the suggestion that there is anything anomalous, not to say improper, in the constitutional situation, and next at the introduction into the debate upon the Address of so irrelevant a topic as the fiscal question. The right hon. Gentleman, unlike other people, sees nothing in the history or in the present condition of the House of Commons, elected in the year 1900, but the effects of the ordinary leakage which in the course of time always tends to diminish a great majority. And as to the fiscal question, why, to judge from his speech, or speeches rather, the fiscal question has no meaning or, indeed, no existence for him, except as a probable subject of discussion in the next Parliament, and a possible matter for decision in the next Parliament but one. I must say, so far as I can form a judgment, there is no man in the Empire who has less excuse for making either of those assumptions than the Prime Minister himself. For let us remember that when this House was elected in 1900 Lord Salisbury was the Prime Minister. Where is the Ministry and where is the Party that Lord Salisbury left to his successor? The one, the Ministry, has disappeared. Nothing would have surprised the country more in the year 1900 than if they had been told that they were voting for installing on the Treasury Bench the Gentlemen who at present occupy it. The Ministry has disappeared, and you have to look and search about for most, at any rate, of its more distinguished and experienced members in all sorts of unexpected quarters—below the Gangway, not always sitting together, of this House and of another place. The Party! What has become of the Party? [UNIONIST MEMBERS: "Here we are," and "Where is your own Party?"] We are able to render a fair account of ourselves. What has become of the Party there? The Party there, as every man I am addressing knows, is split and sundered beyond the salving power of any formula. ["No, no!"] But I should like to ask the Prime Minister, if he were here—[Loud Liberal cheers, during which Mr. A. J. BALFOUR arrived]—I will ask the Prime Minister, now that he is here, what in his view is the disruptive force which has shattered both his Government and his Party? As every one of them but the Prime Minister knows, it is this very fiscal question—a question as undreamt of in 1900 as the constitution of the present Ministry—undreamt of, I mean, by any rational being as a living issue in British politics—which has proved its disruptive power. That is the question which the Prime Minister affects to regard as of the most microscopic interest.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): Oh, no! It is very interesting.

*MR. ASQUITH: Ah! as a speculative and academic topic; but for the practical purposes of present day politics, the right hon. Gentleman affects to regard it as of the most microscopic interest and most remote relevance. It is in the same spirit of illusion, I will not say of make-believe, that the right hon. Gentleman dealt last night with the rather delicate topic of the by-elections. He admits they have gone wrong, but he sees nothing in them that is abnormal or even of any special significance. What are the facts? The facts are that since the election of 1900 there have been fifty-three seats in Great Britain in which the electors have had the opportunity of either affirming or reversing the opinion they expressed at the general election. In 1900, of those fifty-three seats, fifteen were Liberal and thirty-eight Conservative and Unionist. At the present day, of those fifty-three seats, thirty are Liberal and twenty-three Conservative. And that means—because really the figures of the voting are much more remarkable—that there have been summoned into the electoral field and on the side of the Liberal Party at the by-elections, as compared with the general election, an accession of no less than 70,000 votes, or between 35 and 40 per cent. of the whole votes polled. In the last fourteen months there has been a gain of nine seats. I agree that even the Prime Minister does not go as far as the Secretary of State for War, who attributed this series of mishaps to the exceptional predominance in these particular constituencies of the "enemies of England." I should prefer to describe these so-called "enemies of England"—and history will describe them as such—as the enemies of political equivocation.

These "enemies of England," as the right hon. Gentleman will find, are pretty impartially distributed among the constituencies of the country, and, unless all the omens are deceptive, are likely to continue to show their enmity whenever they have an opportunity of doing so. The Prime Minister is preserved by a sense of humour, and by a regard for the amenities of political controversy, from resting his case upon any such hypothesis as that. The right hon. Gentleman says that this has always happened, especially under Radical Governments, and they have never paid any attention to a long series of electoral disasters as a ground for a dissolution; and by way of maintaining that proposition the right hon. Gentlemen rather unhappily took the period between 1868 and 1874. He said quite accurately that there was a net loss to Mr. Gladstone's Government of twenty-four seats, but he did not point out that of the twenty-four seats so lost nine were lost in the final year of that Administration—between March, 1873, when Mr. Gladstone resigned, and the Tory Party were either unwilling or unable to take his place, and February, 1874, when he finally dissolved. The right hon. Gentleman, when he said that Mr. Gladstone did not look upon these by-elections as an important factor in coming to a judgment as to the expediency and propriety of a dissolution, made a statement which I noticed at the time was received with the greatest surprise by Mr. Gladstone's biographer. With the assistance of my right hon. friend I have refreshed my own memory, and I find that the right hon. Gentleman's statement is not consistent with fact and history. What happened was this. The letter will be found in the second volume of Mr. Gladstone's "Life," page 485. In his letter to the Queen announcing the intention of the Cabinet to dissolve Parliament in February, 1874, he placed in the very forefront of the grounds which had moved them in doing so this expression—

> "Mr. Gladstone laid before the Cabinet a pretty full outline of the case as to the weakness of the Government since the crisis of last March, and the increase of that weakness, especially of late, from the unfavourable character of the local indications."

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I suppose that the right hon. Gentleman by "local indications" means by-elections?

*MR. ASQUITH: Mr. Gladstone did.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Mr. Gladstone did use the word "by-elections" specifically in the letter to Lord Granville, which dealt with the constitutional point. The reference quoted by the right hon. Gentleman does not deal with the constitutional point.

*MR. ASQUITH: I am citing the grounds which Mr. Gladstone gave to the Queen. At any rate, here is Her Majesty's responsible First Minister on behalf of his Government advising her to dissolve Parliament; and the first ground which he suggests is the unfavourable character of these "local indications." It accounted for the growing weakness of the Government since its defeat, and this is the first ground that he alleges. So that, whatever may be said in defence of the Prime Minister's constitutional position, at any rate let us have the authority of Mr. Gladstone as he himself defined it.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I must contradict the right hon. Gentleman. I must say specifically that Mr. Gladstone laid it down that it was not a reason, and that it would be an evil precedent to make it a reason when the Government lost by-elections. That is my statement, and it is a true one.

*MR. ASQUITH: I do not think it possible to have a document of higher authority than the statement made by the First Minister to his Sovereign as to the grounds on which he advised her to take such a serious step as dissolving Parliament.

MR. CHAPLIN (Lincolnshire, Sleaford): Have you a record of it?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Mr. Gladstone made two statements.

*MR. ASQUITH: It is the letter to the Queen which is published in Mr. Gladstone's biography.

MR. CHAPLIN: By whom?

*MR. ASQUITH: I do not know what the right hon. Gentleman means by that. We have the authority of his own account; there is the document in extenso, and the right hon. Gentleman can read it if he likes. There is a third thing which apparently the Prime Minister resents more than the two suggestions I have hitherto dealt with. That is the notion that there can be in the mind of any reasonable and intelligent man a doubt, a shadow of a doubt, as to the exact meaning and scope of his own fiscal policy. The right hon. Gentleman regards it as an outrage on common sense that there should be any doubt, but all the same such doubts do exist. They are entertained bona fide; they are not felt merely by the malevolent or the stupid; they prevail in his own Party as much as in the Party of his opponents. I should have thought that this matter was worthy of more investigation. My right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition last night quoted the statement of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham, in a letter to a correspondent, that there was "in principle" no difference between the Prime Minister and himself. The Prime Minister in his speech made no reference to that. That surely is a very plain question. Do you or do you not agree with the right hon. Member for West Birmingham that in point of principle there is no distinction between your position and his? [OPPOSITION cries of "Answer."] I say that this is a plain question which does admit of a monosyllabic answer. Let the House remember that there is no sort of doubt what is the principle of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham's policy. I am going to state it in terms to which I believe he will himself assent, for I may say that I have been a careful, even a laborious, student of his speeches. The policy of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham, as I understand it, is in principle made up of two heads. In the first place, the abandonment, in the interest of British trade, of the antiquated system of so-called free trade, which he has told his audiences over and over again that we alone persist in pursuing in defiance of common sense and the common practice of the rest of civilised mankind. In the second place, the creation, in the interests of Imperial unity and strength, of a preferential system based on the taxation of foreign corn and flour. I do not think that the right hon. Gentleman will differ from me.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN (Birmingham, W.); If the right hon. Gentleman appeals to me, I beg to say that I neither accept nor deny.

*MR. ASQUITH: I must be content with that answer, but I regret to see that the malaria of ambiguity, one of the most contagious poisons in the political atmosphere, is beginning to cross beyond the Gangway and to attack those who at any rate hitherto have been completely free from its maleficent influence. I will take, however, the right hon. Gentleman's answer; he does not deny. If he wants chapter and verse, I would refer him to the speech which he made at Limehouse in December last. He said there, "I am going to submit to the country two issues"—and they are precisely the two issues I have just described. I do not make that quotation with a view of suggesting that the right hon. Gentleman was guilty of anything in the nature of arrogance in using the first person singular, and in regarding himself as the arbiter of the situation. On the contrary, I think that he showed true political instinct, for it is better to have plain language. It is the issue raised by the right hon. Gentleman, and no other, that the country will regard when the election comes to be held. But I want to know from the Prime Minister, does he or does he not agree in principle with these two propositions? If I may slightly expand them I would ask, does he, as he has more than once suggested, think that it is only stupid and antiquated prejudice which historical associations and sentimental follies have engendered in the mind of the people of this country that prevents them from accepting a change in their fiscal system which involves the taxation of food? Does he or does he not sympathise with the efforts which the "missionary of Empire" is making to dispel the clouds and cobwebs which at present prevent our people from looking for fiscal salvation in that particular direction? They are very plain questions, and not difficult to answer.

But the matter does not rest there. I said something about the condition of the Party opposite. It is quite true, I admit, that it is no longer embarrassed by those difficulties of nomenclature and classification with which it had to contend last year. The fence, of which we have all heard, which was then crowded with dubious and balancing figures, is now altogether vacant. A considerable number of them, including some of the most respected names in this House, unable to face the choice that lay before them, have resolved to commit political suicide, and no longer are appealing to their constituents to return them. Another large and important section have become out-and-out followers of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. Whether they call themselves protectionists or not, they are in favour of preference sans phrase. But as to the rest—those whom I may call the pure Balfourians with or without Chamberlainite hankerings—we know very well the formula of the pure Balfourian:—"I am in favour of the clear and statesmanlike policy which has been indicated by the Prime Minister, and for the moment at any rate I take my stand upon that. But at the same time, do not let it be supposed that I do not regard with cordial, and even with ardent, sympathy the patriotic efforts which the right hon. Member for West Birmingham is making to introduce a still more extended change in our fiscal system." That, put in more elegant language, will in substance be the staple of the election addresses of a considerable number of hon. Gentlemen opposite. What is the pure Balfourian? He is a man who, having tried for a year to live up to the Sheffield programme, now finds an exhaustive statement of his fiscal creed in that lucid and comprehensive sheet of notepaper which was exhibited at Manchester. I want to imagine one of those Gentlemen at the approaching election appealing to the electors for their confidence. What is he going to say? Of course, he will begin with the conventional little prologue about retaliation—about the importance and the supposed necessity, never discovered until the right hon. Member for West Birmingham proposed to tax food—[Cries of "No."] well, it may have been discovered as a matter of scientific interest, but it was never advocated as a practical policy in this House—he will begin with the importance or necessity of what is absurdly called "recovering our fiscal freedom." That particular topic will not last him long, for the simple and sufficient reason that, apart from the sugar duty, no human being has yet been able to suggest when, where, and how, in respect of what commodity, or against what country, this doctrine of retaliation is to be given practical effect. There are two or three elementary questions in regard to it, which I put a year ago in this House, and which no one has yet attempted to answer. Are you going to create a general tariff which is to be applicable at the will of the Executive of the day? Or are you to have two tariffs, as so many protective countries have, or are you, as is much more probable, to remain exactly as you are? In other words, are you to remain with the power which we have never surrendered, and never shall surrender, of dealing as we please and in regard to the merits of each particular case, and with each foreign country, subject to the control and consent of the House of Commons? I do not believe the true Balfourian would pass a satisfactory examination in those questions; and I think he will soon leave the unpromising topic of retaliation, and draw out the only other arrow in his quiver, and that is the colonial conference.

The Prime Minister went through the whole of his speech last night without a single reference, direct or indirect, to the colonial conference—a really remarkable achievement even for so accomplished a master of the art of opportune taciturnity. What are the pure Balfourians going to say about the colonial conference? And here I should like to put some plain questions to them, and to the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. Are our representatives to go into this conference, as far as the fiscal question is concerned, with blank instructions? Are they to raise the fiscal question on their own responsibility, or are they to wait until it is raised by some one else? Are they to be authorised to make any proposal, and, if so, what, on behalf of the Imperial Government? Are they to have authority to entertain in principle any proposal made by any one else which involves the taxation of the food which comes to us from abroad? And, above all, is the next Parliament, assuming a conference to be held, and the fiscal question to be discussed at it, and assuming some provisional scheme to be arrived at—is the next Parliament to be disabled from acting on any conclusions which the conference may come to? Is it to have its first and only practical result, at the earliest, after another general election here, and after a series of elections throughout the length and breadth of the Empire? I know that the Prime Minister would answer the last question in the affirmative. He has said so more than once. But what is the opinion of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham? I read his speech at Luton, in which he stated with unanwerable cogency and force the practical objections to this preposterous proposal. He pointed out that it would involve interminable delay; that the whole trade of the country and of the Empire would be hung up in suspense for years and years until the final settlement was attained; that in the meantime other issues might and probably would arise; and that, whether you regarded the maintenance of the existing system or the introduction of a new one as the first interest of the Empire, this scheme of a general election referendum was absolutely impossible. I should like to know whether the right hon. Gentleman has modified or withdrawn any of those objections. In his speech at Gainsborough after the Prime Minister had reiterated his original position, the right hon. Member for West Birmingham did not renew his objections; but he used a remarkable phrase. He said—

> "You are asked to meet your own friends and relations and see whether, both having the same object—namely, to unite the Empire more closely together—you can find some means of doing so on the basis of a preferential policy."

Thus, the conference, as it is contemplated by the right hon. Member for West Birmingham, is to proceed on the basis of preferential policy. One would like to know from the Government whether in their view, if they are responsible for the conduct of the conference, the representatives of Great Britain will be authorised to treat on the basis of preferential policy. The issue is, What instructions are our delegates to receive? This leads up to the conclusion to which I ask the House to come—namely, that this intolerable confusion, menacing and perilous as it is to our industry and Empire, can only be cleared up in one way, and that is by a prompt and direct appeal to the people. That brings me to my Amendment, which is very short and in these terms—

> "And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that, the various aspects of the fiscal question having now been fully discussed in the country for nearly two years, the time has come for submitting the issue to the people without further delay."

In moving that Amendment I believe that I am in the happy and perhaps unique position of making a proposition which, if it could be discussed and decided on its merits, would receive in this House a practically unanimous vote of assent. The right hon. Gentleman last night imagined a secret ballot being taken. Suppose we had a ballot on this Amendment now. I should count with great confidence on the vote of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. I should even be sanguine of obtaining the vote of the Prime Minister himself; because I do not really believe that in their heart of hearts and mind of minds either of those right hon. Gentlemen contemplates the prolongation of the existing state of things without apprehension and alarm. Is there any candid disputant who will deny the modest statement of fact that this matter has been very fully discussed, not, I admit, in this House, but in the country during the last two years? When I say that, I do not for a moment imply that argument is exhausted or the evidence closed, or that the last word has been said. Nothing has been more remarkable in the course of this two years controversy than the additional strength which has been given to our case, day by day and month by month, by our industrial experience. From the very beginning many of us thought that this so-called movement of tariff reform was vitiated by bad history, bad logic, and bad arithmetic; as it has gone on it has been further condemned by bad prophecy. Almost every one of the predictions which were made, and confidently made, when the campaign was started have been falsified by the actual experience of the two years that have since elapsed. But it will not be denied either, I am sure, that the controversy is not in any sense academic, not in any sense even of that much-abused term; for let us remember that these changes were put forward by the authors of them, and by no one with more emphasis, and, indeed, vehemence of language than by the right hon. Member for West Birmingham, as of vital importance and imperious urgency. The right hon. Gentleman has hardly made a speech without uttering a note of warning as to the evil consequences which must happen to us if we do not adopt this new departure; and even the Prime Minister, when he was putting forward the comparatively nebulous formula of the Sheffield programme, even he announced —and that was nearly two years ago— that he was in favour of a fundamental reversal of our fiscal tradition. Well, now, Sir, one set of tariff reformers say that the existing state of things is sapping slowly, but surely, the very foundations both of our trade and our Empire; the other set, the Prime Minister and his particular followers, say that it leaves us defenceless, like an army without quick-firing guns in the presence of our better-equipped rivals and enemies on the battlefields of international trade. On their own showing, then, both wings of the party of so-called fiscal reform are in this dilemma — either a great part of what they have been talking on the platforms during the last two years is idle and insincere rhetoric, or they are deliberately prolonging a situation which is full of the gravest dangers both to our commerce and our Empire. And yet, Sir, I know very well—at least, I suspect very strongly — that there is no Amendment which will be moved to this Address which is likely to bring together in the division lobby to oppose it a larger number of the Party opposite. That is one of the ironies of the position. Dr. Johnson said of a celebrated criminal of his day, who spent his time in literary activity between sentence and execution—

> "Depend upon it, Sir, when a man is going to be hanged in a fortnight it concentrates his mind wonderfully."

In the same way experience shows that there is no expedient which is more effective for concentrating a majority, particularly a disintegrating majority, than anything which brings nearer to their doors the shadow of a dissolution. Therefore, I am not surprised, or I shall not be surprised, if hon. Gentlemen turn out in great strength in the division lobby. Yes, because when the accused is able to dominate the tribunal he naturally gives himself the benefit of the doubt. But, Sir, whatever the division may be, there is no man in this House, whether he believes in a fiscal change or whether he does not, there is no man in this House who does not know that the uncertainty and the unsettlement which now prevail are in the highest degree prejudicial to the best interests of the British Empire. The idea that this controversy can be allowed to go simmering on from general election to general election, both here and throughout the Empire, is an idea which I venture to submit to the House is preposterous in theory and unworkable in practice. The people recognise that, whatever may be the formula that politicians devise, the real issue for them is between preference and no preference, between drawing freely for their supplies upon all sources or only upon some, between the taxation and the free admission of corn and flour and meat. They know the facts; they have listened to the arguments; vast interests, industrial and Imperial, are involved in and wait upon their decision. Let them decide.

Amendment proposed—

> "At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that, the various aspects of the fiscal question having now been fully discussed in the country for nearly two years, the time has come for submitting the issue to the people without further delay.' "—(Mr. Asquith.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN, Worcestershire, E.): None of us on this side of the House complain that the right hon. Gentleman has chosen the earliest moment open to him to bring before the House the Amendment, the advent of which has been so loudly proclaimed. The right hon. Gentleman has brought before the House a clear question of confidence in my right hon. friend the Prime Minister and in the Government which now exists, and we are as ready and anxious as he to have the verdict of the House on that question. [OPPOSITION cries of "The Country."] He inquires of my right hon. friend what has become of the Party to the leadership of which he succeeded. That, Sir, is what the division on this Amendment will show. We shall see then whether there is any foundation for the taunts which the right hon. Gentleman has hurled across the House, or whether the disunion which has become chronic, so chronic that it no longer excites attention, on the benches opposite has spread like the malarial affection to which he referred to this side of the House. I confess that I think not less extraordinary than the speech in which the right hon. Gentleman has supported his Amendment were the terms of the Amendment itself. The Amendment is, as he said, a brief Amendment. It declares that the fiscal controversy having now been fully discussed for two years, an immediate appeal to the country upon that issue is desirable. Yet from beginning to end, whenever he touched on the fiscal question, the right hon. Gentleman complained that he was still without light, without understanding, without knowledge as to what were the issues involved or the proposals which we submit. The right hon. Gentleman in his opening remarks referred to the answer which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister made last night to a demand for an immediate dissolution based upon the figures of our electoral returns. The right hon. Gentleman thought he had disposed of the quotation which my right hon. friend made from Mr. Gladstone's letter to Lord Granville by producing another quotation from Mr. Gladstone in a letter to the Queen, which on a cursory and careless perusal may appear inconsistent with it. It is not my business to reconcile Mr. Gladstone's seeming inconsistency. That he would have shown that his later letter to the Queen was not inconsistent with his letter to Lord Granville no one can be more confident than I. But I am content to recall the actual words of his letter to Lord Granville in which he dealt with this demand as a constitutional problem. He said—

> "A Ministry with a majority, and that majority not in rebellion—"

[Cheers.] I expected those cheers. I invite my hon. friends to take note of them. Is the Party in rebellion? The division lobbies will show. This at any rate we do know. We have received from our hon. friends on this side of the House a constant and loyal support which has enabled us to do the work which we were sent here to do, and to place on record, both in our relations with foreign Powers and in the legislative sphere, great and far-reaching measures which, in our opinion at any rate, are of the utmost consequence to the future of the country. But I will return to the quotation from Mr. Gladstone—

> "A Ministry with a majority, and that majority not in rebellion, could not resign on account of adverse manifestations, even of very numerous constituencies, without making a precedent, and constitutionally a bad precedent."

I think that is conclusive as to Mr. Gladstone's views on the subject, and if he attached more importance to elections after he had been defeated in this House, well, we will not wait for any further test. If you withdraw your confidence from us we will resign the duties with which we are at present charged. The right hon. Gentleman is now clamorous for a dissolution upon the fiscal question. I contrast his attitude with that, I think, of himself, and certainly of his friends, when this question was first brought before us in its present form for our consideration. Lord Rosebery—I quote with hesitation any Leader of the Party opposite for fear that what is the manifesto of to-day should be disavowed by the Chief Whip to-morrow—but I presume I may still class Lord Rosebery among the Liberal leaders. [AN HON. MEMBER: Hear, hear!] Faint assent from a recent adherent of the Party, who, perhaps, will pardon me for saying that he is not yet competent to speak in their name, but a nod from the right hon. Gentleman who preceded me may encourage me to proceed. What was Lord Rosebery's first observation on this question? He did not say that the question was so urgent that you must have recourse to the country at once, but his one absorbing fear was lest the country should be rushed into a premature decision.

MR. BAYLEY (Derbyshire, Chesterfield): What was the date of that.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: That was on November 9th, 1903. Hon. Gentlemen opposite are now agreed that it would have been wrong to bring this question to an immediate issue in November, 1903; but such a change, it is contended, has now taken place that a moment's delay is ruinous to the country. I confess this exact apportionment of the time necessary to the consideration of a great question does not seem to me capable of the scientific precision which the right hon. Gentleman arrogates to his calculations. I suspect that if we lived in the Palace of Truth we should find the change in his view to be due not to any regard to the merits of the question itself, but to some calculation which he has drawn from recent electoral successes which leads him to think, on general grounds, that the present is a desirable time for a general election. What constitutional justification is there in practice or precedent for this new theory that when some great question is being discussed in the country an immediate appeal to the electorate is necessary? Take this very question of fiscal reform. Was that course pursued when the great revolutionary change from which our present fiscal condition dates was enacted? No, Sir; the Parliament which carried out those fiscal changes met with no conception whatever that it would be called upon to perform any such task. The country was not consulted on this issue until after the change had been made. I do not criticise the action of Sir Robert Peel. I do not desire to say whether in the circumstances of his time he acted rightly or wrongly; history has not dealt altogether kindly with him in that respect, but, at any rate, in the circumstances of to-day, my right hon. friend has chosen the more liberal course, the more democratic course, of saying that the Government will propose no change until an appeal has been made to the country, and the country itself has given him authority to deal with the question. When did the right hon. Gentleman develop the doctrine that when a question has been sufficiently discussed you must take the immediate decision of the country on the subject? I will tell the House he has developed it in opposition; he would have repudiated it with scorn when he was in power—or, rather, I should say, when he sat upon this side of the House. There is power and power; and, weak and discredited as the Opposition are pleased to say the present Government is, there has not been a day of its existence when it has not had greater confidence in this House, a freer power and a greater influence on legislation and administration than the last Liberal Administration could arrogate to itself at any point in its career. The right hon. Gentleman had not discovered the sanctity of this doctrine when he was a member of the last Administration. Home Rule was discussed, some of us thought sufficiently, and the right hon. Gentleman and his colleagues thought more than sufficiently; but, when the Home Rule Bill was rejected in another place, did the right hon. Gentleman appeal to the country on that issue? No, Sir; there was nothing from which the Liberal Government would have shrunk more; and they were right, because when an appeal was made it was shown that they had not the confidence of the country on this subject.

I invite the attention of the House to the terms of the Resolution. It is one calling on the Government to appeal to the electors on the policy they intend to pursue in the future. I should have thought that in the circumstances it would have been more in accordance with precedent and constitutional usage that in the Resolution to which the House is asked to commit itself some indication should have been given of the policy which our successors would pursue. If the subject has been sufficiently discussed, why should not the Opposition tell us clearly in the Resolution itself what are the principles to which they adhere, and what is the mandate they seek from the electors? We are driven to investigate their speeches to get some glimpse of what their policy would be. In his speech to-night the right hon. Gentleman confined himself to pure negation, and made not one single constructive proposal, not one single suggestion, for dealing with any of the admitted evils of our present social or industrial state. But we are not left wholly in ignorance of his views, because the right hon. Gentleman has made many speeches. What is the mandate for which he asks? To stimulate bounty-fed competition with our own industries, to maintain our present system of free importation without free exchange. According to their own constitutional maxims, that is the only subject with which the Opposition would be entitled to deal if, as the result of the adoption of this Amendment, they came into power.

The right hon. Gentleman says we are to make an appeal at this moment, because the present state of uncertainty is disastrous to trade and industry. But almost in the same sentence he boasted to the House that we never had had two such magnificent years of trade as the last two years, and that the Board of Trade Returns were sufficient to dispose of the whole case for fiscal reform. The right hon. Gentleman has no positive proposals to make for admitted evils. What is his answer to the statement that we have 13,000,000 of people on the verge of starvation? He says you must have more education and drink less. Manufacturers are to be told, if they find increasing competition in all their markets, that the reason they do not do so well as before is that they are lacking in enterprise, education, and adaptability. Where, according to the right hon. Gentleman, are manufacturers in such circumstances to go to learn their business? To Germany, a country where a high protective tariff has, we are told, killed all incentive, energy, and enterprise. The reason why the American or German manufacturer is more ready to adapt himself to circumstances, to sacrifice capital invested in machinery that is no longer the best, to embark new capital and run new risks, is because he has some security that he will enjoy the fruits of his labour, and will not be subjected to competition which is artificially produced and artificially stimulated. I am not afraid for the future of our industry if we have fair terms and no favour. But we have not got them, and under our present fiscal system we are making no advance towards obtaining them.

The policy of the right hon. Gentleman and his friends may be summed up in much less than the proverbial half-sheet of notepaper. It is, "Do nothing, change nothing, shut your eyes to all that is passing around you. Neglect the signs of the times; do not attempt to forecast the future, but cling [OPPOSITION cries of "To office"] with all your faith and all your strength to the wisdom of your ancestors and the tradition of sixty years ago." His Majesty's Government are not prepared to adopt that attitude in face of the problems with which we are confronted. We are not content to sit still and make no effort to remedy a state of things which no candid man can view without some anxiety, and to leave, without any attempt at redress or remedy, evils which every man is forced to admit. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister has asked on his own behalf and on behalf of his Government for greater liberty in dealing with fiscal questions. He has asked that we should cut ourselves adrift from the growth which has crystallised around our present fiscal system, and that we should resume to ourselves the liberty which, as the right hon. Gentleman said, we have perhaps never constitutionally lost, but which requires nothing less than a revolution in our fiscal system to use effectually. We ask for greater liberty in respect of the taxes which are imposed to meet the expenditure of the State, and to render effective negotiations which may be undertaken with foreign Powers in regard to our commercial relations with them. The right hon. Gentleman professes his inability to understand how we could use such a power if we got it, and he administered an interrogatory of several questions as to the exact methods and means which might be adopted of putting it into operation. I do not propose to respond to that interrogatory. I think that a man who, on going into negotiations with foreign Powers, lays down beforehand exactly what he will do and what he will not do, and who pledges himself not to consider this means or that, but only to move in one particular path, has done his best to render his negotiations abortive before they are begun, and to render improbable the attainment of the very object for which he has set out.

I will say in a word what appears to me is the only reasonable position for any Government to take up on this question. We desire to have full liberty to make the representations which are demanded by our trade, to enforce those representations by effective measures of fiscal change, if persuasion and argument prove ineffective, and to employ whatever methods are needed in order to carry that policy to a successful issue. The right hon. Gentleman says that this need for a power of retaliation against those who treat our commerce unfairly is a new discovery, invented by my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham in the course of the last few years.

MR. ASQUITH: If the great invention is to be attributed to its real and original discoverer, I think it is the hon. and gallant Member for Central Sheffield.

*MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: No, Sir; will the right hon. Gentleman, in the course of his fiscal researches, refer to a not unknown book by Adam Smith? Will he ask the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose, who sits next to him, to point out the relevant passages in the works of John Stuart Mill, or, if for the opinion of mere economists he does not care, will he read the weighty words of Lord Salisbury, addressed to his Party and the country on more than one occasion, with his unrivalled experiences of foreign affairs and of these very commercial negotiations? Lord Salisbury pointed out that we had voluntarily deprived ourselves of the only means of making our representations effective, that all around us negotiations for commercial privileges and reciprocal arrangements were going on, that each country showed great anxiety to obtain the best terms possible from the others, but that none of them cared about us. Why was that? It was because we went empty-handed to market, and he who goes empty-handed to market will come empty-handed away. We have voluntarily given up the only means of influence which we possessed, and, therefore, the representations which we have made have been treated with neglect, or waived aside with a polite refusal. I am unable to understand the attitude taken up in this matter by hon. Gentlemen opposite, who consider themselves to be the heirs of Mr. Cobden's policy, and the true prophets of his doctrines; and who, I suppose, would defend as warmly his French treaty as they would denounce any attempt on our part to purchase a similar treaty to-day by similar methods of negotiation. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose shifts uneasily in his seat. He has been the special champion of these methods of negotiation. What does he say in his life of Cobden? He says—

> "It is not enough, therefore, to remove our own protective duties, though Peel may have been right under the circumstances of the time in saying that the best way of fighting a hostile tarriff is by reforming your own. It is the business of the economic statesman to watch for opportunities of inducing other nations to modify duties on imports; because the release of the consumers of other nations is not only a stimulus to your own production for exportation, but has an effect in the supply of the imports which you declare to be the real object of your solicitude."

I can guess the right hon. Gentleman's reply to this argument. He would say that the treaty with France was not a treaty with France only, but with all the world, that the benefits were not exclusive to France, but were given to all other nations. Yes; that is the reason why, with no other nation in the world, have we since been able to make an equally satisfactory arrangement. We had already given them all we had to give before entering into negotiation. So much for that branch of the question.

There remains one other purpose for which His Majesty's Government desire greater liberty of fiscal action. It is in order that they may seek freely in every way open to them and along every line, without having one single line closed, to promote a closer union between ourselves and our colonial possessions beyond the seas. I wish I could convey to the House some sense of the profound importance which I attach to this side of the question. It is, I believe in my heart of hearts, big with the fate of Empire; and I can conceive no subject demanding more than it does the earnest and dispassionate attention of our country, and more fraught with good or evil for the future of our Empire and of the race of which we are a part, none on which a wrong decision come to now, permanently and finally, would bring more certain disaster in the future, or a heavier weight of responsibility for this generation in the eyes of posterity. The last century was remarkable for the growth of national feeling and for the building up of great and still growing nations, and it was only with the closing years of the century that that national feeling became merged, or I would rather say expanded, into a great Imperial and world policy on the part of the great Powers of the world. I beg the House to consider what is to be our future position. We are 40,000,000 of people in these islands, a race endowed with much energy, great activity, great enterprise, a race of born colonists and explorers and leaders of men, who have played a big part in the past in the development of the world. What part are we to play in the future? If you look only to these islands, they are already over-shadowed in area, population, and resources by great Powers in Europe and America. But beyond the seas we have new nations of our own blood and kinship, growing into force and strength. We have vast possessions in other climes, not suited to white colonisation, which render the Empire capable of producing almost everything that we want and of developing a great and increasing inter-Imperial trade. What is to be the future of this great inheritance? We cannot stand for ever as we stand now. Forty or fifty years ago it seemed impossible that peoples and nations so widely scattered should be for ever closely linked in the bonds of common government and common purpose, and the statesmen of those days thought their highest duty was to prepare the way for the peaceful and friendly separation of those who sooner or later must part. Are any of us prepared to accept that solution of the problem to-day, who will bid farewell for ever to the hope of maintaining these scattered portions of our race still bound together for a common purpose, and by a common tie? If we are not prepared to sacrifice that great ideal, would it not be mad of us to close the door on any road by which we may approach it, to refuse to consider any suggestion which has for its object this closer union?

The right hon. Gentleman complained that the Prime Minister had said nothing about the proposal for a Colonial Conference. My right hon. friend was replying to the Leader of the Opposition, whose only reference to the subject, I think, was an inaccurate reminiscence of an answer my right hon. friend gave in the House last year. My right hon. friend is alive, no one more than he, both to the great possibilities and perils of the future. We have a great problem to deal with, such as has never confronted any race in the history of the world. He desires that we should enter into conference with our fellow-subjects from across the seas, freely, unfettered—listen to all they have to say, and bring our views and our arguments to bear on them. [OPPOSITION cries of "What are they?"] The right hon. Gentleman called that proposal for a conference a preposterous and fantastic scheme, but afterwards explained that he is all in favour of a conference, only it must be of a different kind. If he has his way the Government of the United Kingdom are to issue to all the self-governing Colonies an invitation to attend a conference to discuss affairs of common interest, but they are at the same time to inform the Colonies that the particular subject that interests the Colonies most must not be mentioned. I suppose he will have a detective at the door to examine these colonial representatives, and see whether they have in their pockets any scheme which suggests preferential relations, and, if so, to exclude them. The subject which has excited the greatest common interest throughout the Colonial Empire is to be tabooed at this great Conference.

MR. ASQUITH: I never said so.

*MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: Then I do not know what the right hon. Gentleman said.

Mr. ASQUITH: I have always said exactly the same thing. In the first place the quotation that was made was on the proposal that we should have a Colonial Conference summoned for this purpose, and for this purpose alone, with no reference whatever to the Colonial Conference as now proposed.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR dissented.

Mr. ASQUITH: That was the proposal.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: No.

Mr. ASQUITH: It was so understood. What I have said, and say now, is that in any Colonial Conference any constituent member of the Empire can, of course, raise any question which they regard as important. We ourselves, if we go into such a conference must send our delegates with definite instructions as to what attitude they are to take.

*Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I do not lay any stress on the word now when I say that that is now the position. The colonial representatives are welcome to come and raise this question if they like, but the right hon. Gentleman warns them beforehand that if they do he will have nothing to do with them, he will not entertain it for a moment. No matter what arguments they may adduce, what facts they may bring to his knowledge, what offers they may make, what sentiment they may represent in other parts of the Empire, he and his Party refuses to touch the accursed thing, and any representations they may make will find him deaf to all their offers.

Mr. ASQUITH: In regard to the taxation of food.

*Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: Then with what power or influence would he go to urge on those colonial representatives other questions in which we in this country are greatly interested, but in which our colonial kinsmen perhaps see the common interests of Empire less clearly? What chance will he have of persuading them to take a larger share in the responsibilities and liabilities of the Empire? The idea of such a conference as that is indeed as preposterous and fantastic a scheme as, in his own words, has ever been evolved from the brain of a statesman. But I appeal from the right hon. Gentleman to wiser and more far-seeing heads in his own Party. Lord Rosebery, anticipating the proposal for such a conference, said—

> "One thing was certain, that before any real change was made in our fiscal system we must, as a practical measure, have a conference around a round table or square table, as the case might be, a private conference,"

And I agree with him, private—

> "not for the delivery of speeches to the gallery, but a real and business conference between the best financial and commercial experts of this country and of the Colonies to say whether such a new system of tariffs was practicable and advisable or not."

That is our view, and we must have a conference at which neither our representatives shall have their hands tied, nor the colonial representatives. I regret that such a proposal should, even for a moment, have become a matter of Party controversy or a dividing line between the two sides of the House. I still hope that from amongst the members of the Party opposite many will be found who will listen to wiser counsels, and take their share in endeavouring to frame by constructive statesmanship bonds of union amongst the British race whereever it may be found. But if it is to be a Party issue I know of no Party which, by every tradition of its existence, by the faith which its leaders have preached, by its daily principle and past practice, has a greater claim to make that policy their own than that to which I have the honour to belong.

Mr. ELLIOT (Durham) said that it was a melancholy thing that the question whether or not the Colonies should be heard should be made a matter of Party controversy. But the question, if he mistook not, had been already settled, and a conference would in due course be held, whichever Party was victorious at the polls. He must say he regretted the tone that had lately become common, amongst those who advocated these new fiscal reforms, with reference to our colonial relations. A repeated attempt was being made to persuade our fellow-subjects in the Colonies that the home country was shutting the door upon them, and treating them badly. The reverse was the truth. The Chancellor of the Exchequer said we must remember we were a small country, with greater areas and rapidly growing populations round us. Did he forget that in spite of those disadvantages our Fleets, our commerce, and our trade covered every portion of the world? And how? By the methods we had followed during the past forty years. By the fact that as traders and merchantmen we had looked to the enterprise and the energies of our own race, and had looked to the removal of restrictions to secure the pre-eminence we now enjoyed. The right hon. Gentleman had spoken as if he had never looked back to the system in our Colonies in former times. When a different system prevailed our relations with the Colonies were not such as they were now. Then, indeed, there was much trouble, and there would be again if there was an attempt to revive the worn-out and exploded commercial policy which formerly prevailed. Were we to be asked to enter into negotiations which would hamper the individual Colonies in the exercise of that freedom which they now enjoyed, and which left them as free as we were to enter into negotiations and to make arrangements for themselves? Those who knew the Colonies best knew that they would be indeed unwilling to depart from that system. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had talked of the desire to give freedom to this country in regard to trading matters with the rest of the world. He would ask the right hon. Gentleman: In what respect were we hampered at present? Could we not put up and down the taxes upon any import whatever except sugar? There for good or evil, we had lost our freedom. The results, which would be shown by more experience, would make us better aware of the effect of the Convention. Let the House recognise this, at all events, that the Convention had not freed our hands but had tied them in regard to the commodity of sugar. The British Government, by the methods known to and approved by the House and the people, except with reference to sugar alone, could make what arrangements it chose. We had supreme command of the taxing of commodities which came into, and, for that matter, of commodities which went out of the country, except sugar.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN made a remark which was inaudible in the Press gallery.

MR. ELLIOT: During the currency of the Convention, are we not bound by its terms?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The terms do not include any provision that we shall raise or lower the tax on sugar.

MR. ELLIOT asked whether there was any commodity besides sugar which came to this country as to which we were under a similar disability. He hoped the Chancellor of the Exchequer would answer that question. He himself knew of none. Therefore, do not let us talk of regaining our freedom in this country. That was the way to tie our hands and not to gain our freedom.

He wished to say one or two words on the Amendment to the Address, and upon the position in which that Amendment put the House, and also on the position in which the country found itself. His right hon. friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer had dealt with the question of fiscal reform in a vague and perfunctory fashion. He did not blame him for taking that course. It was not suitable for him to go into the wide and extensive and, to a certain extent, the detailed policy which had been put before the country. But the policy had been before the country for nearly 100 years, and if the Chancellor of the Exchequer, or any Gentleman on the Front Bench, desired that the policy should have been fully discussed it might have been tabled, and it might have been gone through point by point. They might have considered one point after another in relation to duties on imported manufactures and duties on the commonest articles of the food of the people, and after a proper and enlightening debate they would have seen the proper and straightforward course for the Government to have pursued. That policy had been before the country, and it was because of the fact that the policy had been before the country that it became material for the House to review the situation.

He had begun to think that it was hopeless to get from the Prime Minister a simple answer to the question whether he was for or against the policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. Of course, he was told when he left the right hon. Gentlemen's Government, which he did with great sorrow, that he was showing a want of confidence in the fiscal policy of the head of the Government. He felt that want of confidence still, but he should have been glad if in time past some efforts had been made to remove that want of confidence. His right hon. friend the Member for West Birimingham had detailed his policy. There was no mistake about his position. He entirely disagreed with his reasoning and his conclusions. He believed his policy would injure this country in its material prosperity, and that it would tend to produce bad relations between the Central Kingdom and our Colonies, and also have a demoralising influence on British policy. At the same time he admired his frankness and the ability with which he had presented his policy to the country. But they had a right to know what the Premier thought and believed as to the merits or demerits of that policy because he was claimed as a supporter of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. If anyone was claimed as a supporter in his own presence, and he did not condescend to negative the claim, he gave some kind of approval to it. Ever since this controversy began he had looked not only at the reasoning of his right hon, friend at the head of the Government, but also at the conduct of the Government in dealing with the matter. What was the use of, he was about to say pretending, not to be in sympathy with the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham when in the constituencies they did all they could to bring forward, and press forward, the representatives of the policy of the right hon. Gentleman. He had heard mutterings and grumblings from hon. Members who asked why he did not cross the floor of the House, and make his speeches from the other side. He would tell hon. Members that he would do so the next time he rose to catch the Speaker's eye if the Prime Minister told the House that his policy as to the fiscal question was that of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. This position he had taken in that House, and on the platform. He would not remain a member of any Party which made a system of antiquated protectionism a principal part of their policy.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I have never claimed the Prime Minister to be an antiquated Protectionist.

MR. ELLIOT reminded the right hon. Gentleman that he had claimed that in principle the Prime Minister was a supporter of his policy. If that were so, and the Premier said it was so, he and not a few others would find it necessary to cross the floor of the House at once. This was not a question between one right hon. Gentleman and another, but a question of policy. Was the House to be kept alive in order that tactics might be pursued rather than that it might aid effective debate and discussion of the great issue in the mind of the public and in which alone the public was interested? They had been told on the one side that it was the duty of the Prime Minister to dissolve, and on the other side that it was his duty to prolong the existence of the House of Commons. They had heard of precedents as to the influence of by-elections and as to what Mr. Gladstone had or had not done, but, after all, these were subsidiary to the great principles which every one of them knew ought to govern the case. What was the distinct feature of the House? It was that they were not speaking merely as individuals, but as representatives, and that whenever a great change had come over the whole condition of things, it should be followed by a dissolution. In this case they had not only changed the Sovereign, but the Prime Minister and the Ministers who were his chief supporters. The whole conditions had changed, in fact, and a new policy was now before the country. He sympathised enormously with the difficulties in which the Prime Minister was placed. But he must say that it was with a feeling of deep despondency that last night he had heard the right hon. Gentlemen treat a very serious question, which the country regarded as serious and on which the country was feeling deeply, as a matter of Party chaff. What they wanted, and what they had a right to expect from the Prime Minister, was a little guidance on the main issue. He wished to speak of the right hon. Gentleman with great respect, and he regretted more than he could state that the right hon. Gentleman had not seen his way to take a firmer line, and to lead the public on this great issue. But the right hon. Gentleman had not done so. He knew that the Prime Minister was feeling how essential it was that his Party should be kept together. That was from no selfish interest of the right hon. Gentleman's own, but from what he conceived to be his duty. His own Party feeling was not so intense as to make him feel that the business of the country could not be carried on if this or the other Prime Minister were not in power. He believed that this was a self-governing country, and that if half-a-dozen Prime Ministers were to disappear, the country, though it might suffer great loss, would find some way of getting on. What they could not afford was that the best minds and characters among them should not take the place that belonged to them, but leave the country in the net of mystifications set before them in the unhappy policy presented by the right hon. Gentleman. To say that this was not a case in which there was difficulty within the Party was, as everybody knew, contrary to fact. In every constituency in the country at the present moment there were many hundreds and even thousands of men who had been good Conservatives and Liberal Unionists all their lives, and who were now determined to go over to the other side rather than enable the Government to carry into effect the fiscal policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham. Therefore, he appealed once more to the Prime Minister to see where he stood on this matter.

This vote would be taken—he hoped the House would remember it—and rightly taken for or against the fiscal policy of the right hon. Member for Birmingham. The country liked to look at things rather broadly, and they would know that real free-traders, men who were prepared to sacrifice something for free trade—old co-operation, for instance, with friends and relations—must vote for the Amendment of the right hon. Gentleman opposite. The Chancellor of the Exchequer's intervention certainly had not tended to clear the position, either one way or the other. It seemed to him to make the connection somewhat closer between the Government Bench and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham. Well, where were they ? Where were they in this House, and in the constituencies ? The constituencies had a right to be taken into the confidence of the Government. Was preference to be made effective at once as representing the views of the Government ? If the Government wished to stand clear with the country, let them answer that question. He hoped that in the coming struggle, which ought not to be very far away, the people would look upon this as the greatest issue ever put before them for many a long year. He hoped that they would do as they had done eighteen or twenty years ago on another great issue. There could not be a doubt—as every right hon. Gentleman on the Government Bench knew in his heart—that if the country was fairly consulted, on the question of free trade on the one side, and the fiscal policy of the right hon. Member for Birmingham on the other, the country would give an enthusiastic and overwhelming verdict in favour of the case for free trade.

*MR. DAVID MACIVER (Liverpool, Kirkdale) said that the Amendment moved by the right hon. Member for East Fife had been enforced by a reference to the by-elections ; but he should like to point out that the policy of both the Prime Minister and of the right hon. Member for Birmingham had been utterly misrepresented at these by-elections. That was within the knowledge of all, and he thought that the Prime Minister had some reason to complain of the speech which had just been made by the hon. Member for Durham for the misrepresentations therein made. He remembered well what the Prime Minister said at Sheffield. He was present and listened to that speech, and had also read the pamphlet "Economic Notes," and had heard all his speeches in public and in the House. To his mind these were perfectly intelligible, and it was quite clear—he spoke his own views—that the Prime Minister sympathised with the policy of the right hon. Member for Birmingham. The Prime Minister at Sheffield pointed out that the old fiscal theory had broken down in practice, and that the time had come when that policy ought to be reconsidered. There were, as he understood the Prime Minister to have said, certain difficulties in the way of adopting the wider policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham, and that these difficulties hung round the question of the taxation of imported food, which would be a necessary part of preference. He thought he was right in his recollection that the Prime Minister's statements were not in any sense hostile to anything said by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham, but rather pointed to this: that the proposal to tax imported food was in his opinion one which the country was not at the present time prepared to accept. He agreed with the Prime Minister that to-day this country was not prepared to go the whole length of the right hon. Member for Birmingham; but the time was coming when that policy would be less misrepresented and better understood. He was heartily in support of the policy of the Prime Minister. It seemed to him that the Prime Minister's views were clear and definite, and that the policy of recovering our powers of negotiation with those countries which at present did not treat us fairly was of the very greatest value, and might well stand apart by itself. As a tariff reformer he welcomed that policy. He, however, did not regard the two policies as antagonistic. The policy of retaliation was in itself a wise one, and it seemed to him that those who sought to defend the present fiscal system of the country must necessarily find themselves on the horns of a dilemma. They were bound to show either that they were the only depositories of wisdom, or that all other countries which were protectionist were foolish. Now he did not think that they could show either the one or the other. He believed that business men—not of narrow, but of wide experience,—were thoroughly convinced that our competitors in Germany and the United States understood their own business interests quite as well as anybody in this country, and that they were by no means the fools hon. Gentlemen opposite imagined them to be.

Reference had been made to the by-elections. They had one coming on in Liverpool next week, in the Everton Division. It was said that one ought not to prophesy unless one knew, but he was as certain as he stood there that, if all other questions were eliminated, the fiscal reform candidate would win that great constituency. The Liverpool constituencies were mostly in favour of the retaliation policy of the Prime Minister, while others also approved the policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. Being connected with the shipping trade, he was in a position to tell the House that the leading shipowners in Liverpool, almost without exception, were not only in favour of retaliation, but also looked with a kindly eye on the policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. They included such men as both the present and late Chairman of the Liverpool Steamship Owners' Association, as Sir Alfred Jones the President and Mr. Welsford the Chairman of the local branch of the Tariff Reform League, and practically very nearly the whole of the steamship owners who were engaged in the general cargo trade. There was however, no rule without an exception, and the exception frequently proved the rule. Who were the people who were opposed to them? There was one Gentleman whose name was known to this House—Sir William Forwood. He had taken a conspicuous part in Liverpool in endeavouring to raise an agitation against the fiscal policy of the Unionist Party. Sir William Forwood was formerly a partner in the firm of Leech, Harrison & Forwood, but the West Indian shipping business in which he was at one time engaged had been sold by his successors to the Hamburg-American Company; and the firm of Leech, Harrison & Forwood remained the agents of the company. That ought to keep Sir William Forwood quiet, because he could not possibly speak with authority as a Liverpool shipowner. He did not in the least suggest any corrupt influence on the part of Sir William Forwood, who was far too high-minded for that; but he thought that Sir William's former association with the firm of Leech, Harrison & Forwood, who were now so closely connected with the Hamburg-American Steamship Company, was not unlikely to have affected his views. Mr. Charles Booth, junior, read a paper in Liverpool the other day, and took a view in opposition to those he had endeavoured to express; but it should be remembered that a far wiser man, his senior partner, the Right Hon. Charles Booth, the chairman of the great shipping company of which he was one of the directors, was a member of the Tariff Commission. Another gentleman, whom it would not be fair to name, because he had not as yet taken any conspicuous part in opposing the policy his brother shipowners believed in, was interested in the China trade, and had very close and intimate relations with the North German Lloyd. They employed Chinese labour also largely in their ships, but he did not blame him for that. He thought these circumstances would probably keep that gentleman quiet. His case was that the people in Liverpool who had most to do with the general cargo carrying trade were almost, if not absolutely, without exception in favour of the policy of the Prime Minister. He could assure the House of that; he knew the people and spoke with full knowledge of their views. Why was it so? Because all in the shipping business who were engaged in the general cargo carrying trade had seen and felt the increase in foreign competition and in unfair competition. The South American Republics, for instance, were growing in prosperity, wealth and importance. At one time, the importation of manufactured goods was almost entirely British; now Belgium, Germany and the United States were, thanks to their fiscal system, making a heavy inroad into that business. The result was that these Republics were now trading more largely with the Continent and the United States than with us. They in Liverpool knew the reason why; and for business reasons, whether they were Unionists or Liberals, they were almost without exception in favour of the policy of the Prime Minister. The returns of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board furnished a very fair indication of the general trade of the country. The Chairman of the Board the other day pointed out how great the increase in trade had been; but he wished to point out what the character of the increase was. The returns of the Board showed an increase in almost every item of revenue except one. Everything which competed with the agricultural and manufacturing industries of this country showed an increase. Although the dock rates and town dues on imports last year as compared with the year before showed an increase of £13,353, the receipts from exports showed a diminution of £1,156.

MAJOR SEELY (Isle of Wight) asked if the hon. Member had seen the figures which showed an increase in the trade of Liverpool of £36,000,000.

*MR. DAVID MACIVER said he did not know to what figures the hon. and gallant Gentleman referred; but they did not affect his argument. Their free trade friends were never weary of telling them that all was well with the trade of the country. He would endeavour to prove that this was by no means the case, and he would call as a witness Mr. John Williamson, a gentleman not of his politics, but a well-known Liverpool shipowner of great experience, who was till quite recently a director of the Cunard Steamship Company. At the 27th annual meeting of the Chamber of Shipping, held in London on the 5th of February last, Mr. Williamson read a most important paper, which deserved their very serious attention. He pointed out that the statistics of exports as usually presented related only to values, and that such statistics might sometimes be misleading, inasmuch as prices of the raw materials for our industries were subject to very considerable fluctuations. For instance, as happened some twelve months ago, cotton rose in price, and immediately the value of every bale of manufactured goods went up because the price of cotton had gone up, but nevertheless a bale remained only a bale although its export value might have increased. The same kind of thing was true of other manufactures, and, of course, when raw material went down the process would be reversed. Quantities might remain the same, although statistics based upon value seemed to show either an increase on the one hand or a decrease on the other. Mr. Williamson pointed out that the true basis for statistical comparison was not value, but volume. Mr. Williamson, at the cost of much tedious labour, had succeeded in transforming the Board of Trade statistics of value into statistics of volume for every year since 1869 down to the end of 1903. Looking at it from a shipowner's point of view, he took the trouble of turning the Board of Trade values into tons of twenty hundred-weights as regards dead weight cargo, and into tons of forty cubic feet as regards measurement cargo. The results were most remarkable, and showed that, taking the whole of our export trade, foreign and colonial together, we had, so far as our manufacturing industries were concerned, been losing ground steadily for the last sixteen or seventeen years. He began with the year 1869, and gave every year separately, but for the sake of brevity he would merely give the round figures of every tenth year. The exportations of manufactured goods in 1869 came on this basis to 5,497,000 tons; in 1879 they were 6,065,000 tons; in 1889 they were 8,927,000 tons; but when they got to 1899, a "change came o'er the spirit of the dream." Hostile tariffs were then effectually doing their work and our exports of manufactured goods showed a drop of about a 1,000,000 tons. The position had steadily worsened since, and our exports of manufactured goods last year were another 1,000,000 down. He thought that was a state of things which no free trader could by any possibility explain away. Mr. Williamson's figures made it clear beyond any sort of reasonable doubt or question that as regards manufacturing industries the export trade of the country was, under our existing fiscal system, going steadily and rapidly to the bad. His figures showed 7,942,000 tons for 1899, and only 7,092,000 tons for 1903. The figures for 1883 were 8,342,000 tons, and the conclusion therefore appeared inevitable that our manufacturers were to-day doing less export business than they were twenty years ago. The increase of our exports consisted absolutely and entirely of coal.

The shipowners of Liverpool were, as he had said, almost unanimously in favour of the policy of the Prime Minister and of the greater and grander policy of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. Why were not all business men in favour of it? The reason to anyone who "knew the ropes" was perfectly obvious. The banker, the broker and the middleman wanted to earn commissions. Capital was cosmopolitan, and from a banking point of view there was more money to be made in financing the business of our foreign competitors than in helping traders at home. The banker made legitimate profits out of all financial transactions of every kind involving a money payment for importations. Comparatively speaking, he got nothing if we paid for importations with our wares. He got much when we paid for them by transfer of securities. Improvement of the export trade in manufactures was therefore by no means specially desired by some of our banking friends. Their interest did not lie in that direction, nor was it particularly wanted by those shipowners who never carried manufactured goods, whose ships were not good enough for the job, and who had no ambition higher than coal carrying. Such shipowners were either indifferent to the proposals of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham or opposed to them, and the reason was obvious—they had nothing to gain. They might even have something to lose if by any chance these proposals led to others, such as might well arise if our existing fiscal system came to be so completely reversed that the country woke up to the fact that excessive coal exportations were perhaps not altogether desirable. There were those who believed that in sending abroad large quantities of the more valuable qualities of South Wales coal we were parting for an inadequate consideration with national capital which could never be replaced. To the Liverpool shipowners, who expected to make their living out of the carrying of British products, fiscal reform would make all the difference in the world.

The real difficulty in the way of the policy of the Prime Minister and that of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham was that there were a number of vested interests which it would not suit to see the present conditions altered. The fiscal policy of this country could not be varied without affecting those who made their living out of the existing state of things. To such it was a matter of life and death that the country should continue on the present system, but this was not in the interests of the people of this country. This free-trade country of ours—Great Britain—was the only civilised country in the world of which it could truly be said that one third of the people were underfed and living upon the verge of hunger. He looked upon the free food cry as one of the greatest impostures of the age. The free-fooders did not seek to diminish the burdens on our food in any way. They did not seem to care what burdens fell upon the producers in this country. It was only the protective taxation of food that they objected to; and when they declaimed against food taxation, it was the taxation of foreign food that they meant. Now, whatever doubt there might be as to the incidence of the duties levied by the Customs, there could be no doubt whatever as to the incidence of local taxation. Whether the burden was distributed equitably or not, it was all paid by ourselves. He had had some difficulty in finding out what the rates and taxes amounted to, but he found, according to the Local Taxation Returns, that the local taxation of England and Wales in 1902–3 was £129,206,784. Much of this was a charge upon the food-producing and manufacturing industries of this country. The actual sum drawn from the people of this country in the shape of local taxation was larger than that drawn from them in normal years by Imperial taxation. Let us free the food we grow at home, and let us free our manufactures. As a business man, he asserted that what governed the incidence of Customs taxation was almost entirely the question of supply and demand. The countries which sent corn to us could not sell it elsewhere except against import duties much higher than any which were suggested by the right hon. Member for Birmingham. Such import duties as had been suggested would not have the slightest effect in reducing the volume of importation. The shilling import duty on wheat had no effect in raising prices, nor did the remission of the duty cause prices to go down; and he believed that a two shilling duty on wheat would have no more effect. Such a duty would not be large enough to restrict the supply, and the foreigner, confronted as he would be with the competition of free colonial production, would have to reduce his price sufficiently to enable him to sell his wares. The working man certainly would not suffer. The larger duty which would fall upon flour as a manufactured article would tend to encourage the importation of wheat. Wheat would come instead of flour. The shipowner would have more to carry, which would mean more work at the docks, more work for our milling industries, and cheaper offals to help to feed the cattle of our agriculturists. The interests of the country were bound up with the interests of the argiculturists, and it was one of the most serious factors in the present situation that the number of people engaged in agricultural pursuits should be diminishing.

The sugar-refining industry was brought to ruin by unfair competition, but the Sugar Convention had already had some effect in bringing about a better state of things. Personally he regarded the Convention as a somewhat clumsy free-trade device, and he would have preferred to see countervailing duties. As to the contention that the Convention formed any part of the wider policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, one had only to point to the fact that it contained provisions which prevented the giving of any preference to our Colonies to show how absurd the contention was. The pretence that the Convention had had anything to do with the rise in the price of sugar was an absolutely hollow one. The quantity of sugar previously received from countries that were now prevented from sending was so small compared with the total quantity consumed that it could have had little or no effect on price. In conclusion he desired to express his strong disapproval of the Amendment before the House, and his hearty support of the policy of the Government.

*Mr. EMMOTT (Oldham) said that in regard to what had been said by the hon. Member who had just sat down he wished to state that he had been informed by one of the large shipowners he had named who was a supporter of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, that protection would not be a good thing for the shipping trade, although he believed it would be a good thing for the country as a whole. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had made a speech which seemed to be of great importance, and he had dealt at considerable length with the question of colonial preference. The right hon. Gentleman accused the Opposition of desiring to exclude the discussion of colonial preference at the suggested conference, but when a Liberal Government came into power they would be willing to discuss any questions of that kind introduced by any Colony. What they complained of was that the Prime Minister would not state whether, if a scheme involving the taxation of food was recommended by the suggested Colonial Conference, he would recommend it to the country or not. It was trifling with the British Empire to talk about such a conference without first of all settling whether they were going to tax food or not. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham was perfectly straightforward upon this, for his contention was that they ought to decide this question first, but the Prime Minister, in order to keep a semblance of Party unity, adopted another attitude, and it was because of his manœuvring with this question that the country had become disgusted with the present Government. The case of Lord Peel cited by the Chancellor of the Exchequer was absolutely different to the present situation, for Peel resigned when he changed his mind and the Opposition of the day agreeing with him in his new policy declined to take office. In the present case a new question had been sprung upon the country by the Member for West Birmingham. The Prime Minister had stated that he regretted the raising of this issue, but it had been raised, and it would be the principal issue at the next election; and yet the Prime Minister was putting off the next election upon no grounds which he could explain to the House, and in the hope that something would occur in his Party to give it a better appearance of unity than existed at the present time.

He wished to speak upon this matter from a business point of view. The best that could be said about the new fiscal proposals was that they would help some trades whilst they would injure others. If they helped agriculture, they would certainly injure the general body of consumers because they would have to pay more for their food. They might help the earlier stages of the iron and steel trade, but only at the expense of the tin-plate and machinery trades. The real question they had to consider was, were those trades which would be injured of greater magnitude and importance to the country than the trades that would be helped? The silk and glass trades which would be helped by protection were very small and minor trades, but great trades like the iron and steel industry, as a whole, would certainly be injured by protection. The cotton trade would be ruined by protection, the woollen trade would be made worse, and the greater trades as a whole would suffer under a protective system. Under these circumstances each trade wanted to know definitely what was going to happen. A feeling of uncertainty was a very bad thing for trade, and the matter ought to be settled by an appeal to the country. Although they were allowed to discuss the question they were not allowed to decide it upon the fair and square issue of protection and free trade. A great deal had been said about Cobden, but Cobden was never afraid of debate in the House of Commons, and he converted the country to his views about the Corn Laws by constantly debating the question in the House of Commons. Why the Government and the tariff reformers were afraid of debate in the House and a division on a fair and square issue he could not understand. It was monstrous that such a great change, affecting every man, woman, and child in the country, should be debarred from their decision.

As to how the cotton trade would be affected, he had never heard even the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham attempt to show how protection would do any good to the cotton trade, which had nothing to gain but everything to lose by protection. The export trade of cotton from this country for every man, woman and child amounted to between 35s. and 40s. per head; for Germany the amount was from 5s. to 6s.; France, 3s. 7d.; United States, 1s. 6d.; and Russia, 2¾d. The exports varied inversely with the amount of protection. Those figures did not form a very strong argument in favour of protection. Why were they able to beat other nations in the cotton trade? Because the cost of mills, machinery, and plant in this country was so much lower than in foreign countries. With regard to the United States, it was a very curious fact that wages should have been so largely reduced at Fall River, whereas they were talking about an increase of wages at home. It had been calculated by experts that the cost of even a 5 per cent. all round duty on food and manufactures would amount to a tax on the cotton industry of £600,000 per annum. The cotton trade was threatened by two different changes, the one proposed by the Prime Minister, which was an unreal policy backed by consistent arguments; and the other put forward by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, which was the real policy backed by extremely inconsistent arguments. At present the greater part of cotton trade was good and Lancashire appeared to have made up its mind that the country was not going to have protection, for it was rapidly extending its cotton mills. Far-sighted men, however, most naturally recoiled from new ventures, because they did not know what the new tariff was going to be; and even if protection would be for their advantage it was of the utmost importance that they should get this matter settled.

Just one word about the matter as it affected other nations. There had, of late years, been a tendency to recoil form protection in foreign countries, because high protective duties meant a diminution of exports. In America they were talking about the reduction of the tariff, but the most important case at the present time was the case of Germany. The Chancellor of the Exchequer talked a good deal about Germany and the German protective system in modern years, but the trade and exports per head of the population decreased from the time that protection came into force until the period of 1892 when the tariff was reduced. For the years, 1882–3–4, the amount per head was £3 10s., in 1890–2 £3 3s. 2d., and the great increase had come since and was now, for 1900 to 1902, £4 0s. 2d. per head. Now they were putting up the tariff again. That must check the export trade. He did not think there was an economist in Germany who pretended anything else. They were increasing their agricultural duties. The effect of this new tariff had been undoubtedly to make Russia, Austria, and Switzerland, the three neighbours of Germany, put up their tariffs. He thought we might learn a lesson from this. Retaliators might learn the lesson that when they put up their tariffs their neighbours were liable to do the same. He maintained that it was very important that we should settle this matter without delay. The question of protection was trembling in the balance in other countries as well as here. It was very noticeable that the campaign of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had been welcomed by protectionists in all nations and in our own Colonies. In the campaign textbook of the United States of America, much use had been made of the statements as to the decadence of this country, which had been so largely made by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. England had been the one great argument by which free-traders all over the world had stood. If we gave way there might be an orgy of protectionists in other countries. If we stuck firm to our free-trade practice he was as convinced as he could be that, before long, both in the United States and in Germany, there would be a recoil from protection, and that they would resort to a system in which tariffs would be less than they were to-day. He hoped this question would, without further delay, be put to the country, and that the country would decide upon it.

MR. PURVIS (Peterborough) said hon. Members on his side of the House were very much impressed by the hurry indicated by the Amendment that the fiscal question should be submitted to the people. Why was it absolutely necessary to have a general election without further delay? There was, he suspected, something behind the proposal, and the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fife had added to the suspicion. He and his friends were strongly of opinion, and the opinion was growing stronger every day, that the Opposition had a lurking fear that time was on the side of the tariff reformers. That lurking fear told them that they should try to snatch a short spell of power before time had done its work. They wished to snatch a verdict amid the confusion—the natural confusion—in the public mind, caused by the novelty of the proposals. If they were not afraid that time was working against them they would not be so desirous of a general election. Why raise this terrible stir throughout the country? The tariff reformers proposed to tax goods from foreign countries, because foreign countries taxed the goods which we sent to them. He denied the accuracy of the term "free trade" as generally used. Free trade was a perfectly free exchange between different countries, but we had no such thing here in England. Virtually free trade did not exist. It was a complete misnomer for their opponents to call themselves free-traders, and he said that they were sailing under false colours. On the other hand he denied that the term "protectionist" applied to the class to which he belonged. Protection was an old exploded policy by which certain products were protected from fair competition, and not unfair competition by foreign countries, as was the case now. There was a cry about the taxation of food by free-trade politicians. It was not intended to resort to the old sliding scale which put 38s. 6d. on the quarter of wheat and raised the tax to 50s. That was protection with a vengeance—protection of home industries from the competition of foreign countries. The shilling a quarter duty which was imposed in 1902 had no effect whatever on the price, and he submitted that the imposition of a two shilling tax would not have had an appreciable effect. But even if there was any increase in the price of food by such a tax the impost would be counterbalanced by the remission of taxation in other ways. That would be protection in the proper sense of the term. These were easy things to realise, but their opponents gave them the go-by.

The increase in the price of sugar was due to an accidental cause—namely, the short crop of beet. When bounties were paid on beet sugar by foreign countries cane sugar could not compete against it, and the result was that our great sugar industries in the West Indies were ruined. That was not all. The importation of beet sugar already refined had the effect of destroying the sugar-refining industries of London, Bristol, and Greenock. It was all very well for their Cobden friends to say that cheap sugar was so much the better for our confectioners and jam makers, but now the cry of distress arose from them and kindred trades. The time had arrived for foreign countries to withdraw bounties on sugar. The confectioners had built up their prosperity on a false foundation of cheap sugar, which was obtained far below its cost. What had happened to the confectionery trades only showed the effect of dumping and the necessity for fiscal reform. The same effects would be felt by every other industry unless we were wise in time and put an end to dumping of every sort before it was too late. Our Colonies had only shown us the way, and why should we scorn their counsel and co-operation. We must learn to think Imperially, for he believed that if our Colonies began to make reciprocity treaties with foreign nations the idea of Imperial trade, one system of defence, one Flag, one Throne, would be gone for ever. That must not be, and when the proper time came the House and country would declare that it should not be.

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.) said that the statements made in the course of the debate were most amazing. The hon. Member who had just sat down had commenced by saying that owing to the extraordinary situation at present, certain industries, formerly very flourishing, were suffering very greatly. The hon. Gentleman said that these industries had built up their prosperity on a false foundation; but that was not very consoling to them. Who could tell whether or not they were built on a false foundation? They must not begin examining these things too closely. If they did so with the whole national trade they would land themselves in very curious conclusions. His hon. friend said that considerable prosperity had been enjoyed by the sugar-manufacturing industries, and now he admitted that they had been destroyed. There were valuable witnesses on the other side who said that delay in bringing this issue to the country had prevented the Government redeeming the pledge given to the House. The Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that this new policy would not be introduced in the present Parliament, but their own supporters did not confirm that at all, because the new policy was going strong at the present moment and formerly prosperous businesses in the country were suffering. He had been greatly amazed at the line of argument taken by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, considering that the right hon. Gentleman was an eminent exponent of Parliamentary procedure. The right hon. Gentleman had said scarcely anything at all about the Amendment, which practically set forth that we had carried on this discussion long enough and that it ought to be decided by a reference to the people of the country. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, however, had made the most protectionist and preferential speech that any right hon. Gentleman holding his position had delivered in the House for the past sixty years. It was little less than shocking for the chosen representative of the trade of this country under free trade to go almost out of his way to lay down the foundations for protection and preference—the very policies which were not to be spoken of in this House for a year or two. He thought that if the Chancellor of the Exchequer only reflected on the injury he might cause to the vital interests of this country by even talking in that way he would be a little more careful in what he said in the House. The Chancellor of the Exchequer was, in his opinion, not free to take that tone, seeing the position he held in the Government. The right hon. Gentleman was supposed to be a follower of the Prime Minister and they could not get him to admit that his policy and that of the Prime Minister were the same.

The Prime Minister's attitude was very curious. He was asked by his own supporters to state plainly whether he agreed or not with the right hon. Member for Birmingham, and he refused to give any answer, but sat strangely silent. He supposed the silence of the right hon. Gentleman gave consent. It was said that the Party's allegiance to the Government depended on whether that pledge was given, but the Prime Minister did not give any indication, even by a nod of the head, of the mind of the Government on this matter. That was a state of things that could not be prolonged. It was so early in the session that the House had not had time to exactly realise what was the situation; but if they saw what was going on outside, they would recognise that the situation here was nothing more than a farce and could not be prolonged. The Government were not able to keep the promise they had made to prevent the discussion of the fiscal policy. Large experiments were being made in the way of protection.

He wished to say a word in regard to a certain business which had been affected most disastrously by the policy which the Government were pursuing—he meant the growing and distribution of tea. A most powerful deputation had been organised in connection with that business. He had nothing to do with that deputation himself, but it had gone to three different members of the Government in succession for the purpose of laying before them the case of their ruined industry. First, they went to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who indicated that he was limited at present by the condition of the finances, but there might be a change in the condition of the country which would enable their burdens to be reduced. If that promise was to be given to large businesses, ought not the Government to take steps to enable the promise to be fulfilled? He believed that the promise was that two-thirds of the duty on tea would be taken away, although they had the Government deciding to put on an additional duty. Between the promise and the performance a great national industry was brought almost to ruin. Then the deputation went to the Secretary of State for India, who took the opportunity of making the most interesting speech on tea he had ever heard, but the right hon. Gentleman did not give the deputation any help. He said that their sufferings were inevitable, that the people were saturated with tea, and that if the tea-growers were practically ruined the Government could not help it. It was for the general good! What a position for a Government to take up!

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN asked if the hon. Gentleman was referring to him?

MR. LOUGH said his complaint was that they could not get the Government to listen to what they said. They were talking about the Prime Minister and the Secretary for India, but they were not present. He understood that the deputation from this ruined industry next went to the Colonial Secretary and, so far as he could make out, they got no more satisfaction from him. The only other Secretary of State which the deputation could wait upon was the President of the Poor Law Board who might find for them an ultimate refuge in the workhouse! This was not a matter on which to joke. The hon. Member for Peterborough had spoken of another ruined industry, although there were others which had been most injuriously affected by the state of indecision which existed in the public mind in regard to the fiscal policy. This was the great finance market of the world, and the state of the money market had been most injuriously affected by the situation and the condition of the national funds. That condition could not recover until the country adopted some settled policy, and until the great financiers knew in what direction the country would proceed. Our great national financial securities were not alone affected; the difficulties of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, of our municipalities, and of everybody engaged in commerce, were increasing. It was extremely difficult to start any new enterprises, and he believed that the ranks of the unemployed were greatly swelled by the extent to which industry was affected throughout the country by the prolongation of the existing situation.

He thought the Government ought to give a more reasoned answer than they had done to the appeal which had been made to them. Precedents had been referred to, but these were not of any great help. They were in an entirely new situation from that in which they were forty or fifty years ago. The people were tired of this fiscal question and wanted to have a general election, and have this subject brought to an issue at once. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had, however, made a long speech on quite another subject. In their secret hearts he believed that the Government were aware that the farce could not be carried on too long. The Government ought to consider the feelings of the country. See how the private business of the country was being affected, and how the business of this House was being thoroughly disorganised by postponing the dissolution. Why should any time be wasted? The Government ought to decide what was the most convenient time for taking this important step. There was another reason, which might not appeal to the right hon. Gentleman, but which was a very substantial one. The beginning of the year was the best period to consult the opinion of the people of the country. If the question were delayed people who were now entitled would not be able to vote. This was the time when a vital question of this kind should be referred to them. He thought some members of the Government ought to give the House an answer as to what was the real Ministerial mind with reference to the Amendment. No one would deny that there was not a feeling of unrest and unreality and that there was a situation which it would be to the interest of the country to put at rest.

* MR. COHEN (Islington, E.) said he had followed the debate with the closest attention, and had, during the period he had been in the House, rarely heard a number of speeches so little calculated to support the contention which the speakers had in view. His hon. friend and colleague charged the Chancellor of the Exchequer with being one of the members of the Government who did not explain the position. He would have expected that his hon. friend would have been the last to make that charge against the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who did not state that the Government were disinclined to consult the electorate. The Chancellor of the Exchequer devoted one of the most powerful passages in his extremely powerful speech to showing why the decision of this question should not be hurried. The right hon. Gentleman's contention was that the electorate should have the facts fully and squarely before them. The hon. Member for Oldham said that the Government had shown themselves unwilling to allow the fiscal question to be discussed in the House; they were frightened, he said, of the decision. As a matter of fact, during the two days of the session the House had been discussing scarcely anything else but the fiscal question. He did not say that that was desirable; indeed he did not think it was. He thought that the time of Parliament could be better disposed on other matters which had been submitted to it. He would not say that the time of the House had been wasted, but it had been spent wholly and exclusively on a question which the present House of Commons would not decide. They would have done better to have concentrated their attention on the very urgent questions which had been submitted to them in the Speech from the Throne, and which would not have aroused such an amount of Party feeling as did the fiscal question. There was the question of the unemployed, that of valuation, and other questions which were referred to in the gracious Speech from the Throne. He was not confident that all these questions would be discussed, because of the concentration of the time of the House on an issue which had been repeatedly declared by the members of the Government as one which would not be decided by the present Parliament.

In the extremely powerful speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Fife, he was good enough to state the several divisions into which, according to him, the Unionist candidates would be divided at the next election and he referred mainly to the candidates whom he called not very elegantly "pure Balfourians." If he understood the right hon. Gentleman's contention, he himself avowed himself a "pure Balfourian. "By that he meant that he agreed with every word which the Prime Minister had said at Sheffield, Edinburgh, and Manchester. Although he did not differ from everything that had fallen from the Member for West Birmingham, yet he would not be able to follow him with that absolute concurrence with which he was able to support the Prime Minister. He understood that the Prime Minister was anxious for a Colonial Conference. The right hon. Gentleman wanted to know what the Colonial Governments were about to offer in return for advantages they asked from this country. He was anxious that preference should be given to the Colonies, but he was not willing to pledge this country beforehand to give preference to the Colonies, until he knew that they were about to give in return a preference which he believed would be beneficial to the entire Empire. That was a business-like attitude to adopt. He had been brought up on the Stock Exchange and spent a great portion of his time there, and the first maxim—he might almost say the first axiom—taught him was that he should not indulge in a certain loss for a doubtful profit. There would be nothing more prejudicial to the interests of the Empire at large than that the working classes of this country should acquire the idea—he would not say the conviction—that their food was being made dearer simply for the purpose of promoting the prosperity of the Colonies. He did not believe that the Colonies wanted that, and he did not believe that that was the intention of the Government. Accordingly he supported the proposal of the Prime Minister, because he had stated over and over again that he desired to send the representatives of this country into a conference with the Colonies unfettered and unbound. They wanted to know what the Colonies had to offer, what their concrete proposals were, and what they were prepared to exchange for the preference which he himself was only too anxious to extend, and which, in his opinion, the Colonies would be glad to accept, in order to promote real union between the Colonies and the mother country. He thought that the Government should not be afraid of submitting that issue to the country when the proper time came. He very much deprecated that the time of the House should be wasted in discussing the fiscal question instead of proceeding with the questions of the unemployed, valuation, and redistribution, which he considered were very urgent.

*MR. CATHCART WASON (Orkney and Shetland) said he did not know how the Chancellor of the Exchequer would appreciate the speech which had just been made when he thought of the one which he himself had delivered a few minutes ago, when he appealed to a united Party to support him in the division lobby. If they did support the right hon. Gentleman it would mean that the Unionist Party pinned their faith to the policy of protection and nothing but protection. The speech of the right hon. Gentleman was a long tirade in favour of protection, and in the course of it he tried to bring in other countries in order to assist the Government and draw a false trail over the real issue. The right hon. Gentleman had tried to drag the Colonies into a domestic affair of this country. No statesmen did so much harm to this country and the Empire as those who were following the right hon. Member for West Birmingham in this matter. The right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer had reproached the Leader of the Opposition and the right hon. Member for Fife because they deprecated the way in which the Colonies had been dragged into this discussion. Hon. Members on the Opposition side of the House approved of Colonial Conferences from time to time. It was not the right hon. Member for Fife who wished us to go to these conferences with tied hands; it was the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham who said—"If we are not going to lose the Colonies we must tax the food of the people here; if we do not give the Colonies a preference we shall lose them, and in order to give them a preference we must tax the food of the people." As one familiar with the Colonies he could emphatically declare that there was a considerable amount of opposition in every colony to the proposals of the right hon. Gentleman. He did not doubt that the desire of hon. Gentlemen opposite to promote the prosperity of the Empire was just as great as that of hon. Gentlemen who sat in opposition, but hon. Members must remember that our Colonies were independent States and that our relations with them in the future were not to be those of treaties, but what they always had been, relations of brotherly love and affection. We were deeply attached to our Colonies, and they to us, and he was satisfied that this suggestion for the taxation of the food of the people did not in any way come from the Colonies. There were no starving millions there. In their manufacturing industries they had an eight hours day and 8s. a day, and often far more; the farmers were all well-to do and were the very last men in the world to ask English labourers who had to struggle on on a few shillings a week to tighten their belts, in order that they might get a little extra profit on their wheat, or, so far as South Australia was concerned, on their wine. This demand never came from them. In Canada and New Zealand they had differentiated between British and foreign goods by imposing a tax on the latter, and in that way given a preference to British goods, but what was it worth?

With the permission of the House he would like to read a letter from a personal friend, a prominent member of a New Zealand House—

"It angers me very much to read references to 'what the Colonies have done,' 'New Zealand's noble action,' and all the rest of it, and I am amazed that those opposed to Mr. Chamberlain's scheme should not have taken the trouble to examine and analyse just exactly 'what New Zealand has done.' New Zealand has done nothing—for England. New Zealand never intended to do anything—for England. New Zealand says in the Act itself that for value received she is willing—nay, anxious—to chuck England to everlasting blazes. That is New Zealand as represented by Seddon and his infernal Act.

"The Act does not reduce duty on British goods. It simply increases duties on foreign goods. Three months before he introduced the Bill, which he forced through at one continuous sitting of thirty-six hours directly after its introduction, Seddon observed—5th August, 1903, Hansard, Vol. 124, p. 262—'At the Conference of Premiers in London, it had been proposed that a rebate of 10 per cent. should be made on British merchandise carried in a British ship; but he had been afraid it would weigh upon their own struggling industries, and proposed, as a remedy, increasing the tariffs on goods from other nations. This course would not increase imports from the mother country but would check imports from alien countries.' Yet that was the course followed in this Bill which, he called loud and long, was essential if England was to be saved from overwhelming ruin. Section 13, too, simply means that if America, we will say, or Germany, would remove the duty upon our meat or wool, we would make a corresponding reduction upon American boots or German pianos, and the British manufacturers could whistle.

"I am opposed to Mr. Chamberlain's scheme, whether for Britain or for the Empire, and I voted against Seddon's Bill with both hands. But if I had been a supporter of Mr. Chamberlain I must have voted against Seddon all the same. For his Act is from first to last nothing but an excuse for another measure of protection for New Zealand spoon-fed industries (so-called), and to pass it in the name of Imperialism amid all sorts of maudlin blubbering about 'the dear old Motherland' was sickening hypocrisy, of which even Seddon might be ashamed. On top of all this he has the assurance to declare that if England will not 'reciprocate' that is by taxing food stuffs (see same pp. Hansard) or by exempting our loans from stamp duty (Vol. 123 p. 573), New Zealand 'will be driven to make arrangements with other countries.'

"This precious Act could only be forced through (1) at one continuous sitting of thirty-six hours; (2) at the fag-end of the longest session on record; (3) in which long hours and legislation by exhaustion had reached their high-water mark; (4) as a question of dissolution or not, for Seddon made it a No Confidence Motion, and you know what that means. So if you ever hear of 'what New Zealand has done' and so forth, you know the answer to it all."

He could assure the House from his own personal knowledge that the writer of the letter was a man of position and was the last man in the world to write such a significant letter unless he was perfectly satisfied that he had a large body of colonial opinion behind him. This scheme was not a scheme of the Government, but one to be put before the country at the next general election; it was a most intolerable scheme, and one which could have no other effect than straining the bonds which held us to our Colonies. Upon this question the Colonies had made no offer at all. If 40 per cent. was put upon our goods it was no comfort to them to know that 60 per cent. would be put upon German goods. They might be certain that the manufacturing interests in the Colonies would not admit British goods free, because in this country in regard- to production they enjoyed so many advantages and could manufacture much cheaper. The only advantage they would get would be a small export duty upon corn which would go into the pockets of the landowners. He was sure that the Democratic Party would scout any proposal to give the farmers an advantage which would cause the labourers and manufacturers to suffer by their industries being shut out. The Colonies never would allow English goods to compete with their own, and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham could not make them do this even with his great abilities, all the forces which money could command, and the newspapers which he got hold of in one way or another, by means of which he was able to disseminate false and spurious opinions throughout the country. They should be very careful how they dealt with proposals for putting an extra tax upon food. The unity of the Party opposite had been spoken of by right hon. Gentlemen, but they all knew that every hon. Member who was not prepared to swallow everything that came from Birmingham was hounded out of the constituency he might, perhaps, have represented for so long and with so much honour. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Croydon deserved the greatest honour for having repealed the tax on bread, and what was his reward—drummed out of his Party and supplanted by a fervent supporter of the Birmingham policy.

*MR. EVELYN CECIL (Aston Manor) said the object of this Amendment was to strike a destructive blow at the Government. The question of the necessity for an immediate dissolution was not one of which the Opposition were the best judges, and there was no constitutional precedent for a Prime Minister dissolving Parliament at the bidding of the Opposition unless a hostile vote was obtained. Of course he did not blame the Opposition for angling for the support of hon. Members on the Ministerial Benches who attached more importance to particular grievances than to Conservatism as a principle. As for the junior Member for Oldham, who had transferred his allegiance bodily to the other side, he reminded him of some lines which he believed had been quoted before in the House, about Canning—

"The turning of coats so common has grown,
That no one would think to attack it;
But no case before was so flagrantly known
Of a school boy turning his jacket."

That seemed to him applicable to his hon. friend, and he trusted he would take it to heart. The Amendment before the House suggested that this subject had been fully discussed. He thought there were a good many people in the country who had some doubts whether the discussion had been so ample; at any rate a good many had not fully made up their minds. There were still a considerable number of persons sitting on the fence, and so long as that was the case he was not sure that they could say that full discussion had taken place. Why, there was even dispute as to the precise meaning of free trade. The Opposition maintained that free trade meant free imports, and it was worth quoting the evidence of Sir Robert Giffen before the Steamship Subsidies Committee, when that recognised authority said—

> "There is quite a commom opinion that free trade means free imports and nothing else. That is not my opinion, and I believe it is not the opinion of economists who have studied the subject."

Fiscal reformers did not desire any policy which merely bolstered up industries. They did not want what his friend the hon. Member for Durham had called antiquated protectionism. What they did desire was to introduce some system of tariff reform which would prevent that unfair foreign competition to which our industries were now subjected. Nearly every trade was more or less in an unsatisfactory condition.

MR. GEORGE WHITELEY (Yorkshire, W.R., Pudsey) remarked that the operatives in the cotton trade were asking for a 7½ per cent. advance in wages because the trade was so prosperous.

*MR. EVELYN CECIL observed that this was not borne out by the figures of the last two years. Take the shipping trade. It was true that, judged by the standard of continued increase, certainly British shipping creditably holds its own; but when a comparison is made between the increase of British and the increase of foreign shipping a very different story was told. Between 1880 and 1890 British merchant tonnage increased from 8½ millions to over 9½ millions or 12·8 per cent., and from 1890 to 1902 the increase was equivalent to 16·2 per cent., whereas the increases in foreign tonnage in the same periods were 2·2 per cent. and 23·6 per cent. respectively. So that the foreign percentage of increase had been roughly from 2 to 23 per cent., as against the British 12 to 16 per cent. A disquieting result was also obtained by a comparison of some of the returns from British ports. In the large Bute docks at Cardiff, for instance, the proportion of British to foreign tonnage in 1897 was 81·6 as compared with 18·4, but in 1902 the proportions were 70·7 to 29·3. In Hong-Kong since 1886 the tonnage of British ships had increased only 30 per cent., while that of Germany had increased 80 per cent., and that of Japan 100 per cent. He did not contend that tariffs were the sole cause of these differences, but they were certainly contributory causes. Our present policy discouraged the exportation of our own articles into foreign countries. He trusted a Colonial Conference would do much good, for our present policy had largely resulted in London being no longer the clearing-house of the world; the centre of the world's markets had been shifted to the Continent, and the maritime link between Great Britain and her Colonies had been loosened by substituting foreign produce and communications for her own.

MR. AINSWORTH (Argyllshire) said he would like to refer to one or two instances of so-called unfair competition which might be of interest in view of what had been stated by the hon. Member who had just sat down. The hon. Member had stated that our trade was in a deplorable condition at the present moment. He did not think that statement would be confirmed by any person who knew very much about it. It was certainly not true so far as the iron trade was concerned. He had received information from a Glasgow firm in regard to an order for pipes which was obtained from the United States. The firm were told that unless they could offer at a certain figure they need not offer at all. In order to execute the order they tried to get pig iron in the British market cheap enough but failed to do so. Then they tried Germany and Belgium but could not obtain the raw material at a sufficiently low price. When they were about to give up the idea of tendering, a member of the firm suggested that they should try to get pig iron from the United States. They did get it there and were able to accept the contract. That was an instance of what some might call "unfair competition." They might call it what they liked, but that was the way in which contracts were sometimes got in this country, with the result that labour was provided and wages paid to the working classes. He knew further that large shipbuilding orders had been placed on the Clyde in the last few months. He thought that was a good sign, and it was an argument that ought not to be put on one side. No doubt instances of that kind could be easily multiplied. He would like to ask whether there was any man in this country who was really afraid of competition. He supposed there were ups and downs in all trades. About the seventies the British iron trade was in a most depressed condition and many men were out of work. The price of steel rails then was about £7 per ton, but since then it had been under £4 per ton. If foreign pig-iron had been kept out of the country the result would have been that the steel rail trade would have left the country. He would give another instance of colonial preference. When it was proposed to benefit the Colonies by means of tariffs the intention was to benefit the Englishmen, Scotsmen, and Irish who had gone to the Colonies. But, as far as Scotsmen were concerned, they had gone not only to the British Colonies, but to almost every country in the world where there was some profitable business to be done. There was a very large and increasing trade in sheep farming, for instance, in South America, in which Scotsmen played a large part. Why were we to encourage the trade of Scotsmen in Canada and refuse to do so in Patagonia?

Before going into an argument it was most important to know what they were going to discuss. Were they, or were they not, to know if they went into a conference what they were going to discuss with the colonial representatives? Hon. Members who had read Thackeray knew that in one of his novels there was a father and mother who were very nervous as to the marriage of their daughter, and determined to consult a friend who was a man of the world on the matter. The friend's reply was that it was a very easy thing to go to Jerusalem, but a delicate thing to know what they were going to do when they got there. The Government could call a conference to-morrow morning if they liked, but the difficult thing was what they were going to put before the conference as their colonial policy. Another matter of importance was how far the Prime Minister supported the right hon. Member for Birmingham when the latter said that the Prime Minister was at one with him in principle. It seemed to him that the illumination of that principle had been decidedly wanting in the whole of this discussion. When that question had been answered, the decision of the House would be arrived at a great deal sooner, and the decision of the country would not be very far off.

Mr. PARKES (Birmingham, Central) said he had been very much interested in the speeches delivered on this question, particularly in that of the hon. Member who had just sat down, who seemed to have very optimistic views as to the state of trade in this country. The hon. Member, in his opinion, took a wrong view of the state of the iron trade. He did not know where the hon. Gentleman got his information from, but certainly it was not borne out by the facts. He believed that the Annual Trade Returns showed a diminution in the iron trade of something like £2,000,000 in exports, and that the great prosperity in the manufactures of the country was brought about by the largely increased export of cotton goods. If the hon. Member looked at the reports of the various iron companies in the country, he would not find a satisfactory result, for the dividends had, in many cases, been much smaller than in the past. So far as the Midlands were concerned, and Birmingham especially, he was sure that the iron trade was in a depressed condition. The trade of the country was not altogether ruled by exports. They had to take into consideration the demand from the internal trade of the country, and if the hon. Member went to the representatives of any particular manufacturing industry in the Midland districts he would find that these trades were suffering a great deal from foreign competition, and that they were in a most undesirable and disastrous condition. If that were not so, there would not be so many men unemployed as now.

He would not enter into a discussion of the fiscal question. It was too wide and too large a subject to be discussed there. Two questions had been raised in connection with this subject. First of all, the relation between the views of the Prime Minister and those of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham. They, on that side of the House, would be quite as justified in asking hon. Gentlemen opposite what their opinion was in regard to Home Rule. It would be much more relevant to ask them what they were going to do on the question of Home Rule, if they came into power, than to discuss the fiscal question. The other question asked over and over again was why this matter should be delayed, and not discussed and answered by the country at once. The speeches of hon. Gentlemen opposite on the fiscal question showed a state of fog, uncertainty, and want of knowledge, and the necessity of further discussion of the matter before any final decision was come to. One hon. Gentleman opposite had remarked that the Colonies would not give us anything in return for preference, and that they would not receive our goods; but the Colonies had really shown an inclination to take an increasing quantity of our goods, and that should induce sympathetic consideration for them on our part. The question of free trade was agitated for a period of between twenty and thirty years before the whole of the taxes on corn were abolished, and yet hon. Gentlemen opposite insisted that in the course of the two years in which the present demand for tariff reform had been discussed, the country had become so fully informed in regard to it that it was ready to give a verdict upon it immediately. Why should hon. Gentlemen expect them to take a premature decision on this great question?

There was another and more important reason why premature and immature decision should not be given on one of the greatest questions which occupied their attention at the present time. An essential condition for the right understanding of the question was a knowledge of colonial opinion; and that could only be authoritatively ascertained through a conference such as had been suggested. Hon. Gentlemen opposite said that they did not know what was the opinion of the Colonies—whether they had given an offer or whether they had not—but the only way to ascertain definitely was to invite the Colonies to a conference with this country. The discussion on this question could not be complete until they had obtained the opinion of the Colonies. To have a conference, however, which would have intructions as to what it should or should not do would be a mere travesty; and he believed that colonial representatives would not attend it. For himself, he hoped that this question would not be rushed. The Prime Minister stated he was not prepared to rush it; and it might be years before a definite conclusion was arrived at regarding it. There was no doubt that the question once having been raised, public opinion would not be satisfied to shelve it in the manner proposed by hon. Gentlemen opposite. It would, however, be altogether wrong to try and bring the matter to an untimely conclusion. The country wanted information, and the opinions of many people were as yet unsettled. He desired to give the House an illustration of what the views of the Colonies were. Two years ago there was a meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce at Montreal. He himself attended that conference, and a resolution was passed desiring an alteration of fiscal arrangements in order to bring the Colonies into closer union with the mother country; and to that end they were willing to make sacrifices on their part. That resolution was reciprocated by representatives of the business of the whole Empire with absolute unanimity. It would be altogether wrong to the Colonies and to this country to put a veto on this question; and he hoped the Government would remain in power until a conference was held and the matter was seen through.

Sir WILLIAM HOLLAND (Yorkshire, W.R., Rotherham) said that as a business man he desired to express his hearty concurrence with the Amendment. He thought that the interests of business men were more or less injured if their attention was distracted by such important questions as those which were now hanging over their heads. Confidence was necessary if business men were to pursue an even and prosperous course, and that confidence was interfered with as long as the present controversy continued. The hon. Gentleman opposite said that they on that side were satisfied with the present condition of affairs. With all respect, that was not a correct representation of the case. Whether the state of things was good or bad at present, in their judgment it would be likely to be made infinitely worse if some of the suggestions promulgated by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham were carried out. The hon. Gentleman also referred to the conference at Montreal. He himself attended it; and although he agreed with the version given by the hon. Gentleman of the resolution passed on that occasion he thought it was only right to inform the House that it also contained the following words—

> "Due regard being paid to the fiscal and industrial needs of the component parts of the Empire."

Those words contained a very important element; because he was afraid that if the suggestion of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham were adopted, very serious injury would be done to some portions of the Empire. That was a reason to give them pause. He should be glad to see the hostile tariffs of other nations much lower that they were now; but he denied that these tariffs could be lowered by weapons of retaliation such as were suggested by the Prime Minister. The Chancellor of the Exchequer in his speech stated that the fiscal question was of vast importance and was very urgent. If it were of vast importance and urgent, why not take the issue at once to the country. For himself, he did not wish to disparage the preference that some of the Colonies had given to this country. He himself had derived advantage from the preference which was given by Canada. He did not wish to disparage the preference that some of our Colonies had given to us, but, while in the colonial markets the consumer paid less after preference had been given, in this market the consumer would pay more. That entirely differentiated the two positions, and showed that what might answer very well and be easily carried into effect in the Colonies would not answer here, and would be very difficult of application. With regard to the question of a preference on wheat he could testify that at the congress referred to every colonial who spoke heartily repudiated any desire to adopt any course which might be injurious to the mother country, and if we saw that any injury was likely to be done, it was our duty to our colonial fellow-subjects to point out how that injury would be done.

With regard to the suggestion of a Colonial Conference, if a conference was to be held, it was essential that all portions of the Empire should be represented at the conference, and that each part of the Empire should be proportionately represented. Moreover, if we considered that the taxation of food should not be a subject of discussion at the conference, the Colonies should be informed of that fact. With regard to the colonial contribution to Imperial defence, it seemed to him to be rather a curious way of drawing the Empire closer together to put the screw on the different portions of the Empire to increase their contributions to Imperial defence. The loyalty of our Colonies was a precious asset which had sprung up and had reached its present proportions under the system of freedom and liberty conceded to them; but if we bound them in a cast-iron system as a result of the conference, who could guarantee that in future their loyalty to the mother country would be as real and great as it had been hitherto? In his opinion the views of the Prime Minister and those of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham were diametrically opposed to each other and were mutually destructive, for one claimed a free hand to negotiate with other countries, while the other sought to bind us hand and foot in a cast-iron agreement with the Colonies. It was high time that the question should be decided by an appeal to the country.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till the Evening Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [15th February], to Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that, the various aspects of the fiscal question having now been fully discussed in the country for nearly two years, the time has come for submitting the issue to the people without further delay.' "—(Mr. Asquith.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

*MR. RENWICK (Newcastle-on-Tyne) assumed the object of the Amendment before the House was to bring about an immediate dissolution on the ground, first, that the by-elections had gone against the Government, and second, that the proposed fiscal policy had been fully discussed by the country. In his opinion neither of these reasons were sufficient to advise His Majesty to dissolve the House. Everyone must acknowledge that the by-elections had gone against the Government, but such a thing was not unusual when a Government had been long in power. The Chief Liberal Whip had, he observed, at a recent meeting, advised his supporters not to take any notice of by-elections, and, for his part, he also was quite prepared to accept that advice. He ventured to traverse the statement that the fiscal policy had been fully discussed during the last two years, because the House knew that instead of allowing this question to be fully and freely discussed, hon. Gentlemen opposite had done their best to befog the electors and prevent their coming to a decision. The Government had been attacked by the leaders of the Opposition with a virulence beyond all precedent. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fife seemed to have forgotten that the right hon. Member for West Birmingham resigned his high office in the Government for the definite purpose of educating the country in regard to these fiscal proposals. It was admitted both by the right hon. Gentleman and most of his supporters that it did require a considerable time to educate the country in regard to so great a change, but instead of discussing that matter fairly, hon. Gentlemen opposite had gone down to the constituencies and endeavoured to draw the proverbial red herring across the path by discussing Chinese labour, the Aliens Bill, and the Licensing Bill. Many hon. Members opposite had never put forward this question of fiscal reform at all. During the whole of the controversy of the last two years, he had known of no fiscal reformer who had been weaned from his desire to bring about this great change by any of the arguments used by hon. Gentlemen opposite. The Leader of the Opposition had said that the Prime Minister still strutted the quarter-deck, That was true, and those who sat on the Government side of the House hoped he would continue to strut it for some time to come, and hon. Members would do well to think twice before they gave a vote which would prevent the right hon. Gentleman from continuing to do so. As an example of the way in which this issue was put before the country, he would quote from a speech delivered by the hon. Member for South Shields at Blyth. Instead of showing that the Government were proposing a moderate system of taxation reform the hon. Member said—

"If they excluded food in England the result would be absolute starvation for two-thirds of our people. If they hampered the importation of food they would have distress in proportion to the extent they hampered it, as seventy-eight loaves out of every 100 come from abroad. And, above all, he hoped they would not allow statesmen to gamble with the food of the people."

No one wished to prevent the importation of food into this country, and it was by gross exaggeration of this description that the issue had been burked. And it was because still further time was required to put this great issue fully and fairly before the country that it was the duty of the House to vote against the Amendment of the right hon. Member for East Fife. The right hon. Gentleman speaking at Inverness, said—

> "In his many speeches on the fiscal question he had never spoken without pointing out that we were hard pressed in the race of industrial rivalry, and that if we were to hold our own it could not be by simply folding our hands and living upon the past."

But that was exactly what hon. Gentlemen opposite wished us to do. We were out-paced in the race; there was something that required consideration, and he confessed he was glad to think that the right hon. Member for West Birmingham had decided to call attention to this state of affairs and endéavour to find some remedy for the evil to which he had called attention. The right hon. Member the mover of the Amendment said at a meeting held in the Forest of Dean—

> "The reason that exports had not increased in the same ratio as before is not because of hostile tariffs, it has nothing to do with hostile tariffs. It is because our manufacturers and those they supply are busy meeting the demands of the home market that they have not the time or the machinery to meet the demands from abroad."

A more misleading statement had never been made by a responsible statesman. It was notorious that what we had been suffering from for years in this country was foreign competition, which had depressed our Home Markets. Yet the right hon. Gentleman made that statement which proved, if it proved nothing else, that he did not know much of the commercial state of the country. Nearly all hon. Gentlemen opposite had admitted that these tariffs did us harm. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose at Arbroath, said—

> "I am not prepared to dispute that the merchants of Dundee were suffering from these abominable tariffs."

Another right hon. Gentleman at Bradford said—

> "No one disputed the fact that tariffs had injured their trade with the United States."

If that was true, was it not the duty of these right hon. Gentlemen to endeavour to get rid of the tariffs from which they were suffering. The Duke of Devonshire also said—

> "I admit that the excessive tariffs of other countries have inflicted, and do inflict, a great injury upon some of our principal industries."

He (Mr. Renwick) contended that the industries of this country could not be greviously injured without the whole of the country being affected, and that it was because our industries had been injured by these tariffs that so many of our people were unemployed. The right hon. Member for Berwick, speaking at Belford, said—

> "He thought it very foolish of foreign countries to put high duties on our goods. It did harm to us but more harm to themselves."

What did we care what harm it did to the foreigner. The foreigner could take care of himself. We were the only country in the world which was afraid to do anything to help our own industries. The same right hon. Member said at Carnarvon—

> "The tinplate trade no doubt was injured by the McKinley tariff, but since then had been partly revived by opening new markets, partly by the increased home consumption due to the expansion of the jam trade."

That was an extraordinary statement to make to the tinplatemakers of South Wales. The tariff had enabled the United States of America to manufacture their own tinplates and supply their own markets. One hon. Member opposite, the Member for Oldham, a would-be statesman, in a letter to the Daily Telegraph of 16th August, 1903, said—

> "There was no doubt that the tariff walls which foreign nations put up against our goods did us a great deal of harm, and that, if they would pull their walls down and do unto us freely and fairly as we did unto them, our trade would become much better, and so would their trade."

The only remark that he would make upon that statement was that we could leave the foreigners to look after themselves, but that if we, by retaliation or otherwise, could get rid of these tariffs which were doing us so much harm, it was our duty to do so. He declared that since the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham two years ago, hon. Gentlemen and right hon. Gentlemen opposite had ceased drawing doleful pictures of our state of unemployment and pauperism, and had drawn glowing pictures of our great prosperity. By way of testing our prosperity he quoted figures showing the increase of pauperism in the Kingdom, and maintained that so long as we had an enormous amount of pauperism, and so long as we had a great number of unemployed, there was ample justification for the Prime Minister and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham calling attention to the state of things. It was time to do something more than fold our hands and live upon the memory of the past; and they were going to compel the country to face the question. ["When?"] When they got a fair and clear issue put before the country. Only a year ago the bad condition of the cotton trade was the subject of a reference in the King's Speech; and whenever a shortage occurred the same condition of affairs would arise; therefore they ought not to be too elated by the state of that trade at the present time. As to the shipping trade, he was aware that a large number of new ships had been ordered recently, at which he was much surprised as there was nothing in the present state of the freight market to justify such new orders. At the present time Great Britain possessed only about 50 per cent. of the shipping of the world; consequently we could not be the carriers of the world. In 1893–4 the British share was 58·21 per cent.; in 1903–4 it was only 50·67, a decrease of 7·54 in ten years. That meant a considerable increase in foreign competition, while the evidence before the Steamships Subsidies Committee showed that foreigners were making more headway than we were with the provision of the fastest, largest, and finest-equipped ships.

What was the policy proposed by the Prime Minister and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham? The Prime Minister desired to adopt the policy of negotiation in the endeavour to get rid of the present abominable tariffs, and, if that was not successful, to have the power to retaliate. That was a very proper power to ask for. What necessity was there for a foreign Power to pay any attention to Resolutions setting forth the injury that was being done to our industries by its tariffs? If, however, we had the power to retaliate, he believed foreign countries would soon be brought to their senses. The writings of Adam Smith, himself, bore testimony to the fact that retaliation would have the effect they desired. He did not think there was the slightest danger of commercial war, inasmuch as our market was much more important to foreign countries than their markets were to us, and they would hesitate before doing anything to injure their entrance to this country. As to the colonial aspect of the question, he was entirely at one with the Prime Minister in desiring to provide some means by which the Colonies might be drawn into closer union with the mother country, and he welcomed the announcement of a Colonial Conference to discuss this great question, not with any preconceived notions as to 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. duties, but with free and unfettered hands to endeavour to find means by which the desired end could be achieved. The Colonies had shown by the preference already given, and by the Resolutions they had passed, that they were ready and willing to back this country in regard to the policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, and when he considered how hard run we were for markets for our produce, the state of pauperism, and the number of the unemployed, he said all honour to the statesman who had brought this issue before the country.

MAJOR SEELY contended that unless hon. Members opposite wished to hamper and prevent the free importation of food they would not get the support of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Sleaford or of those who believed that by raising the price of corn they could increase agricultural profits. It was mere trifling with words to say that by taxing certain sources of food supply they would not hamper the importation of food. As to the taunt that the Opposition were not prepared to do anything to meet the industrial competition of foreign nations, they were prepared to do a great deal, but they believed that protective taxation was the worst possible means of dealing with the matter. Advocates of tariff reform apparently held the view that to impose taxation made a country rich, from which it would seem to follow that if a town was not prosperous all that was necessary was to put another 2s. on its rates. The State could do much to help industry, but protective taxes, so far from helping, tended to strangle industry, and brought countless evils in their train. The Opposition were prepared to admit that foreign tariffs might injure the trade of this country, but what they wanted to know was how trade could be helped by retaliation without the gravest risk being run of doing infinitely more damage to the delicate fabric which had been built up under a system of free trade. How, when, and where were the advocates of fiscal change to apply the principle about which they talked so glibly? The hon. Member for Newcastle had made some extraordinary statements about the shipping trade. According to Lloyds' Register, of the steam tonnage launched last year, Great Britain built and launched over 1,100,000 tons, while the rest of the world built and launched only 600,000 tons, so that this decaying industry——

*MR. RENWICK said he did not call it a decaying industry.

MAJOR SEELY said the exact expression was that the industry was in "a delicate state," so that last year this "delicate" industry launched nearly twice as much shipping as the whole of the rest of the world.

AN HON. MEMBER pointed out that the figures quoted by the hon. and gallant Member referred to steam shipping launched and classed in Lloyds' Register, but a large number of ships were built by foreign countries and not so classed, and those were omitted.

MAJOR SEELY said he was quite aware of that fact, but if they took as a test of the prosperity of the industry not only the steam shipping, but the steam shipping which was the most efficient, and which, therefore, had the greatest earning power, and then found that one country with 42,000,000 of inhabitants built nearly twice as much of that efficient shipping as the rest of the world, he submitted that to speak of that trade as being in a delicate state was to trifle with words; and to deny that by our system of free imports we had built up one of the most amazing systems of shipping the world had ever seen was the act of one who shut his eyes to facts and would deny anything. It was unfortunately true that a large amount of unemployment and distress existed in this country, but it was also true, according to the last Blue-book, that in protected countries the unemployment and distress was as great as, or greater than, in our own. What he protested against was trifling with the people of the country by telling them that all their distress and unemployment would be swept away by the adoption of protective taxation, and then, by a series of Party dodges and Parliamentary manœuvres, putting off the happy day when all their sorrows should be swept away. According to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, if the importation of foreign manufactured goods ceased and the articles were made at home, employment would be found for so many thousands of people at 30s. a week. But retaliation, if successful, would increase the importation of those goods and thus increase the distress and lack of employment. If, however, it were true that all this distress, sorrow, and hunger were caused by the importation of foreign manufactured goods, and that by a stroke of the pen, as the Chancellor of the Exchequer had declared, it could be put a stop to, and, further, that the foreigner could be made to pay the taxes, what was to be thought of a Government which, after the question had been discussed for two years, simply said they were going on very well as they were, but that in the dim and distant future they might possibly begin to relieve the distress? This was not a matter to be trifled with in that way. The sorrow and suffering of the poorest of the poor was real and great, and if it were possible —which he strongly denied—to relieve it by protective taxes let it be done at once, but let them be done with the farce by which the Government, through Party manœuvring, stood between the people and the decision they wished to take.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTSON (Hackney, S.) submitted that not a single remedy for the present state of affairs had been suggested by any Member on the other side. He disputed entirely the assertion that our shipping trade had been built up by the system of free imports. Its pre-eminence was first secured by the strongest system of protection the world had ever known, viz., that under Oliver Cromwell and the Navigation Laws. The hon. Member for the Isle of Wight had stated that retaliation would increase the importation of foreign manufactured goods. [MAJOR SEELY: If successful.] He failed altogether to see how the entrance into foreign countries of British goods or of more British goods would cause an increase in the importation of foreign goods into this country.

MAJOR SEELY: The Prime Minister himself has stated that retaliation would increase exchange, and therefore more goods would come from foreign countries to us and more from us to them.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTSON said there was not an hon. Member on the Ministerial side of the House who objected to a free exchange of goods between this country and foreign countries. If any foreign country would take English goods in free, this country would let their goods in free also. His argument was that if our threat to impose a retaliatory duty caused a reduction of the duties placed upon our goods by foreign countries then the trade of the two countries would be increased, and this country would send a larger share of goods to that particular country than we did before. The foreigner would be able to send us the same amount of goods as before, but this country, in consequence of the reduced tariff charged against us, would be able to send more goods over to them, and that would be a distinct benefit to England. If in addition to this the trade of both countries was increased so much the better. The Government desired nothing more than free exchange, and they were, really, the free-trade Party in this country. They were not free importers, because that Party was represented by hon. Members opposite. No one disputed that foreign tariffs were hostile to British trade. As to the suggestion which had been made of allowing a proper proportion of representation to the various Colonies according to their importance, that was a view which he felt sure the Government would be ready to take notice of. When the conference was held he did not think it would be right to give a very small colony exactly the same weight as a large colony. With regard to what the hon. Member for Argyllshire had said, he wished to point out that no one on the Government side of the House had ever suggested that if the price of an article went down 50 per cent. duties should be imposed so as to allow home manufacturers to get the original price. They could not possibly do that, and it had never been suggested. They had never said that in cases where foreigners were clearly able to undersell us, or where the price had actually gone down through fair competition, that any duty should be put on to keep the price up. That suggestion was nothing less than a travesty upon their arguments, and they were not willing to do anything which would keep up prices to an abnormal level. The same hon. Member also asked why should they not treat a Scotsman who happened to be living in Patagonia in the same way as a Scotsman living in one of the British Colonies. He did not think there was a single Member of the House who did not desire that the trade between England and her Colonies should be encouraged, and the only difference of opinion was as to how this should be brought about.

The hon. Member for the Northern Highlands had given them a most cheerful view of the prosperity of the Colonies, and he was sure they were all delighted to hear it. The hon. Member had, however, read a letter which drew a somewhat different picture, and which appeared to imply that the New Zealander was a selfish person, with little or no love for the mother country. He would not believe that the New Zealander, or any of those living in our Colonies, had lost their affection for the mother country. It had been stated that under no consideration would our Colonies ever admit British goods in free competition with their own. Even admitting that contention, it should be borne in mind that the Colonies were now importing goods to a very considerable extent from European countries, including the mother country. Under these circumstances would any hon. Member opposite contend that it would be no benefit to this country to have British goods admitted to their Colonies at lower duties than those which were placed upon foreign goods? He thought that a preference of that kind would be a vast benefit to this country.

The hon. Member for Oldham had complained that the Prime Minister had not stated what he would be willing to do in case the conference decided upon a policy involving the taxation of food. Had anybody ever heard before of a subject being submitted to a Committee for investigation, and the Prime Minister being asked what he would do in certain events? Such a proposition was preposterous, and the Prime Minister could not do anything of the kind. He was quite sure that the hon. Member for Oldham, upon further consideration, would see that it would be absolutely impossible for the Prime Minister to lay down any rule as to what he would do in the event of certain recommendations being made by the conference. It had been suggested that the conference should be started with tied hands, and that certain lines should be laid down beyond which they should not pass. Such a proposal was inconsistent with the practice of the House, for in every case where a Committee or a Commission were appointed it was left a free hand. To declare beforehand that they were not to consider a particular matter in a particular way was really to make the inquiry useless. He could not himself see why hon. Members opposite should object to the conference having a perfectly free hand, and being able to recommend whatever the members of the conference thought would be best under the circumstances. Whether the House should adopt the policy recommended by the conference was quite another matter.

In his opinion, there was also another solution of the problem altogether different to that which had been proposed for benefiting the Colonies. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham suggested that a tax should be placed upon corn, that the Colonies should be relieved from that tax, and in order to prevent the consumers in this country having to pay more for their food other taxes on food should be reduced. They all wished to know whether in time of war they would be able to obtain their supplies of food from their own Colonies. They wished to know whether if all foreign ports were closed against them, they would be able to obtain a sufficient supply of the necessaries of life from their own Colonies. To ensure this it was necessary that their Colonies should grow corn to a far more considerable extent, and the conference might very well consider whether it would not be a wise thing for the British Empire to encourage the growing of corn by granting something in the nature of a bounty to those who grew corn in this country, and in our Colonies, and imported it into this country. The benefit of such a policy would be manifest to all hon. Members. In the first place they would be encouraging the Colonies to grow that supply of corn which they desired to ensure in time of war; and, in the second place, they would be encouraging in the same way local farmers in this country, and they would consequently have more men engaged upon the land. He was aware that the expense had to be taken into account, but the country would gain, because, instead of the price of corn going up, there would be a tendency for the price to come down, not simply by the amount of the bounty, but to a much lower extent, and so the consumer would, in this way, gain an advantage which would be an incalculable benefit to him. The difficulty, he was aware, would be the question of money, but, by what he preferred to call a policy of reciprocity, they might, by a tax upon manufactured goods from abroad, raise a sufficient amount to pay a bonus to those who grew corn within the limits of the British Empire. This was a question which he hoped would be considered by the conference. As for the Motion before the House he ventured to say that it was one which they ought not to accept.

*MR. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe) said that in some great public controversies there was an advantage in looking back over the road travelled and noting the principal milestones. It should never be forgotten that this subject was first raised by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, when he was still a member of the Cabinet, in a speech he made in Birmingham in May, 1903. He ventured to say that they might ransack the history of Cabinets and they would not be able to find a similar example of a man holding a high Cabinet position going down to his constituency and springing upon the country without notice to his Cabinet colleagues a great revolution in the accepted fiscal policy of the country which had been in operation for sixty years. Whilst still a member of the Cabinet the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham came to this House on 29th May, 1903, and in the course of his speech said—

"Therefore we come to this, if you are to give a preference to the Colonies—I do not say that you are—you must put a tax upon food."

There had been various endeavours to do a way with the full effect of those words, but there they stood on record. He wondered how many hon. Members who were tariff reformers, up and down the country, had really stood by their guns before their constituents in this matter. That was the key-note and basis of the whole controversy. The right hon. Gentleman resigned his position in the Cabinet in a very remarkable way, and the letters which appeared in the Press from the Prime Minister and right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham would bear reading again and again. Both right hon. Gentlemen used very curious phrases. The Member for West Birmingham said—

"The result is that for the present, at any rate, a preferential agreement with our Colonies involving a new duty, however small, on articles of food hitherto untaxed is . . . unacceptable to the majority in the constituencies."

"For the present." Then the right hon. Gentleman indicated that he would go and preach the gospel. Later in the letter he said—

"I suggest that you should limit the present policy of the Government."

In a manner he indicates again the word "present." The Prime Minister accepted that policy, and in his reply used curious words. He said—

"The loss to the Government is great indeed, but the gain to the cause you have at heart is greater still, and, therefore, what can I do but acquiesce?"

Therefore in the most public manner the right hon. Gentleman sent the Member for West Birmingham away with his blessing on his labours, while agreeing "for the present" to restrict the policy of the Government. Thus they had the basis of the whole policy of the taxation of foodstuffs, which the right hon. Gentleman acknowledged was unacceptable to the country, and he went forth on his efforts to win over the country to that. What had been the propaganda since? In this House, in May 1903, the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham used these significant words—

"I am prepared to go into any mechanic's house, or any labourer's house, or to address meetings of workmen or labour leaders, and, taking certain hypothetical calculations, for instance, that there was to be a shilling or two shillings on corn, say to them, 'Now this policy, if it is carried out, will cost you so much a week more than you are paying at present for your food. I set aside altogether any economical question as to whether they would or would not have to pay the whole of the duty that might be imposed; I will assume for the sake of my argument that you pay every penny of the duty, and having assumed that, I will tell you what the cost will be. I know how many loaves you consume, how much meat you eat, and know what you take of this, that, and the other, on which it may be proposed to put a duty, and I will give you a table from which you can tell for yourself how much extra wages you must get in order to cover the extra expense of living.'"

It was perfectly clear, therefore, that the right hon. Gentleman contemplated an addition to the cost of living of the workman. But the workman was very shrewd in that matter. He knew very well that his living would be increased in cost, but he knew that he would look in vain for extra wages. He was bound to say that the right hon. Gentleman had been as good as his word. He had been on many platforms, advocating his propaganda with sincerity and courage. The right hon. Gentleman addressed a meeting at Welbeck, in Nottinghamshire, primarily, he said, to the agriculturist. He was sure the right hon. Gentleman had not much practical experience in agriculture, and there were many ludicrous inaccuracies in his speech. He actually told them that the country was getting poorer in regard to stock, but in the figures given he forgot the distinction between sheep and cattle. There were more cattle, although there was a loss of sheep. He must say that if the right hon. Gentleman was well satisfied with his visit to Welbeck, free-traders in the county of Nottingham had no cause to feel aggrieved, and he ventured to invite the right hon. Gentleman to go there again. If the results of the right hon. Gentleman's propaganda had been the same in other parts of the country as in Nottinghamshire, and in the parts with which he himself was familiar, he could not congratulate him. He believed as a matter of fact that it was pretty well accepted now that the thing had not succeeded with the working classes, who were perfectly conscious that their cost of living would be increased by the adoption of the right hon. Gentleman's proposals. Would the right hon. Gentleman tell the House that he saw no difference in principle between his policy and that of the Prime Minister? The speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer that afternoon was a proof that there was no difference of opinion. The position of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham was perfectly intelligible and clear. He understood that neither the right hon. Gentleman nor his followers liked the word "protection," and he would not use it. At all events, what they advocated was an artificial enhancement of the price of food and other articles for certain purposes. The fact of the matter was that the situation was summed up by the leading organ of the Government when it said that the Prime Minister and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham were a pair of consummate whist players, both of whom knew their game. The Prime Minister was watching and waiting until the country was ripe for him to take his stand side by side with his fellow whist player.

This Amendment had been termed a dissolution Amendment. He thought it was abundantly justified. The Leader of the Opposition had pointed out with the greatest force what had been the results of the by-elections, and the Prime Minister had replied by quoting what Mr. Gladstone said about by-elections in a letter to Lord Granville. He had been at some pains to look into this matter. It was perfectly true that Mr. Gladstone wrote the letter which had been referred to. It was dated 8th January, 1874, and contained the following sentence—

> "The general situation being thus unfavourable, the ordinary remedies are not available. A Ministry with a majority, and with that majority not in rebellion, could not resign on account of adverse manifestations, even of very numerous single constituencies, without making a precedent, and constitutionally a bad precedent, and only a very definite and substantive difficulty could warrant the resignation without dissolution, after the proceedings of the Opposition in March last, when they, or, at any rate, their Leaders and their Whips, brought the Queen into a Ministerial crisis and deserted her when there."

Mr. Gladstone, with his chivalrous devotion to the Crown, had that "desertion" in his mind. He was casting about for reasons for not recommending a dissolution and not resigning, but he used further language in his letter to the Queen. They were very memorable words, and very much ad rem. In that letter to the Queen, dated 23rd January, which would be found at pages 486 and 487 of the second volume of "The Life of Gladstone." Mr. Gladstone said—

> "When he had the honour of seeing Your Majesty at Windsor the course of the local elections had been more favourable and Mr. Gladstone had not abandoned the hope of retaining sufficient strength for the due conduct of affairs in the present House. On this question the events of the last few weeks and the prospects of the present moment have somewhat tended to turn the scale in his mind and that of his colleagues.

It was evident, therefore, that the elections of the last few weeks had tended to turn the scale in his mind and that of his colleagues. But what was the House to think of the present Prime Minister, who, contrary to constitutional propriety, had put the letter of another Prime Minister to a colleague before the letter of that Prime Minister to the Sovereign. If the right hon. Gentleman treated his own letters to colleagues and Sovereign in such a way he was more unfit to occupy the position of Prime Minister than some people thought. After all, the present situation could not be judged of without taking the whole circumstances into account. Since the last general election they had a new Sovereign, a new Cabinet, a new Prime Minister, and a new policy. If, when all these things were put together, they did not constitute a demand for a dissolution he did not know what did. There never was such a conjunction of circumstances as these four, and if they wanted any additional reason for dissolution it was to be found in the condition of the House itself. It was like a man suffering from a stroke of paralysis. Members familiar with the ordinary routine of the House knew very well that both as regards the House and its Committees Members could not be got to their places, and the benches were evidence how this session was beginning. The pass to which things had come ought to be put an end to. The Government might be able to command a majority to-morrow night, but had they the constituencies behind them? Speaking on behalf of those who sent him there—and he would represent them if he was a candidate at the next election—he said unhesitatingly that the time had come for it to be dissolved, so that the House of Commons might be refreshed by contact with those from whom it alone derived authority.

*SIR THOMAS WRIGHTSON (St. Pancras, E.) said he regretted the small attendance of Members on the Government side of the House, but if he were asked to account for it he would say that it was because the supporters of the Government knew what the opinions of their leaders were, while on the other side the Opposition refused to divulge what their leaders were going to do if they came into office. They had not heard any proposals made from the other side, although challenges had been thrown out to them to give assurances as to what they were going to do. The members of the Opposition said that the fiscal proposals which had been put before the country from his side of the House would bring evils into existence which would be worse than those they had at present. It seemed to be overlooked on the other side that something like one-third of the population were suffering from want of labour. They did not deny that. [Cries of "Yes."] They would admit, at all events, that the air was full of reports as to the want of employment throughout the country. Why did that state of things exist? It was because our markets had been taken from us by the foreigner. If hon. Members would study the returns of the Board of Trade they would see that a large amount of merchandise was imported which could be equally well made in this country by our own workmen. He would like to direct the attention of the House to a matter—much more serious than the question of price, of which so much has been said in this controversy. The question he alluded to was that of cost. The terms have been confused, especially by those consumers to whom price was the only consideration and cost of production nothing. Mr. Gladstone had stated years ago that so long as we could work cheaply we should maintain the supremacy of our manufactures, and he was perfectly right, but the way he looked at the question was simply in relation to our ability to buy cheap food. Another state of things had arisen. Owing to changes in the way in which industries were conducted, there was a far greater cheapening effect by keeping mills and works full of employment. Factories were laid out to produce a maximum of work, and it was under those conditions that production was cheap. If factories were worked only to the extent of half their maximum productive capacity, the cost of production would go up 20 to 50 per cent. Mr. Gladstone expressed his view at a time when cheap food was a much more important factor in the making of the cost of production cheap. Now we had a totally different state of affairs, and unless we remedied our policy with regard to foreign countries, and took some steps to oblige them to reduce their tariffs, we should get less and less volume of trade, and our manufacturers would thereby be handicapped and their industries eventually destroyed by the increase in the cost of production. He supported the Prime Minister, and should vote against the Amendment.

SIR EDWARD GREY (Northumberland, Berwick): The hon. Baronet who has just sat down is a firm believer in a change in our fiscal system, which he says he understands. He is so convinced that that change, which we call protection, would bring increased prosperity to this country, that I am very much surprised that he does not at once give a vote in order to precipitate the election, until the advent of which, as he knows from the mouth of his own Leader, the change cannot take place. I am quite clear as to the nature of the hon. Baronet's convictions, and the way in which he arrived at them; but I do not get that clearness from his speech this evening, but from a letter which he wrote to The Times a year and a half ago. This letter was to the effect that, under this change in fiscal system which he desires, our home manufacturers—I think, including himself—would get enhanced prices for what they produce, and so would be able to produce more cheaply for export. In other words, they would charge higher prices to their own fellow-countrymen at home, and then sell more cheaply to the foreigner. A few of them would reap large profits, but the great staple industries of this country would inevitably suffer.

MR. JESSE COLLINGS (Birmingham, Bordesley): Just what the Germans do.

SIR EDWARD GREY: I am perfectly willing that we should have a comparison with Germany; you will find constant complaints of the rings and trusts in Germany having killed promising branches of German industry, which have thriven in other countries which open their markets. But I do not desire to go at length into the arguments on the fiscal question. I want to examine a little some of the reasons that have already been given for the Amendment before the House; and I should like, to a certain degree, to pay attention—because the Prime Minister himself, I think, desires it—to the Prime Minister's own policy. I cannot agree with an argument which I heard from the hon. Member for Hackney just now—that the election should be postponed because there are some hon. Gentlemen on that side of the House who have not yet made up their minds. There always will be a certain number of people who will not make up their minds till the election comes, and that argument will always be available, however long an election is postponed. But I think it is time that, at any rate, we were quite sure what the mind of the Prime Minister of this country is. The Chancellor of the Exchequer deplores the fact that the Imperial policy, as he calls it, of colonial preference, has become a Party question. We all deplore that fact. It was not a Party question two years ago; we all approved of the policy of the conference in 1902; we all approved of the policy of periodical conferences; and we all approved, at that time, of another conference being held at the date then fixed—namely, 1906. But it has become a Party question since.

It is not we who have made it a Party question. It is the utterances of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham and of the Prime Minister, that have made it a Party question; and if we had accepted their utterances that would not have prevented it from becoming a Party question. They have made it a Party question on their own side. I think it a great pity; and when I hear it said that the policy of a Colonial Conference is the policy of the Prime Minister, some special policy of his own, I say that that is an entire inversion of what is the true state of the case. The policy of a Colonial Conference did exist. It is the Prime Minister who has spoiled the policy of a Colonial Conference. His policy is now that it is not worth while to have a Colonial Conference unless you are prepared to commit this country to a scheme of preferential duties. What, then, is open to the conference of 1906? We understand from the Foreign Secretary in another place that next year we shall be engaged with a Redistribution Bill, and we shall not have had an election. May I ask the Colonial Secretary, in the absence of the Prime Minister, if no election takes place this year, will the conference be held in 1906?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. LYTTELTON, Warwick and Leamington): nodded assent.

SIR EDWARD GREY: It will be held, but the question of preference, of closer commercial union, will not be brought before it; because, from the Edinburgh speech of the Prime Minister, we understand that this question of closer commercial union with the Colonies was not to be brought forward before the conference unless his Party was in power after an election. Well, then, in 1906, according to the Colonial Secretary, if no election has taken place, this Colonial Conference will be held under the understanding that its lips are sealed on the question of commercial union, but that another conference will be summoned after the election, which may take place at the end of 1906 or at the beginning of 1907. This is to reduce the conference of 1906 to a farce. It is not we who wish to muzzle that conference. It is the Government who will be muzzling that conference. And this is the true Imperial policy! The Prime Minister admits that this matter is important, that things cannot go on as they are between us and the Colonies. That statement in Edinburgh must not be left in doubt; it was very important, but before a conference is held to deal with this question and to clear it up, an election must be held; and then the Prime Minister adopts the policy of postponing the election as long as possible. That is not an Imperial policy. That is a policy of Party convenience. The Prime Minister, no doubt, promises us more than one election. After that election, soon another election. [Ironical OPPOSITION laughter.] Well, that is his policy in regard to elections. We must not have an election now, but to make it up we are to have plenty of them at short dates at a future time.

I deplore what I am convinced is a misunderstanding which is being created by this between the mother country and the Colonies. I have no doubt the Colonies have left us in no doubt as to what their proposals were at the conference of 1902. Mr. Fielding, the Canadian Finance Minister, has told his own fellow-countrymen that at the conference of 1902 the colonial Premiers, certainly the Canadian Premier, assured the Imperial Government, this present Government, that as between the British manufacturer and the colonial manufacturer they had gone as far as they could, but that they were willing to increase the duties against the foreigner under certain conditions. If there is any colonial proposal at all, it is a proposal, not to reduce the duties on British goods, but to increase the duties against the foreigner, and when you hear the colonial offer talked about, as it is so frequently on platforms by the other side, what is really in mind is not a colonial offer at all, but the offer which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham is understood to be making to the Colonies. And the impression which has got abroad of the offer which he makes is that, in his opinion, it would be fair that the mother country should impose, for the sake of the Colonies, and in their favour, taxes upon our food at home, while leaving the Colonies free to impose duties still upon British goods, provided they still further increase the duties against the foreigner. That is where the misunderstanding lies. The impression that the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham gives at home is that he is working for free trade within the Empire. The impression he gives to the Colonies is that he is going to leave them freedom to protect themselves against the import of British goods, while we tax our food in their favour. I deplore this on Imperial grounds. We know very well that the policy of holding the Empire together by force has been tried and has failed, and nobody would think of reverting to it. It is true that the present Government, at any rate, does not try the foundation of force. But now we have a new basis for the union of the Empire, the foundation of taxes. Next to that force, I think the foundation of taxes the most insecure on which the Empire can be based. When I hear it said that this is the Imperial policy, I should like to revert to the original policy of Colonial Conferences, held periodically, held freely, free to discuss whatever the Colonies wish to propose, we on our side to be equally free to speak what we believe to be the mind of the country. I believe a conference of that kind—ungagged, unmuzzled, summoned without prejudice, summoned on terms under which opinions may be plainly expressed on both sides, is the only way by which it is possible to remove the misunderstanding which has been created between ourselves and the Colonies. They have never asked that we should impose taxes to suit them. Some of them did suggest that, if we were imposing taxes for ourselves, we should give a remission of those taxes in their favour; but they have not asked that we should impose taxes which we have not got, and which we did not need for our own purposes, in their favour. I believe that a conference, summoned on these questions, without prejudice, to make the Colonies understand what is the position over here, and make them understand that nothing short of free trade within the Empire would do, and that to remove duties would be anything but a barrier to unity—I believe that a conference of that kind would remove misunderstanding and relieve suspicion between the mother country and the Colonies. So much on that point.

I return to the policy of the Prime Minister. He asks us why we do not discuss his policy. It is because he gives us nothing to discuss. What is his policy? Liberty to negotiate—retaliation as it is called sometimes. Who can discuss retaliation in the abstract? What does he mean by liberty to negotiate? He means liberty to retaliate, liberty to make commercial war. Who does he want to make war with? You cannot discuss war in the abstract. Does the Government ask for liberty to make war without telling you with whom they are going to fight, what they are going to fight about, where they are going to fight, and what weapons they are going to use? It would be laughed out of court. It is just as unreasonable for the Prime Minister to ask us to discuss retaliation when he makes no proposal to the House or the country as to how the retaliation is to be carried out. Of course the Government have power to propose retaliation now. They need have no election. Let us know whom the quarrel is with. Let us know the special taxation by which you propose to bring the foreign country to its knees. Make your proposal to the House and it can be judged on its merits. Why postpone that until after an election? Only, I think, for one reason, that if you make any proposal of that sort you would have to submit it to the House of Commons. Are you at the election going to ask for power to impose retaliatory duties without coming to the House of Commons? That question the Prime Minister never answered; and if that be in his mind, I admit, indeed, that there is need for appealing to the country before he proposes anything of the kind.

But, Sir, even retaliation, if we had the proposal before us, becomes very nebulous. You may impose a duty and call it retaliatory if you please, but after it is imposed it becomes a protective duty. If your retaliatory duty does not succeed in its object, in reducing the duty imposed by foreign countries, then it is a nuisance to ourselves without achieving the object that we wish; but if it does succeed, then it will have to be removed; and to remove it you will have to destroy vested interests to which the hon. Baronet opposite has referred—vested interests which would plead, and, I think, plead with great force, that the Government which had created them could not justly undertake anything which would destroy them. We had an example in the corn duty. That was not a protective duty when it was imposed. It was imposed, we were told, as a revenue duty; it was not to operate in a protective sense at all. It lasted, I think, for a year, but within that year already it had come to have protective effect, and there were bitter complaints from the milling industry when it was proposed to remove it. This is the policy, so far as we know it, of the Prime Minister. But even about this he leaves us in doubt with regard to the future. At Sheffield he told us that he would lead the Conservative Party. There were some questions as to where he was leading them to, but I do not dwell upon that. He has spoken since at Edinburgh, and at Edinburgh he spoke more doubtfully. He was not then quite sure that he would lead them. On the contrary, if the Conservative Party adopted protection as a policy, he thought he would not lead them, but though he would not lead them, he would continue to support the Party not less zealously and earnestly than before. This is a great struggle, and I commend this to hon. Members on the other side of the House who are opposed to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, but follow the Prime Minister. In a struggle of this kind you must rely upon somebody on whom you can depend to oppose the policy in which you disbelieve; and if the Prime Minister is going to support the Party opposite not less zealously and earnestly than before after they become protectionists, what is the value of his opposition?

Now, Sir, I think in all this is to be found the reason of the ambiguity of the Prime Minister. Take what he has said sentence by sentence and I admit it is clear enough, but the meaning of the whole leaves everybody in doubt. He gives plain answers, but he never answers a plain question. He shows great ingenuity in giving answers to questions that have never been asked, but he evades questions upon which it would be perfectly easy to give an answer if he has a clear mind. What, for instance, is his opinion with regard to the average duty of 10 per cent. on manufactured articles advocated by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham ? Is that or is it not part of the policy of the Prime Minister ? That surely is a plain question. He has said, especially in regard to his Edinburgh speech, that nobody who is not stupid or malevolent —I think that was the phrase—can fail to understand it, and I want to ask him this. The noble Lord the Member for Ealing, the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Bristol, the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich, and others place one interpretation on that Edinburgh speech, but the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham places a directly opposite interpretation upon that speech; and I would like to ask the Prime Minister in this difference of interpretation who is stupid and who is right ? That is a plain question that may be answered. I think I can tell hon. Members opposite one difference between the speeches of the Prime Minister and the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. The Prime Minister always says the same thing, but his meaning is always obscure; the meaning of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham is never obscure, but he does not always say the same thing. That reduces discussion in the country and in this House, so far as discussion is allowed, to a farce. You have the two protagonists playing this game, and the issue is admitted by all to be most important, and on this side we believe it to be vital to the interests of the country. The game is not edifying politically, and it is bad for the country materially. You find it admitted everywhere that the suspense in which the question now rests is bad for the business of the country. The hon. Member for Newcastle spoke somewhat doubtfully of the revival of trade If encouragement be needed—and I think it is needed—for trade, surely one form of encouragement would be to let business men, at any rate for the next four or five years, know where they stand and what to expect. I think there is a moral obligation on the Government not to postpone an appeal to the country. The Prime Minister makes light of by-elections; he has cited precedents under which by-elections were held not to legitimately influence a Government in continuance of office; but the present is not a normal, it is an abnormal situation. The last election was abnormal. Never before was an appeal made by the Government of the day to a Party disagreeing with them on all subjects of home policy to support the Government for that occasion only. I will not dwell on the position, it is well put by the hon. Member for Partick sitting opposite and who is not suspect in regard to tariff reform. His words were—

> "He did not think a general election was very far off, and the sooner it came the better. The time had not yet elapsed for which the present Government were elected, but still the circumstances had altered so completely, the questions now dividing men's minds were so different from those of the autumn of 1900 that the time had come for a deliberate expression of the opinion of the country; it was not satisfactory to pass session after session in evading discussion of the subject uppermost in the mind of Members."

Every word of that is true. The importance of the question to the country is admitted; it is a question the Prime Minister thinks the present House of Commons is not fitted to discuss. The House is not merely a legislative authority and controller of the Executive of the day; it should be the guide and counsellor of the nation on a matter that intimately concerns it; and to have this propaganda instituted by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, with the blessing and good will of the Prime Minister, to have it going on in the country, and at the same time to have it definitely laid down that the present House of Commons is not fitted to deal with it, not suited to its discussion, is to bring an air of insincerity into our proceedings, and to make them more or less a farce. That air of unreality hung over us last year, it has not been diminished by the lapse of time, and the Government contemplate its continuance, and I understand that we should, after that, have another session of Parliament in addition. I will conclude by quoting, in regard to the situation, words used by the Prime Minister himself with regard to a situation of ten years ago and somewhat analogous to this of to-day—

> "I do not believe that in the whole of our Parliamentary history you will find a case in which the Government has deliberately come down to the House and said, 'We have a revolution' (that is not too strong a word for a change in fiscal policy that has endured for sixty years) 'in store for you, to be embodied in terms not yet decided upon, to carry out a policy on which we are absolutely divided, which we mean to put off for one month, two months, three months, so long as it suits us.' The House of Commons ought not to make itself a party to any such electioneering transaction as that."

Now I will go on still expressing myself in the words of the Prime Minister—

> "I think myself bound to dissociate myself from any manœuvres so utterly discreditable to the ancient honour and glory of this House."

And I shall vote for the Amendment.

Sir Edward Grey.

Mr. LAMBTON (Durham, S.E.) said he agreed with every word which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Berwick had uttered on the fiscal question, but he could not agree with him in his remarks about the other part of the Amendment relating to dissolution. The right hon. Gentleman, as a reason why the House should agree to that part of the Resolution which referred to dissolution, quoted the opinion of his hon. friend the Member for Partick; but that opinion was, in his view, the very reason why they ought not to have a dissolution. The right hon. Gentleman, in the early part of his speech, had told the House that this was not a Party, but a national question, but the Amendment of the right hon. Member for East Fife had made it a Party question. He maintained that the right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fife and the Opposition had, by this Amendment, committed a tactical mistake, and were making this question, as far as lay in their power, a Party question. He knew that on this point he was not agreeing with the speech made by the hon. Member for Durham. Hitherto that hon. Gentleman and himself had agreed in thought and in action, but he could not agree with him as to the action of free-traders on that side of the House crossing to the other side. He had always maintained in the past and had announced to his constituents that he could not follow with approval the fiscal policy of the Government; but to ask those on that side of the House who condemned a change in fiscal policy to say so was one thing; to ask them to vote for dissolution was asking them to go rather far. They disapproved strongly of the fiscal policy of the Government, but if they passed this Amendment, what would be their position in the remaining months of the session? Were they to do their best in the future, and on every possible occasion, to turn out the Government? If the hon. Member for Durham voted for the Amendment and acted up to what he had said he would have to take every possible opportunity to turn out the Government he was returned to support. He himself had no intention to aid in turning out the Government unless it announced itself as a protectionist Government. The Prime Minister had told them that he was not a protectionist.

He knew that hon. Gentlemen opposite had told them that the policy of the Prime Minister was not understood in the country nor in this House; but the vast majority of hon. Gentlemen on that side said they understood the Prime Minister's policy. There seemed to be very few of them present that night. He had expected that he would have got a cheer when he said that. He had hoped that perhaps he might induce those hon. Members to get up and tell the House what that policy really was. For his part, he confessed he did not understand it. The Prime Minister said he was surprised that hon. Members did not understand it. Hon. Members behind him said that they were also surprised. He himself confessed that he also was surprised. He thought it astonishing that anything obvious to the intellects of those behind him should be obscure to the intelligence of his friends around and below him. If that were the case, he submitted to the Prime Minister that they ought rather to be pitied than condemned. The right hon. Gentleman, the Member for Berwick, had just now stated that the Prime Minister had attributed this failing either to stupidity or to malevolence. He did not attribute it to stupidity, but rather to ignorance and innocence. They were naturally ignorant because they had not been enlightened. The Prime Minister did not answer the simplest question put to him. Ignorance could be removed by enlightenment; stupidity was ingrained. He did not think that the Prime Minister gave sufficient attention to that combination of ignorance and innocence which affected some of his followers. One came across instances in which persons had been mistaken in regard to the commonest objects. For instance, he remembered once asking a lady—an elderly maiden lady—where she had been walking, and how far she had gone. She told him that she had been to Hyde Park as far as the statue of Minerva! He did not argue the point with her, because he was quite sure he knew what she meant, and how far she had been. He did not argue with the Prime Minister for the different reason that he had not the slightest notion of what he meant, or how far he meant to go. All they asked was that the right hon. Gentleman should give them a sound fiscal policy, with the genuine hall-mark of free trade—no Sheffield-plate or Birmingham brass.

He maintained that the present state of ambiguity which existed ought to advance, and would advance, the cause of free trade. That was one reason why he would not vote for the Amendment. The Prime Minister's policy was not understood, and was not gaining adherence in the country, and every month that passed without a general election reduced the prospects of the Birmingham policy. Hon. Gentlemen might think that he was not considering this question seriously; there were, however, so few of its protagonists present that it was hardly worth the labour to get up at all. Hon. Gentlemen might think that his hon. friends and himself were not in earnest, but he could assure them they were. They were fighting now with masked foils, but it might be war to the knife later. He maintained that Unionists were doing more in the permanent interests of free trade by voting against the Amendment on this occasion than by voting for it. He knew that many Unionists in the country had changed their views with reference to protection; and if Unionists were to be hunted out of the Unionist Party or to be cajoled from the line they had taken up, they would not secure that permanent and emphatic national verdict which the country would give if the question was submitted to it as a national and not as a Party question. He hoped there would be no misconception as to his free-trade principles or as to his discouragement of the attitude of the Prime Minister and the Government in not giving them a free-trade lead in this matter; but he should not vote for dissolution because he believed that by so doing he would rather hinder than encourage the cause of free trade.

*Mr. LEVY (Leicestershire, Loughborough) said that the Prime Minister led them to believe that his policy would improve the condition of the people, and would give employment to workers now out of employment. The fact was, however, that any system which would keep out of this country manufactured goods would be detrimental to employment. Therefore, the right hon. Gentleman's policy, instead of increasing employment, would reduce it. Immediately exports and imports were cut down employment would decrease. During the last fifteen years there were two, 1893 and 1894, in which trade was more depressed than in any of the other years; and in these years both the imports and exports were smaller; the number of unemployed was greater, the number of paupers per head of population was greater, and bankruptcies were more numerous. At present an immense quantity of goods was imported into this country; but the fact remained that they had less paupers and less unemployed and a far greater export trade. What did the proposed Colonial Conference mean? They were told that the colonial representatives were to discuss whether this country should or should not tax the food of the people of this country. What for? Certainly not for the benefit of the people of this country, but in order that the Empire might be bound together. Surely there were other methods of binding the Empire together than by taxing the food of the people of this country. What about India? India imported one-third of the amount of manufactured goods which we exported to our Colonies and possessions and purchased but a trifling amount of manufactures from the protected countries of Europe and the United States of America. What then could India give in return if the policy of the right hon. Gentleman were adopted? Absolutely nothing. If there were any attempt to add to the cost of manufacture in the cotton industry, which must inevitably follow retaliation or preferential treatment, the major portion of our export trade of cotton goods would disappear. He thought it would be admitted that the export trade to India was of vital interest to the working people of this country, and of far greater importance than the export trade to any one of the Colonies. India would not gain by the right hon. Gentleman's policy; but a very considerable hardship would be inflicted on the people of this country.

The idea appeared to be that more corn was to be grown in the Colonies and that a corn tax would not make much difference in price. But when hon. Gentlemen visited their constituencies they declared that the corn tax would be of considerable benefit, because it would raise the price and thereby bring more land into cultivation. If, however, a 12s. duty did not bring more land into cultivation in France, it was certain that a 2s. duty would not be effective in that respect in this country. How were the Colonies to be benefited? They could not be benefited by corn alone. Was this country to tax its raw material. They had the statement of the First Lord of the Treasury and of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham that they had no desire to tax raw material, but it was perfectly plain that if their policy were adopted raw material would have to be taxed. Would that increase employment in this country? Certainly not. Then it was said that this country could get its food supplies in time of war from the Colonies. Had any one considered what Navy would be required to convoy across the ocean vessels carrying food to this country. For all these reasons he supported the Amendment; and he hoped that free-traders opposite would also support it.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the debate be now adjourned."—(Mr. Ernest Gray.)

MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL (Oldham) said there was a quarter of an hour yet, during which the debate might be continued. To adjourn now would be an unthrifty way of using the time of the House. Under the circumstances, he hoped the House would not accept the proposal of the hon. Gentleman, and if necessary he would divide against it.

SIR WILLIAM TOMLINSON (Preston) said that on the previous night the House adjourned early in order to enable a right hon. Gentleman opposite to speak to-day. He himself did not see the utility of proceeding at that hour; but, nevertheless, he hoped that his hon. friend would not persist in his Motion.

*MR. ERNEST GRAY (West Ham) said he was not quite sure whether he was in order; but he wished to state—

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Gentleman, having moved his Motion, cannot speak again.

*MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN said he understood that his hon. friend wished to withdraw the Motion.

*MR. SPEAKER: Does the hon. Gentleman desire to withdraw?

*MR. ERNEST GRAY: Yes, Sir.

Objection being taken, the Question was put and negatived.

Question again proposed.

*MR. ERNEST GRAY said he was surprised that the Opposition should insist on the discussion being continued, as they on that side had readily consented to the adjournment of the debate early last night for the convenience of hon. Gentlemen opposite. That courtesy might have been reciprocated. He desired to place a few simple facts in connection with the Amendment before the House. The Government were asked to resign, presumably in order that control might be placed in the hands of right hon. Gentlemen opposite. It might be that the attitude adopted by the Prime Minister on this question was obscure. He would not argue that. But one thing was perfectly certain, and that was that whatever were the views of his constituents on the fiscal question, there were several items in the social programme of the Government which they desired to see accomplished before the Government relinquished office. He would wish to point out to his free-trade friends that there was work which the Government had expressed its intention of accomplishing, but regarding which there was no hope from hon. Gentlemen opposite. The Aliens Bill was of extreme importance to his constituents. The recent election in the East End was fought on that issue. What hope was there regarding it from the other side? If the Amendment were carried they would have the criminal classes from foreign countries—[HON. MEMBERS: No, no!] He attached more importance to what went on in Committee last year than to shouts of "No."

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member Mr. Ernest Grey. cannot discuss the merits of the Aliens Bill on this Amendment.

*MR. ERNEST GRAY said he would not trespass beyond Mr. Speaker's ruling, but he thought it would be within his province to show that work could be accomplished by the Government which would not be attempted by the Opposition if returned to office. Apart from the Aliens Bill, there was the question of the unemployed. They had been told, again and again, during the debate that all was well with this country; yet tens of thousands of men were parading the streets of London and other large cities looking for work. How, then, could all be well? Reference had been made to the speech at Limehouse of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. The Leader of the Opposition also went to Limehouse, but before he was permitted to address the public he had to receive a deputation from the unemployed. He looked forward to what would happen next winter with reference to the unemployed. What would they be likely to get from right hon. Gentlemen opposite if they came into office? To whom had the unemployed to look for assistance except to the present Government. There were also other questions in the social programme of the Government which should be considered before the dissolution.

And, it being Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday, 16th February, 1905.

SAT FIRST.

Bentley Lyonel John Lord Tollemache sat first in Parliament after the death of his grandfather.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with :—

Aberdare Tramways.

Abertillery Urban District Council.

Accrington Corporation.

Accrington District Gas and Water Board.

Acton Sewage.

Administrative County of London and District Electric Power Company.

Alexandra Park and Palace.

Andover Lighting and Power.

Aylesbury Gas.

Baker Street and Waterloo Railway.

Bangor (County Down) Water and Improvement.

Barry Railway.

Birmingham Corporation.

Blackpool Improvement.

Blackpool, St. Anne's, and Lytham Tramways.

Bolton Corporation.

Bootle Corporation.

Brentwood Gas.

Bridgewater Canals.

Bristol Blind Asylum.

Bristol Corporation.

Brockenhurst Gas.

Bromley Corporation.

Brompton, Chatham, Gillingham, and Rochester Water.

Buenos Ayres Grand National Tramways Company.

Cardiff Railway.

Central Electric Supply Company.

Central London Railway (New Lines).

Channel Ferry Railway and Quay (Dover).

Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway.

Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation (Power Supply).

Chelsea Electricity Supply Company.

City of London Electric Lighting Company (Extension of Powers).

City of London (Means of Escape from Fire).

Clacton Improvement.

Clacton-on-Sea Commissioners.

Clay Cross Railway (Abandonment).

Colne Corporation.

Commercial Union Assurance Company.

Cordoba and Rosario Railway Company.

Cork Junction Railways.

County of London Electric Supply Company.

Croydon Corporation.

Croydon Gas.

Dearne Valley Railway.

Dublin Corporation (Superannuation).

Dublin United Tramways.

Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway.

Ealing Corporation.

East Cowes Gas.

East London and Lower Thames Electric Power.

Edgware and Hampstead Railway.

Entre Rios Railways Company.

Epping Gas.

Formby Township.

Gas Light and Coke, South Metropolitan, and Commercial Gas Companies.

Gosport and Fareham Tramways.

Great Berkhampstead Gas.

Great Central Railway.

Great Central Railway (Pension Fund).

Great Eastern Railway.

Great Northern Railway.

Great Northern (Ireland) and Midland Railways.

Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 1).

Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 2).

Great Western Railway (Additional Powers).

Great Western Railway (New Railways).

Halifax Corporation.

Hastings Harbour.

Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment).

Hessle Gas.

Hessle Urban District Council.

Higham and Hundred of Hoo Water.

Hitchin and District Gas.

Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Junction Railway and Dock.

Humber Conservancy.

Hythe Corporation.

Ilfracombe Harbour and Improvement.

Leeds and Liverpool Canal.

Littlehampton Urban District Council (Arun Bridge).

Liverpool Corporation (General Powers).

London Building Acts (Amendment).

London County Council (General Powers).

London County Council (Tramways).

London Gas.

London and India Docks.

London and North-Western Railway.

London Port and Docks Commission.

London Southern Tramways.

London Squares and Enclosures (Preservation).

London United Tramways.

Loughborough Corporation.

Mansfield Corporation.

Marylebone Chapels (Saint Paul's, Great Portland Street, and Saint Peter's, Vere Street).

Matlock Bath Improvement.

Medway and Thames Canal.

Metropolitan District Railway.

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District).

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers).

Metropolitan Electric Tramways.

Metropolitan and Great Central Railway Companies.

Metropolitan Pneumatic Despatch Company.

Metropolitan Railway.

Mexborough and Swinton Tramways.

Midland Railway.

Morley Corporation.

Mortgage Insurance Corporation.

Naval Works (Portsmouth Barracks Site).

Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation.

Nine Mile Point Railway.

North-East London Railway.

North-Eastern Railway.

North-Eastern Railway (Steam Vessels).

North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply.

North Sussex Gas.

Norwich Union Life Insurance Society.

Nottingham Corporation.

Nottingham and Retford Railway.

Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation.

Oldham and Saddleworth District Tramways.

Orphan Working School and Alexandra Orphanage.

Otley Gas and Improvement.

Preston Corporation (Ribble Navigation).

Rathmines and Rathgar Extension and Improvement.

Rhondda Urban District Council.

Rhymney Railway.

Rotherham, Maltby, and Loughton Railway.

Sale of Bread (London).

Sandgate Urban District Council (Sanitary Powers).

Seaham Gas.

Sheffield University.

Shepton Mallet Gas Company (Electric Lighting).

Shropshire and Worcestershire Electric Power.

Skegness Water.

South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways.

South Lancashire Tramways.

South Metropolitan Gas.

South Oxfordshire Water and Gas.

South Suburban Gas.

South Wales Electrical Power Distribution.

Southampton and Winchester Great Western Junction Railway (Abandonment).

Southend and Colchester Light Railways.

Southport, Birkdale, and West Lancashire Water Board.

Staffordshire County Council.

Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation).

Stockport Corporation.

Sunderland and South Shields Water.

Swansea Corporation.

Tees Valley Water Board.

Thames Conservancy.

Thames Harbour.

Torpoint Water.

Tralee Urban District Council.

Truro Water.

Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.

Ulster and Connaught Light Railways.

University College, London (Transfer).

Walker and Wallsend Union Gas (Additional Powers).

Weaver Navigation.

West Cumberland Electric Tramways.

West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers.

Western Valleys (Monmouthshire) Water and Gas.

Weybridge and Walton-upon-Thames Electric Supply.

Whitby Urban District Council.

Whitechapel and Bow Railway.

Woolwich Borough Council.

Workington Harbour and Dock.

Wrexham Gas.

And also the Certificates that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have not been complied with:—

Wellingborough and District Tramroads and Electricity Supply.

Wigan Corporation.

Hastings Tramways.

Coventry Electric Tramways (Extension of Time).

Hammersmith City and North-East London Railway.

Heckmondwike Improvement.

Mullingar, Kells, and Drogheda Railway.

Llandrindod Wells Urban District Council.

The same were ordered to lie on the Table.

LEEDS CORPORATION (CONSOLIDATION) BILL.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House, That (pursuant to the Resolutions of the 8th of August last) the Bill had been lodged in the Private Bill Office, together with the declaration of the agent; Bill presented; read 1ª; read 2ª, and committed.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

EDUCATION (SCOTLAND).

Return showing the expenditure from the grant for public education in Scotland in the year 1904; with statistics.

Minute of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland, dated 16th February, 1905, providing for the distribution of the General Aid Grant.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

ARMY (MILITARY SAVINGS BANKS).

Statement of the amount due by the public to depositors in Military Savings Banks on the 31st March, 1903, and of the receipts, interest, and disbursements in the said Military Savings Banks during the year next ensuing, ended the 31st March, 1904, etc.

PENAL SERVITUDE ACT, 1891 (PRISONS, SCOTLAND).

Regulations, dated 20th August, 1904, made by the Secretary for Scotland under the Act for the measuring and photographing of prisoners.

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS ACT, 1896, AND MOTOR CAR ACT, 1903.

The Heavy Motor Car (Scotland) Order, 1905.

UNIVERSITIES (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1889.

Annual report on the state of the finances of the University of Edinburgh under the Act, for the year 1903–1904.

Annual statistical report by the University Court of the University of Edinburgh to the Secretary for Scotland under the Act, for the year 1903-1904.

Annual statistical report by the University Court of the University of Glasgow to the Secretary for Scotland under the Act, for the year 1903–1904.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL AND TRAVERS' FOUNDATION (CAPITAL AND INCOME ACCOUNTS, 1903–1904).

Accounts of the receipt and expenditure of the capital and of the income derived from the lands and other property held for the benefit of Greenwich Hospital, and the Foundation of Samuel Travers, Esquire, for the year ended 31st March, 1904; together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon.

PARKS REGULATION ACT, 1872.

Rules for Osborne.

POST OFFICE (MONEY ORDERS) STATUTORY RULES AND ORDERS, 1904.

No. 1568. The Postal Order (Colonial) Regulations, 1904.

No. 1806. The Postal Order (Colonial) Amendment (No. 1) Regulations, 1904.

GREEK LOAN OF 1832.

Account for 1904.

DISEASES OF ANIMALS ACTS, 1894 TO 1903.

Hull (Channel Islands Animals) Landing Place Revocation Order of 1904.

MOTOR CAR ACTS, 1896 AND 1903.

Regulations as to weight, conditions of use, construction and speed of heavy motor cars, made by the Local Government Board under Section 6 of the Act of 1896, and Section 12 of the Act of 1903.

Regulation as to restriction of the driving of motor cars on certain highways or parts of highways situate with the borough of Beverley, made by the Local Government Board under Section 6 of the Act of 1896, and Section 8 of the Act of 1903.

(a) Regulations as to registration of motor cars made by the Local Government Board under Section 6 of the Act of 1896, and Section 7 of the Act of 1903—

> Blackpool and Tynemouth (County Boroughs). For assigning index marks distinguishing the councils of the county boroughs for the purposes of the regulations prescribed by the Motor Car (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903.

(b) Regulations as to registration of motor cars made by the Local Government Board under Section 6 of the Act of 1896, and Section 7 of the Act of 1903—

> Dorset (County). For changing the index marks assigned to the council of the county by the Motor Car (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903.

PUBLIC RECORDS.

His Majesty's Stationery Office. Schedule containing a list and particulars of classes of documents existing or accruing in His Majesty's Stationery Office which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office.

Board of Agriculture and Fisheries. Second Schedule containing a list and particulars of classes of documents existing or accruing in the office of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office.

PATENTS, DESIGNS, AND TRADE MARKS ACTS, 1883–1892.

Patents Rules, 1905.

PRIVATE PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.

Report by the Acting Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords and the Chairman of Ways and Means in the House of Commons, under Section 2 of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899—

> That, having regard to Section 16 (2) of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, the provisions of the Caledonian Railway Order, the Clyde Navigation Order, the Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution) Order, the Highland Railway Order, and the North British Railway (General Powers) Order are of such a character that they ought to be dealt with by Private Bills and not by Provisional Orders;
>
> That, save as aforesaid, the Provisional Orders be allowed to proceed subject to such recommendations as may be hereafter made with respect to the several Orders.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

NEW BILLS.

BISHOPRIC OF BRISTOL BILL [H.L.].

A Bill for re-arranging the boundaries of the dioceses of Bristol and Gloucester and Bath and Wells. Was presented by the Lord Bishop of Bristol; read 1ª; to be printed; and to be read 2ª on Tuesday next. (No. 3.)

RESERVE FORCES BILL [H.L.] (No. 4).

A Bill to amend the law relating to the Reserve Forces; And—

MILITARY MANŒUVRES BILL [H.L.] (No. 5).

A Bill to amend the Military Manœuvres Act, 1897. Were presented by the Viscount Hutchinson (E. Donoughmore); read 1ª; to be printed; and to be read 2ª on Friday the 24th inst.

SEAMEN'S AND SOLDIERS' FALSE CHARACTERS BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to amend the law relating to the falsification of seamen's and soldiers' certificates of service or discharge, and to false statements made, used, or given in connection with entry or enlistment into His Majesty's Naval, Military, or Marine Forces. Was presented by the Viscount Hutchinson (E. Donoughmore); read 1ª; to be printed; and to be read 2ª on Tuesday next. (No. 6.)

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to provide for the appointment of an additional Church Estates Commissioner. Was presented by the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury; read 1ª; and to be printed. (No. 7.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (MERTHYR TYDVIL SCHEME CONFIRMATION) BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to confirm a scheme made by a Committee of the Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council under the Municipal Corporation Acts, 1882 and 1885, relating to Merthyr Tydvil. Was presented by the Lord President (E. Vane [M. Londonderry]); read 1ª; and to be printed. (No. 8.)

THE CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (The Marquess of LANSDOWNE): My Lords, at the beginning of last session it was my painful duty to announce to the House that the Chairman of Committees, Lord Morley, was prevented by serious indisposition from assuming the duties of his post. I know that the announcement was received with genuine concern in all parts of the House, and that we all of us hoped that with rest and care Lord Morley's health would be restored, and that we should again see him at his place at this Table. In the meanwhile, the duties of Chairman were undertaken by my noble friend, Lord Balfour of Burleigh, to whom I think the House owes a great debt of gratitude, and in whose hands the Private Bill business of the House has proceeded without interruption and without detriment.

I deeply regret to inform your Lordships that I have now heard from Lord Morley that the condition of his health is such as to make it, in his opinion, impossible that he should retain the Chairmanship of our Committees. He writes to me in these words—

"My resignation, which I gave you at the end of last session, must, therefore, now take effect. In announcing it I should be much obliged if you would, on my behalf, thank the House for the extreme indulgence and consideration which they have shown to me during my long illness, and also if you would express to noble Lords on both sides of the House my grateful appreciation of the support which they have invariably given me in discharging the duties of the Chairmanship for the last sixteen years. Without the assurance of such support the Chairman's position would be a very difficult one."

My Lords, I can add nothing to those simple words. In every relation of life Lord Morley has known how to gain the respect and the affection of those with whom he was brought in contact, and I think I may say that this House could not have had a more admirable Chairman of Committees. Besides great diligence and ability, Lord Morley has shown qualities of firmness, great powers of conciliation, and a sound and steady judgment unswayed by considerations of personal popularity. I believe he has performed his duties with the universal approval of all those concerned in the Private Bill business of the House, and I may venture to add that when he has acted as Chairman of Committees of the Whole House we have always obtained from him that guidance which we had a right to expect from him, and which he was so well able to afford to our deliberations. Lord Morley's retirement is indeed an irreparable misfortune to this House.

We have now to consider the question of appointing a successor to him. I do not think I shall be contradicted when I say that if Lord Balfour of Burleigh had consented to retain the Chairmanship his decision would have been received with acclamation in all parts of the House. But he has reasons, the force of which cannot be gainsaid, for not adopting that course. And before I leave Lord Balfour of Burleigh, let me say that I have every reason for believing that his successor will find the Private Bill business of the House in perfect order, and that everything will have been made as easy for him as was possible before his assumption of his new duties. Now, my Lords, I need not say that the appointment of Chairman is not a piece of Government patronage. It lies with the Whole House. That is the more indisputable, because on the last two occasions on which the Chairmanship had to be filled, another Peer was preferred to the nominee of the then Government, and for all I know, noble Lords opposite may desire to propose some candidate of their own. But, so far as we are concerned, I may say that, having considered the matter, and having, if I may venture so to put it, turned our searchlight, not only on this Bench, but on all parts of the House, we are unable to suggest to your Lordships any better fitted candidate than our noble friend and colleague Lord Onslow.

It would be almost an impertinence if I were to delay your Lordships with a description of the duties and responsibilities which belong to the Chairman of Committees, and it would be almost equally superfluous if I were to state at length why it is we consider that Lord Onslow is eminently well fitted to perform those duties. I will only venture to remind your Lordships that he has been for twenty-seven years a Member of this House, and that during that time he has held several important offices. He has been Secretary to the Board of Trade; he has been twice Under-Secretary for the Colonies, and on one of those occasions during the Secretary of State's absence, he undertook for a time the main burden of colonial affairs. He has held the post of Governor of New Zealand, which he filled with great distinction and much popularity, and he has for two years been a member of the present Government. I may, perhaps, add in addition that he was for some time a member of the London County Council, and took a diligent part in its proceedings. My Lords, we venture to submit Lord Onslow's name as a successor to Lord Morley, and we do so with a feeling of confidence that if your Lordships are pleased to appoint him to this post he will maintain the traditions of the office, that he is likely to secure the confidence of those who are interested in our Private Bill legislation, that he will worthily uphold the dignity and reputation of this House, and that he will receive from your Lordships that measure of support without which, as Lord Morley truly said, no Chairman of Committees can adequately perform his task.

Moved, That the Earl of Onslow be appointed to take the Chair in all Committees of this House for this session.

That the Earl of Onslow do take the Chair in all Committees of the Whole House unless where it shall have been otherwise directed by the House.

That the Earl of Onslow do also take the Chair in all Committees upon Private Bills and other matters, unless where it shall have been otherwise directed by the House.—(The Marquess of Lansdowne.)

*EARL SPENCER : My Lords, I rise at once to associate myself with the eloquent tribute which the noble Marquess has just paid to Lord Morley, and to say how very deeply we on this side of the House regret that the state of his health will not permit him to resume those duties which he has carried out with such ability and distinction and to the satisfaction of the whole House. I remember Lord Morley from the moment he first came to your Lordships' House. He has always been a personal friend for whom I have entertained the greatest affection. We also deplore the fact that Lord Balfour of Burleigh cannot see his way to continue the duties which he performed with such dignity and success last session. It is not for us to inquire the reason. The noble Marquess has mentioned that this is not a Government appointment, but one which lies with the whole House, and he referred to the fact that on the occasion of Lord Morley's election Lord Salisbury had recommended another Peer for the Chairmanship. It is rather satisfactory now to find that both the choice of the House on that occasion and the choice of Lord Salisbury have been confirmed, because the Peer whom Lord Morley, I will not say defeated, but took precedence of, on that occasion was my noble friend Lord Balfour of Burleigh, who so ably performed the duties last session.

I need not go into the importance of the duties of Chairman. They require all the qualities which the noble Marquess has described as having been possessed by Lord Morley and Lord Balfour of Burleigh. I rejoice to think that one we know so well, and who has held such high office, is now proposed by the noble Marquess to fill this post. I presume that Lord Onslow will no longer continue a member of His Majesty's Government as Minister for Agriculture and a member of the Cabinet. I only mention that because the noble Marquess did not refer to it, but I presume it would be impossible for anybody filling high office in His Majesty's Government to occupy this position in your Lordships' House. We on this side, if we desired it, would have really no power to affect the issue on this question, but on this occasion we will certainly cheerfully and cordially accept the proposal of the noble Marquess, and I hope that my noble friend Lord Onslow will long fulfil the responsible duties attaching to the post.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE : I may say, in reply to the noble Earl, that we regard it as a matter of course that Lord Onslow will not retain the Presidency of the Board of Agriculture.

On Question, Motion agreed to, and ordered accordingly.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD : My Lords, perhaps it would be as well that I should state at once that the Motion standing in my name on the Paper is not intended to be of a purely formal character. I am sure I shall have general acquiescence when I say that in every portion of this House a feeling has been growing that there is not sufficient opportunity afforded to your Lordships of duly discharging your legislative duties at certain periods of the session. This was accentuated at the end of last session, when your Lordships' House was placed in an anomalous position. I suggest to your Lordships that it would be a step in the right direction, and place this House in a better position for action, if the data were in an official manner placed upon record, so that there can be no doubt of the facts with which we shall have to deal. I am now, therefore, asking that a Return shall be placed upon the Journals of this House showing at what dates Bills have been brought from the other House for consideration, and what opportunity has been afforded this House for the due discharge of our deliberate and legislative duties. It would, of course, be no use obtaining this Return without taking some action upon it; and I now give notice that I shall, at some future date, move a Resolution in the hope of, to some extent, extricating this House from the position in which it has been placed. In these circumstances I hope my noble friend the Leader of the House, with whom the great responsibility of dealing with public business here rests, will feel that there is nothing hostile in my Motion.

Moved, "For a Return, showing—(1) The dates upon which any Bills mentioned in the different Speeches from the Throne during the present Parliament were introduced into the House of Commons; (2) the dates when such Bills were transmitted to this House; (3) the dates when the different stages of such Bills were taken in this House; (4) like dates in respect of Bills of an important character not mentioned in the Speeches from the Throne, but introduced by, or supported by, the Government; (5) the dates of the Prorogation of Parliament in the different sessions of the present Parliament."—(Lord James of Hereford.)

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: My Lords, we offer no opposition whatever to the Motion of the noble and learned Lord. In fact, we on this Bench to a great extent share the views which he has expressed as to the desirability of affording to this House increased opportunities of taking a timely interest in the legislation of the session. I may, perhaps, be permitted to say that having made a very careful note of the feelings expressed in different parts of the House last year on this subject, I represented the matter as strongly as I could to my colleagues, and I am able to tell your Lordships that some of the Bills referred to in the gracious Speech from the Throne will certainly be introduced in your Lordships' House. I may mention, in particular, that the Workmen's Compensation Bill will certainly be so introduced, and I am in hopes that we may be able to make arrangements for also introducing the Valuation Bill in this House. There is, besides, an important Bill which was omitted, owing to an oversight, from the Speech from the Throne—I mean a Bill dealing with the conditions of service in the Militia, which my noble friend Lord Donoughmore will introduce in this House at an early date. There is also a Bill with regard to Crown Cases Reserved, which the noble and learned Earl on the Woolsack intends to introduce, and, I believe, another Bill dealing with corrupt practices. I hope, therefore, that I have said enough to convince my noble and learned friend that we are sincere in our desire to give the House those opportunities which he is so anxious should be accorded to us.

On Question, Motion agreed to, and ordered accordingly.

House adjourned at a quarter before Five o'clock, till To-morrow, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 16*th February*, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS [LORDS].

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in respect of the Bills comprised in the List reported by the Chairman of Ways and Means as intended to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with in the following cases, viz.:—

Abertillery Urban District Water.

Administrative County of London and District Electric Power Company.

Alexandra Park and Palace.

Bangor (County Down) Water and Improvement.

Barry Railway.

Blackpool Improvement.

Blackpool, St. Anne's, and Lytham Tramways.

Bridgewater Canals.

Bristol Blind Asylum.

Buenos Ayres Grand National Tramways.

Cardiff Railway.

Central Electric Supply.

Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation.

City of London Electric Lighting Company.

Clacton Improvement.

Clacton-on-Sea Commissioners.

Commercial Union Assurance.

Cordoba and Rosario Railway.

County of London Electric Supply Company.

Dearne Valley Railway.

East Cowes Gas.

East London and Lower Thames Electric Power.

Entre Rios Railways.

Formby Township.

Gosport and Fareham Tramways.

Great Central Railway.

Great Central Railway (Pension Fund).

Hastings Harbour.

Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment).

Hessle Gas.

Hessle Urban District Council.

Humber Conservancy.

Hythe Corporation.

Leeds and Liverpool Canal.

Littlehampton Urban District Council.

London and India Docks Company.

London Squares and Enclosures (Preservation).

Mansfield Corporation.

Marylebone Chapels.

Matlock Bath Improvement.

Medway and Thames Canal.

Metropolitan and Great Central Railway Companies.

Metropolitan District Railway.

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District).

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers).

Metropolitan Railway.

Mexborough and Swinton Tramways (Extension of Time).

Mortgage Insurance Corporation.

Naval Works (Portsmouth Barracks Site).

Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation.

Nine Mile Point Railway.

North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply.

Nottingham Corporation.

Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation.

Oldham and Saddleworth District Tramways.

Orphan Working School and Alexandra Orphanage.

Preston Corporation (Ribble Navigation).

Rhymney Railway.

Sandgate Urban District Council.

Sheffield University.

Shepton Mallet Gas Company (Electric Lighting).

South Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways.

Southend and Colchester Light Railways.

South Lancashire Tramways.

Southport, Birkdale, and West Lancashire Water Board.

Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation).

Tees Valley Water Board.

Torpoint Urban District Water.

Tralee Urban District Council.

Truro Water.

Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads.

University College, London (Transfer).

Weaver Navigation.

West Cumberland Electric Tramways (Extension of Time).

Western Valleys (Monmouthshire) Water and Gas.

West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers.

Whitby Urban District Council.

Workington Harbour and Dock.

And they have certified that the Standing Orders have not been complied with in the following cases, viz.:—

Hastings Tramways.

Llandrindod Wells Urban District Council.

Wellingborough and District Tramroads and Electricity Supply.

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS [LORDS] (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. Speaker laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the Petitions for the following Bills, originating in the Lords, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz.:—Hastings Tramways [Lords]; Llandrindod Wells Urban District Council [Lords]; Wellingborough and District Tramroads and Electricity Supply [Lords]. Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

PRIVATE BILL PETITIONS (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. Speaker laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the Petitions for the following Bills, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz.:—Coventry Electric Tramways (Extension of Time); Hammersmith, City, and North-East London Railway; Heckmondwike Improvement; Mullingar, Kells, and Drogheda Railway; Wigan Corporation. Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

PETITIONS.

IYER, N. A. SUBRAMANIA.

Petition of N. A. Subramania Iyer, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table.

LICENSED PREMISES (HOURS OF CLOSING).

Petition from Wallasey, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

LICENSING ACT, 1902.

Petition from Manchester, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY.

Petition from Uppingham, for prohibition; to lie upon the Table.

SUGAR TAX.

Petitions for repeal; from Ashton-under-Lyne; Patricroft; Radcliffe; Scarborough; Southport; Stockport; and York; to lie upon the Table.

TEINDS (SCOTLAND).

Petition from Greenock, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

PRISONS (IRELAND).

Paper [presented 14th February]; to be printed. [No. 23.]

OSBORNE.

Copy presented, of Rules for Osborne in connection with the Regulations prescribed by the Parks Regulation Act, 1872 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

ALIEN IMMIGRATION FROM THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE.

Return (in part) presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February; Mr. Gerald Balfour]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 24.]

TRADE AND NAVIGATION.

Return (in part) presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February; Mr. Gerald Balfour]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 25.]

BREWERS' LICENCES.

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 26.]

CIVIL CONTINGENCIES FUND, 1903-4.

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 27.]

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND).

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 28.]

NATIONAL GALLERY (REPORT).

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 15th February; Mr. Victor Cavendish]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 29.]

TREASURY CHEST.

Account presented, for the year 1903–4, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 30.]

GREEK LOAN.

Account presented, up to 31st December, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 31.]

PRIVATE LEGISLATION PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.

Copy presented, of Report by the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords and the Chairman of Ways and Means in the House of Commons, under The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, that they are of opinion that the Caledonian Railway, the Clyde Navigation, the Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution), the Highland Railway, and the North British Railway (General Powers) Draft Orders ought to be dealt with by Private Bill and not by Provisional Order [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 32.]

EDUCATION (SCOTLAND).

Copy presented, of Minute of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland, dated 16th February, 1905, providing for the distribution of the General Aid Grant [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

EDUCATION (SCOTLAND).

Copy presented, of Return showing the Expenditure from the Grant for Public Education in Scotland in the year 1904, with Statistics [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS ACT, 1896, AND MOTOR CAR ACT, 1903.

Copy presented, of Regulations made under the Acts, I. General, II. Borough of Beverley, III. County Boroughs of Blackpool and Tynemouth, and County of Dorset [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

ARMY (MILITARY SAVINGS BANKS).

Copy presented, of Statement of the Amounts due by the Public to Depositors on 31st March, 1903, and of the Receipts, Interest, and Disbursements during the year ended 31st March, 1904, etc. [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 33.]

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Public Records (His Majesty's Stationery Office).—Copy of Schedule containing a List and Particulars of Classes of Documents existing or accruing in His Majesty's Stationery Office which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office [by Act].

Public Records (Board of Agriculture and Fisheries).—Copy of Second Schedule containing a List and Particulars of Classes of Documents existing or accruing in the Office of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office [by Act].

PAUPERISM (ENGLAND AND WALES) (MONTHLY STATEMENTS).

Return ordered, "of Statements for each month of the year 1905 of the number of Paupers relieved in England and Wales (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 108, of Session 1904)."—(Mr. Grant Lawson.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Post Office Wages Committee — Correspondence between Post Office and Sir Edward Bradford.

MR. BAYLEY (Derbyshire, Chesterfield): To ask the Postmaster-General whether he will lay on the Table the whole of the correspondence which has passed between the Post Office Department and Sir Edward Bradford as Chairman of the Committee on Post Office Wages.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) There has been no official correspondence between the Post Office or the Postmaster-General and Sir Edward Bradford except formal letters relating to the appointment of the Committee, the submission of their Report, and the expression of my acknowledgments. I have not the slightest objection to laying this correspondence before the House; but I do not think that any useful purpose would be served by doing so.

Rules for Use of Electricity in Mines.

MR. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the rules respecting the use of electricity in and about coal mines have now been settled and published; and, in that case, in what Parliamentary Paper can a copy be found.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas.) These rules have been settled with the owners' association and approved of by the men's representatives. They are not yet in force, as they have to be proposed, by Statute, to each colliery owner individually; but the notices of proposal, some thousands in number, will all have been dispatched within the next few days, and the rules will, in each case, come into force, if not objected to, within twenty days from the receipt of the notice. The rules as settled have not yet been made public, but I shall be happy to send the hon. Member a copy if he desires it.

The Licensing Act.

MR. FREDERICK WILSON (Norfolk, Mid.): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his attention has been called to a statement by the Chairman of the Mitford and Launditch Bench of Magistrates that there were 165 licensed houses of various kinds in that petty sessional division, forty of which the magistrates considered unnecessary, and that probably thirty years would elapse before these houses could be closed; and whether, in view of such cases, the Government will take steps to increase the compensation allowance so as to make the Act effective.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas.) I had not heard of the statement referred to otherwise than from the newspaper report which the hon. Member has been good enough to send me. Assuming, however, that this report is correct, I do not gather from it the grounds on which the Chairman's anticipation is based. I think it will be time enough to consider the Amendment of the Licensing Act, 1904, when actual experience has shown it to be ineffective.

Wireless Telegraph Apparatus on Lightships.

MAJOR SEELY (Isle of Wight): To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the installation of wireless telegraphy for life-saving purposes on the East Goodwin, South Goodwin, Gull, Tongue, Sunk, and Cross-Sand lightships, as to which arrangements were in progress in June, 1903, has yet been completed; and, if not, at what date the work is likely to be finished.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) No, Sir. The necessary legal agreement between the Board of Trade, Trinity House, and the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company, with the assent of the Admiralty and the Post Office, has not yet been completed. The legal and administrative difficulties have been great, as it was necessary to deal with questions affecting wireless telegraphy in this country by legislation and to safeguard the rights of the Post Office. I am in hopes, however, that the completion of the agreement will not be long delayed, and when completed have no reason to doubt that the actual work of installation will proceed expeditiously.

Income-Tax Collection.

MR. JOHN ELLIS: To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the notices recently distributed in various parts of the country by income-tax collectors threatening legal proceedings have been so issued in consequence of instruction from him, or the Board of Inland Revenue, to accelerate the collection of this tax; and, if no particular instructions have been given by him, whether the course pursued has been in effect a new departure as being a revival of rules or regulations which have been of recent years suffered to lie in abeyance.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) The earlier issue in certain cases of the notices in question has resulted from a change of procedure, which was devised a year ago by the Board of Inland Revenue, and approved by the Treasury in May last, whereby the first demand notes were issued through the post instead of being delivered as formerly by collectors by hand. This has resulted in the issue of the first demands being completed before 31st December instead of its running over into January and possibly even February, and in consequence the date at which the second notice has been issued has this year been advanced in the case of a proportion of taxpayers, but a proportion not relatively very large. Beyond approving of the scheme of the Inland Revenue in May last I have issued no special instructions until lately, when, in view of the complaints that reached me, I directed the Board of Inland Revenue to take such steps as would avoid infliction of undue hardship on individuals.

Case of Mr. Tilak—Mr. Brewin's Report.

MR. SCHWANN (Manchester, N.): To ask the Secretary of State for India, regarding the case of Mr. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, will he state whether the report of Mr. Brewin, the investigating officer, was favourable to Mr. Tilak; and would he place upon the Table the Government's orders upon the report, together with the report.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) Police reports are privileged documents and are not communicated to the public. I am therefore unable to lay the report upon the Table or to state its purport.

Report on Police of India.

MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): To ask the Secretary of State for India if he will state when the Report on the Police of India will be laid upon the Table of the House.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) I am now communicating to the Government of India the decision of the Secretary of State in Council on the most important measures recommended in the Report. I anticipate that the Government of India will, on receipt of the despatch, publish a comprehensive Resolution reviewing the whole subject and stating the conclusions arrived at. When I receive this I will communicate Papers to Parliament.

Lislea No. 1 National School (Armagh)—Appointment of Local Manager.

MR. LONSDALE (Armagh, Mid.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Rev. R. T. Simpson has resigned the position of temporary manager of the Lislea No. 1 National School (County Armagh); and, if so, whether the Commissioners of National Education will now accede to the wishes of the parents of the children attending the school and appoint a local manager.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The Rev. Mr. Simpson has not resigned the temporary management of this school, which he holds pending the appointment of a local clergymen in succession to the former manager. It is understood that such a successor will shortly be appointed.

Proportion of White Men Employed in Rand Mines.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL (Yorkshire, Cleveland): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he will state what was the ratio of white men employed on the gold mines, either of the Transvaal as a whole or of the Rand district, to every 1,000 coloured men (Kaffirs and Chinese) so employed in each of years 1897, 1898, 1899, 1902, and 1903, and in each of the months of 1904.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) In 1897 and 1898 for the Transvaal mines as a whole, the figures at my disposal give the ratio of white men to every 1,000 coloured men as 137 and 130.

For July, 1899, for Witwatersrand mines only, the ratio was 116. For the Transvaal mines in July, 1902, the ratio was 250, in July, 1903, 174, and for the year 1904: January, 170; February, 164; March, 159; April, 161; May, 169; June, 177; July, 183; August, 183; September, 170; October, 158; November, 150; December, 143.

Representative Constitution in the Transvaal—Publication of Papers.

MR. JOHN ELLIS: To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies when the House will be in possession of Papers respecting the proposed establishment of a Representative Constitution in the Transvaal.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) I am not at present able to fix a date.

Punishment of Chinese Labourers in the Transvaal.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL: To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he will state, so far as particulars have yet reached him, what sentences have been inflicted by Courts in the Transvaal on Chinese labourers, and for what offence in each case; and, where the option of a fine was given, whether the fine was paid or other punishment suffered.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) I am informed by Lord Milner, in reply to an inquiry as to the sentences imposed in connection with the riot at the Geduld Mine in October, as follows: "Thirty-nine Chinese labourers were charged with (1) public violence; (2) assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm on 21st October. Sentences of four months imprisonment with hard labour were imposed on each on the first charge, and on the second charge five were sentenced to be imprisoned with hard labour for two months and to whipping (twenty strokes). The sentences of imprisonment run concurrently. Both offences are common law offences, but the punishment of whipping is imposed by Section 38 of Ordinance 26 of 1904 (Crimes Ordinance). By the law of the colony no sentence of whipping imposed by a magistrate can be carried out till the record has been sent to and the sentence has been confirmed by a Judge of the Supreme Court. These sentences were confirmed by a Judge and certified under Section 39 of the Magistrates Court Proclamation, 1902." I have asked to be supplied with regular Returns as to sentences and convictions from time to time.

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

Naval Guns.

MR. RENWICK (Newcastle-on-Tyne): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether he can state how it is intended to dispose of the guns now in the vessels of His Majesty's Navy which are to be put out of service to make way for new ships; and if such guns can be distributed amongst those corps of Garrison and other Artillery Volunteers which are still without modern guns.

THE CIVIL LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. ARTHUR LEE, Hampshire, Fareham): This matter is now under the consideration of the Admiralty and War Office, and until the question has been finally settled it is not possible to give any definite reply to the hon. Member's Question.

Naval Recruiting Notice.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty what explanation, if any, have the naval authorities to give of the announcement which in last autumn was displayed in every post office in Berkshire and Oxfordshire, to the effect that youths between seventeen and eighteen years may now join the Royal Navy without their parents' consent, and that the age of boys was now raised from fifteen and a half to fifteen and three-quarter years, and which was signed by Lieutenant W. E. Abrams, R.N., the recruiting officer, Oxford; by whose authority was the Royal Cipher printed on this notice; and why in an official document of the Admiralty were boys instructed that they could enlist in the Royal Navy without their parent's consent.

MR. ARTHUR LEE: The notice alluded to in the hon. Member's Question was only issued locally, and directly the attention of the Board of Admiralty was called to it they informed the officer responsible that it was an improper notice to issue, and ordered its withdrawal.

Wages of Chinese Labourers in the Transvaal Mines.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL (Yorkshire, Cleveland): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he can state the rates of wages which are being paid to Chinese labourers in the Transvaal mines, with the number of men receiving each rate; and, if not, whether he will present Papers on this subject at an early date.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. LYTTELTON, Warwick and Leamington): The rates of wages being paid vary from 1s. upwards to 2s. 6d., according to the schedule attached to the contract (see page 13 of Cd. 2183), and reach a higher figure in the case of some of those employed on piece work, though I cannot give the number receiving each rate. I am expecting to receive a report from Lord Milner on this subject which I hope to be able to publish.

White Labour in the Transvaal Gold Mines.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the figures which he has published of the number of white men employed in the gold mines of the Transvaal includes men who are temporarily engaged in such occupations as the building of compounds for the Chinese labourers; and, if so, what is the number of white men employed on such occupations and what is the number employed in the work of mining and extracting gold.

MR. LYTTELTON: The increase in work for white men is due to the arrival of Chinese labourers and to preparations for their arrival, large fresh construction works are in progress on new mines and development work on the deep levels has been greatly on the increase. I have not received a classification of the occupations of the additional white men employed in connection with the mines, but it includes the building and reparation of compounds or barracks.

MR. BELL (Derby): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he will state the number of unskilled white labourers employed in the Transvaal gold mines on 31st December, 1902, 31st December, 1903, and 31st December, 1904, respectively.

MR. LYTTELTON: According to the annual reports of the Transvaal Chamber of Mines, the number of unskilled white labourers employed in the Transvaal Gold Mines, on 31st December, 1902 was 2,150, and on 31st December, 1903, 2,472. The figures for 1904 are not yet published.

Venereal Diseases among Chinese Coolies.

MR. BELL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he can state the number of Chinese indentured coolies who have been treated for venereal diseases in the hospitals in the Transvaal.

MR. LYTTELTON: I have not this information.

Tibet Expedition.

MR. BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India, what is the total expenditure that has been incurred by the Government of India in respect of the recent expedition to Tibet.

MR. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): I beg also to ask the Secretary of State for India what is the total cost of the Tibetan Expedition; and will the Government, in view of the Imperial interests involved, pay the whole or a part of the cost out of the Imperial Exchequer.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): The total expenditure on the Tibet Mission, up to the 31st January last, was £812,736.

MR. BRYCE: That is not the full cost. I suppose we may take it that there is other expenditure not yet ascertained.

Mr. BRODRICK: As far as I am aware all the main items of the cost are here included.

Mr. BUCHANAN: Is the right hon. Gentleman not aware that in the despatch to the Government of India it was stated that Imperial interests must be superior in the settlement of this question? That being so, is there not a ground for the Imperial Exchequer sharing part of the expenses?

Mr. BRODRICK: Any pressure which has been brought to bear on the Indian Government in regard to Imperial interests was not towards increasing, but limiting the cost.

Indian Police Commission.

Mr. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India when the Report of the Indian Police Commission will be laid before Parliament.

Mr. BRODRICK: I am now communicating to the Government of India the decision of the Secretary of State in Council on the most important measures recommended in the Report. I anticipate that the Government of India will, on receipt of the despatch, publish a comprehensive Resolution reviewing the whole subject and stating the conclusions arrived at. When I receive this I will communicate Papers to Parliament.

British Mission to Kabul.

Mr. HERBERT ROBERTS: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India what were the objects of the British Mission to Kabul; at what date was such Mission determined upon; and whether he will publish Papers on the subject.

Mr. BRODRICK: It would not be in the public interest to make any statement, at the present moment, as to the object of the negotiations at Kabul or to publish Papers on the subject.

The Viceroy and the Indian National Congress.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether the Viceroy of India declined the request, made by Sir Henry Cotton, K.C.S.I., to present to His Excellency personally a copy of the resolutions passed at the recent session of the Indian National Congress at Bombay; and, if so, whether, having regard to the record of Sir Henry Cotton as an Indian administrator, this action of the Viceroy of India has the sanction of the Imperial Government.

Mr. BRODRICK: I have no official information on the subject; but I observe that a letter from the Viceroy's private secretary to Sir Henry Cotton, couched in cordial language, stating the reasons why Lord Curzon declined to receive him officially as President of the Congress has been published in the Indian newspapers. As at present advised, I see no reason to question the propriety of the course adopted by the Viceroy.

Mr. John Godden's Claim against the Dutch Colonial Government.

Sir ERNEST FLOWER (Bradford, W.): I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he can now state what the result of the representations made by His Majesty's Government to the Government of the Netherlands in the case of the claims made by Mr. John Godden against the Dutch Colonial Government has been; whether His Majesty's representative at the Court of the Hague has received instructions to urge that the matters in dispute shall be the subject of arbitration; and if the Government of the Netherlands is prepared to accept the principles of the Hague Tribunal for the settlement of claims represented by a friendly Government as suitable for arbitration.

The UNDER-SECRETARY of STATE for FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.): The reply received from the Netherlands Government is unfavourable to Mr. Godden's claim. His Majesty's Government would have been glad if the Dutch Government could have seen their way to submit the matters in dispute to the decision of a suitable tribunal, whether under the Convention of the Hague or otherwise.

British Appeals to the Sugar Commission.

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs what were the reasons which influenced the Government in appealing under Article VII. of the Brussels Sugar Convention against the decisions arrived at by the Permanent Commission at the recent sittings to penalise eighteen foreign countries; whether, if this appeal had not been lodged, it would have been necessary to prohibit the importation of sugar from all these countries into the United Kingdom; and whether there is any authority under the Convention itself or the Sugar Convention Act to postpone the discussion upon this appeal and the decision with regard to it by the Commission for more than thirty days after 2nd December, the date on which the appeal was delivered to the Belgian Government.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): His Majesty's Government appealed against certain decisions of the Permanent Commission because they believed that those decisions were either contrary to the evidence or based on an incorrect interpretation of the Convention. As to the second paragraph, I must decline to reply to a hypothetical Question. The postponement of discussion of the appeal was arranged by common accord among all the contracting Powers for their convenience. No specific authority for such a course in the text of the Convention or the Act appears necessary.

Russian Sugar.

MR. LOUGH: I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, having regard to the fact that Russia sent two delegates to the third session of the Permanent Commission of the Brussels Sugar Convention to furnish information so that the penal clause should cease to apply to Russian sugar, and that the question of the admission of Russia was rediscussed and decision postponed, whether, seeing that as good reasons exist for removing the prohibition against Russian as against Dominican sugar, the Government intend to take that step.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The Answer is in the negative. His Majesty's Government have no reason to alter their opinion that Russian sugar exported enjoys advantages of the nature of a bounty.

MR. LOUGH: Is the position of Russia undefined by the Convention?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: No, Sir, it is not undefined.

British Brandy in the United States.

SIR EDWARD SASSOON (Hythe): I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he is aware that the United States Treasury, by decree of May 2, 1904, ruled that British brandies are not entitled to the most-favoured-nation treatment; if so, will he state the grounds of such decision; is it to be applied to all other British imports; and whether any remonstrances have been addressed on the subject to the United States Government.

EARL PERCY: By the degree referred to, it was announced that British brandy is not entitled to the treatment accorded to French and German brandy. A Treasury decision of May 2, 1904, lays down that the most-favoured-nation Article in the Treaty of 1815 does not apply, inasmuch as the rates enjoyed by German and French spirits were granted in consideration of concessions by Germany and France. The reply to the third Question is in the negative. The hon. Baronet will find fuller information on the subject if he will refer to the Return of July 2, 1903, headed "Preferential Trade." His Majesty's Government have frequently expressed their dissent from the views of the United States Government in regard to the meaning of the most-favoured-nation Article in the Treaty of 1815.

SIR EDWARD SASSOON: Does the Government acquiesce in this unconventional treatment? Are they going to take it lying down?

EARL PERCY: I have said we do not hold the same view as the United States Government of our rights.

Congo State Inquiry.

Mr. EMMOTT (Oldham): I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the attention of His Majesty's Government has been called to an announcement made in the Mouvement Géographique, to the effect that the Commission of Inquiry into the condition of the Independent State of the Congo left Boma for Antwerp on 31st January last; and, if so, will he say whether he has any official information to this effect; and whether Vice-Consul Mackie or Acting-Consul Nightingale have, so far, attended any meetings of the Commission of Inquiry.

Earl PERCY: The Answer to the first paragraph is in the affirmative, but His Majesty's Minister at Brussels reported on February 9 that Monsieur de Cuvelier had no reason to believe that the report was correct. It was not possible for Mr. Nightingale to leave his post in order to attend the meetings of the Commission pending Mr. Mackie's arrival. The latter left Boma for the Upper Congo on January 20.

Sugar Bounties.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade have the Brussels Permanent Sugar Commission determined that sugar bounties are given by the following twelve countries, viz.: the Australian Commonwealth, Canada, South Africa, Spain, Roumania, Japan, Chili, Costa Rica, Russia, Argentine Republic, Denmark, and the Dominican Republic; is he aware that, in 1903, no sugar was imported into the United Kingdom from the Dominican Republic; and can he explain the grounds on which His Majesty's Government, while prohibiting, in accordance with the mandate of the Brussels Permanent Sugar Commission, all importation of sugar from Russia, the Argentine Republic, Denmark, and the Dominican Republic, has not prohibited it from Spain, Roumania, Japan, Chili, or Costa Rica?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The Permanent Commission has fixed rates of countervailing duty in respect of sugar imported from the countries mentioned in the Question. A certain amount of Dominican sugar was imported into the United Kingdom by way of the United States ports before the issue of the prohibition order. The countries named to which prohibition orders have not been applied do not export sugar of their own production to the United Kingdom.

Mr. LOUGH: Is not sugar sent from Denmark here, although that country is prohibited? Is not that a reversal of policy?

*Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order!

San Domingo Sugar.

Mr. LOUGH: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the Permanent Commission of the Brussels Sugar Convention have formally approved the system under which sugar is produced or exported from San Domingo; and, if not, by what authority the Board of Trade has given notice that the importation of Dominican sugar into the United Kingdom is in future to be allowed, notwithstanding the prohibition of the 3rd of June, 1904, and what are the conditions which are to affect importations from that country in common with other countries which are not parties to the Brussels Sugar Convention, referred to in the announcement now published by the Board of Trade; whether the importation of sugar from Hayti is also to be allowed; or whether that Republic is treated differently from San Domingo.

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The Answer to the first part of the Question is in the negative. The authority for the Board of Trade notification was an Order in Council dated February 4th, revoking the prohibition order issued on June 3rd, 1904, in respect of Dominican sugar. The revoking order was issued in consequence of the receipt of official information, through the medium of the Belgian Government, that the Dominican Government have reduced the surtax on sugar below the limits specified in Article III. of the Convention. The conditions referred to in the Board of Trade notification are those laid down in the regulations annexed to the Order in Council dated August 11th, 1903, the fourth of which provides for the production of a certificate that the sugar is derived from a factory which does not work bounty-fed sugar. No prohibition order has been issued in respect of Haytian sugar. The position of this sugar is at present the subject of an appeal by His Majesty's Government against a decision of the Permanent Commission.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): Do I understand that the action of the Government with regard to Dominican sugar is approved, or was taken in co-operation with the Brussels Commission?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: We received the official notification from the Belgian Government acting on behalf of the Permanent Commission.

MR. LOUGH: Have not the Permanent Commission condemned Hayti, and have the Government refused to prohibit San Domingo without the authority of the Commission?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: There is an appeal, but it has not yet been heard.

United States Sugar

MR. LOUGH: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether importations of sugar from the United States into the United Kingdom have recently taken place; and, if so, what quantity has been so imported; and, seeing that discussion has taken place at the Brussels Sugar Convention with regard to the sugar systems of the United States and Cuba, whether it will be necessary under the Sugar Convention Act to prohibit further importations from them into the United Kingdom.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: A small quantity of refined sugar, probably refined in the United States, has recently been imported into the United Kingdom. The quantity received in the two months December and January was about 700 tons. No prohibition order can be issued under the Sugar Convention Act with respect to sugar imported from any country, except on the report of the Permanent Commission that a bounty is granted in that country. No such report has been received from the Commission with respect to the countries named in the Question.

MR. LOUGH: Has not the position of this country with the United States and Cuba been discussed? Can the right hon. Gentleman tell the House the effect of the discussion?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: No, Sir, I cannot do that.

MR. LOUGH: Can sugar be freely imported from these countries?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Certainly, Sir.

Colonial Contribution to Cost of Pacific Cable.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, can he say whether any provision has been made for the payment by the Colonies of their contribution of £1,444,444 to the capital expenditure on the Pacific Cable; whether this sum, or any portion of it, has yet been paid by the Colonies; and, if not, when it will be paid.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN, Worcestershire, E.): The amount borrowed for capital expenditure on the Pacific Cable is being repaid by a terminable annuity provided in the Vote for Telegraph Subsidies and Pacific Cable (Civil Service Estimates, Class V, 5). The colonial shares of the expenditure are recovered from the Colonial Governments after the close of each financial year. The first instalment of the annuity for repayment of the borrowed capital was included in the Vote for 1903–4, and the colonial share has been received in the present financial year.

The Unfunded Debt.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer can he state the total amount of the Unfunded Debt, together with the amount of each of the items composing it, on 31st December last and at the present date respectively; and can he say whether he proposes to take any, and, if so, what, measures for diminishing it.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The Unfunded Debt on 31st December last amounted to £88,133,000, made up of War Stock and Bonds, £30,000,000: Exchequer Bonds, £26,500,000; Treasury Bills, £31,633,000: total, £88,133,000. At present the Unfunded Debt amounts to £81,633,000, having been reduced by £6,500,000, Treasury Bills paid off in the interval. I have no announcement to make as to future dealings with the Unfunded Debt except that £4,000,000 of the Treasury Bills now outstanding must by law be paid off before the 31st of next month.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Is there not usually another item of the Unfunded Debt, viz., Temporary Advances from the Bank?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I have given the hon. Member a full statement. If he wants more information I shall be obliged if he will put down a Question.

South African War Contribution.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer can he state the total amount, on the 31st December last, of those particular liabilities of the State which in the accounts are termed other capital liabilities, and which amounted, on 31st December last, to £31,868,323; and, seeing that in the accounts there is given a list of estimated assets set against these liabilities, which list includes the advance of £3,000,000, since repaid, to the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, can he explain why there is not also included in the list the war contribution of £30,000,000 due from those colonies.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: It is the practice to publish full particulars of the capital liabilities to which the hon. Member refers in Returns made up to the close of each financial year. To publish corresponding particulars for arbitrary dates in the course of the year would involve special calculations. The accounts up to 31st March next will be published as soon as possible after that date. The temporary advance of £3,000,000 to the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony was shown in the accounts on the 31st March, 1903, as an unrepaid advance. The war contribution of £30,000,000 does not come within that description.

*MR. McCRAE (Edinburgh, E.) asked whether it was not the case that the £3,000,000 repaid by the Transvaal was employed to meet the deficit of last year, and therefore could not be regarded as an asset.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN replied that there were two sums of £3,000,000. One sum was advances from balances which was repaid into balances; the other sum was, in accordance with the note appended to the Estimates, devoted on repayment to reduction of debt.

*MR. McCRAE: But the first sum cannot be regarded as an asset.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: Of course not.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Why is there not included the war contribution of £30,000,000 from the colony? Is that not regarded as an asset?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The £3,000,000 was included because the sum was an unpaid balance; the £30,000,000 was not included because it did not come within that category. I may here anticipate an Answer which I had to give on behalf of the Prime Minister to a Question of the hon. Member for Lynn Regis appearing later on the Paper. I am not in a position to make any further statement on the subject of the war loans and balances.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Am I right in concluding that the Government have ceased to regard that sum as an asset?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The hon. Member is obviously not entitled to draw such an inference from my words. I must ask the House to rest content with my statement that I am not in a position at present to give any further information.

*MR. McCRAE: Will the right hon. Gentleman say whether those who were prepared to guarantee the instalment of £10,000,000 are still prepared to fulfil their obligations?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I have not the slightest reason to suppose that they are not; indeed, I am sure that they are.

MR. WHITLEY (Halifax): Is there any provision made in the Estimates of the colony with a view to paying any part of this sum?

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! That hardly arises out of the right hon. Gentleman's Answer.

The following is the text of the Question referred to—

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether any, and if so what, steps have been taken by His Majesty's Government to procure the payment by the Transvaal and Orange River Colony of the war contribution of £30,000,000, to be raised by a loan at 4 per cent., whereof certain Transvaal mining firms undertook to underwrite £10,000,000, the payment of which contribution was the condition expressly attached by His Majesty's Government to the guarantee by the United Kingdom of the Transvaal loan of £35,000,000; and whether, seeing that when this House was asked to agree to the guarantee in question on condition of the contribution of £30,000,000, His Majesty's Government stated that the first instalment of that contribution would be received probably at the commencement of 1904, he can now give a definite assurance that either the whole contribution or the first instalment thereof will be received by any, and, if so, what date.

Post Office Savings Bank Deposits.

DR. MACNAMARA (Camberwell, N.): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General what, on 31st December, 1904, was the total amount due to depositors in the Post Office Savings Bank; what amount of Consols were sold during the year 1904, and at what average price; what was the amount of Consols held on 31st December, 1904, and at what price was it taken in the valuation of securities; what was the excess (if any) of liabilities over assets on 31st December, 1904.

THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL (Lord STANLEY, Lancashire, Westhoughton): The total amount due to depositors in the Post Office Savings Bank on 31st December, 1904, cannot be stated with accuracy till the figures are finally proved. The approximate amount was £148,326,000. The amount of Consols sold during the year 1904 was £1,664,972. 6s. 2d., at an average price of £87 18s. 1d. The amount of Consols held on 31st December, 1904, was £60,085,422. 11s. 8d. No valuation of securities at the end of the year is now required by Parliament; and without such valuation it is not possible to state the excess of liabilities over assets at the 31st December, 1904.

Postmaster-General's Annual Report.

DR. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether, in view of the statutory obligation to present his Annual Report to Parliament before the last day of July in each year, he will explain why, in the last session of Parliament, the Report was not presented until 8th August; and why, seeing that the Savings Bank Act, 1904 (4 Edw. VII., c. 8) releasing him from the obligation to prepare a balance-sheet did not become law until 1st August, he will explain the omission to lay a balance-sheet last year before Parliament.

LORD STANLEY: I am not aware that the Postmaster-General is under any statutory obligation to present an Annual Report to Parliament before the last day of July in each year, and I shall be obliged if the hon. Member will cite the Statute to which he refers. The balance-sheet required to be presented to Parliament by Sec. 9 of the Post Office Savings Bank Act of 1861 (the section to which the hon. Member refers as having been repealed by the Act of 1904) was presented on 14th June, 1904 (House of Commons Paper No. 211).

Post Office Savings Bank Securities.

Dr. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether, in addition to the enumeration of the securities, he will lay before the House a valuation on any given basis of the eighteen annuities for terms of years, being part of the securities standing in the names of the National Debt Commissioners on account of the Post Office Savings Bank on 31st December, 1903, as set out in his Fiftieth Report; if not, will he recommend to the Government the necessity to bring in a Bill to amend the law so that, in default of a balance-sheet as enacted by the Savings Bank Act, 1904, sufficient particulars may be given in his Annual Report to make it possible to value the securities.

Lord STANLEY: Parliament has defined so recently as last year the nature of the information to be laid before the House with regard to the securities held on account of the Savings Bank, and I am not prepared to recommend further legislation on the subject. It is proposed to lay before the House shortly a statement in the form which will be adopted under the Act of last year.

Canadian Cattle—Importation Restrictions.

Captain DONELAN (Cork, E.): I beg to ask the hon. Member for North Huntingdonshire, as representing the Board of Agriculture, whether any representations have been made by the Canadian Government during the recess with regard to the removal of the restrictions at present placed upon the importation of Canadian store cattle; and whether, in the interest of the health of home-bred cattle, and in view of previous losses from imported contagious diseases, the Department will decline to recommend the removal of the restrictions now in force.

Mr. BUCHANAN: At the same time I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether a despatch has recently been received from the Dominion Government calling attention to the exclusion of Canadian cattle from British ports; what reply has been sent by His Majesty's Government; and whether the correspondence will be laid upon the Table.

Mr. AILWYN FELLOWES (Huntingdonshire, Ramsey): Perhaps the hon. Member for East Perthshire will allow me to answer his Question at the same time. We have recently received a despatch in which it is represented that Canadian feeling and opinion are still in favour of the repeal of the existing statutory restrictions on the importation of live animals, so far as the Dominion is concerned. Whilst accepting this assurance my noble friend remains of the opinion he has frequently expressed that the proposed amendment of the law would be undesirable. The correspondence which has passed does not add to the information I have given.

Mr. CATHCART WASON (Orkney and Shetland): How has the hon. Gentleman arrived at the conclusion that Canadian opinion is in favour of this repeal?

Mr. AILWYN FELLOWES: From a despatch which the Home Government has received.

Mr. CATHCART WASON: From where?

Mr. AILWYN FELLOWES: I am not sure where the despatch came from.

Mr. BUCHANAN: Has a reply been sent to the despatch of the Dominion Government, and will the correspondence be laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. AILWYN FELLOWES: I am not quite sure if a reply has been sent. I will consult my noble friend as to laying the correspondence on the Table.

County Court Fees.

Sir ALBERT ROLLIT (Islington, S.): I beg to ask Mr. Attorney-General whether any steps have been, or are likely to be, taken to reduce the Court fees payable under proceedings in the County Courts, the present scale of such fees being deterrent, and in many cases prohibitive, to suitors.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL (Sir Robert Finlay, Inverness Burghs): The present scale of fees was settled after a reference to a Committee, appointed by the Lord Chancellor and the Treasury, so recently as 1900, and they were specially instructed to consider whether any of the fees could be reduced. There were a great many suggestions made and referred to the Committee, including a valuable communication from the Law Society, all these were very fully considered, and some reductions were made. I understand that it is not likely that the scale will be again revised in the immediate future. The fact that the number of suits instituted in the County Courts is so large as it is, tends, I think, to show that the present fees cannot have any deterrent or prohibitive effect to the extent which my hon. friend apprehends.

Sheep Disease in County Wicklow.

Mr. JAMES O'CONNOR (Wicklow, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Department of Agriculture have had under investigation the character of the diseases which have destroyed large flocks of sheep in county Wicklow; whether they have arrived at any satisfactory results; and, if so, whether the Department will issue instructions to farmers for the treatment of sheep affected by these diseases.

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. Wyndham, Dover): Yes, Sir. Carcases of affected sheep have been sent to the Royal Veterinary College for examination and further investigations are being locally made by the Department.

Avondale Estate, County Wicklow.

Mr. JAMES O'CONNOR: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he has received a copy of a resolution recently passed by the Rathdrum District Council protesting against the action of the Department of Agriculture in letting, or advertising to let for grazing purposes on the eleven months system, over 100 acres of the lands of Avondale, county Wicklow; whether he is aware that the estate was bought for the purpose of establishing thereon a school of forestry; and whether he will advise the Department to withdraw their proposal to let a part of the estate in grass.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The resolution has been received. There is no reason why the Department of Agriculture should add to the expense of such an experiment by refraining from letting land, pending the completion of the steps for carrying it out.

Irish Local Government—Public Bodies Order, 1904.

Mr. JAMES O'CONNOR: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that a number of local councils in Ireland have protested against the Public Bodies Order, 1904, on the ground that it would considerably increase local expenditure, and impose extra work on the officials; whether the local councils were consulted by the Local Government Board before they issued the Order; and, whether, in view of the opposition of the county and district councils, he will instruct the Local Government Board to withdraw the Order.

Mr. WYNDHAM: Representations to this effect have been made. The councils concerned were invited to indicate in what respects the Order would increase expenditure, and impose unnecessary work on officials, but, so far, they have not complied with that request. Many members and officials of local authorities have, on the other hand, informed the Board that the new Order is an improvement on the old one. County councils generally were consulted before the issue of the Order. The Local Government Act of 1902 imposed upon the Board the duty of effecting a codification of former Orders, and the Board is satisfied that the recent Order is essential to a proper system of financial administration by local authorities.

Mr. JAMES O'CONNOR: Will the right hon. Gentleman suspend the Order, until the Royal Commission on the Amalgamation of Irish Unions has reported?

Mr. WYNDHAM: I do not think I can take that course.

Dublin Hackney Carriage Stands.

Mr. NANNETTI (Dublin, College Green): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been drawn to the regulations which have been made by the Police Commissioners in Dublin, with reference to the hazards for the hackney carmen of that city; whether any complaints have been made by the frontage owners of the streets where these regulations are being put in force; and whether he will take steps to secure to the carmen the old hazards which they have used for years past, and which are essential to their means of livelihood.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The changes in the hazards for hackney vehicles were made owing to increased traffic and the consequent necessity of avoiding obstruction in the streets, and inconvenience to the public. No complaints of the character mentioned have been received by me; but if the hon. Member will communicate the details of a specific case I shall make further inquiry.

Mr. NANNETTI: Has not the Commissioner of Police received a communication from the frontage owners protesting against the hazards being removed?

Mr. WYNDHAM: I must ask for notice of the Question.

Dublin Car and Cab Licence Duties.

Mr. NANNETTI: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been directed to the reply given by the Commissioner of Police to the cab and car owners of Dublin in reply to their application for an extension of time for the payment of their licence duty; if so, will he, in view of the scarcity of employment, direct the Commissioner to extend the period for payment in all cases to the 27th March next; whether he will see to the period for payment being permanently fixed for the 1st July as heretofore; and, also, whether he will consider the advisability of proportionately reducing the licence duty paid in Dublin to the level of that paid in Cork and Belfast.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The Commissioner of Police has expressed his willingness to consider individual applications for an extension of time. This offer, in my opinion, is a reasonable concession to the necessities of the situation. Prior to 1890 the licence duty on hackney cars was fixed at £2, and payable in two instalments, January and July. The duty was reduced to £1 in that year, and made payable in one sum in January or February. There are no sufficient grounds for altering the period for payment, or for reducing the existing duty on hackney vehicles in Dublin.

Assault by a Clergyman at Westport.

Mr. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that a man named MacAskall was knocked down and kicked at Westport on the 6th ultimo by the Rev. M. MacDonnell, Roman Catholic Administrator, and that the police, whose protection MacAskall was under at the time, were stoned; if any arrests were made; and, if not, will he order that the offenders be prosecuted who are known to the authorities.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The occurrences referred to in this Question are the subject of magisterial investigation which, I understand, will take place at Westport Petty Sessions to-day. I am precluded, therefore, from discussing the facts at present.

Irish School Teachers as Polling Clerks.

Mr. SLOAN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will explain why national school teachers have recently been debarred from acting as polling clerks at municipal elections, while they are permitted to act as such at Parliamentary elections.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The barrier has been removed by the new Code of Regulations now in course of issue.

Sir Antony MacDonnell.

Mr. CHARLES CRAIG (Antrim, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland what part, if any, Sir Antony MacDonnell, the Under-Secretary, took in suggesting or preparing the proposals now known as the Dunraven Devolution Scheme; was the date on which Sir Antony MacDonnell first communicated his ideas on the subject to Lord Dunraven prior to the Second Reading of the Land Bill of 1903; when did the Chief Secretary first hear of these communications, and what steps did he or the Government take in consequence thereof; and whether Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment in Ireland is still regarded by the Government as a temporary one; and, if so, when is it intended to terminate it.

MR. WYNDHAM: (1) Sir Antony MacDonnell, in response to a request from Lord Dunraven, assisted him in discussing and formulating these proposals, which Sir Antony erroneously, but honestly, believed to be within Unionist principles. The Government hold that such proposals, embracing as they do the creation of a Financial Board and the delegation of legislative powers other than for Private Bills, are altogether inadmissible. (2) I understand that the two proposals I have named were discussed for the first time by Sir Antony with Lord Dunraven in August or September last. Sir Antony, I know, has discussed other matters at earlier dates with Lord Dunraven, and there is no reason why he should not have done so. (3) I saw these proposals for the first time in The Times newspaper of September 26th last and immediately expressed my total dissent from them. Sir Antony MacDonnell at once wrote to Lord Dunraven stating that he could have no further communications with him in connection with the programme of the Reform Association. The matter was considered by the Cabinet, and the Government expressed through me their view that the action of Sir Antony MacDonnell was indefensible. But they authorised me to add that they were thoroughly satisfied that his conduct was not open to the imputation of disloyalty. (4) Sir Antony MacDonnell undertook the office of Under-Secretary at my special request and without any intention of permanently devoting to Ireland the administrative talents which have won him so high a place among Indian officials. It was in the full knowledge of this fact that his services were accepted; but it is obviously impossible to state the precise date of their completion.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE (Antrim, N.): Are we to understand from the right hon. Gentleman's reply that in the matter of these proposals Sir Antony MacDonnell acted without any official sanction or approval?

MR. WYNDHAM: I must ask the hon. Member to give notice of that Question. I have referred to the two points to which I took grave exception, and if he will put a Question on the Paper I will answer it.

MR. CHARLES CRAIG: I asked when the right hon. Gentleman first heard of these communications between Sir Antony MacDonnell and Lord Dunraven. He says he first saw them in The Times. I have no recollection of their being published there.

MR. WYNDHAM: I stated very clearly that Sir Antony MacDonnell had had frequent communications with Lord Dunraven on many subjects. Why should he not? So have I. But what I also said was that these two proposals to which I took grave exception were never before me until I saw them in The Times newspaper.

Seed Potato Grants in Ireland.

COLONEL NOLAN (Galway, N.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if he would supplement the grant of the Irish Agricultural Department by making a moderate contribution from the Imperial Exchequer towards cheapening the seed potatoes which are now being supplied on loan to small occupiers in the more distressed unions of Ireland.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The Agricultural Department has made a grant of £10,000 for the purpose of administration of the seed supply and the reduction of the price of seed. This grant will reduce the charge in respect of principal and interest on the seed loans, so that it is expected that the occupiers will obtain the seed at something under the market price at the port of despatch. The cost of the seed inspectors will fall on the Votes; but it would be a new departure, unwarranted in my opinion by the circumstances, to make a grant for the seed itself direct from Votes.

MR. DILLON (Mayo, E.): put a Supplementary Question, but Mr. WYNDHAM asked that notice should be given of it.

Army Pensioners in Irish Lunatic Asylum.

MR. SLOAN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War if he will consider the advisability of withdrawing the Government Circular (No. 7227 | 01), dated 29th April, 1901, dealing with Army pensioners in district asylums; and in the event of the asylum authorities not claiming either the pension or the grant, the regulations will be framed so as to permit of the capitation grant of 4s. per week being refunded to dependent relatives.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. BROMLEY DAVENPORT, Cheshire, Macclesfield): Under the Superannuation Act, 1887, a stoppage is required from the pensions of all lunatics towards whose maintenance a contribution is made out of moneys provided by Parliament. Such contributions, if claimable, is paid to the local authorities, whether claimed or not by the asylum authorities. If, therefore, the pensions were not abated to the extent of the contribution, the State would be paying twice over for the pensioner's maintenance. The circular mentioned is in accordance with the Statutes, and cannot be withdrawn.

MR. SLOAN: May I ask the hon. Gentleman whether, in view of the resolutions passed by the District Asylums Committee, he will consider the desirability of giving the committee the power they ask for.

MR. BROMLEY DAVENPORT: They have full power to deal with any money allotted to them. By statute these pensions have to be paid to the local authority.

The Judge Advocate-General.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether Sir Francis Jeune still continues to discharge the duties of Judge Advocate-General; if not, when did he resign that position, and by whom are the duties appertaining to the office of Judge Advocate-General discharged; and whether, having regard to the fact of the importance of the revision of the sentences of Courts martial and the adjudication of questions of military law to the liberty of the subject, it is contemplated to restore the office of Judge Advocate-General to its former position of a Ministerial office whose holder will be responsible to Parliament and subject to Parliamentary criticism for his official acts.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): Lord St. Heliers still discharges the duties of Judge Advocate-General. I have no statement to make at present as to any change in the office.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that the duties have never before been discharged by a Peer?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I was not aware of the fact. But it does not seem to me very important.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Well, I am aware of it.

The Secretary for Scotland and Company Directorships.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he is aware that the Marquess of Linlithgow, who has been appointed Secretary for Scotland, is a director of two public companies, one of which is the Bank of Scotland; whether, having regard to the possibly conflicting interests of the Bank of Scotland and the Government, and the possible financial arrangements between that bank and the Government, the retention by the Marquess of Linlithgow of his directorship of the Bank of Scotland is compatible with the discharge of the duties to the public incidental to his office of Secretary for Scotland; and whether he will take any, and, if so, what, steps to secure that in this case the duties of a Minister of the Crown to the country should not be in conflict with his duties as director of the Bank of Scotland.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Lord Linlithgow is a director of the Bank of Scotland, as his two predecessors in office were and still are. There is nothing whatever in that position that conflicts with his duty as Secretary for Scotland, nor is any such conflict, in my opinion, possible.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Is a Cabinet Minister to be in one capacity representing the Government and in another capacity representing the Bank of Scotland? I must have an Answer to that Question.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The hon. Member asks that Question under a misapprehension. The Bank of Scotland is in no sense an official or semi-official institution. It is only a private bank.

NEW MEMBER SWORN.

John O'Connor, Esquire, for the County of Kildare (North Kildare Division).

NEW WRIT.

For the County of Westmoreland (Northern or Appleby Division), in the room of Richard Rigg, Esquire (Manor of Northstead).—(Mr. Herbert Gladstone.)

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [15th February] to Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that, the various aspects of the fiscal question having now been fully discussed in the country for nearly two years, the time has come for submitting the issue to the people without further delay.'"—(Mr. Asquith.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

*MR. ERNEST GRAY (West Ham, N.) asked the Speaker, on a point of order, whether the action on the previous night of the Member for Oldham in objecting to his Motion for the adjournment of the debate on Mr. Asquith's Amendment to the Address, and the action of the House in refusing leave to withdraw the Motion, had deprived him of the right to represent the views of his constituents on the Amendment.

*MR. SPEAKER pointed out that when the hon. Member moved the adjournment he was speaking on the Amendment, and his Motion being disposed of by the vote of the House, the Amendment again came under discussion, and the hon. Member could not speak upon it again. It was true that the hon. Member afterwards made some observations, and he (the Speaker) took some blame to himself that he was not strictly regular in permitting him to do so, but he had assumed—apparently wrongly—that the hon. Member was only occupying the few minutes that remained before midnight with a view to carrying the debate over to the next day in accordance with the intention of both sides of the House.

LORD HUGH CECIL (Greenwich) asked if the hon. Member could not continue his speech by the general consent of the House, apart from the ordinary practice.

*MR. SPEAKER: In the peculiar circumstances of the case if there was a general consent of the House I certainly should not consider it my duty to interfere.

*MR. ERNEST GRAY said he did not raise the point of order for the purpose of gaining the indulgence of the House. His desire had been to remove a misapprehension which apparently existed in certain quarters as to what occurred on the previous night. He was fully sensible of the indulgence extended to him by the House, and he would endeavour to show his appreciation of their kindness by occupying as few minutes as possible in seeking to discharge the duty upon which he had received imperative instructions from the large working class constituency he represented. The Amendment before the House called upon the Government to make an appeal to the country and to cast aside the whole programme outlined in the King's Speech in order to get the view of the electorate upon one single subject. It had been frequently alleged during the course of the debate that the attitude adopted by the Prime Minister was involved in obscurity, but he could not help thinking that that obscurity arose not from consideration of the plain statements made by the Prime Minister, but from the unauthorised versions, the free translations, the criticisms and the commentaries with which the right hon. Gentleman's statement had been surrounded. They had an illustration of that in the course of the debate on the previous night, when the right hon. Baronet the Member for Berwick made a statement which created considerable astonishment. It was as well that that should be cleared up. He asserted that the statement of the Prime Minister that it was necessary for him to get the assent of the country before he could impose retaliatory duties was inaccurate, because the Government already had the power to impose such duties. If that were true it certainly would dispose of very much of what the Prime Minister had stated to the country. But was it true? Was it not very far from the truth? Was it not very seriously misleading? Was it not the fact that although we had not by any statute or by any formal declaration lost our right to impose duties for other than revenue purposes, yet we had by long disuse forfeited the right to exercise that power. Suppose the Government in its next Budget suggested that some duty should be imposed not merely for revenue purposes but for the purpose of breaking down hostile tariffs. What would be the attitude of hon. Gentlemen opposite. What would be the attitude of the hon. Member for Berwick himself? Would not one and all declare that such a departure from the practice of the last sixty years was one which ought to have the consent of the country, and that a proposal of that kind would be nothing short of revolution. He would have thought that nobody would more strongly condemn anything in the nature of a revolution in our practice without the assent of the electors being first obtained than the hon. Baronet. But he did not want to dwell upon that point. He did want in a sentence or two to discharge the very simple duty which devolved upon him as the representative of a large working-class constituency.

They had had a pledge given them that no change should be made in the fiscal policy of this country during the life of the present Parliament, and, indeed, no change would be made until a new Parliament had been elected. They were told with great confidence by hon. Gentlemen opposite that there would be no change made in the next Parliament because they would occupy the Benches now filled by the supporters of the present Government. Surely if that were the case, this striving for enlightenment in regard to a policy which, according to their own assertions, was not likely to be put into operation for many years to come, was hardly justified. There was surely more justification for the demand to know what policy hon. Gentlemen opposite intended to adopt when they got into power. The right hon. Gentleman who moved the Amendment on the previous day gave not one iota of information as to the alternative which he had to place before the country. He did think that those of them who had pinned their faith to some reform in our fiscal procedure were justified in asking for some enlightenment as to the alternative right hon. Gentlemen opposite were prepared to put forward. It was admitted on all hands that the basis of taxation ought to be more widely extended than it was at the present time, and, if the Prime Minister was not to remain in power, he would like to know what right hon. Gentlemen opposite would do to lighten the burdens in heavily rated districts such as the one he had the honour of representing. This was a matter which touched the people more closely than any other question. Financial burdens, central and local, were crushing the life out of many industrial centres, and if they were to get no relief from the present Government they ought to know what right hon. Gentlemen opposite were prepared to suggest as an alternative.

One of the objects of the Amendment was to angle for the support of certain Gentlemen sitting on the Ministerial side of the House, whose views did not coincide with those of the right hon. Gentlemen the Member for West Birmingham, or with those of the Prime Minister. He would like to remind them that there were great industrial communities demanding the completion of reforms before the Government made its appeal to the people. What was to be done for the workmen in the way of compensation for accidents? Were they to secure that protection which was foreshadowed in the King's Speech? What was to be done in regard to alien immigration, and what was to be done particularly with regard to the relief of the poor? Those who lived in districts which had not felt the strain experienced elsewhere during the last few months could not appreciate the intensity of feeling on that subject. With these people the fiscal question stood in the background when compared with measures which were intended to secure for them the means of living in the winter months, and he believed they would visit very sternly their dissatisfaction on the heads of those who lightly cast away the chance now offered of passing some ameliorative legislation. This was a question of supreme importance to the labouring community. The sentence "Give us this day our daily bread" was not to them a mere conventional phrase. It was a phrase of grim reality, and they asked that the fiscal question should not be allowed to bar the way to the adoption of reforms, which were immediately necessary. They agreed that there ought to be inquiry to ascertain whether means could not be found for protecting the labour in which they had been engaged, but which they were losing by the stress of foreign competition. With them, however, the question of supreme importance was the relief which was outlined in the King's Speech, which gave them some earnest of the intention of the Government to secure employment for the thousands now unemployed in the Metropolis and adjoining districts.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN (Birmingham, W.): Mr. Speaker, my name has been mentioned more than once in the course of the debate, and I should therefore like to say something about the Amendment and the questions which are connected with it. Yet, at the same time, I feel that perhaps I am less personally interested in the matter than most of those hon. Members who have hitherto addressed the House. The object of this Amendment is, of course, to turn out the Government, not for any special sin, not because of its views on fiscal reform, or upon any other individual subject, but because of the crime of its existence, because there are a number of Gentlemen in this House who think they could fill its place much better than it does itself. You may turn out the Government, but you cannot turn me out, because I have already relieved you of the trouble. The Amendment also points to a dissolution in the course of which, rightly or wrongly, hon. Gentlemen opposite appear to think that the proportions on the two sides will be reversed and that many Gentlemen now sitting in my neighbourhood will no longer be Members of the House of Commons. I think it is always bad to reckon your chickens before they are hatched. There again, so far as I am concerned, dissolution has no terrors. I am quite content to trust my political fortunes with the working men who for thirty years have given me their confidence so generously. I will go further than this. I have no fear of a dissolution, whatever its result may be. I have said in the country, and I have no objection to repeat the statement here, that so far as I personally am concerned, so far as my opinion goes, the sooner dissolution comes the better. If I had to argue this question in support of the Amendment, I think I could put forward stronger and better reasons than any of those to which I have listened. In our constitutional system, which is a Party system, an occasional change is no doubt desirable. The Party with which I am connected has now been n power practically eighteen years. During the whole of that time it cannot be denied that it has done an enormous amount of work. Whether for good or evil, it will leave behind it a record which has not been paralleled by any other Party or Government [Ironical cheers] during the last half century. I am very glad to find that so far, at all events, I am in perfect harmony with the House. What has been the course of political affairs during that time? All this work, all this legislation and administration, has been opposed from the other side. It is the business of an Opposition to oppose. Nothing has been accepted. All that we have proposed has appeared to the Opposition to be bad, and in consequence there has been an immense advance in legislation during the eighteen years which cannot at present be called national, which is still a subject of controversy. If we have a dissolution, and, if, as hon. Gentlemen opposite believe, that dissolution brings victory to their side, all this legislation will come up for review, and we know what will happen. What they denounce in Opposition, that they will condone when they come into office; they will accept in office what they have execrated in Opposition; and we shall get, at all events, a very large body of legislation which will become national legislation, very much, I think, to the advantage of the whole population.

They have been boasting a good deal recently of by-elections. Well, they are quite entitled to congratulate themselves on the result of those by-elections; but, if they are candid, they will admit that a great number of causes have conduced to such success as they have obtained. It has not been the fiscal question alone which has secured for them the result on which they pride themselves; it has been education, temperance, Chinese labour, and the price of sugar. I will not stop to dwell upon the way in which these subjects have been represented, but I will only ask hon. Gentlemen opposite to bear in mind that when they come in they will have to deal with them. It is very easy in Opposition to denounce the measures dealing with these matters in language which would make it almost impossible for an honest man to bear with them for a single day after he came into office. We shall watch with the greatest interest how our opponents treat these subjects; at present we have no idea; they have not condescended to give us any indication of the way in which they would deal with them. This, at all events, I venture very heartily to predict: they will find them very difficult nuts to crack, and will find it impossible at the same time to satisfy their ardent supporters whose votes they have won by their declarations and the people at large. That is one advantage of a dissolution—that it, as it were, consolidates the policy of the country; and a second advantage is that it enables us to ascertain, in the first instance, and then to test, the policy of the Opposition. Now by the necessity of the case we are always on the defence. I look forward with unmingled satisfaction to the time, whenever it comes, when we shall be in a similar position to hon. Members opposite.

I have read with the greatest interest the letter of recommendation which was published the other day by a distinguished Leader of the Opposition, in which was sketched, at all events, his personal idea of the policy which he and his friends would pursue. A close examination of that policy opens to me a vista which I confess makes everything now stale and unprofitable. I greatly desire, whenever the proper time comes, to exchange the responsibility of action for the joy of criticism. And now, speaking for myself alone, as a private Member, dissolution has no terrors for me whatsoever. If it comes in the ordinary constitutional way, I say again the sooner it comes the better. On the other hand, I deny absolutely the right of any minority, even so intelligent a minority as that which I see before me, to demand a dissolution on perfectly childish and fantastic reasons, on grounds which they never accepted themselves when they were in office, and which they would always be the first in those circumstances to repudiate. No, Sir, if the Government acts as all Governments I have known have acted in the past, and as I believe they will act, they will, I trust, give no authority whatever to this new theory of the rights of a minority, and will not abandon their trust merely because the Opposition desires to be in office.

I have one word more to say on this question. I do not accept the standard of public duty which the Opposition set up; I do not accept their standard of a mandate, their new test of by-elections. It is absolutely unprecedented, and I think if it were adopted it would be found to be mischievous. Although I do not accept this standard, they will be the first to admit that they cannot complain if we apply the standard which they have adopted, at all events, to their own action. But I feel that this Amendment is not really intended to be treated seriously. It was introduced with a great flourish of trumpets. We heard that the walls of Jericho were to fall in the first days of the session; and it was considered of such importance that actually the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition, dealing with the matter in a way which I believe is absolutely unprecedented, made a speech on the first evening of the debate on the Address which was almost wholly taken up in forestalling his right hon. friend. He painted the situation in broad and rather rough colours, and he left it to his right hon. friend to polish and complete the presentation. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Fife nearly threw away the whole case when he admitted, at the outset of his speech, that he did not expect that it would succeed or have any effect in disintegrating the majority, even although he must have known beforehand that he would have in the future the valuable support of my hon. friend the Member for Durham. No, Sir, there was in my right hon. friend's speech a great deal that was very interesting, and some things that were amusing, but there was no serious fight; and the condition of the House throughout yesterday shows that that was the view taken by his own friends. In fact, what we are engaged in is excursions and alarums, as we so often see in the plays of Shakespeare.

Under these circumstances it is not necessary for me to deal at any great length with the merits of the case. We are told that fiscal reform has been fully discussed in the country. I take note of that admission. I have never received any admission of the kind before, and I think it is rather important. I certainly understood that one fear which the Opposition had was that advantage might be taken of their present weakness to rush a decision from the country which might afterwards be regretted; but up to the last moment they have been telling us that they have not the least idea what the proposals of the Government are. They have been complaining that discussion in this House has been burked; nevertheless they have now come to the conclusion that the matter is settled, that it is a chose jugée and not a chose disputée, and that there is nothing now but to go to the country and ask for judgment. It seems to me that we should be going to the country, in these circumstances, very imperfectly prepared, on the assumption that right hon. Gentlemen opposite are correct. It is quite true that they pay me the compliment to say that they understand what my proposals are. I am very glad to hear it. That is another admission, and I hope that in future they will not, unintentionally I am sure, so grossly misrepresent me. But I ask the House when in the history of Parliament there has ever before been a serious proposal made on behalf of the leaders of the Opposition that the proposals of a private Member, if they are fully discussed, are grounds for a dissolution of Parliament.

Mr. DALZIEL (Kirkcaldy Burghs): The Prime Minister adopts them.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: The doctrine is entirely new. Let me state it again. Any proposal which has been fully discussed in the country, even although it is not part of any official programme, is at once to be submitted to the people. I say that is a new proposal. I myself have a sneaking kindness for it. It seems to me to approach to the system in vogue in the United States of America, in Switzerland, and in some other countries—the system which is known as the Referendum; and if hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite are really prepared to carry into practical operation a suggestion of that kind, and to enable the people of this country to pronounce without Party pre-occupation and without the intervention of other and quite different subjects on any really important question submitted to their consideration, I for one should give them what assistance I could in order to promote such a system. But that is the last thing they desire. They want, as they say, to settle the fiscal question. I wish them joy of the attempt. They want to settle it. How! By mixing it up with every other political question before the country at the present time, and with all the political feeling and political recrimination which necessarily attends on Party Government. In these circumstances I can hardly conceive that they are serious in suggesting that under any other system than the one I have described the question can be settled whether my policy—the policy of the Member for West Birmingham with no official authority whatever—is so important, so extraordinarily out of the common way, has elicited so much attention and consideration, and has so large a support, that it is desirable that it should be immediately decided whether that support amounts to a majority. I have never had a compliment so great paid to me since I have been in the House of Commons. I am afraid it is much too good to be true. No, all these arguments may be put aside, and we may drop this pretence of a desire to submit this question to the country.

The real object of the Amendment, every candid man will admit, is an attempt—and, to my mind, a very foolish and ill-judged attempt—to induce on this side of the House a feeling which, if it existed, would soon make us the happy family which Gentlemen opposite have been for so long. How is this subject to be accomplished? It is a simple process, but "in vain is the net spread in the sight of any bird." The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Fife quoted a short passage of a letter written by me in which I say that as far as I can see there is no difference in principle between the Prime Minister and myself, although there may be differences in methods and tactics. Then he proceeded to tell the House what my principles are. He said that—

> "The policy of the right hon. Gentleman is in principle made up of two heads. In the first place the abandonment——'

I beg to call the attention of the House to one or two words in it—

> "the abandonment in the interests of British trade of the antiquated system of so-called free trade, which he has told his audiences over and over again we alone persist in pursuing in defiance of common sense and the common practice of the rest of civilised mankind. In the second place, the creation in the interest of Imperial unity and strength of a preferential system based on the taxation of foreign corn and flour."

He then said—

> "I do not think the right hon. Gentleman will differ from me."

Suppose I had assented to his proposition; then the argument is clear. He would say:—"You, the Prime Minister, said"—at Edinburgh, I think—"'I am not a protectionist.' Here is the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, who says that his object is to abandon free trade, and he says that you agree with him. Do you agree, you who are not a protectionist, that free trade should be abandoned?" Now that is the point. When the right hon. Gentleman asked me whether I differed from him, I said I neither denied nor accepted what he said; and that gave great amusement to hon. Members opposite. I confess I have not yet risen to the height of the doctrine propounded by my right hon. friend the Member for Montrose, that however complicated a problem may be it can be got into a half-sheet of notepaper. I admit that my ideas are rather more expansive than that would suggest. But let me say, in passing, that it struck me what a compliment my right hon. friend paid to my hon. and gallant friend the Member for Essex, because, you see, it follows that if a great problem can be properly stated on half a sheet of notepaper, it is perfectly clear that it can be discussed in speeches of five minutes length. But it is not only that I think it undesirable to state one's views in so short a space that made me resist the application of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Fife. No, Sir, I am suspicious. I have had experience of this sort of thing before. I have again and again had extracts from my speeches flung across the House at me, and I have perhaps hastily accepted them only to find that something very important was omitted. The right hon. Gentleman, let me say with all respect, went further. After I had refused to give an answer, he said this was an evidence of the malaria of ambiguity which existed. Very good, and then he went on to say—

> "If the right hon. Gentleman wants chapter and verse, I would refer him to the speech which he made at Limehouse in December last. He said there, 'I am going to submit to the country two issues, and they are precisely the two issues I have described to the House.'"

I looked this morning at the Limehouse speech. What is the chapter and verse? That means verbatim et litteratim. What are the words which I actually did use? You will see how near they are to the words used by the right hon. Gentleman, and yet how important is the distinction. I said—

> "I will put before my countrymen two questions. I will ask them in the first place whether they think that a policy which is sixty years old, which was based on promises that have never been fulfilled, which were conceived in circumstances that are altogether different from those in which we move, can be suitable to our modern conditions? Then I will ask them, in the second place, what are to be our future relations with the Colonies, what is to be the future of the great Empire of which we are a part? Now, in my opinion, there is be a reform both of our domestic policy and our external policy as far as regards the Colonies."

Now, mark, I did not say that we were to abandon free trade. I did not mention free trade. What I did say was that we must reform our policy of free imports; and free imports are not free trade. They stand in the way of freer trade. We have never had free trade. Do you doubt that?

Mr. ASQUITH (Fifeshire, E.): It was for that very reason that I used the expression "so-called free trade" and attributed it to the right hon. Gentleman.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: But we have never had free trade at all, and "so-called free trade," does not appear in my speech, and it is not in chapter and verse. [Opposition cries of "Oh."] I confess that I think there is a malaria of inaccuracy which is much more dangerous to the public weal than a malaria of ambiguity. Let me say, in passing, so far as the language attributed to me in regard to the Colonies is concerned, I do not think there are two words the same. Still, I do not seriously object to it, although it is not my actual language. Now take what I did say. I said that in my opinion the time had come for a reform in our present policy. I do not speak for my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. I speak only as I spoke in the matter to which reference has been made of my own thought on the subject, and I say now again that I think there is no difference between us with regard to the principle. And when I pointed to the importance of the consideration of the future of the great Empire of which we are all a part, there I think I know that there is not the slightest difference in the importance we attach to that part of the subject. But there is something more important, I think, than my opinion of what is in the mind of the Prime Minister, a subject more important than what the Prime Minister thinks of my proposals, and that is what I think of the proposals of the Prime Minister. Why do I say that? Because it is I who am speaking; it is I who say that I think there is no difference. I say it, and if there is a difference I should know it if it occurred in anything the Prime Minister said. Now, the Prime Minister has made three great, impressive, able speeches — the speech at Sheffield, the speech at Edinburgh, and the speech at Manchester, which included the four propositions on a half-sheet of paper. I am told these speeches are unintelligible. In the courteous language of the Leader of the Opposition they are metaphysical sophistications. I am grateful to Provience that I am not myself a metaphysician, but, after all, it may be supposed that I have ordinary intelligence, and I have read these speeches —these mysterious speeches—and again I speak for myself, and I say that I think I understand every word of them. When speaking about the Prime Minister I was only in a position to say "I think," but when I come to say what I feel about his speeches I can say "I know," and I say that to the best of my knowledge and belief there is no single point of principle in any one of those speeches from which I differ. I do not want to seem to have the slightest doubt or hesitation in regard to my own opinions if anyone has the slightest interest in them, and because of that, when the speech in Edinburgh was made, speaking at Luton almost immediately afterwards, I said that a question of method arose upon the last speech of the Prime Minister and I ventured to criticise that method, and to say that in my opinion if a conference were held such as the Prime Minister proposed, and if the results of that conference were satisfactory, it would be impossible to withhold those results from the consideration of this Parliament and from their action, if they were sitting at the time, and, if not, at the earliest possible moment. Very well, that is perhaps a difference. In any case it is a point of method, not a point of principle. I think the time to discuss it will be after the principle is decided. The right hon. Gentleman —I think it was hardly worthy of him—actually made a point, and occupied the time of the House for two or three minutes, of the fact that I spoke afterwards at Gainsborough and did not repeat that statement. I appeal to him—he speaks a great deal more than I do—and I ask, does he consider it necessary in every new speech to repeat everything that he said in every past speech?

Mr. ASQUITH: Heaven forbid.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I agree at all events with his intention. When I am speaking myself I do endeavour to vary what I have to say a little and to deal with different branches of the subject on different occasions. It is really childish to accuse me of having abandoned an opinion because I do not repeat it on every occasion. I repeat when it is necessary. I repeat it here in this House, but I certainly do not think it desirable to put this difference, which I postpone to the future after the principle is decided, in the forefront of my argument.

I have one more point to bring before the House, and only one. We are told that it is necessary to settle this question of fiscal reform, because, as the right hon. Gentleman tells us, it is in the highest degree prejudicial to British trade. Well, it has been going on for nearly two years. In what a terrible condition British trade must be! And yet the whole foundation of their argument is that it never was better. We are told that we are in the presence of record trade, record prosperity, and that no sensible man can doubt for a moment that we could not be better off, and that we may very easily be worse. [OPPOSITION cries of "No."] Ah! well, I know there is a little shyness on the part of some hon. Members in accepting that view. I observe when we come to the questions of employment, and the 13,000,000 of people, they are very glad to minimise it. But suppose it is necessary to settle it, is the right hon. Gentleman so unaccustomed to public life that he believes that a vote against fiscal policy in this House of Commons, or a vote against it even in a general election, would have the slightest effect in settling the question? I am bound to say I never was so sanguine as to imagine that a new proposal of this kind, which requires in my opinion a little more discussion than it has yet received—I never had an idea that such a proposal would be accepted offhand by the majority of this country, and I am perfectly prepared to be patient; and one defeat, and even many more defeats, would not for a moment prevent me from continuing to agitate for what I believe to be right. I am surprised to hear hon. Gentlemen opposite, who profess to be the followers of Cobden, talking in this way. Did one defeat silence Cobden? I think—I am not quite certain about my figures—but I believe he had against him three Parliaments and against him seven votes in Parliament, and in not a single one of these votes did he receive more than 120 in his minority.

Mr. JOHN MORLEY (Montrose Burghs): The Anti-Corn Law League set to work in 1839, and then there came the general election in 1841, in which Sir Robert Peel was returned by a protectionist majority, and in that Parliament free trade was carried.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I always yield to the authority of my right hon.

friend in such a matter. Surely, however, Mr. Villiers in this House brought forward on two or three occasions proposals in favour of free trade, and afterwards, when Mr. Cobden came in, he himself introduced, or spoke in support of, several votes of the same kind. As regards the votes I am certain. As regards the number of Parliaments I admit I may be mistaken. I have taken account of the divisions in every case, and I say there were something like seven votes, and in none of them did he have a minority which was much, if at all, above 120. But he won his victory. Under these circumstances the idea that we, who sixty years later are reviewing his policy in the hope of amending it, are going to be disconcerted by one vote in this House or by one general election is really to do us a great injustice. We are much better placed than Mr. Cobden ever was. He had a small minority. We have, at any rate, the great majority of a great Party, and if it be true, as my hon. friend the Member for Durham said, although I think he exaggerated, that the minority in this Party is against us—the minority we know in this House—my own opinion is that it is a very much smaller proportionate minority in the country. If there be such a minority we shall make it up, believe me, by recruits from the Party, which is now the Party of reaction, which can see no cause for change after sixty years experience of broken promises and unfulfilled pledges.

We have three things in our favour besides time. We have, in the first place, the failure of free trade. No, I beg your pardon, free trade has not failed, because we have never had it. It has not been tried, but we have the failure of free imports to produce the result which was the great object of the free-trader. That is one thing we have in our favour. We have, in the second place, the growing seriousness of the problem of want of employment of the people of this country. [AN HON. MEMBER: Due to the war.] That is to me a serious matter. Taking any reasonable period, it is the fact that, in spite of all our prosperity, which I have never denied, the amount of employment in our principal industrial enterprises is less in proportion to the population than it was at the beginning of the period, and it has been continually reduced. There is an increase in certain favoured employments. There is an increase in distributive employments. That is true. But in the employment which makes for the character, the strength, and the power of the nation there has been a diminution. If hon. Gentlemen will study history they will see that all those countries that have once been powerful, and have become less powerful, have begun with this alteration in the character of their employment. That is the second thing in our favour. The third thing is the wish that I think is almost universal in this country, to draw the Empire closer together; the knowledge, which is spreading, that the Empire is as much to us as it is to the other portions of it, and that we depend on them, while they depend on us. I think the appreciation of what they have already done for us is constantly growing. The desire by any means in our power to unite in some more organised union is a desire which has spread very deep and very far, and which will, I believe, continue to increase. When we come to them and say, as we do, "Here is your opportunity; here is a request, or put, if you like, a suggestion, from your fellow-subjects, from your own kinsmen, that you should proceed to secure this closer union by a closer commercial union;" when they offer, in the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself—

> "To make a treaty with you upon the basis of an increase of trade between the different parts of the Empire, upon a preferential basis as against the rest of the world."

When these offers are made to us, and when it is suggested that a conference should be held in order to discuss details—no, Sir, I do not believe that my countrymen, when they understand what it is that is presented to them, will for a moment support those who would shut the door to such a negotiation, and shut the door at the time when they pretend that they do not know what it is the Colonies have got to give us. Let them wait for the conference and hear. Do not let them prevent a conference by telling our colonial friends beforehand that they may come here if they like, but they shall not be allowed to discuss the only thing for which they deeply care.

Last night was important for one thing, and with my observation upon this I shall sit down. It was important for the declarations of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Fife, and still more for that of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Northumberland. Hitherto I have understood—it may have been my stupidity, but I have certainly understood—that the position of the other side was that under no circumstances would they listen to a conference unless those who were invited to that conference were informed beforehand the one thing which they proposed would not be considered by us. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Fife seemed to me to modify that opinion. He protested against that view of his opinion and intention. He said, "No, certainly not. They may come and discuss everything. I do not object, certainly not; but we must give our instructions to our representatives," and we all know what those instructions are to be, "Under no circumstances, whatever the offer may be, shall you consent to putting even the slightest and smallest duty on certain articles of food." That any man should contemplate a conference under those circumstances is to me a miracle, or that men of business should support him, or that in a case of this kind we should make up our minds before we know what it is they have to give us. Do you mean to tell me that it would be absolutely impossible for the Colonies, even granting all that is said against the tax of 2s. on corn, to give us something of more value than that? And yet, although we do not know what it is they will give us, or whether it will be sufficient to overcome your objections to a small tax, you say, "No, under no circumstances will we touch the thing." That is plain. We now know what their position is. I predict they will not live many years longer with that conviction. But that is in the region of prophecy. What is not in the region of prophecy is the effect that this statement, made in your name, with your assent, is going to have on the Colonies. Supposing the right hon. Gentleman's view is accepted. The Colonies are to be invited to come. Apparently they are to be told that they may talk as much as they like about anything. Nobody can pretend to have the slightest or remotest doubt what it is that will be the first thing the Colonies will put before us.

MAJOR SEELY (Isle of Wight): Chinese labour.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: You expect these men to come and waste their time, to give up their own business at home, and come here and talk and talk until they are black in the face, knowing all the time that your representatives have got a mandate in their pockets not to give them anything they ask for. To my mind that is an insult to the Colonies. We now know what that modification of the statement of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Fife amounts to. There is another right hon. Gentleman who went a good deal further. I should like to know how many friends he has on that side of the House. Here is what he said—

> "I believe a conference of that kind ungagged, unmuzzled, summoned without prejudice, summoned on terms under which opinions may be plainly expressed on both sides, is the only way by which it is possible to remove the misunderstanding which has been created between ourselves and the Colonies."

[OPPOSITION cries of "Hear, hear!" and "By you."] That does not disturb me. Of course the point of difference lies in the words "summoned without prejudice." Can you pretend that you summoned them without prejudice when you are going to give a mandate to your representative, no matter what argument may be put forward or offers made——

SIR EDWARD GREY (Northumberland, Berwick): The right hon. Gentleman has misinterpreted my meaning. What I meant by "without prejudice" was that the conference must be a general conference, and to summon a conference on the ground that unless it resulted in a system of preferential duties no conference was worth having at all, would be to prejudice it from the beginning.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I am very sorry to hear that statement from the right hon. Gentleman. I certainly believed and hoped, when he spoke of summoning a conference without prejudice, he meant that it was to be an open conference, open as to its decision, and without instructions given beforehand to any of the parties that they were absolutely to preclude the possibility of what would be the most important subject of all those to be discussed.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): Would they come like that?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: However, that only leaves me in this position. Under these circumstances neither the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Northumberland nor any other Member on that side is willing to hold a free and open conference summoned without prejudice to discuss this great matter. From to-day it must go forth, "You yourselves have proposed that this offer should be made to come to a closer commercial union. We have considered it, without hearing what you have to say, and we refuse it. Under no circumstances, whether you come here or do not, will we change—[AN HON. MEMBER on the OPPOSITION Benches: No food tax.]—our decision. Under no circumstances will we admit that a proposal of the kind suggested is one which we can or will adopt." The right hon. Gentleman made one other remark, which I only note to point out its inaccuracy. He said—

> "The Colonies have never asked that we should impose taxes to suit them. Some of them did suggest, if we were imposing taxes for ourselves, we should give a remission of those taxes in their favour. They have not asked that we should impose a tax which we had not got, and which we do not need for our own purposes."

Is that the general view? I would remind the right hon. Gentleman that, while he himself was in office, a conference was held in Canada. On the motion of Mr. Hoffner, of the Cape, a proposal was made that we should put on taxes in order to secure this preferential trade and this advantage as against foreign countries; and that proposal, made in a conference under the presidency of Lord Jersey, was rejected by Lord Ripon; and since then other proposals to the same effect have been made by other Colonies. So that the statement is not historically correct. My belief is that the conference will be held, and that the Colonies will have a great deal to offer. I never contended we should make anything which anybody could think to be a concession unless in return we received reciprocal treatment. The whole thing turns upon a question which can only be decided by our Colonies. "If we agree to your proposal, what will you give us in return?" My own belief, expressed more than once, is that they will have a great deal to offer, and that they will give us at least as much as they will desire to take from us. If that is the fact, the people of this country, I am firmly convinced, will not reject such an offer coming from their own kinsmen, and they will not lose a great opportunity which delay may make it impossible to be offered to them in the future.

LORD HUGH CECIL said he listened to his right hon. friend and felt a very large measure of agreement both with the constitutional doctrines he laid down, which seemed to him very sound, and with his avowal that he was not opposed to free trade. He confessed he was a little suspicious of those declarations that free trade was not threatened. There really was no advantage in continuing a discussion if the discussion only turned upon disputes about words. He thought what his right hon. friend meant by free trade was something different from what he meant by it. If it were not so he would be obliged to suspect him of what he was sure no one would suspect him, of making speeches containing not only erroneous theories, but passages which were almost totally unmeaning. What would become of all those parts of his speeches which consisted in pointing out that America, Germany, and to some extent, even France, had done much better than this country. Was it that their fiscal system was, in some respect, better than ours? What would become of the interesting theories about the lack of employment but for the protectionist theory that by shutting out imports they could get better conditions of labour for the workmen. The whole gist of the right hon. Gentleman's arguments had been protectionist arguments. He did not doubt that, as some of his supporters openly avowed, the right hon. Gentleman was seeking to do in this country what Bismarck did in Germany in 1879—that was to say, change the policy of the country from a free-trade system to what was conventionally called a protectionist system. He agreed with his right hon. friend that the Opposition were not entitled to dictate to the Government the time of their dissolution. He went further than his right hon. friend, for he did not desire that there should be a speedy dissolution. For reasons which he should make clear, he was quite content with the existing situation. As regarded the general fiscal question, he was anxious in more respects than one that the present Government should continue in office. He was anxious that they should remain in office for the sake of education. He believed the Education Act of 1902 was fast taking root and was becoming less and less unpopular, and he heartily welcomed the change. He desired also to see the present Government continue in charge of foreign affairs, which they had conducted with exceptional skill and patience. Therefore, on general questions of policy, he was entirely opposed to the Amendment.

The question then arose, Was it necessary for the sake of the fiscal issue to subordinate these other considerations and to have an immediate election? It was said that an election was needed to clear up the misunderstandings which existed, and in order to make plain the policy which the Government was putting before the country so as to put an end to a situation of ambiguity. Now, he was one of those happy people who thought they understood the Prime Minister. He was quite prepared to make a friendly offer to him. If the Prime Minister would give him office, without portfolio, he would undertake to make his policy perfectly clear to every individual in the country. He was afraid his Ministerial career, though sensational and interesting, would also be brief, for by the time the right hon. Member for Montrose was beginning to get a grasp of the subject somehow or other the Government would be defeated. He thought he not only understood the Prime Minister, but also why other people did not understand him—which was a refinement of intelligence. It arose, first of all, from the circumstance that the Prime Minister never expounded his policy in its relation to the policy of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. He did not, as it were, state his geographical position according to the meridian of Birmingham. In particular, obscurity hung round two points. The Prime Minister favoured the policy generally called retaliation. About economic questions there was an unhappy custom of using names because they were polite and pleasing and not because they were accurate. Passing a shop window the other day he saw a garment displayed which was entitled "a gentleman's anatomical belt." He inspected it and perceived it really was what were colloquially called stays. He discerned that the desire of the seller was to attract a purchaser who, shrinking from the imputation of a foppish desire to shape the male figure into super-elegant tenuity, might more readily adopt the idea that he was availing himself of a useful surgical instrument. This custom prevailed among those who called themselves fair traders. They were for ever using some other names, and amongst those names retaliation had been adopted, and this word was often used to conceal a protectionist policy. Even his right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham did not always appear to him to use the word quite correctly, for he noticed in his speech at Preston an interesting passage dealing with the Swiss tariff and the policy of retaliation, and he told an antecdote about a Swiss gentleman who had said that he proposed to come and plant his business in England if the right hon. Gentleman's policy were adopted. Now it was quite certain that no Swiss gentleman would ever come and plant his business in England in consequence of retaliation. What would be likely to induce the Swiss gentleman to transfer his business to England would be a permanent tariff. On the face of it, no Swiss gentleman would expend a large amount of capital to erect a factory in England in order to get behind the duty unless, first of all, the duty gave him a closed market against the foreign competition of other countries, and unless the duty were of a permanent character and likely to continue. Retaliation was often used to conceal a protectionist policy, and was confused with what might more properly be called reciprocity. Dumping, again, was constantly used to describe all cheap importations which effectively competed with the produce in this country; but dumping, as used by the Prime Minister, had a very limited sense. These confusions would not operate with anything like the effect they did were it for the fact that they very largely came from the lips of those who were supporting the policy of tariff reform.

He was afraid that this misunderstanding on the part of the members of the Tariff Reform League did not always and in every case arise from the fact that they really misunderstood the Prime Minister. He was afraid that they wished other people to misunderstand his right hon. friend, and they availed themselves of his reputation and position in order to recommend a very different policy. They therefore habitually used language which confused, and was intended to confuse, the public mind. But that being the case he thought the Prime Minister and his colleagues were not relieved of responsibility in the matter. It was not enough to say that "what I have said is really clear and is not understood. It is the fault of a misconception." It was the business of a politician to be understood. The proof of the pudding was in the eating, and the proof of the statement was in the comprehension of it. It was to throw up the sponge to say, "I cannot make myself clear," for it was part of the essential duty of politicians in a leading position to make themselves clear when the circumstances of the case made it necessary that they should be so.

But the third great branch of the policy of the Prime Minister was not misunderstood, because, from the protectionist point of view, there had not been the same effort made to misrepresent him; he meant the Colonial Conference. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had said from the first that there was a difference between the Prime Minister and himself upon one point, a point which he (Lord H. Cecil) thought was of greater importance than the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham seemed to imagine. There were really two proposals for a Colonial Conference. The first proposal was put forward by the tariff reformers that the conference should discuss the whole question of the relations between the mother country and the Colonies, especially the fiscal question, and formulate a scheme of commercial union, and that Parliament should forthwith carry out that scheme. That was the proposal of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. The Prime Minister's proposal was for a conference and full discussion, and when the scheme was arranged there should be a further stage of discussion in this country and the Colonies, that there should be a dissolution of Parliament and an electoral decision upon it. That was a proposal of a very different character. He had never understood and did not now understand why the Opposition had been brought to oppose that proposal. He could conceive its being said that these discussions might take place but that there was no prospect of coming to an agreement; that it might lead to ill-feeling and misunderstanding. But when a proposal of that kind was put forward by the Prime Minister it was too late to consider that point, because it would be a greater courtesy to the Colonies to reject the proposal of discussion altogether than it would be to have discussion and find no agreement upon it. He never had any doubt from the moment that the Prime Minister made the proposal that the wisest course was to support the right hon. Gentleman in that proposition, but he thought that they should also candidly say that the opinion of free-trade opponents of preferential tariffs would not be moved by any appeal to the Colonies. It would require argument much more weighty than the mere assertion of eminent Colonial Ministers sitting round a table that they wanted a particular proposal. The duty of the mother country was to decide in the interest of the whole Empire what was best; it would be a derogation of their duty to hand over the responsibility to the Colonies and to say, "You ought to decide it, and whatever proposal you make we will accept it." It made all the difference in the world whether they were to entrust this conference with the decision of the question or merely to entrust it with the task of threshing it out.

He did not believe that what was called colonial preference resting on the taxation of food ought to be or would ever be adopted in this country. There were two weak points in the proposal. First of all it ought not to be a bargain, the mother country professing to give something and the Colonies something else. The very idea of a bargain was in itself disruptive. It suggested that there were two parties with different and admittedly conflicting interests, who met in the spirit of negotiators with different points of view and who had different objects to attain. The mere fact of suggesting such a proposal must have a disruptive effect. All experience of nature, all history, went to show that discussions on the basis of bargains were always apt to end in disputes. Let the House look at the commercial treaties just concluded between Germany and Austria-Hungary. Had they produced union? It was notorious that they had produced great ill-feeling between the two countries. Commercial treaties were spoken of as if they were a unifying process, but in nine cases out of ten they had been—they had had the opposite result. The union of the Empire ought, he believed, to be sought for in a different direction. He did not believe that the present time was favourable for the suggestion to the Colonies that they should make great commercial or financial concessions to this country. To ask them to share in the duties and emoluments of the public service, to consult the Home Government on questions of diplomacy and national defence were not matters of bargain; but it was an advantage that they should be freely suggested to the mother country; and it was in these directions that he would seek to promote Imperial unity. He had tried to show that there was not a degree of doubt hanging over the Prime Minister's position, and he had tried to put what he believed was the true interpretation upon it.

There were two other points to be considered in relation to this Amendment. First, he was obliged to consider the effect upon those on the Government side of the House who maintained the doctrines of free trade and whose position was embarrassed thereby. He was afraid that it was impossible to deny that the Government were continuing in office by a process of concealing their whole mind from the country and their supporters. There were limits to the legitimacy of concealment. If persons concealed their mind in such a way as to obtain support, and it resulted at the same time in hardships to those giving that support, then he thought that concealment was a very difficult thing to justify. After all, the Government had enjoyed a considerable amount of support from those who were convinced free-traders during the last year. There had been, for instance, the support of a great body of persons who acted with the right hon. Member for West Bristol, whose support had been essential to the Government. It was not legitimate to make use of support of that kind, nor of a very large body of opinion in the country corresponding with it, if as a result of concealment other free-traders were driven out of their constituencies or Parliament, and if great distress of mind was caused to a large number of persons of the same way of thinking. In saying this he was not urging his own case. He had nothing but a feeling of gratitude to the Prime Minister and his colleagues personally, for he had been treated with a kindness which was all the more graceful because it had been unsolicited. But there were others who had not publicly received any measure of support or assistance. He thought that if he were a Minister enjoying a position of authority and emolument by the very support which was necessary to the present Government, he would feel very uneasy indeed if any reflection could be cast upon him owing to the distress caused to others by a policy of concealment. He certainly felt it to be his duty to express in the strongest terms disapproval of any attack on persons who were suffering as the indirect result of the system of tactics now being pursued. It was perfectly easy to clear up the misunderstandings that existed, and if those misunderstandings were not cleared up then there was a strong obligation on the part of the Government to prevent the evil consequences to individuals resulting from them. If there was any obligation, however, there was a very special obligation on the part of his right hon. friend and of those who were in substance free-traders, but who had felt it to be their duty to remain in the Government. They differed very little, if at all, from hon. Members like the hon. Member for Durham. They had not seen their duty in the same light as his hon. friend had done; but as honest men trying to do their best for the well-being of the country, could they sit unmoved and see a gentleman with whom they had served, whom they knew to be perfectly honest and disinterested, who they knew had resigned office with a sublime disregard of all consideration of self-interest, attacked for holding opinions substantially the same as their own without stirring a finger on his behalf? We heard much of loyalty to Party. He did not attack the essential utility of loyalty to Party; it was a convention without which the Government of the country could not be carried on. But there were other loyalties. There was surely the loyalty of one honest man to another; the loyalty to those who were serving the public well in an unselfish spirit; the loyalty of the brotherhood of self-forgetting men. It was to that loyalty he made his appeal. He was sure it was forgetfulness rather than lack of chivalry which had led to the state of affairs he deplored. But he earnestly appealed to every one who in his heart was opposed to tariff reform to see that in such cases as that of his hon. friend the Member for Durham he was found fighting on the side of those whom he knew to be in the right, even if they had not chosen to remain in office.

But there were greater matters than these personal questions to be determined in connection with the Amendment before the House. He had to consider the effect upon free trade. He was convinced that he could not support the Amendment; but he was not quite certain whether it would be possible for him to support the Government. His only hesitation in adopting what he frankly admitted was the logical conclusion of his argument was his extreme reluctance to appear to co-operate in any degree whatever with those who were opposing his hon. friend the Member for Durham and others, whom he considered had been very badly treated. Whether he abstained or voted with the Government, the dominant consideration with him would be that of supporting the cause of free trade. He did not believe that that cause was threatened by the continuance of the present Government in office. His view last year was not necessarily the same; but the free-trade propaganda or, rather, defence, had been so surprisingly successful that if the Government and his right hon. friend cared to spend another session in not availing themselves of the opportunity of debate in the House of Commons—it made them angry to say that they shrank from facing the supporters of free trade either in debate or in division, though it was the plain truth that they did so shrink—free trade would not suffer. If there were no question of Parliamentary loyalty involved, and every one could vote as he pleased, he believed the right hon. Member for West Birmingham and his friends would make a very poor show in the lobby. If his right hon. friend secured one vote in three he should be very surprised.

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: That would be more than Mr. Cobden got.

Lord HUGH CECIL: Yes, but he had the courage to face the situation. Mr. Cobden did not wish to tackle Parliament before he took its verdict. Another session like the last and even another recess would do free trade no harm: the verdict of the country would continue to be expressed with unvarying persistence against the right hon. Gentleman's proposals. He and his friends were quite satisfied with the way in which things were going, and therefore it seemed to him that Unionist free-traders ought to go as far as possible in removing the difficulties between themselves and the Government, because, as the hon. Member for South-East Durham had said, they could do immensely more for free trade as Unionist Members than if they attempted to fight the battle of free trade in any other part of the House. He had never concealed the impossibility it would be for him to join the Liberal Party or depart from the principles of Conservatism. He thought his hon. friend the Member for Durham had been misunderstood on that point. What he believed his hon. friend meant was that if the Conservative Party adopted the protectionist policy he would be opposed to that policy. But even in that event he personally should not cross the floor of the House. It was for those who had changed their opinions to change their sides, he had not changed his opinions, and why should he symbolise an attitude of mental stability by physical motion? But he did not anticipate anything so deplorable as the adoption of protection by the Prime Minister or the Government. Whether he and his hon. friends were able to defend themselves from attack in their constituencies or not, the future lay with them. They were the inheritors of the ancient Conservative traditions, they spoke the ancient language of Conservatism, and in their hearts the institutions which Conservatism had ever upheld stood enshrined. Those principles they would never abandon. He could not tell how long the struggle would last; if Members on that side would listen to him they might soon bring it to an end. Let them come and join him and his friends, give up the foolish dreams that had misled them and shut the door on the unwise connection of bad economics and good intrigue. He did not want to drive one protectionist or any other person out of the Party, but he wished to get rid of the evil spirit of protectionism which would cast Conservatism to the ground, and, rending it, sooner or later would be exorcised. At any rate the future lay with those who had not faltered in the day of difficulty in maintaining their principles, and who would maintain the whole fabric of the Conservative faith with the same energy and zeal that they had maintained the faith of free trade. With them lay the future; their courage was unshaken and their purpose was sure.

*SIR E. DURNING - LAWRENCE (Cornwall, Truro) thought there was one important aspect of the fiscal question which had not been in any way discussed. It was assumed that for the last fifty years the great trades of this country had been carried on free from protection, but he was prepared to assert that some of the greatest trades had prospered exceedingly for the simple reason that they had been fully protected. One of the greatest trades of the country was the iron and steel trade, and the House might be surprised when he said that for forty out of the last fifty years that trade had been largely protected. For nearly forty years the iron and steel trade had been continuously protected by patents, and so far as the traders were concerned there was no difference whether the trade was protected by patent protection or any other form of protection. First of all there was the great Bessemer process, then the Siemens process, and so on; patent succeeded patent for nearly forty years, and the prosperity of the iron trade was largely due to the protection afforded by these various patents. It was idle to say these were only patents. Patents were in reality patents of protection. When it was desired to take out a patent, provisional protection was obtained in the first instance and later full protection under the Great Seal for a period of time. In a very large measure the present crisis had arisen because the iron and steel trades had suffered in consequence of the "dumping" into this country of enormous quantities of iron and steel which had been manufactured abroad under processes for which the English patents had recently expired. This was the reason why a great number of iron-masters were at the present time clamouring for protection. He was not advocating protection, but simply pointing out the fallacy that existed in the mind of the country and the House in believing that for the last fifty years this country had been free from protection. As a matter of fact, for nearly forty out of the last fifty years the iron trade had enjoyed a large measure of protection. Take another instance, there was close to this House a great picture gallery, given by the generosity of Sir Henry Tate, who had become a rich man. How did he become a rich man? By getting hold of a patent, and so long as that patent existed he had the fullest protection against any competition whatever. Under the protection of that patent no one could bring into this country a single pound of sugar made in France under his process. He did not contend whether that was, or was not, a good thing for the country as a whole, but he pointed out the fact in order to show that this England of ours had not been free from protection, but, on the contrary, that many industries had been largely protected in the past. In regard to patents, this country had adopted a policy of its own, and had granted patents to men of other countries under which our own children were prevented from manufacturing their own products, because upon the foreigner had been conferred the privilege of dealing with those products. He had seen it stated that in consequence of the want of knowledge and enterprise of British manufacturers this country had lost the greater part of the aniline dye trade. That trade was, in its beginning, the result of the skill and the inventive faculty of a young Englishman, and so long as his patents subsisted the manufacture was done in this country; but we permitted some foreigners to patent improvements upon this patent, and under our Patent Laws those foreigners were not obliged to establish their works in this country. When the original English patents expired, the consequence of our extremely unwise Patent Laws was that the manufacture of aniline dyes, etc., from coal tar products practically ceased in this country, because under our laws there was no power to compel the foreign holder of our patents to grant licences or to work the patent here. As a result, we exported to Germany, etc., about £3,000,000 worth of coal tar, etc., and bought the same back when converted into dyes, etc., for £6,000,000, leaving in Germany some £3,000,000 for profit and labour. The present Government had recently made a small and inadequate attempt to force upon foreign holders of English patents the condition that they should grant licences under certain conditions in order that these goods might be manufactured in this country. Every country except England compelled every patentee, within a very few years of his patent being granted, to establish works in their country, so that the patent must be worked in the country that granted the patent, but it was left for England and England alone to grant patents under which our children were prevented from making use of the products of this country, because the foreigner holding an English patent preferred to import them and manufacture them abroad, and refused to grant any license to the English people to work the patents in this country. That might be called free trade, but he did not think it was free trade, and at any rate it was not common sense. He thought the time had come when some of these matters ought to be revised and examined.

In his own constituency, under the Cobden Treaty, fish could be taken into France, and the duty was not to be more than 2s. per cwt. When the Cobden Treaty expired the conditions were changed, and he was informed that now a sum of 6s. per cwt. had to be paid when we carried our fish into French ports, whereas the French fishermen could bring their fish into our ports free. In this matter he wanted reciprocal treatment, so that if we took fish from the French without exacting duties they should take our fish under similar conditions. That was a very important matter to a constituency like his, and, therefore, he trusted that some attention would be paid to it. These tariffs affected great industries like the fishing industry, from which their sailors were largely recruited. In his own constituency there were large works which would be prevented from carrying on their industry unless measures were taken to put an end to what the noble Lord had justly described as "dumping." Dumping had been described as the placing of large quantities of manufactured goods upon the market under cost price, which competed with British made goods. It might be asked how it was possible to sell anything under cost price and yet make a profit. But yet this could be done. Supposing they made five articles costing £5 and sold them for £6, obviously they would make £1 profit. But if they were able to make ten of the same articles at a cost of only £8, as was often the case, the last five would only cost an additional £3, although as the production of ten cost £8 the real cost of producing five was £4, therefore, he did not think it was fair trading to bring those extra five articles, which could be sold at a profit under cost price, to the English market, for that had the effect of breaking down English works. He had been informed that at Gateshead there were works which cost £50,000 for the making of ships' forgings, but foreign firms had been permitted to dump these articles in this country, which they did forthwith, in order to render the profitable manufacture of these forgings impossible in England, and so thoroughly had this plan effected its purpose that he was told that those works at Gateshead which had cost £50,000 had never been used, and could now be purchased for £5,000 or £6,000. That was one of the effects of dumping, and he thought the time had now come when laissez faire had ceased to be a possible policy. Capitalists, as they knew, could easily invest their money abroad, but workmen in this country were affected by English trade, and if their work was done abroad it was not easy for them to transfer their labour abroad.

The Motion before the House, as far as the fiscal question was concerned, was merely a sham. It asked for a dissolution of the present Parliament, and its object was to turn out the present Government. What had the Government done that they should be turned out? What had the Opposition done that they should be put into office? When he came to the House some nine years ago, the Government had to deal with what was called the Egyptian question. Some right hon. Gentlemen on the other side said at that time, when we declared that this country would no longer permit the policy of "pin pricks," that we had made France our enemy for ever. The fact, however, was that France had at present a more friendly feeling towards this country than at any time since 1800, and he could state on reliable authority that there was every day a growing desire among all classes of the French people that the relationship should be still more cordial. If the Government had done nothing else than bring about that state of feeling, they would have done a great and valuable work. Our relations with the United States of America had also greatly improved in recent years, and that result was in a large measure due to the successful manner in which the Government had conducted affairs. When a difficult situation arose in regard to Venezuela, our Government, with the late Lord Salisbury at its head, acted with calmness and firmness, and there was now a better feeling between this country and America than had ever existed before. There was at present a great war in a distant part of the world, and foreign nations were looking on with great anxiety. At this moment hon. Gentlemen opposite were asking the British Government to abandon the task of steering successfully the great barque of State in these troubled waters, to run away from the helm, and to let unknown strangers take hold of it and carry the ship no one knew where. Was this Government to be put into the melting-pot to enable the country to see who was to take hold of the handle of the ship of State? He hoped the Government would not run away from their duty. He for one rejoiced very much that the government of the country was in the hands of the Party now in power. If hon. Gentlemen opposite were to come into office they could only remain there at the will of hon. Members from Ireland, who had declared that the interests of Great Britain were not their interests. When conducting negotiations with foreign Governments that was not a desirable position for our Government to be in. The destinies of the country should not be entrusted to a Party who, though they came into office, would not come into power.

The mover of the Amendment had stated that the trade and commerce of the country had been upset by the fiscal proposals which had been made. He thought trade and commerce had been upset by a very different matter. In the autumn of 1903 the opponents of the Government assured them that before Easter, 1904, the Government would be driven out of power. That was what frightened the merchants of England, and it was not until they found that there was no fear of a dissolution that the feeling in regard to trade became better. The Amendment would be rejected by a large majority, and when the merchants of England had the assurance that there would be no dissolution this year, they would be inclined to embark in extended trade. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fife had gone on to platforms and made speeches in which he had tried to instruct merchants and manufacturers as to the causes which had led to loss of trade, though they knew very much more about these matters themselves. There was not a man of knowledge who did not feel sure that the cry of free trade was now being employed as a Party shibboleth. Hon. Gentlemen on the other side of the House, who had realised fortunes under the protection of patents, were now the loudest in proclaiming their worship of the fetish of free trade. They had been protected, but did not want anybody else to be protected, and were indifferent to what happened to others. He believed that this Amendment, proposed, as it had been, at the very beginning of the session, would place the Government in a very assured position with a large majority. It would show foreign nations that this so-called discredited Government was not at all discredited.

Allusion had been made to two letters by Mr. Gladstone, one addressed to the late Queen, and the other to the late Lord Granville. The hon. Gentleman the Member for Rushcliffe scouted the notion as absurd that the latter was of equal importance to the former. He did not know whether that hon. Gentleman had ever had occasion to write a letter which had to be submitted to Her Majesty, or any other Royal personage. He himself had had that honour, and he knew that letters intended for Royal personages were not written in terms as free as those written to private persons. Therefore, he said, without fear of contradiction, that the letter addressed to Lord Granville was of far more importance than an official letter to Her Majesty, which ought never to have been published. The letter to the Queen would express, no doubt correctly, but not too freely, certain reasons why Mr. Gladstone wished to be relieved of office, but a letter written to a member of his own Government would be indited, not in diplomatic language, but without restraint. Moreover, Mr. Gladstone had then no very large majority in the House, whereas this Government had still a majority larger than anybody until recent years had ever heard of. When he (the speaker) was a young man Lord Palmerston in a great Party division had a majority of only four and still held office; and yet they were now told that this Government with a large majority and a foreign policy singularly successful, ought immediately to dissolve Parliament and go to the country! The Government were serving the country by remaining in office, and therefore it was their duty to continue in power as long as they had a majority in the House. The interests of the country with foreign nations would be advanced if these had the assurance that the Government intended to hold the helm of State this year and the next. There was extremely good news from South Africa; but nothing would disturb South Africa more than if within a few days or months hon. Gentlemen on the other side of the House were to change places to this side. The existing Government difficulties in South Africa would be multiplied ten-fold if that were possible.

This was a very important Motion and every Unionist should put aside personal predilections—whether he thought that protection was the worst of all things or that free trade was an unmixed evil — and vote so that the Government should remain in office. It should be remembered that neither free trade nor protection was before the House. He was sure that not even the hon. Member for Durham believed or could believe that it would be of advantage to the country that the Government should give up power in the State in favour of right hon. and hon. Gentlemen on the other side who, however high-minded they might be, would be under the control of the hon. Members for Ireland. Under these conditions it was idle to talk of dissolution. So long as the great war in the Far East was going on they should keep that Party in office which would maintain the strictest neutrality and see to it that no other nation interfered. If a Government came into office without power what foreign nation would believe that they would dare to stand by their treaties and hold the balance of neutrality so evenly as to prevent any other nation interfering. He therefore appealed to his hon. friends who did not agree with the fiscal policy of the Government not to vote on this occasion for the Amendment. There were times when patriotism ranked above Party and this was one of them. They should be Englishmen first and partisans afterwards, and therefore the friends of this country should not vote for a Motion brought in only for the purpose of discrediting the Government, because if the Government were discredited it would weaken the influence of the country abroad. Knowing something of what was going on in various parts of the world he said, without fear of contradiction, that there was not a friend of England abroad who would not be sorry if the present power of the Government were to be weakened by their obtaining a small majority; and there was not an enemy of England who would not rejoice if the Government had that evening only a small majority.

It would be impossible to establish any new trade in any country unless there was protection in some form or another. In this country protection was provided by patents; in other countries there might be a duty of 50 per cent., subject to gradual reduction. In that way some of the largest industries had been established abroad. Were other countries altogether wrong? A short time ago England made 8,000,000 tons of steel and iron, and America made only 2,000,000 tons. Protection was introduced in America; and Mr. Carnegie reaped a large fortune, which was really the amount of the protective duties. Now America was, every year, making 18,000,000 tons and this country was making only about 9,000,000 tons. This country, which formerly made nearly one-half of the iron of the world, was now making only one-fifth; and that had been brought about by the fiscal arrangements of other countries, which were also looking after other industries as well as the iron industry. They were looking after the shipping industry. Many hon. Members were interested in that industry. Were they not a little afraid of the subsidies which were now being given to shipping abroad? And were they not aware that there was every probability of these subsidies soon being so largely increased as to seriously interfere with British shipping? It was impossible that this country could successfully face hostile tariffs by free trade. Every other nation was revising its tariff. In all the old speeches and articles in reference to free trade it was stated that all other nations would follow, and if not, that they would be punished. They had not followed; and they had not been punished. It should also be remembered that Cobden, Bright, and Gladstone were against the Colonies. His own father-in-law stated that the sooner this country lost India the better. No Party in England now wanted to destroy India or to lose the Colonies. Therefore, this country ought to be willing to make some efforts to meet the Colonies, who were willing to make concessions, and should not be repelled. When this country was in distress, nearly every colony sent of its best to fight our battles, and the only regret of India was that she could not also send her sons. The late Colonial Secretary knew all this and believed that the country wanted a closer union with the Colonies. He would not detain the House longer, but he appealed to hon. Gentlemen opposite to strengthen the hands of the Government in the present difficult period by refusing to vote for the Amendment.

Mr. ROBSON (South Shields) said that the hon. Member would not expect him to deal in detail with his line of argument. Owing to the fact that he was obliged to leave the House for a short interval the hon. Member's speech appeared to him to have a rather disconnected effect. He would pass, therefore, to preceding speeches; and particularly to the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. The right hon. Gentleman concluded his speech with some remarks of great significance and great importance upon the question of a Colonial Conference. He intimated in terms by no means obscure that it would be useless and mischievous to hold a Conference unless this country were prepared to consent to the taxation of food and not merely to discuss the taxation of food. In his speech the right hon. Gentleman also referred to a statement which he attributed to the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that there were 13,000,000 of people in this country on the verge of starvation. Therefore, the right hon. Gentleman was prepared to still further increase the hardships of the people who were now living on the verge of starvation; otherwise according to him they could scarcely expect to maintain the Empire or continue in friendly and amiable relations with the Colonies. He believed that no more unjust slander on colonial loyalty and common sense had ever been uttered by a responsible statesman. The Colonies did not desire to increase the hardships of the people of this country in order to increase their own prosperity. Then, according to the right hon. Gentleman people should enter into a conference without instructions. He himself was not concerned to quarrel about that; but they ought to know something about the intention. Whatever the intention of the Government was as to the policy to be pursued at the conference there was no attempt to state it. He regretted that the right hon. Gentleman should have thought it necessary to drag colonial loyalty into the vortex of British politics, and to attempt to make a little Party capital out of that colonial loyalty which should be the property of all Parties in the state.

The right hon. Gentleman had not expressed himself as supporting the Amendment; he had perhaps discovered that, although he could convert the Party opposite to the policy of protection, he could not convert it to suicide, and that was his idea of what a general election would mean. The right hon. Gentleman believed at any rate that when the general election took place the Liberal Party would be returned to power, because he said he looked forward with pleasure to a period of cool criticism. But some of the right hon. Gentleman's other reasons for objecting to a dissolution were more remarkable. He said that all that had happened was that a private Member—himself—had laid certain proposals before the country, and he did not know that that was any reason for a dissolution. Was this the right way for the right hon. Gentleman to set forth his proposals? It was true they were the proposals of a private Member, but they were proposals which had been adopted by the Government. The right hon. Gentleman told the House his proposals were, in substance, identical with those of the Government. He had introduced those proposals as being a new principle to dominate the elections. The question which was to dominate the next general election was not temperance, was not the War Office Report, was not even Chinese labour, but the fiscal question. The right hon. Gentleman told the country, on the 15th of May, 1902, that that was to be the dominant issue at the next general election. He told them that that was not only his view but the view of the Prime Minister. He had pledged the Prime Minister to that view, and it required more than ordinary courage to come down to the House now and say that these were only the proposals of a private Member. The House was bound to treat these proposals as the proposals of the Government.

The speech of the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich, who followed the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, no doubt answered that part of the case sufficiently, but it was to be regretted that the noble Lord had not gone further with regard to the policy of retaliation and informed the House what his attitude was going to be on that question. He had told the House that he understood that policy, but he had not said whether he approved or disapproved of it. He desired now to address himself to the policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Prime Minister rather than that of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, which he would only place by way of contrast beside that of the Prime Minister. The policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had the advantage of being the more direct policy. It was not only intelligible, it was transparent. The right hon. Member for West Birmingham was all for protecting some English producers against all English consumers. That was not precisely the way in which the right hon. Gentleman put it; he appeared to speak of it as protecting the British producer against the foreign producer, but what really happened was that it was the English consumer that stood up to be hit. That was the true meaning of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham and the men of business who were associated with him in this controversy. The right hon. Gentleman and his friends had spent all their lives in endeavouring to get all they could out of the British consumer; they had struggled with the wretched desire of their customers to get their goods as cheaply as possible—which was the English way of doing business—meeting their customers as well as they could, and now the right hon. Gentleman proposed to introduce Continental methods. Instead of meeting the consumer commercially, as heretofore, satisfied with what they made out of him, the right hon. Gentleman and those associated with him desired to insure that he should pay more for what he got than he paid before. The right hon. Gentleman the Prime Minister, however, thought the policy was somewhat too crude. He was not a man of business and did not like to put the matter in that way. The right hon. Gentleman the Prime Minister said it was entirely to protect the consumer and to increase our foreign trade. He knew that if the exports were increased the inevitable result must be that the imports would be increased as well, but that was not the desire of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. That Gentleman desired to cut down imports. Did the right hon. Gentleman the Prime Minister believe the two policies were identical? Did his followers believe it? The noble Lord the Member for Greenwich had said in a speech that day that they had a situation absolutely unparalleled in the history of this nation or of any country governed by a Constitution. Here was a Government in power supported by two sections of a Party, because each believed the Government desired to deceive the other. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham was fairly comfortable so far as his attitude was concerned; he had claimed that the policy of the Prime Minister was identical with that which he had enunciated. He had placed that before the House as a challenge to the Prime Minister. The right hon. Gentleman did not reply to that challenge because, to borrow an humble phrase, "it was more than his place was worth" to repudiate it. The attitude of the right hon. Gentleman the Prime Minister in this matter was very difficult to follow so they had to look at his motive. If they could judge of his motive by his conduct there could be no doubt about it at all. The right hon. Gentleman had rid himself of all his free-trade colleagues and filled their places in the Ministry with—he had almost said the creatures—supporters of tariff reform. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fife had asked various questions as to the policy of the right hon. Gentleman and its bearing on free trade, and had demanded an answer, because it had been authoritatively stated that the Prime Minister was in sympathy with the Tariff Reform League. If that were so, he could not understand any free-trade Unionist any longer supporting the Government. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham must have made that statement in perfect good faith as the result of communication between himself and the Prime Minister. But if he was mistaken, surely in common fairness it was the duty of the Prime Minister to correct his mistake. Not only the free-trade members of the Tory Party, but the whole of England had a right to complain if the Prime Minister deliberately and knowingly allowed a false impression as to his views to be disseminated amongst his followers and the electorate. Strangely enough, the Prime Minister did not seem to object to both sections of his Party disbelieving him in one matter or another. He knew that the protectionists disbelieved his allegations of free-trade motives, and that the free-traders disbelieved the sincerity of his protectionist methods; but instead of resenting support accorded on such terms he invited and lived by it. It might be fine strategy, but it was undoubtedly a course of conduct which cut at the very root of political honour as hitherto understood in this country, and was grossly unfair to the Prime Minister's followers, his opponents, and the electorate.

How did the free-traders stand in view of the Prime Minister's alleged motive? They believed that retaliation was not meant. "Retaliation" was a perfectly well understood word; there might be doubt as to the precise methods by which the policy would be put in force, but its meaning in the fiscal sphere was well known. Did the Prime Minister seriously mean this policy? His free-trade followers thought he did not, their view being that it was really a shelter from the fiscal storm, and that when he had a suitable majority it would be dropped—in short, that it was intended for provisional Party use, just as old-age pensions were. It should not be forgotten that the right hon. Gentlemen the Member for West Birmingham and the Prime Minister were alike engaged in that contemptible imposture practised upon the poor of England. Within the last few days the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had stated that he had never been able to see any source from which the money for old-age pensions could properly be drawn, and it was with that knowledge that he dangled that policy before the electors, took their votes, and then betrayed them. But the fact that both right hon. Gentlemen co-operated in that imposture, instead of putting free-trade Unionists on their guard, seemed rather to inspire them with hope; they hoped, prayed, and believed that retaliation was only one imposture the more. He thought they were gravely mistaken. If once the Prime Minister was returned with a majority in favour of retaliation, it was idle to suppose that that policy would not be worked in the direction of protection. Bluff was a very attractive policy; it sometimes succeeded, but sometimes, as the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham well knew, it failed. It was far more likely to succeed in military than in fiscal matters. Bluff in the sphere of international diplomacy might succeed, as nations had no desire to fight except in defence of some great vital interest. But that was by no means the case in the sphere of economics. In every protectionist nation there was ready to hand a fiscal war party in the manufacturers, who saw their chance of making a profit out of the business. That fiscal party existed in England; it was well organised in the Tariff Reform League, and had its staff in the Tariff Commission. The gentlemen composing the fiscal war party would jump at the chance afforded by bluff of plunging the country into a fiscal war. Mere threats would very soon become much more. The idea that we should be doing to foreign nations only that which they now did to each other was a most dangerous fallacy.

The policy of the Prime Minister had no analogy whatever in the policy of protectionist countries. None of them would dream of adopting it. On two or three occasions they had adopted the policy, but with instant and lamentable results. The Prime Minister's contention was that, being a free-trade country, we had nothing to offer other nations, and that, therefore, we ought to have something to threaten; we were to tax their goods not for the sake of our revenue or trade, but purely to hit and to hurt them. What protectionist country would be so insane as to formulate a policy like that? The whole of their protectionist machinery was carefully devised and elaborated to prevent that appearance of hostility with which the Prime Minister would begin his so-called negotiations. They started with a general tariff, in many cases higher than they desired to maintain; then they approached the country they desired to negotiate with by offering certain remissions of the tariff in return for other fiscal advantages. If the offer was refused the ordinary law operated. There was doubtless some poor semblance of retaliation in that procedure, but how conciliatory it was in form, and form was almost everything in these matters. They proceeded by inducements; we were to proceed by threats. That was an enormous difference—the whole difference between proceeding as men of business and diplomatists would act—and merely showing one's teeth, especially when, as in this case, one had scarcely any teeth that could be used. We should therefore suffer all the detriment of provocation without enjoying the benefit of a successful attack. Protectionist countries had learnt from sore and sad experience how completely mistaken was the policy of threats. None knew better than the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham that if the policy of retaliation were adopted they must begin with a general tariff, and negotiate their commercial treaties on that basis. The right hon. Gentleman knew also that if threats were used without the basis of a general tariff having been adopted, the country would be instantly landed in fiscal war. The inhabitants of these islands were a fighting race; they would fight even with their bread and butter, and that was what the real leaders of the Tory Party desired them to do. They knew that if they could once appeal to the national spirit they would be able to say, "Let us put economics apart; we are now engaged in fiscal war. Let us begin at once with our most powerful weapon. If it be with America, let us place a tax on food." Thus the policy of retaliation would lead to taxes on food, as the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham clearly recognised.

Another fallacy was hidden in the use of the word "bargain." The Prime Minister regarded treaties as matters of bargaining, and said—

> "You cannot do anything at bargaining unless you have something to give as well as to get."

That sounded very plausible, but it covered a somewhat shallow fallacy. Commercial treaties were not in any fair sense analogous to bargains. In a bargain the less one gave the better for him. Each party sought to give as little, and to get as much, as he could. But in a commercial treaty a country gave up something it was better without; they gave up a tax which hampered their trade; so that, if a bargain at all, it was one in which it was more blessed to give than to receive. Protection was built up of false analogies, and retaliation consisted in hitting our friends in order that somehow or other we might hurt our enemy. What was the spirit in which a protectionist entered into negotiations for a treaty? He knew that in his own country a selfish section would demand that their interests should be protected. Owing to the lower standard of wages in other countries, they were obliged to have recourse more to indirect taxation, but what was the protectionist's object? He desired to make more trade with England, and to take off all taxes he could; and he remembered that it paid his country better to trade with England than with any other country. That was the view of all the traders in his own country. There was not a single protectionist country in the world which did not prefer trading with England to trading with any other country. That was a rather remarkable circumstance. Talk about preference—that was the sort of preference they wanted, and that was a free-trade preference. How did that preference work? The foreigner came to this country to sell his goods. If England was the best market for the foreigner to sell in, because of its freedom, it was equally the best market for him to buy in. The foreigner knew when he sold his goods here that he must buy either directly or indirectly here, so that for both buying and selling the protectionist found that England was the best market in the world in which to do business. Let them compare that kind of preference with the preference which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham and the Prime Minister offered in its place. He did not wish to speak disrespectfully of the trade with the Colonies, but let them compare the free-trade kind of preference they were now enjoying from people in other countries, with the preference offered by some of our colonial fellow-subjects. What would be the attitude of foreigners when this country began to threaten them with retaliation? The result would be that they would have a fiscal war which would not only hamper but also destroy trade by millions sterling. In his opinion, the policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham was far less dangerous than that put forward by the Prime Minister, because he put it in a way that one could understand, and one had some idea of the damage it would do; but they could not have a worse method than that which was suggested by the Prime Minister, which would destroy something like 30 per cent. of our trade with foreign countries. That would be the result of a fiscal war. Imagine the state of employment in England after the inauguration of the policy of the Prime Minister with that destruction of trade as the inevitable result. If they were to have protection, they must be prepared to maintain no greater population than protectionist countries. The population maintained in this country was 588 per square mile, in France 230, and in Germany about 260. The policy of retaliation seemed to be spoken of as something that might be handled harmlessly, but in his opinion, it ought to be treated as a deadly danger to our trade. They had had a fair illustration of free-trade retaliation in the Sugar Convention. There they saw how this policy of retaliation operated. The Prime Minister had challenged them to state what their policy was. Was the policy of freedom nothing? They had found freedom a wise policy in this country in the past, and were not going to give it up either for protection or retaliation.

*MR. STUART WORTLEY (Sheffield, Hallam) said the terms of the Amendment claimed that the time had come when a dissolution of this Parliament should take place, and it made that claim on the ground that the fiscal question had been discussed long enough, having been before the country for fully two years. Perhaps the House would excuse him if he said that it seemed to him that discussions of fiscal policy were not very profitable in a Parliament of which one portion was clamouring and demanding that the Government had no authority to deal with any question at all, while the other portion freely admitted that, whatever mandate that Parliament had, they certainly had no mandate to deal with the fiscal question. He did not quite see what use it was, in a debate which demanded the dissolution of Parliament, discussing the merits of a question which had to be relegated to those from whom alone that and all Parliaments received authority. It was said by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Berwick the night before, as a reason for dissolution, that there was great uncertainty in trade, and that a dissolution was almost the only remedy. He thought that outcry was the same as the outcry on the religious question in education—a thing they heard nothing of in schools, but only on platforms and in the House of Commons. They did not hear of any outcry in banking and other commercial circles arising out of the fiscal question.

The claim for dissolution was really a Constitutional question, and it was as such that he proposed to discuss it. It was stated that the present Parliament was devoid of authority, and that it had no mandate. Those who remembered the history of 1900, however, were in a position to dispute the contention as to the want of a mandate. The Leader of the Opposition was somewhat startled on the first night of the session when words were read from his address which showed that he, in 1900, repudiated the idea that that election was to be fought on a single issue. But what was of much more importance was the manner in which the electors approached the matter. He was in a position to show that not only in the election address of the Leader of the Opposition a general claim was put forward that the issue could not be restricted, but such a claim was also put forward by the late Sir William Harcourt in his address. The Leader of the Opposition went further, and warned his hearers against sham reforms to be looked for from Unionists, contrasted the legislation of Unionists with what might be expected from the legislation of Liberals, and said the general policy of the Unionists was one of always looking after the interests of a particular Party or a particular class. Lord Rosebery accused the Unionist Party of what he called scamping their legislation, and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fife jeered at its tinkering character. There were not only these general warnings, but there were particular warnings, and they related to the very legislation which this Parliament proceeded to pass. As to education the late Sir William Harcourt said that one of the greatest questions in such an election must be as to the Party not only most willing but most capable of providing for the education of the people. Lord Rosebery made it one of his principal complaints that the Unionist Party had abandoned the Education Bill of 1896. To summarise the result of all this he would say that language of this kind was indulged in by Liberal candidates all over the country, who followed the example of their leaders, and, therefore, the electors were warned of the kind of legislation that might be introduced by the present Government. With their eyes well opened they cheerfully took their chance, and it was on that ground that the full and ample authority of the Unionist Party rested. It was useless to quote implied promises that if the South African War were finished they would indulge in no legislation at all of any great importance. The electors might have thought, and probably did think, that even unsound Unionist legislation was better than another Majuba settlement in South Africa, and nobody really supposed that the Unionists after such warnings would not attempt any legislation whatever.

What was the next Opposition plea for a dissolution ? Parliamentary history afforded no instance of a Prime Minister dissolving Parliament because by-elections had gone unfavourably to him. No precedent had been cited, except one case in which Mr. Gladstone had given two conflicting utterances on the point. It was said that he wrote a letter on January 8th, 1874, and another letter on January 23rd, of the same year in an opposite sense. The explanation of that was that between the two dates something had operated on his mind which made him think that a dissolution was desirable though it had not presented itself in that sense at first. That something was well known at the time. The late Lord Selborne and others had left on record the true reason for Mr. Gladstone's action. It was not the course of by-elections that had so much dictated his action as the fact that Mr. Gladstone had accepted office, as to the legality of which there were grave doubts, without recourse to a re-election. He maintained that the general doctrine, apart from precedents, as to which there was a singular lack, the universal course of practice was to disregard by-elections, and for the Government to trust the House of Commons, on whom alone responsibility should rest. So long as the House of Commons supported a Ministry, so long as the House was undisturbed by the apparent hostility of constituents, the Ministry should trust the House of Commons. If the House supported them, Ministers should not act as if they knew better than the House. He held that it would be an evil day for the dignity and responsibility of the House if it were not accepted as the sole judge in the issue whether or not the time had come for a dissolution. It was for the House itself to judge of the strength and permanence of any manifestation of feeling outside its doors, and for Members to judge whether they were or were not in a position to say to their constituents, "You may think that we are wrong to-day—but before many years have passed you will know that we are in the right." To act otherwise was to undermine the responsibility of the electors and the moral courage of their representatives. He submitted that no grounds had been shown, certainly in the present debate, for advising a dissolution of the present Parliament, which was asked for merely because the political appetites of hon. Gentlemen opposite were in an unmanageable state.

*MR. BRIGHT (Shropshire, Oswestry) said that one of the arguments of hon. Gentlemen opposite was that trade was not suffering owing to the dissolution of Parliament being postponed. He did not think that that was the case, for at this moment there were all the signs of a coming revival of trade, but that revival was kept back on account of the uncertainty of the political situation. Not only that, the programme of the Government was exhausted, for they had been elected on the purely South African policy of bringing the war to an end. Further, the country was ripe for a dissolution. It was impossible to take up a local newspaper without seeing reports of political meetings and canvassing in behalf of candidates on both sides. That showed that the country was ready to give its verdict, and that would be pronounced enough when the time came to record it. The fiscal question had been before the country for two years, and hon. Gentlemen opposite seemed to be carrying out the traditions of their Party and raising once again the cry for protection, which historically they had never renounced, although they had undoubtedly shelved it for a time. The main issue before the country at the dissolution would be protection versus free-trade.

Various arguments had been heard as to why there should not be a dissolution. They were told that many questions were unsettled, among them that of unemployment. It might justly be said that unemployment in its serious aspect at present was largely due to the policy of the Government, because unemployment always followed the close of a great war. It was so in the case of the Crimean War and of the great French War which ended in 1815. The country was simply reaping the results of the Government's South African policy, and it was not for hon. Gentlemen opposite, who had created this great difficulty, to talk of the unemployed as a reason for postponing a general election. A great deal had been said about "dumping;" but, whatever might be said of its occasional disadvantages, it had also its advantages. Take, for instance, the tinplate trade, of which he knew something. Last year was the record year in that industry; and why? Because of the "dumped" bars received from Germany. If the raw material could be obtained at a cheap rate from abroad it could be worked out here in manufactured articles. Then, they had had experience of the benefits of securing cheap sugar; but by the Sugar Convention they had managed to damage flourishing industries such as jam-making and confectionery. That cheerful result had been brought about by trying to stop dumping." But there was something more than all that, if they were going in a country like this to limit the supply of corn and other food from every other source in order to give a preference to colonial products. That, he contended would create a position of danger, for it was impossible to suppose that there would not be times of scarcity in the Colonies, and then there would be a limited market on which to draw from our necessary supplies of food. They had such an experience recntly in the cotton trade. Cotton was mainely imported from America, and there was a limited market. The result was that a year ago thousands of men were out of employment. The same would apply to corn. There would be a limited market; there would be great differences in prices from time to time; and the people of this country would be damaged, because it was on cheap food the people lived. He could not imagine anything more unwise or more foolish. They on that side did not fear a dissolution. The by-elections had shown what the country thought on the question of dear food. His own by-election was fought on the question of dear bread, the next would probably be fought on the question of dear sugar. This country did not want this doctrine of artificial dearness; it was ripe for a dissolution, and he hoped it would get it before long.

*MR. AUSTIN TAYLOR (Liverpool, East Toxteth) said he wished to direct a few observations to the terms of the Amendment rather than to the fiscal question. If the Amendment were a naked demand for dissolution on the ground of the general policy of the Government he should have no hesitation as to the course he should adopt. There was a large portion of the policy of the Government with which he was in absolute sympathy; moreover, he had been returned as a supporter of the Government; and if they were merely challenged on general policy he should have no hesitation in giving them his support. But the Amendment was not so drawn. It was drawn in terms which did not raise the clear issue of dissolution on the general policy of the Government; or the clear issue as between the rival policies of free trade and protection. It demanded the dissolution of Parliament, and the termination of the trust which the Government had undertaken, on the ground that the fiscal question had been sufficiently discussed, and that the country was ripe for its decision. He was not quite sure whether the discussion of the fiscal question was really concluded. Judging by the speeches to which they had listened, there was still an ample desire in the minds of Members to discuss a policy which had now been discussed for nearly two years. It had been urged during the course of the debate that if Parliament were dissolved some good might result to the cause of free trade, but it should not be forgotten that during the lifetime of the present House of Commons they had the pledge of the Government that no change should take place in the fiscal system of the country. From that point of view the more prolonged was the existence of the present Government, the further was any change in the fiscal policy of the country deferred. From that point of view it might fairly be contended thatthe existence of the present House of Commons was in favour of free trade. In addition, many Unionist and Liberal free traders thought that the longer the question was discussed in the country the more free trade had to gain. On the other hand, it was perfectly well known that there was going on, all over the country, a determined attempt to capture the Unionist Party's machinery for the cause of a protectionist policy. No doubt the most drastic cure, bitter but salutary, for that process, which was gradually sapping the Unionist Party, and driving out all those elements which made for commercial freedom, would be a general election in which the Unionist Party on the question of fiscal policy received a shattering defeat. It was not perfectly clear therefore, on the terms of the Amendment, and on a review of the general position, whether it was or was not desirable, in the interests of free trade, that a dissolution should immediately take place.

He saw in the newspapers recently a remarkable illustration of what was really going on in the Unionist Party in Liverpool, one of the Divisions of which he had the honour of representing. In that city there had been recently a most regrettable vacancy, due to the retirement of Sir John Willox, whom he was sure they would regret to miss in the debates in that House. His successor in the candidature on behalf of the Unionist Party had recently been adopted, and at the time of his adoption he made a very remarkable speech to the Conservative Divisional Council of the Everton Division. While giving a general support to His Majesty's Government, he reserved liberty of action on two matters of supreme importance. The first of these was the question of Church Discipline, and to all who knew Liverpool that was not surprising. The Bill which he (Mr. Taylor) had had the honour of arguing in that House, and for which he secured a Second Reading, was dear to Liverpool. Might he say in passing that it was consoling to find the Liberal candidate was, strange to say, equally pledged to an ardent support of that measure, and indeed had gone further and had pledged a future Liberal Parliament to pass it without hesitation? That was a pledge which he (Mr. Taylor) would commend to the notice of right hon. Gentlemen on the opposite Benches, because if he was not there to remind them of it he trusted that other Gentlemen would be there to insist firmly on those pledges given broadcast throughout the country being redeemed. He hoped that when, in the hey-day of their prosperity, in the plenitude of their power, they occupied the Ministerial Benches they would not forget among other pressing reforms this measure on which their supporters throughout the country had pledged themselves with unhesitating alacrity. But the candidate who had been selected for the Everton Division of Liverpool to uphold the Unionist cause had made a further reservation on the subject of fiscal policy. These were his words—

> "Under these circumstances whilst a believer in the policy Mr. Balfour advocated, he was prepared to go even further, and he declared that his ideas and aspirations tended towards the policy enunciated by Mr. Chamberlain in the direction he had indicated, namely, a united Empire, with the necessary consequences, Colonial and Indian preferences."

Involving, of course, continued Mr. Taylor, the taxation of food, which had been explicitly excluded from the Government programme by the Prime Minister. The candidate went on to say—

> "If, therefore, they had any doubt as to his suitability as a candidate on those grounds, he should prefer that they should tell him so frankly."

Notwithstanding those explicit statements, for which he thought the candidate was to be commended by all outspoken and honest men appealing for the suffrages of their fellow-citizens, he was adopted by the Conservative Party, and would no doubt in due course receive Ministerial support and all the assistance which could be placed at his disposal. That was an indication of what he (Mr. Taylor) meant when he said that the Conservative machinery throughout the country was being captured, not merely for the policy of the Government, but also for that further policy which had been indicated by Mr. Chamberlain. By the making of these reservations on tariff reform the position of the Unionist free-traders was also incidentally strengthened, because if it was legitimate for a man to make a reservation as to the Government's policy by saying he was prepared to go further and possibly eventually in a contrary direction under the auspices of Mr. Chamberlain, surely Unionist free-traders were equally justified in claiming liberty of action on the question of fiscal policy in the direction of free trade. If these candidates were able to go a little further than the Prime Minister then Unionist free-traders were justified in saying that they could not go quite so far. He was quite clear that the Amendment involved the question of fiscal policy, and the division would to a very large extent be regarded by the country as one more trial of strength between the forces of protection and the forces of free trade. It was that consideration alone which would prevent him giving that support to the Government which, if it had been challenged on general questions of policy, he should have been most happy to do. Unionist free traders were placed in a position of peculiar embarrassment, and whether he abstained from the division altogether or went to the length, in the interests of free trade, of voting with the Opposition, he wished it to be clearly understood that it was not because he abated his sympathy with the general principles and policy of Conservatism, but because he was determined upon this one great issue of free trade—commercial liberty against monopoly and restriction—to cast in his lot with those who were the friends of free trade and to dissociate himself from those who were apparently its enemies.

*MR. HUNTER CRAIG (Lanarkshire, Govan) said he wished to call the attention of the House to an aspect which taxing the food of the people of this country would have, with reference to the wheat-producing Colonies, should a tax be put on wheat on foreigners and the Colonies exempted. Instead of this being an advantage to the Colonies, why the very reverse was the case. He spoke on this subject after an experience of over thirty years as an importer of breadstuffs from foreign and colonial countries and he said that were this policy carried out the price of wheat would not only be raised against the British consumer, to at least the extent of the duty, but it would also be raised against the Colony which exported the wheat. To illustrate what he meant, take the United States and Canada as competing countries for the sale of their surplus wheats in the United Kingdom. In buying from Canada he could pay, say 2s. per quarter more (if that is the tax on United States wheat) to the Canadian farmer than he could pay to the United States farmer, because of the exemption of duty on Canadian wheat. The Canadian farmer gets the amount of the duty over the price paid to the United States farmer. Consequently the local price of wheat in Canada is raised to the extent of this 2s. duty, and raised to this extent against the Canadian population. If the local price is raised in Canada 2s. (the amount of the duty) over the local price of United States wheat, the Canadian milling industry is no longer able to compete on all fours, as they are now doing, for the sale of flour in foreign countries such as China, with its 300,000,000, Japan, etc. They are handicapped by having to pay the same price as the British buyer pays to the Canadian farmer, and which is the amount of the duty more than he pays to the United States farmer, because on Canadian wheat there is no duty to pay on arrival in the United Kingdom. Thus the effect of a tax on wheat from aliens, with free imports to the Colonies, is raising the price to the colonial consumers and to the milling industry of the Colonies who can no longer compete on equal terms in foreign markets. The Colonial farmers are not asking for such a preference. They are a highly prosperous class and immigration to Canada is continuing to the extent of 90,000 per annum from the United States alone to settle on farms there. He had it on the highest authority that a preference to Canada would have the result not only of raising the price of food to the people of that country, but also of taxing the milling industry of Canada to a corresponding extent, and that that industry would be thereby handicapped in competing with the United States for the trade of other countries. When the shilling duty on corn was proposed three years ago he had cables from Canada urging him to endeavour to secure the exemption of Canada. Their view now was the very opposite, the millers urging that preference should not be given because it would handicap them in the flour-exporting trade. Not only would the people of this country be penalised by the adoption of such a policy, but the wheat-producing Colonies would be taxed, because the price of wheat would be raised locally by the amount of the duty. He thought that this was an aspect of the question which ought to be borne in mind.

MR. REGINALD LUCAS (Portsmouth) thought it only fair to say that, although a free-trader, he had no fault to find either with the Prime Minister, his colleagues, or the Party organisation in regard to his position in his constituency. Ministers or Party organisation could modify the views of constituencies no more than they could control the winds of heaven. To stand for a seat against the wishes of the Party organisation as the hon. Member for King's Lynn and others had announced their intention of doing, seemed an heroic attitude to adopt, while those who had determined to retire from politics altogether were sometimes accused of weakness. But there was something to be said in defence of those who had been driven into the latter course. It was quite true that one could, if he chose, stand at all hazards and refuse to be elbowed out, but he would not admit that he was open to the charge of undue subservience to Party if he thought it better to retire from politics altogether rather than incur a personal defeat, and, what was more important, break up the Party probably for many years to come. After all, there was a great deal of genuine principle in loyalty to Party. A man pinned his faith more to one set of political opinions than to another, and although he might differ strongly from his friends on one particular point, yet he might consider it better for the good of the country in general that he should refrain from destroying the Party, whose policy as a whole he supported. For this reason he had thought it better to submit to political extinction, rather than take the line to be adopted by the hon. Members for Durham and King's Lynn. As to the Amendment before the House, he should vote with the Government, who had repeatedly stated that nothing would be done in this matter during the present Parliament. He was returned to support this Government, and as long as he was in the House he should do so.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

Mr. Hunter Craig.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [15th February] to Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'And we humbly represent to Your Majesty that, the various aspects of the fiscal question having now been fully discussed in the country for nearly two years, the time has come for submitting the issue to the people without further delay.'"—(Mr. Asquith.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

*MR. TOMKINSON (Cheshire, Crewe) said no one who had been present during the delivery of the lucid speech of the learned and hon. Member for South Shields could do otherwise than regret that it was delivered to so scant an audience on the benches opposite, and it was more to be regretted that the right hon. Member for West Birmingham should be conspicuous by his absence, as it was only across the floor of the House that it was possible to put straight questions requiring straight answers, and to challenge the right hon. Gentleman to make good and confirm in the House the statements he had made throughout the country. The whole question of protection and retaliation rested on what was called the outrageously unfair treatment meted out to England by foreign countries in practically excluding her products from their markets, whilst they themselves found a perfectly free and open market in this country. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had, at various meetings, elaborated the suggestion, illustrating his arguments by means of the tariffs of Germany and the United States of America, but everybody knew his statements were not true; everybody knew we could not buy without selling and that if we bought from foreigners they, in their turn, must buy from us. He had said at Newport—

> "You cannot compete with the United States, for they have a population of 70,000,000 from whom their tariffs practically exclude you, while they have in addition your market of 40,000,000; consequently their market is 110,000,000 to your 40,000,000. Similarly Germany has the market of her 55,000,000 people from which she excludes you; she has, therefore a market of 95,000,000 to your 40,000,000."

Now the Board of Trade Returns showed that the United States of America, France and Germany took from us goods to the value of £98,000,000, of which more than £60,000,000 represented our products and more than £30,000,000 transhipments. A most lucrative trade and one we had because we were the only free market in the world. Such statements as those made by the right hon. Gentleman showed an ignorance that was little less than criminal. France, Germany and America, whom he had thus attacked, were, in fact, our best customers, far better than any other white customers we had, including the Colonies.

Some economists had imports on the brain. They looked upon them as a loss, but he could give the House a concrete instance of the fallacy of that theory. A friend of his freighted a ship with 2,000 tons of Welsh coal at a cost of 15s. a ton, making an export of £1,500 which he sent to Manila. That coal sold for £3,500. The money was invested in 400 tons of Manila sugar which was brought to this country, when it was valued at £7,000. It could hardly be said that that transaction—export 2,000 tons of coal at £1,500, import 400 tons of sugar at £7,000—resulted in a loss to this country. In dealing with the question of exports and imports, it was contended by some that our imports were loss and our exports gain, and he supposed that if this ship, on her return, had been sunk with this cargo of sugar, it would have been said by those Gentlemen that we had gained thereby. It appeared to him that the only way to understand protectionist logic was to read it standing on one's head. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had gone about industriously searching for ruined industries, but, unfortunately for the right hon. Gentleman, wherever he went he found trade flourishing. Cotton was flourishing, the tinplate trade was flourishing, in fact that trade was the greatest instance of the triumph of free trade over protection that could be found. No doubt the McKinley tariff affected it greatly at first, but it had recovered from that and now had markets all over the world, and trade was never better. It was said that the straw hat manufacturing had been ruined; that the poor girls of Luton who made straw plait had been ruined by Japanese plait imported into this country. As a fact, the girls who used to make straw plait were now earning twice the wages they did when they made it themselves. Luton had doubled its population in seventeen years. With regard to agriculture, he made bold to say that agriculture under proper conditions of security was better now than it had been for a long time, and infinitely better than it had been under protection. In the days of protection, farmers were ruined by thousands. Committee after Committee of this House was appointed to inquire into the wretched condition of agriculture, and farmer after farmer came before those Committees to say that agriculture could not be carried on, if the present rents were to be paid, if wheat was allowed to fall below 80s. a quarter. Then with regard to milling. Milling was doing well, and although the little country mills could not compete with the great steam rolling-mills, they made a good business in selling and grinding foreign feeding-stuffs, and so far from our having a shortage of offals we sold between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000 cwts. to Denmark and other countries every year. There was not a single industry which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham tried to make out was decadent and ruined, but what had done remarkably well. Ever since the right hon. Gentleman had started his campaign, in spite of the undoubted depression of the home trade which then existed, and which was the result of the war, our foreign trade had gone up until it had reached the astounding total of £920,000,000. When Sir Robert Peel repealed the Corn Laws our total trade was only £120,000,000, although prices were much higher then than they were now. There had been an increase on the trade of eight-fold, but if we took the decrease of values into consideration it would be sixteen-fold. We did more than three-quarters of the carrying trade of the whole world, and yet there were some who wanted it all. We had had depression and suffering at home, but he distinctly dissented from the view that so great a portion of our population were on the starvation line. He believed the figures were grossly exaggerated. Let the House remember that what in one country was comfort was scant commons in another. He read only that week of the miserable condition of 300 horses which were landed at Antwerp every Monday and which, after being examined and certified by the veterinary surgeon to be suffering from no contagious disease, were taken away to be slaughtered for food, a food that our people here would not eat.

The question he desired to ask was, whether on the whole foreign tariffs damaged a free-trade country. He thought when a balance was struck they did us an immense deal of good; they gave us the carrying trade of the world. American protection had ruined American shipping. At one time it was nearly equal to our own; now it was only 800,000 against our 10,500,000 tons. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham was a master of lucid speech and expression, and hon. Members had heard many of his utterances quoted, but there was one expression upon this question which he (Mr. Tomkinson) had not seen quoted. It was not to the right hon. Gentleman's detriment. In 1885 the right hon. Gentleman summed up the protective system, and said the effect of it was "to stereotype inferiority." The right hon. Gentleman had been going about trying to account for our unemployed by foreign tariffs, but he had nothing to say about the wasteful expenditure of the war, although everybody knew that unproductive expenditure was one of the greatest causes of unemployment, while productive expenditure was the best means of providing it. Protection was a quack remedy. It gave an inducement to every interest to rise up in turn and say, "What is going to be done for me." That was inevitable, because it taxed some industries to protect others.

It had been said that the Government's mandate was not exhausted, and that there was no need to appeal to the country. On the 8th October, 1900, the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham sent a message to his constituents expressing a hope that the men of Crewe would not be so unwise or unpatriotic as to return a friend of the Boers, but the reply they gave to this mesage was that they returned him to Parliament again with a majority of 1,200. The right hon. Gentleman told them at the last election that the real issue was not a question of domestic policy, but a question of the existence of the Empire. Having got the votes of the electors upon that issue, the Government proceeded to legislate upon questions of domestic policy which the electors were assured were not at issue. Some fifteen months after that the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, telegraphed to the Unionist candidate at Dewsbury reminding the electors that at that election patriotism came before Party, and declaring that there were only two Parties, those who were for their country and those who were for the Boers. It was for those reasons that he contended that the Government's mandate had been misused, and was now exhausted, and the by-elections had emphatically pronounced against them by an unexampled turnover of votes.

*Sir HENRY KIMBER (Wandsworth) said that, judging from the speeches which had been made in this debate, it was clear that the word "protection" had in the minds of different men a very different meaning. They had been told in another place by a distinguished nobleman, who was understood by many to be the future Leader of the Liberal Party, that the hon. Member for West Birmingham had the design of introducing into the House and the country the protection of 1843. Only yesterday the hon. Member for Durham spoke of the antiquated protectionism of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. But the protection of 1843, represented by a 28s. duty on corn at a 50s. price was a very different thing to the protection presented by the ex-Colonial Secretary, which was a 2s. duty upon a 27s. price. [AN HON. MEMBER from the OPPOSITION side: It is the same thing.] He contended that it was not at all the same thing. Why was the duty of 1843 imposed? It was put on simply to raise the price of the home produce in favour of the home producer, for the purpose of putting large profits into the pockets of a particular class of people at the expense of the rest. The object of the policy of the hon. Member for West Birmingham was not to raise prices, but to enable us to meet our competitors on equal terms, and to enable our Colonies to have a fair chance, unhampered by unfair competition with the rest of the world. Therefore the 2s. duty on corn now suggested was a far different thing not only in amount, but also in principle. [OPPOSITION cries of "No, no!"] He had risen to present to the House the views of one of the largest of the Metropolitan constituencies, composed for the most part of men engaged in commerce and finance in the City of London. He ventured to say that over 90 per cent. of his supporters were in favour of the policy propounded by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. When this question was first brought forward the Opposition were opposed to all inquiry. If any of His Majesty's subjects were suffering under a grievance, he wished to know what objection there could be to an inquiry. In the present case the Opposition not only declared that there should be no reform, but also that there should be no inquiry as to whether reform was necessary.

The new fiscal policy had been described by the hon. Member opposite as an unclean thing and a quack remedy. The hon. Member imagined that these duties were to be imposed for the purpose of raising prices, whereas the proposal was one for making the foreigner pay the duty. What did it matter about imposing a small duty if the foreigner paid it? Two years ago they placed a 1s. duty on corn, which brought £2,500,000 to the revenue, and this did not raise the price of bread by one farthing. [AN HON. MEMBER: Why did you take it off then?] All they desired was to protect the men who were hounded out of their trade unfairly by underselling. Let them suppose for a moment that a 2s. duty was placed upon corn. Who were the vendors of corn? Russia, Argentina, the United States, two of our own great Colonies and others. In the case of a 2s. duty the effect would be that these vendors would drop their profits by the amount of the duty, and it did not follow that the price would be raised in this country by that amount. When France put a duty of 12s. 2d. upon corn the price was not raised in France more than two-thirds of that amount. He admitted that the tendency of an import duty was to raise the price, because it was an additional burden upon the producer of the commodity. But this was not the only factor in the operation of the law of supply and demand. An import duty tended to lessen the price to the consumer, because it increased the supply and stimulated home production. While he supported the policy of the Prime Minister, which he thought was the best and most cautious policy, yet at the same time he was a believer in the principles propounded by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. He might add that he should not be a believer in the new fiscal proposals if he thought they meant a return to the protection of 1843, but if they read the whole of the speeches made by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, both inside and outside of the House of Commons, he was sure they would not find the slightest trace of what the hon. Member for Durham called "antiquated protectionism."

He professed and believed he was a thorough free-trader, but he did not believe that free-trade principles precluded anybody from supporting proposals to prevent the dumping of goods upon our shores at less than cost price, which had the effect of destroying our industries. The alleged benefits of dumping were, in his opinion, very dearly paid for by the destruction to such a large extent of the industries of the people of this country. They had already lost profits amounting to £30,000,000 in industries which had been destroyed by unfair competition, although he was glad to say that they had been able to make up for it in other parts of the world. If everything they bought was produced abroad, the workers here would be idle. It was true that the rich could go on buying these dumped goods, but what about the unemployed? Under such circumstances what would be the position of this nation amongst the other nations of the world? They would simply be a people existing upon their riches and depleting their resources, and giving away those industrial occupations which maintained the vigour and the manhood of the people. Was that the position which this country desired to occupy in the future? They had been told by various Leaders of the Opposition that the remedy for men being out of employment and for sacrificed industries was that capital and labour must look out for fresh employment. He knew of one industrial undertaking which cost £300,000, and in consequence of dumping by foreigners it had recently been sold for £50,000. What had become of the capital and labour that used to be employed there? When these works were stopped these skilled workers were obliged to take up other employment, and he knew one of these skilled workmen who had become a porter on one of the railways. That was a sample of the way in which skilled artisans were obliged to transfer their labour in consequence of dumping. Was that the way in which the great industries of this country could be maintained? In conclusion, he urged the House not to reject fiscal proposals which at one period were abused for objectionable purposes, but which were now to be utilised to keep industries in the country, to increase home production, and to put money into the revenue at the expense of the foreigner.

MR. THOMAS SHAW (Hawick Burghs) said he thought the speech of the hon. Member for Wandsworth proved, if any proof were needed, that the arguments on the fiscal question were before the country. In that speech he seemed to hear the arguments of Mr. Ackroyd in 1881, and all those gloomy predictions as to the fate of our trade and the ruin of our industries. Each and all of these had been falsified by twenty-four years of time, and now the hon. Gentleman said that the state of this country was so disastrous that it was only because it was a rich country that it had been able to buy in any market. How did it become so rich? Was it by following the principles of Mr. Ackroyd or those of his hon. friend? No, it was by this island continuing to be the dumping ground, if they would, for all the cheap goods the world could produce, and using that great element of cheapness to transform it into the industrial workshop of the world. The hon. Member said he was the enemy of cheapness. Everybody was the enemy of cheapness who wished to sell dear, and that was the whole story now in a nutshell. Those enemies of cheapness who wished to sell dear were also the enemies of those who wished to buy cheaply, and, after all, it was a struggle between the producer wanting a high-price market, and the consumer wanting a low-price market. No argumentation would conceal from the country or the House of Commons that this was now the threadbare argument, namely, that cheapness was the curse of a great consuming nation. But his hon. friend claimed for himself that he did not wish to go back to antiquated protection, stating that he was a free-trader. Yes, but with a difference. He was a free-trader who was in favour of a tax on corn. How did we get rid of antiquated protection? By a huge agitation headed by Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright. It was owing to the Anti-Corn-Law League, whose primary object was to get rid of the heavy tax on corn which his hon. friend wished to reimpose.

* SIR HENRY KIMBER: I did not say I was in favour of a tax on corn at all. [OPPOSITION cries of "Yes."] I pointed out that in the circumstances there was a great argument in its favour

MR. THOMAS SHAW said that made the matter wonderfully clear. The hon. Member was not in favour of what there was a great argument in favour of. Why did he give the House the argument while concealing his disrelish for it? It was always the way. When they got hold of those persons who were arguing that they were free-traders, and when they were found to be in favour of a tax on corn and were reminded of all the miserable memories of the country in connection with the tax on corn, they fought shy of it.

* SIR HENRY KIMBER: I am sure the hon. and learned Gentleman does not wish to misrepresent me. I did not pretend that I was in favour of a tax on corn. I do not wish to sail under false colours. I did not propose a duty on corn or anything of the kind, but I said that under circumstances where it would not raise the price I was not unfavourable. I did not say that I was in favour of a duty on corn simpliciter.

MR. THOMAS SHAW said that made it still clearer. The first stage was that he was not in favour of a tax on corn; but he thought there were arguments in favour of it. The second stage was that he was not adverse to a tax on corn, and the third stage was that he was in favour of a tax on corn where it would not raise prices, so that they had the old story back again. It was a tax on corn coupled with the prophecy that they would not put so much on as would raise prices. Much the agriculturists of the country would thank them for that. It was always the way. The tax always began in the innocent thin-edge-of-the-wedge form, and, once they had any departure from the principle of taxation for revenue purposes only, there was no saying what stage they might go to.

The Amendment pointed plainly to a dissolution of Parliament. He must confess to some dissent from some views expressed on his own side of the House with reference to the disturbance of trade caused by the present agitation. One of the enormous advantages of a free-trade country was that trade took its own course irrespective of the tactics of politicians. A remarkable instance of this was to be found in the figures of 1904. The year 1902 was admitted to be a record year. Our total foreign trade for 1902 was £877,500,000. But in 1904 it had actually risen to £922,500,000. Then the great argument was that our exports of manufactured goods were bound to decline. But within the past two years those exports to foreign countries and the Colonies had increased by no less than £16,500,000. In view of those figures any one who said, as the Chancellor of the Exchequer had said, that any candid man viewed the present situation of trade with anxiety was fit to make any assertion with regard to the prosperity of the country. He seemed to have lost sight of the elementary distinction between prosperity and adversity. He hoped that the day was far distant when trade would be in the hands of any persons who were able to control the tariffs and the political movements of the time. It was only by trade being left a free course that it could be magnified in our country, and the moment they produced arrangements, and trusts, and cartels which were the ancillaries of these tariffs, they might reasonably expect the depletion of our splendid existing trade.

He attached little weight to the influence of these discussions on the trade of the country, but there were other interests which were far greater, and that was where the politician came in, and made two propositions which he ventured to say still held the field. These propositions were so wide as this, that there was to be no Empire without preference, and secondly, that there was to be no preference without the taxation of food. Notwithstanding all that had occurred these propositions absolutely held the field. They depended upon the taxation of the food of the people of this country, and, therefore, the gravity of the situation was no less than this. The proposal was to postpone a great Imperial issue and prevent the people of this country from making a pronouncement on it—an issue which involved the question that in order to build up or conserve our Imperial unity it was necessary to put an increased burden on the poorest of the community. His reason for approving of the Amendment was mainly this, that he thought the case with regard to protection and preference was fully before the country. That was demonstrated by the action of the Prime Minister himself, who said that his views on the subject were so clear that they could not be restated with advantage, and of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham, who, having nothing new to suggest, said the same old things over and over again. The whole case had been stated over and over again by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, who talked about that obliging foreigner who was to pay a large proportion of our import taxes.

All that might be right, or it might be wrong, but at all events the country had had it from him over and over again. Had they not heard with the utmost clearness from the right hon. Gentleman that his view was that the taxation of food would lead to an increase of employment and wages in this county. That was an argument which must go home to every person, if true. It was said that, on the whole, it would not increase the price of living, but that it would tend to help our general trade, especially the export trade, which employed so many hands. That was the case on one branch of the argument. Now he proposed to show equally high authority on the other side. The authority was the right hon. Gentleman himself, because he had dealt with all these problems before. He had dealt with the arguments of Mr. Ackroyd just as they were dealing with the arguments of the right hon. Gentleman himself to-night. The view which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham then took with regard to the taxation of food was this—

> "A tax on food would mean a decline in wages. It would certainly involve a decline in their productive value. The same amount ot money would have smaller purchasing power. It would mean this, for it would raise the price of every article produced in the United Kingdom, and it would indubitably bring about the loss of that gigantic export trade which the industry and energy of the country, working under conditions of absolute freedom, have been able to create."

In these circumstances both sides are fully and fairly before the country, and they have been represented by the same high authority. [AN HON. MEMBER: What is the date?] The date was 1881, and the speech was reported in "Hansard." [AN HON. MEMBER: Times have changed.] The arguments with regard to the Imperial nature of the case were such as would do nobody any harm. They were now perfectly accustomed to the beating of this drum in the country, and they had heard it reverberating in the speeches of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. But when they came to a close issue as to the appointment of a conference they were on far more serious ground, because here was a proposal as to the basis on which the conference was to meet. It had been asked whether we had anything to offer to the Colonies. It was suggested that we must have something more to offer than we had given already. He regretted that these issues were raised, because they made people consider the actual relation of the mother country to the Colonies. Was it not sufficient that for every shilling the Colonies paid for naval defence the people of this country paid £5, and that whilst the Colonies for the most part surrounded themselves with protective barriers we kept our ports open to the free importation of their products. Was there to be something put to that? Must we make it a measure of the patriotism of the people and of their attachment to the Colonies that we should tax the food of our own people in order to benefit the Colonies? What this Government had done with reference to the treatment of land, licensing, and so on, had raised a good many more points than they had settled, and it was much to be regretted that this question should be raised now as a matter between the two Parties. The Liberal Party had not introduced it, but they deplored its introduction, because they were convinced that it could lead to no good whatever. It was said that apart from fiscal matters there was nothing for the colonial representatives and our country to discuss. Was there not? He thought there were a good few things to discuss, and he would cite only two. He knew nothing more worthy of discussion than the contributions of the Colonies to our Imperial defence; and with regard especially to our newest colony, let them follow the colonial representative into conference and discuss with them the bearing, moral and social, of the introduction of Chinese labour into the Transvaal. He understood that it was a cardinal principle of Members opposite that there was to be no taxation of raw material. If that were so they were in a difficult situation. If there was to be no preference with regard to raw material, as to which Australia would not benefit, they would not only introduce trouble between the Colonies and the mother country, but trouble between the Colonies themselves.

Besides all this trouble there was a great Constitutional question involved here. He attached no great weight to by-elections, but after all the country counted for something, and the only way in which, under the Constitution, they could express their mind was at elections. During this discussion no supporter of the Government had ventured to declare that in his opinion the House now represented the actual mind of the country. What was the Constitutional position they were brought to? He could not express it more briefly than in the language of Burke, who said in a passage quoted by Mr. Green—

> "The value, spirit, and essence of the House of Commons consists in its being the express image of the feelings of the nation."

That being settled doctrine, who could say that this House of Commons was the express image of the feelings of the nation? The fact, as they all admitted, was that it was an effete, broken, and distorted representation of the feelings of the nation, and that if the nation only got the slightest chance it would make a vast change in the personnel and composition of the House of Commons. It was altogether inconsistent with the dignity of the House that this kind of thing should go on. He knew that it was possible to go on evading issues, and with regard to the evasion of issues he would only say this. He did not think that the position could be better expressed than by the words used by Sir Robert Peel in a letter to Mr. Cobden—

> "I do not consider the evasion of difficult, and the postponement of troublesome, questions to be the carrying on of a Government."

On the whole, he contended that this debate had illustrated that all the arguments on both sides were now before the country, and that the only new question to be discussed was how long the country was to be kept from pronouncing its verdict. Varieties of phraseology were indeed employed with regard to the issue now before the House. The hon. Baronet who represented Truro, for example, had asked—

> "Is this Government to be put into the melting-pot to enable us to see who is to take hold of the handle of the ship of State?"

No one could now deny that, although the issue was the same old one, it might be presented in a fresh and attractive form.

*Mr. MALCOLM (Suffolk, Stowmarket) said that the speech to which they had just listened almost tempted him to forget that they were engaged in a most elaborate sham fight. When he saw in the Amendment on the Paper that the country had had enough of discussion of the fiscal question he was inclined to doubt it. Judging by the state of the Benches during the last two or three days, however, he was inclined to think that the House of Commons had had enough of it. He wished to add, for a few moments, his reflections on the Amendment, which contained two perfectly irrelevant propositions in regard to fiscal policy and dissolution. He was one of that despised sect known in the language of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Fife as a "pure Balfourian"—pure and, he hoped, undefiled. He did not understand the position of the Opposition. He could not understand their definition. Their political photographs had been somewhat difficult to recognise; they had been both undeveloped and over-exposed. He thought he understood the creed of the Prime Minister, although other people did not, and the reason might be because he wanted to understand it, while hon. Gentlemen on the other side of the House did not want to understand it. Anyhow, he would venture that evening to give his definition of it, and likewise to relieve his own conscience. He approved most emphatically of the Prime Minister's scheme for retaliation, a retaliation which would help and not hinder us in our trade. There was a point of disagreement between himself and the right hon. Member for Berwick. The right hon. Baronet said that retaliation meant liberty to go to war, but he thought that what it meant was to give us liberty to arm ourselves when tariff war was declared against us. In the second place, he believed most thoroughly in the summoning of a conference with the Colonies, India and the Crown Colonies to discuss our Imperial position. He did not mean the ordinary conference which would come on in the ordinary course next year, but a conference ad hoc to discuss whether our commercial relations were based on the mutual advantage of all parties concerned. He thought that the right hon. Member for Berwick was mistaken the previous night in stating that they, on that side of the House, were making Party capital out of the Colonial Conference question. He seemed to think that the conference next year was the conference referred to by the Prime Minister in his speech the previous day. The Prime Minister meant another conference, to include the discussion of all our commercial relations; and to his mind a conference without India and the Crown Colonies included would be a farce and a sham.

Much had been made of the question whether the Prime Minister and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham agreed in principle. That entirely depended how the principle was defined. His own definition of the principle was that the British colonial trade should be encouraged inter se as between manufacturers, buyers, and distributors. And in the second place, that by some scheme of give-and-take, advantages not now available between the Colonies and Dependencies and the mother country should be strengthened by mutual agreement. He believed that to be the principle which the Prime Minister had in view. He hoped he might be allowed to say, however, that he widely disagreed with the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham and the Tariff Reform League on the question of methods and of 10 per cent. import duties, for he saw no difference between these and protection. He believed that that was a most unscientific plan for benefiting the trade of our country. He was somewhat led to wonder why it was that we got most of our pauper labour from highly protected countries. If high protection benefited employment, that pauper labour would stay at home. He thought that those who agreed with the Prime Minister might be allowed to reserve their judgment on the question of food taxation until the conference had been called and had reported. Until that had been done their judgment would not be worth anything. Again, he disagreed most entirely with the treatment meted out to the Unionist free-traders by the Tariff Reform League. It was not to be forgotten that the Tariff Reform League was headed by gentlemen who, with the exception of his right hon. friend, a few years ago proudly called themselves protectionists, and who now, when they found the word "protectionist" stank in the nostrils of the nation, said they were not protectionists at all.

On the question of dissolution he agreed with his noble friend the Member for Greenwich. To employ a proverb of our native country, they were not prepared "to buy a pig in a poke." Before giving hon. Gentlemen opposite the opportunity of coming into office, he wanted to know what they were going to do when they did come in. As his noble friend below him had pointed out, what they wanted to know was what they were going to do with the Education Act? Were they going to upset it? And were they going to upset the Licensing Reform Act? Were they going to fight as in 1899 and refuse the renewal of the Agricultural Rating Act? And, above all, what were they going to do in regard to Home Rule? Until they told the House and the country that they could not expect that they would be supported in their demand for a dissolution. With all respect for their stupid Amendment, the Opposition had managed to spike their own guns, and had lost from twenty-five to thirty votes of free-traders on the Ministerial side. Until he knew what the Opposition were going to do in office he, for one, would never dream of voting for the Amendment.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: The hon. Gentleman who has just sat down has made, I think, the most interesting speech in the whole debate. I had some difficulty in hearing him, but I think he declared himself a "pure Balfourian." Well, that is the first we have had in the course of this debate. [Ministerial cries of "Oh!"] I have been pretty constantly in the House while the debate was proceeding. We have had free-traders who criticised the attitude of the Government and who were either merely not going to vote against them or going reluctantly to vote for them. We have had whole-hearted supporters of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham. But if we have had any one who said that he would support the policy of the Prime Minister, he also added a great deal of sympathy for, and advocacy of, the policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. I think, then, I am not wrong when I say this is the first instance we have had of a "pure" unadulterated "Balfourian" speaking in the course of this debate.

I am not going to speak at any great length, bcause I am painfully aware that I made a large call on the time and patience of the House two days ago. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham, with that sympathetic anxiety which distinguishes him, said I had forestalled the speech of my right hon. friend the Member for Fife. I may relieve that anxiety when I state that I acted not only with the consent, but with the encouragement of my right hon. friend. The two things we have now arrived at beyond all question are these. First, the Prime Minister will not make in the face of the House of Commons a plain statement of his views and aims, and, particularly, he will not make such a plain statement as to the degree to which he accepts the doctrines and principles of the right hon. Member for Birmingham. And that is a most important point. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham told us how much he agreed with the Prime Minister; but for him to agree with the Prime Minister is a matter of small moment. It is a very different matter how far the Prime Minister agrees with him. That is the first thing we have made sure of. The second thing that is perfectly obvious is that there is another thing the Prime Minister will not do. He will not face the country. Now, as to the first of these points perhaps we need not trouble the Prime Minister any longer. We have given him both in the country and here an ample opportunity of making the statement of his views that we have requested from him, and we have done this in the interests, as we think, of political and Parliamentary propriety. But, after all, with the help of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham, assisted by the whole record of the Prime Minister in this matter, and several incidents in it, I think that we may dispense with any open confession on his part. The incidents that I would mention in his record are first of all his letter to the Member for Birmingham when he resigned wishing him Godspeed in the propaganda which he had undertaken; then we had the message last summer of "unabated sympathy" sent through Lord Lansdowne to the reconstructed Liberal Unionist Party in the Albert Hall; we have the speeches of his own colleagues which would form a most interesting bouquet if we were to take the trouble to cull them; and we have the curious episode of the Sugar Convention in which the Prime Minister appeared undoubtedly as a food-taxer, because although sugar is not subjected under that Convention to any duty in this country, it is subjected to something a great deal worse, namely, total prohibition, and the only respect in which that differs from a high sugar duty, a retaliatory duty, is that in that case we should have got some income out of the transaction, whereas now the whole proceeds and profits go into other people's pockets. Therefore the right hon. Gentleman is committed up to the hilt by his own actions and his statements to the policy of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham in its principle. And then we have the letter which I quoted the other night stating that to be his opinion. They differ from each other, as the letter stated, only in methods and in tactics and not in principle. Which is principle and which is method? Take for instance, the question of the special Colonial Conference. The right hon. Gentleman has not yet explained, as I asked him to explain the other day, the reason for his change of front with regard to a Colonial Conference.

The PRIME MINISTER and FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.): It never was changed.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: There was a change of expressed attitude, at all events. The front may be turned the same way; but we can see the attitude has been completely altered. Let me interpolate here that our complaint as to the conference and our reason for objecting to it is not that we are not as willing as any one else—and as desirous—to have the fullest communication with the Colonies and, if you like, a conference every year on subjects generally, if that were necessary or desirable, but we object to a special conference which would have the effect of committing this country to a certain action which we know the people of this country will never willingly take or attempt. My right hon. friend the Member for Northumberland used the words that he would have a conference without prejudice. The right hon. Gentleman took hold of that as if he had said "without prejudices." I take it my right hon. friend rather meant in the lawyer's sense "without prejudice"—that, whatever your opinions, you should not be held to be publicly committed to any course before you entered the conference. As to the objection of the right hon. Gentleman to our representatives in the conference entering it with special instructions, I would ask him whether he thinks any colony all over the world would send its representatives here without giving them any instructions as to their attitude. Is the conference a question of principle or tactics? The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham says in effect that every vote given for the conference is a vote given for colonial preference and food taxation. [MINISTERIAL cries of "No."] Practically it comes to that. So that, then, it is a matter of principle. But "Oh, no," says the Prime Minister, "a vote for the conference which I shall ask from you at the next general election leaves you entirely uncommitted and with a free hand." That is a matter of tactics. You cannot have a general election turning upon a mere question of method and tactics. One thing stands out evidently from the whole position as we now see it. When the election comes the issue will not be the partial and nebulous policy of retaliation, but the full-blooded policy whose principle, at all events, is jointly agreed in by the two right hon. Gentlemen.

The present object of the Government and their friends appears to be to gain time. If they believe in their nostrum why do they hesitate? Why do they themselves propose to introduce the gigantic and mountainous obstacle of redistribution of seats? Let us turn our minds back. What was the reason for the introduction of this question? What was the excuse put forward by the right hon. Gentleman when he first brought it forward? It was the extreme urgency of the situation, the imminent peril affecting both our trade and the unity of the Empire. Why was the Cabinet reconstructed in the month of September? This was no slumbering question which could be dawdled over and discussed at leisure with a view to forming a well-informed opinion upon it. It was not a subject like old age pensions, for instance, on which you could have one scheme after another, one Committee after another, and go on with it for years. The trade and the unity of the Empire had to be saved, and did not admit of being treated in that leisurely way. This was the only ground upon which it was taken up and upon which the Government was reconstructed. The doctrines were not new. They were archaic. They were well understood. They have been always with us. The flame on the high altar of protection was slumbering a little. It had flared up in the days of the fair-trade agitation, but latterly it had only been kept alive by the ministrations of the permanent priest—the gallant Member for Sheffield. But the element which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham has the credit of introducing, with the sympathy of the Prime Minister, was the extreme urgency of the matter. That is the particular contribution he made to the argument—the only novelty that I can see in the argument. But now the urgency is not to save the country, but to save themselves from the country. Anything is caught at that will stand between the country and the application of their remedy. What would be the meaning of this vote? The old story—confidence in themselves and no confidence in their principles. The more the country loses confidence in them, the more confidence, if it is conceivable, they have in themselves. They are using the machine of the Party to postpone the first step in the policy which they declare to be essential and vital.

I have looked into this matter a little a view to calculating the future, with a view to forming some sort of idea what the nature of all these manifold elections and negotiations will be. There is to be an election—perhaps next year, or the year after. That is to result, we are told by members of the Government and others, in their defeat and in the elevation to power of [AN HON. MEMBER on the MINISTERIAL BENCHES: Who?] the Party opposite. But the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham said, what I can well believe is his estimate of what will happen, it would not be long before that Party, if it came into power, would be hissed off the scene. I am not so certain he can be sure who it is will be hissed off the scene, but what I am referring to is the length of time that will be, allowing a year or two to the duration of the Government that succeeds them. There will then be an election, which the Party of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham are to win. Then he is to come into power. Then we are to have a Colonial Conference. Then after the Colonial Conference has come to certain conclusions those conclusions are to be submitted to the several Colonies and the mother country. But supposing some of the Colonies do not agree? Supposing it requires a great deal of adjustment in the results of the conference to bring about this great commercial bond of Empire? It will not be easy to do all that in a day or two. So big a work takes time. I have come to the conclusion that before the goal is reached and the Empire saved the youngest man among us will be completely superannuated. Here is this mighty task, this great reform, this high undertaking which between them these two right hon. Gentlemen have set themselves to do; and on their own showing, because the forecast which I have made has all been based upon their ideas and not on mine—mine would make very much shorter work of it—and having this great prospect before them, what do they do? In the direct path of this mighty reform, two sessions are to be given up to redistribution, one of the biggest and most complex problems that Parliament can tackle. What a commentary on the plea of urgency! What a commentary on the plea of sincerity! The postponement which is now threatened is more than a political outrage. It is a cause of positive injury to the trade of the country and to the interests of the Empire. It brings disquiet and confusion and unrest into our commerce. The truth of the matter lies in a nutshell. The Government and their friends dare not face at the polls the people whom they have been inciting up and down the country to revolutionise our fiscal system. The right hon. Gentleman referred to the long campaign of Mr. Cobden and to the many Parliaments that were involved before that campaign was ended. But, Sir, it was not by these mysteries and subterfuges that Mr. Cobden fought his great battle. He conducted his campaign openly and above board, and no one, friend or foe. misunderstood for one moment what his object was. It was not by methods and tactics such as we now see that the battle of our commercial freedom was won; and our great consolation is that it is not by such methods and tactics that the advantages we then gained will be lost.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The right hon. Gentleman referred at the beginning of his speech to the disability under which he suffered from having already made a considerable contribution the other night to what is practically the same debate as that in which we are now engaged. I suffer from a like misfortune. I have, in truth, very little to add to what I said on Tuesday last; nor do I think that anybody who has listened to the right hon. Gentleman will feel that anything he has said gives me much to reply to with which I did not sufficiently deal on a previous occasion. The Amendment which is before us is, I think, of a very special, if not of an absolutely unique character. It says that we have discussed the fiscal question so long, and are therefore so intimately acquainted with it, that the time has come for submitting the issue to the people without further delay. I should have thought myself that the statement of the right hon. Gentleman who moved this Amendment—that the fiscal question had been sufficiently discussed—was a singular prelude to a two days debate, in which it has been still further discussed; and if, as the hon. and learned Member for the Border Burghs has told us in his contribution to the discussion, we really know all about it, I do not quite follow the logic which has induced him to state his very natural desire to turn the Government out in the particular terms which he has selected for the purpose. I am not sure, indeed, whether the passage at arms or brief dispute which took place between the right hon. Gentleman the mover of the Amendment and my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham does not show that there are yet some questions which required to be discussed.

My right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham has been throughout these debates contrasted with myself as the lucid speaker compared with the obscure speaker, the plain and direct exponent of a policy with the nebulous metaphysician who wraps up abstract doctrines in unintelligible language. I am not at all disputing my right hon. friend's greater claims to the title of a lucid exponent of his views; I hope I do not fall very much behind him; but as I regard him as one of the clearest speakers of my acquaintance, I do not pretend in that respect to put myself on an equality with him. But it appears that, lucid as he is, clearly as every hon. Gentleman opposite professes to understand what he desires, far as he rises above anything that I can do in the way of expounding the fiscal policy, he has not yet succeeded in driving into the head of the right hon. Member for Fife, who certainly does not lack intelligence, the fiscal principles which he is recommending to the country. For the Member for Fife gave us yesterday what struck me as a very strange version of the principles of my right hon. friend—though it is not my business to deal with the subject. My right hon. friend gets up to-day and points out to the Houes that the principles of fiscal policy he recommends are of a totally different complexion or [HON. MEMBERS: Oh.]—That is what he did say.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Hear, hear!

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Of a totally different complexion from those which the right hon. Member for Fife was good enough to put into his mouth. Well, Sir, I am a little consoled by my total failure to make my views clear to hon. Gentlemen opposite when I find no greater success has attended the even more continuous and able efforts of my right hon. friend.

My noble friend the Member for Greenwich was good enough this afternoon to come to my rescue and to explain that among the ignorant he at all events was understanding—that if nobody else comprehended the obscure metaphysics which I am pleased to describe as a fiscal policy, he at all events understood them now and had always done so. And I am sure he does understand them and has always understood them. But my noble friend was not content with my having succeeded in explaining my views to him in a manner which made them comprehensible; he said it was the bounden duty of every public man to make them understood by everybody, and that if a public man was misunderstood he was not fit for the responsibilities which he had taken upon himself—rather a hard doctrine, I think. I am not sure that even my noble friend is always understood. I am not sure, if we are to proceed to the discovery of each other's views by the process which is now so favoured a one among Gentlemen on the other side—namely, the framing of Questions in their own language, putting them to one across the floor of the House, and demanding aye or no for an answer—if that is the future organum of investigation which is to be adopted by this House and the country, I am not sure that my noble friend would fare very well if he were questioned on subjects in which he takes a profound interest, and in regard to which he has made valuable contributions to the debates of this House. If, for instance, somebody were to ask him, "Are you a Ritualist?" Now I know as a matter of fact that my noble friend is not a Ritualist. [An HON. MEMBER: You understand it.] I understand it, and I know he is not; but I am convinced that a series of Questions might be put to him by the Gentlemen who specially arrogate to themselves the proud title of Protestant, put to him across the floor of this House, which he would be very sorry to answer by a direct aye or a direct no. And if they said to him, "Well, it is quite evident you cannot give a plain answer to a plain question, and the natural conclusion is that you are little better than a Papist," my noble friend would, in my opinion, have great reason to complain of the injustice of the operation. But I think he would find it extremely difficult to distinguish it from the species of cross-examination which hon. Gentlemen apply on economic subjects to me and to others on this side, Gentlemen who know in some cases as little about economics as the supposed questioner of my noble friend would know of the mysteries of theology. My noble friend is an economist. He does understand, whether he agrees or not, the economic problems with which he deals. He understands the argument and the distinctions that are necessary—distinctions absolutely ignored in a great deal of the platform splashing-about that goes on during the recess. But there are Gentlemen who really do seem to think that the whole science of political economy can be adequately embodied in two or three sentences, and that the whole body of economic thinkers must fall either into the division which they are pleased to label with some obscure definition of their own as free-traders or into the division which they label with some equally obscure definition which they describe as protectionist. That rough-and-ready method of dealing with great and complicated questions does not help to their serious and sober solution; and I should be sorry to think that the prolongation of this discussion, so much deprecated by the right hon. Gentleman would not do something, at all events, to clear the air of certain of the fallacies which appear to govern the thoughts, and still more the speeches, of hon. Gentlemen opposite. I have been informed—I have not verified the quotation, but I believe it to be true—that Mr. Bright had considerable qualms about the economic orthodoxy, in the matter of free trade, of John Stuart Mill. John Stuart Mill, who, on the whole, perhaps contributed more to economic science than any man in the last century, or, at any rate, in the last three-quarters of the last century, like other economists, had pointed out that there were certain cases in infant communities in which it might be held that a system of protection could give important aid to nascent and struggling industries—nowadays a perfectly familiar contention to those with even a smattering of knowledge of this subject. But I believe that Mr. Bright said that that one proposition of Mr. Mill's did more harm to the cause of free trade than all the good done by the rest of the two volumes which embodied economic science as it was then understood. I believe that nothing is gained by allowing ourselves to become not the masters, but the slaves of the language we use. What we want to know is not the particular classification of a particular opinion or a particular policy, but what the policy is.

The right hon. Baronet the Member for Berwick, in a speech he made last night, showed that he was one of those who, like my noble friend the Member for Greenwich, did not find any difficulty in understanding the doctrines I have tried to preach to the country. But he said it was impossible to argue against them, because they were of too abstract a character. "How," he said, dealing with the particular question of retaliation, "Can you argue in the abstract about war?" I do not like the name, but for the sake of convenience, I will use it. No doubt the policy of retaliation does resemble war. It is a kind of peaceful war. [AN HON. MEMBER: A sort of war.] Well, it is war without bloodshed. And the right hon. Baronet asks, "How can you discuss so abstract a thing as war?" and says, "As you cannot discuss so abstract a thing as war, in the same way you cannot discuss so abstract a thing as retaliation." You may not be able to discuss so abstract a thing as war, but you can discuss that very concrete entity, armaments, fleets, arms, and the matériel by which war is made. And that is really the precise parallel between a war in the ordinary sense of the word and retaliation. Liberty of negotiation, as I prefer to call it, does for you in your commercial affairs precisely what fleets and armies do for you in the political arena. They do not mean, as some hon. Gentlemen seem to suppose they mean, war. On the contrary, as everybody knows, they are often the very condition of peace, and so it is with the power, the freedom of negotiation. Attempts will be made against the commerce of this country unless we have this power, which would never be made if we had it. It will not even be necessary to consider how the attack is to be met, because the attack will never be made. It is a thing that cannot be proved; but I believe that the very fact that that policy has obtained so large and, as I think, so growing a measure of support in the general community, has already had a good effect upon the commercial policy of other nations. And if the country were to grant that mandate which we ask of them, then, Sir, I believe that, without changing a tax or going through the labour of considering your fiscal policy, this country would be saved from a vast number of commercial outrages from which we are now unwilling, reluctant, but patient and helpless sufferers.

I have not much more to say to the House upon the Amendment strictly considered, though I have something to say. But before I come to that final word, I do not think I can wholly put on one side some observations made to me in the nature of an appeal by my noble friend in the very interesting speech which he made this afternoon. I was sorry that my noble friend dragged before this House questions of domestic differences among us, the reality of which, of course, I do not deny, and never have attempted to deny. But these, I think, are not matters to be dealt with before an audience which is naturally, and from their point of view, quite rightly, hostile and contemptuous. [AN HON. MEMBER: Sympathetic.] I think that perhaps it is that we on this side of the House, are young and inexperienced in these difficulties. We have not been inoculated with a virus which, with long practice, has perhaps made hon. Members opposite immune. I noticed the other day, for instance, that among the triumphs—I think the most recent triumph—at by-elections was the hon. Gentleman the Member for North Dorset. Well, the hon. Gentleman the Member for North Dorset, as I am informed, has explicitly pledged himself against Home Rule. He has explicitly pledged himself in favour of what his friends call "doles"; and he has adopted a sympathetic attitude even to that iniquitous measure the Licensing Bill of last session. They do not advertise these facts.

* Mr. WILLS (Dorsetshire, N.): If I am in order perhaps I may be allowed to make a single remark. Although in his first two statements I think the right hon. Gentleman may be described as being partly accurate, in his last statement he is absolutely inaccurate.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: I am obliged to the hon. Gentleman for his interruption and for correcting a misrepresentation which I can assure him was absolutely unintentional. The hon. Gentleman, then, was not sympathetic towards the Licensing Bill, but he is pledged against Home Rule, and he is pledged in favour of "doles."

* Mr. WILLS: I think the right hon. Gentleman is probably aware of the actual facts of the case with regard to what he has called "doles." The pledge I gave was in favour of the retention of the Agricultural Rating Relief Act until such time as the Liberal Party can deal with the rating question upon a proper basis, which is, not partial relief to one set of ratepayers, but relief to all.

Mr, A. J. BALFOUR: I might comment, perhaps, upon the elysium in which everybody is to be relieved of rates, but I will not. The hon. Gentleman is a new Member of this House, and the last thing I should desire to do would be to make an attack upon him. I only want to point out how very much better these little differences are managed on the other side of the House than on this. I regret my noble friend found it necessary to enter into the argument—not strictly relevant, I think, to the question before us—with regard to the position of some members of the Party in their constituencies. My view is that it is the business of the constituencies to select the Members, and, so far as I am concerned, I welcome every man of Unionist opinions who will support the Government, and would be glad to give him any aid in my power. It is injurious to the best interests, not merely of the Party, but what is of much more importance, the causes the Party represents, to have unnecessary divisions in this House or in the constituencies.

Lord HUGH CECIL: What I want to know from my right hon. friend is for whom would he vote if he were an elector of the city of Durham?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: Does my hon. friend the Member for the city of Durham come under the category I have described? Is he a supporter of the Government?

Mr. ELLIOT: As Durham has been dragged into the discussion more than I could wish, might I say that the real question is not so much my own position, as whether or not a candidate brought forward by the Tariff Reform League and not accepted by the local Conservative Association is or is not an accepted exponent of the Government policy?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Surely the constituents have the right to select and return whom they please, whether they support the Government or whether they do not? Very well, and surely my duty is confined to giving aid to those who support us? ["Oh, oh!"] Is it suggested that any other principle obtains on the other side of the House? Is it suggested that when they are in power their organisations aid other than the supporters of the Government? Of course the same rule must apply to all Parties. It is a fundamental principle of Party organisation, and nobody can suggest any other. Now it is said this question has been adequately discussed, and I think the last person to make that statement was the hon. and learned Member for the Border Burghs. How did he support it? He said—

> "We have heard all that the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham has got to say and all that the Prime Minister has to say; we know the whole question; why go on debating a matter which has been thoroughly expounded?"

Well, I dissent from this theory that the questions are all to be asked on one side and to be answered on the other. I put the question on Tuesday, and none of the speakers since have thought fit to answer it: "Why are all the questions to be put to us, and none by us?" ["Because you are the Government."] Is that the accepted answer? Very well. I should have thought that, as this matter relates entirely to what is to happen after the election, the people to be cross-examined are those who are to become the Government after the election. If, therefore, the hon. Gentleman holds with others on that side that those who think with him will be the Government, then it is to them questions should be addressed. But suppose that argument has a flaw in it. We are now considering whether the country is apprised of all the elements it ought to have before it in order to come to a decision. How can it have all the elements before it unless right hon. Gentlemen opposite have undergone their catechism and given their plain answers to plain questions? What do they think about retaliation? Are right hon. Gentlemen of opinion that nothing in that direction is desirable? Are right hon. Gentlemen prepared to allow any steps in tariff negotiation to be conducted under their eyes, however injurious to this country, without making some attempt at all events to stop them? ["Answer."] I do not hold with the methods of cross-examination which require an immediate answer. I am putting questions which might be answered not monosyllabically, but at some length before we come to a decision. I observe that hon. and right hon. Gentlemen cannot answer that question monosyllabically. I will ask another question. Are right hon. Gentlemen who have criticised the Sugar Convention of opinion that we ought to permit the extension of this system of bounties and drawbacks to be organised in foreign nations, in such a way as to prevent the natural sources of supply in our own Empire being developed, and with no future advantage to the consumer at all? Again there is no monosyllabic answer given. I will ask one more question. ["Oh, oh!"] Why are hon. Gentlemen so impatient when I ask two or three questions, seeing they have been showering questions upon us. I have had a great deal of patience with them; let them have a little patience with me. Are the right hon. Gentleman and his friends prepared to state upon their authority as leaders of their Party that they do not think that the Colonies should be permitted with us to discuss freely and openly, without prejudice and without limitations, that which the Colonies have over and over again said is one of the greatest interests that they have in connection with drawing closer the bonds of Empire? I do not say whether a scheme is possible or impossible—the difficulties are great; but are you going to allow them to be discussed freely and openly in conference, or are you going to refuse that permission? That is a question which I think could be answered monosyllabically. That is a plain question; and again the same melancholy silence reigns upon Benches which have been pouring forth questions hour after hour since the House met. Now I hope that these questions will be pressed home in this House and out of it, in the election and before it. I hope that when in the fulness of time this House is dissolved we shall not have simply before us the criticisms of hon. and right hon. Gentlemen upon the fiscal policy which we propose on this side, but that we shall have very distinct answers to our plain questions as to how they propose to deal with difficulties which all must admit to be real, whether they think them remediable or irremediable. I confess that if they are going to sit down permanently under these national and Imperial disabilities, if they are going to shut the door against even the consideration of methods by which they are to be met, they will be ill fulfilling their duties as responsible for the conduct of one of the two great Parties of the State.

The right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition indulged in an unwonted vein of prophecy and drew a fancy picture of the length of time it would take in order to carry out any material portion of that policy of closer commercial union with the Colonies for which my right hon. friend and we on this side have so earnestly pleaded. I think the House makes a great mistake with regard to these matters. I notice they are deeply perturbed by the movement of prices in a given six months, and by the Returns which the Board of Trade may show for this year or that. We are dealing—and this is a fundamental thing to be kept in view—with phenomena which do not affect this year or next year, which do not affect our lives alone, but which affect generations. It is not as if these Colonies of ours were stationary communities, always going to remain of the same relative magnitude as at the present time. They are rapidly growing nations with a commercial and industrial future before them which it is impossible to measure and difficult to picture. In what direction that commercial future will develop—whether it will be one in which we are permitted to take a large and permanent share may depend upon the decision which, not this House, but this country comes to in the near future. What answer is it to a consideration like that to say that a month here or a general election there may put off the great and final issues? What we really have to keep in mind is the proportions of the great problem we have to deal with. It is not the problem which presents itself here and now in this country. The problem we have to determine is whether these great creative and formative forces which are moulding the commercial destinies of the Empire shall be turned to the best advantage for Imperial unity, or whether we are to sit quietly by with folded hands idly repeating old formulas, true but in many cases inapplicable to the present condition of affairs, or whether we are to do our best against difficulties the magnitude of which I have never attempted to minimise, and to see that responsibilities greater than which have never been placed on a free people are productive of the greatest results, not for ourselves, not for labour or capital as it is at this moment in these islands, but labour and capital as it is and will be in the vast countries over which the King rules.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 248; Noes 311. (Division List No. 3.)

AYES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N.E.
Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Ainsworth, John Stirling
Allen, Charles P.
Ambrose, Robert
Asher, Alexander
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Asquith, Rt. Hn. Herbert Henry
Atherley-Jones, L.
Barlow, John Emmott
Barran, Rowland Hirst
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Beaumont, Wentworth, C. B.
Bell, Richard
Benn, John Williams
Black, Alexander William
Blake, Edward
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Brigg, John
Bright, Allan Heywood
Broadhurst, Henry
Brown, G. M. (Edinburgh)
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Burke, E. Haviland
Burns, John
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Robert
Campbell, John (Armagh, S.)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Causton, Richard Knight
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cawley, Frederick
Channing, Francis Allston
Cheetham, John Frederick
Churchill, Winston Spencer
Clancy, John Joseph
Cogan, Denis J.
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Craig, Robert Hunter (Lanark)
Crean, Eugene
Cremer, William Randal
Crombie, John William
Cullinan, J.
Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, A. (Carmarthen)
Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan
Delany, William
Devlin, Chas. Ramsay (Galway
Devlin, Joseph (Kilkenny, N.)
Dewar, John A. (Inverness-sh.
Dickson-Poynder, Sir John P.
Dilke, Rt. Hn. Sir Charles
Dillon, John
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Douglas, Chas. M. (Lanark)
Duffy, William J.
Duncan, J. Hastings
Dunn, Sir William
Edwards, Frank
Elibank, Master of
Ellice, Capt EC (SAndrw's Bghs
Elliot, Hon. A. Ralph Douglas
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Emmott, Alfred
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Evans, Sir F. H. (Maidstone)
Evans, S. T. (Glamorgan)
Eve, Harry Trelawney
Farrell, James Patrick
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Field, William
Findlay, Alex. (Lanark, N. E.)
Fitzmaurice, Lord Edmond
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry
Freeman-Thomas, Captain F.
Fuller, J. M. F.
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Grant, Corrie
Grey, Rt. Hn. Sir E. (Berwick)
Griffith, Ellis J.
Guest, Hon. Ivor Churchill
Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton
Haldane, Rt. Hon. Richard B.
Harcourt, Lewis Vernon
Hardie, J. Keir (Merthyr Tydvil)
Harmsworth, R. Leicester
Harrington, Timothy
Harwood, George
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayter, Rt. Hn. Sir Arthur D.
Helme, Norval Watson
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Henderson, Arthur (Durham)
Higham, John Sharpe
Hobhouse, C.E.H. (Bristol, E.)
Holland, Sir William Henry
Hope, John Deans (Fife, West)
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C.
Hutchinson, Dr. Chas. Fredk.
Hutton, Alfred E. (Morley)
Isaacs, Rufus Daniel
Jacoby, James Alfred
Johnson, John
Jones, David B. (Swansea)
Jones, W. (Carnarvonshire)
Jordan, Jeremiah
Kearley, Hudson E.
Kennedy, P. J. (Westmeath, N.
Kennedy, V. P. (Cavan, W.)
Kilbride, Denis
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Langley, Batty
Law, H. Alex. (Donegal, W.)
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cornwall)
Layland-Barratt, Francis
Leese, Sir J. F. (Accrington)
Leigh, Sir Joseph
Levy, Maurice
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George, David
Lough, Thomas
Lundon, W.
Lyell, Charles Henry
Macnamara, Dr. Thomas J.
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
MacVeagh, Jeremiah
M'Crae, George
M'Hugh, Patrick A.
M'Kean, John
M'Kenna, Reginald
M'Killop, W. (Sligo, North)
Mitchell, Edw. (Fermanagh, N.
Mooney, John J
Morgan, J. L. (Carmarthen)
Morley, Rt. Hn. J. (Montrose)
Moss, Samuel
Moulton, John Fletcher
Murnaghan, George
Murphy, John
Nannetti, Joseph P.
Newnes, Sir George
Nolan, Col. John P. (Galway, N.)
Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)
Norman, Henry
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Brien, K. (Tipperary Mid)
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, N.)
O'Connor, J. (Wicklow, W.)
O'Connor, John (Kildare, N.)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Donnell, John (Mayo, S.)

O'Dowd, John
O'Kelly, Conor (Mayo, N.)
O'Kelly, J. (Roscommon, N.)
O'Malley, William
O'Mara, James
O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
Parrott, William
Partington, Oswald
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, J. A. (Saffron Walden)
Perks, Robert William
Pirie, Duncan V.
Power, Patrick Joseph
Price, Robert John
Rea, Russell
Reckitt, Harold James
Reddy, M.
Redmond, J. E. (Waterford)
Reid, Sir R. T. (Dumfries)
Richards, T. (W. Monm'th)
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, John
Roe, Sir Thomas
Rose, Charles Day
Runciman, Walter
Russell, T. W.
Samuel, H. L. (Cleveland)
Schwann, Charles E.
Scott, Chas. Prestwich (Leigh)
Seely, Maj. J. E B. (Isle of Wight)
Shackleton, David James
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick, B.)
Sheehan, Daniel Daniel
Sheehy, David
Shipman, Dr. John G.
Sinclair, John (Forfarshire)
Slack, John Bamford
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Soames, Arthur Wellesley
Soares, Ernest J.
Spencer, Rt. Hn. C. R (Northants
Stanhope, Hon. Philip James
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Sir Edward
Sullivan, Donal
Taylor, Theodore C. (Radcliffe)
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, A. (Carmarthen, E.)
Thomas Sir A. (Glamorgan, E.
Thomas, David A. (Merthyr)
Thomas, J A (Glamorgan, Gower
Thomson, F. W. (York, W.R.)
Tillett, Louis John
Tomkinson, James
Toulmin, George
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Ure, Alexander
Waldron, Laurence Ambrose
Wallace, Robert
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
Warner, T. Courtenay T.
Wason, Eugene (Clackmannan)
Wason, J. Cathcart (Orkney)
Weir, James Galloway
White, George (Norfolk)
White, Luke (York, E.R.)
White, Patrick (Meath, North)
Whiteley, George (York, W.R.)
Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, Osmond (Merioneth)
Wills, A. Walters (N. Dorset)
Wilson, Chas. Henry (Hull, W.)
Wilson, F. W. (Norfolk, Mid.)
Wilson, John (Durham, Mid.)
Wilson, John (Falkirk)
Wood, James
Woodhouse, Sir J T. (Huddersf'd
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—Mr. Herbert Gladstone and Mr. William M'Arthur.

NOES.

Agg-Gardner, James Tynte
Agnew, Sir Andrew Noel
Aird, Sir John
Allhusen, Augustus Henry E.
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Arkwright, John Stanhope
Arnold-Forster, Rt. Hon. H. O.
Arrol, Sir William
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Aubrey-Fletcher, Rt. Hon. Sir H
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Bain, Colonel James Robert
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Balfour, Rt. Hn. A. J. (Manch'r
Balfour, Rt Hn Gerald W. (Leeds
Balfour, Kenneth R. (Christch.
Banbury, Sir Frederick George
Barry, Sir F. T. (Windsor)
Bartley, Sir George C. T.
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach, Rt. Hn. Sir Michael Hicks
Bentinck, Lord Henry C.
Bhownaggree, Sir M. M.
Bignold, Sir Arthur
Bigwood, James
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bond, Edward
Boulnois, Edmund
Bowles, Lt.-Col. H. F. (Middles'x
Bowles, T. G. (King's Lynn)
Brassey, Albert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brotherton, Edward Allen
Brown, Sir Alex. H. (Shropsh.)
Brymer, William Ernest
Bull, William James
Burdett-Coutts, W.
Butcher, John George
Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin Univ.
Carlile, William Walter
Carson, Rt. Hon. Sir Edw. H.
Cautley, Henry Strother
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbyshire
Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. (Birm.
Chamberlain, Rt Hn. J. A (Worc.
Chamberlayne, T. (S'thampton
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Chapman, Edward
Clare, Octavius Leigh
Coates, Edward Feetham
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Rt. Hon. Sir John C. R.
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Compton, Lord Alwyne
Cook, Sir Frederick Lucas
Corbett, T. L. (Down, North)
Craig, Chas. Curtis (Antrim, S.)
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Crossley, Rt. Hon. Sir Savile
Cubitt, Hon. Henry
Cust, Henry John C.
Dalkeith, Earl of
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Davenport, William Bromley
Davies, Sir Horatio D (Chatham
Denny, Colonel
Dickson, Charles Scott
Dimsdale, Rt. Hn. Sir Joseph C.
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. Dixon
Dorington, Rt. Hn. Sir John E.
Doughty, Sir George
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers
Doxford, Sir William Theodore
Duke, Henry Edward
Durning-Lawrence, Sir Edwin
Dyke, Rt. Hn Sir William Hart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Faber, Edmund B. (Hants, W.)
Fardell, Sir T. George
Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J (Manc'r)
Fielden, Edward Brocklehurst
Finch, Rt. Hon. George H.
Finlay, Sir R B (Invern'ss B'rghs
Firbank, Sir Joseph Thomas
Fisher, William Hayes
FitzGerald, Sir Robert Penrose-
Fitzroy, Hn. Edw. Algernon
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Flower, Sir Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Foster, P. S. (Warwick, S. W.)
Galloway, William Johnson
Gardner, Ernest
Garfit, William
Gibbs, Hon. A. G. H.
Godson, Sir Augustus Fredk.
Gordon, Hn. J. E. (Elgin & Nairn
Gordon, Maj Evans-(T'r H'mlets
Gore, Hon. S. F. Ormsby-
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Green, W. D. (Wednesbury)
Greene, Sir E W (B'ry S Edm'nds
Greene, H. D. (Shrewsbury)
Greene, W. Raymond (Cambs.)
Grenfell, William Henry
Gretton, John
Greville, Hon. Ronald
Guthrie, Walter Murray
Hall, Edward Marshall
Halsey, Rt. Hon. Thomas F.
Hambro, Charles Eric
Hamilton, Marq. of (L'nd'nd'rry

Hardy, L. (Kent, Ashford)
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Harris, F. Leverton (Tynem'th
Haslam, Sir Alfred S.
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Hay, Hon. Claude George
Heath, Arthur Howard (Hanley
Heath, Sir J. (Staffords. N.W.)
Heaton, John Henniker
Helder, Augustus
Henderson, Sir A. (Stafford, W.)
Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T.
Hickman, Sir Alfred
Hoare, Sir Samuel
Hogg, Lindsay
Hope, J. F. (Sheffield, Brightside
Hornby, Sir William Henry
Horner, Frederick William
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Hoult, Joseph
Houston, Robert Paterson
Howard, J. (Midd., Tottenham
Hozier, Hn. James Henry Cecil
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hunt, Rowland
Hutton, John (Yorks N.R.)

Jameson, Major J. Eustace
Jebb, Sir Richard Claverhouse
Jeffreys, Rt. Hon. Arthur Fred.
Jessel, Capt. Herbert Merton

Kennaway, Rt. Hn. Sir John H.
Kenyon, Hn. Geo. T. (Denbigh)
Kenyon-Slaney, Rt. Hn. Col. W
Kerr, John
Keswick, William
Kimber, Sir Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles, Sir Lees

Laurie, Lieut.-General
Law, Andrew Bonar (Glasgow)
Lawrence, Sir J. (Monmouth)
Lawrence, Wm. F. (Liverpool)
Lawson, Hn. H. L. W. (Mile End)
Lawson, John G. (Yorks., N.R.
Lee, A. H. (Hants., Fareham)
Lees, Sir Elliott (Birkenhead)
Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage
Llewellyn, Evan Henry
Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. Chas. W. (Evesham)
Long, Rt. Hon. W. (Bristol, S.)
Lonsdale, John Brownlee
Lowe, Francis William
Lowther, C. (Cumb., Eskdale)
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lucas, Col. Francis (Lowestoft)
Lucas, R. J. (Portsmouth)
Lyttelton, Rt. Hon. Alfred
Macdona, John Cumming
MacIver, David (Liverpool)
M'Arthur, Charles (Liverpool)
M'Calmont, Colonel James
M'Iver, Sir Lewis (Edinburgh, W

Majendie, James A. H.
Malcolm, Ian
Manners, Lord Cecil
Marks, Harry Hananel
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.
Maxwell, Rt Hn Sir H. E. (Wigt'n
Maxwell, W. J. H. (Dumfriessh.)
Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
Mildmay, Francis Bingham
Milvain, Thomas
Mitchell, William (Burnley)
Molesworth, Sir Lewis
Montagu, G. (Huntingdon)
Montagu, Hn. J. Scott (Hants.)
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Moore, William
Morgan, D. J. (Walthamstow)
Morpeth, Viscount
Morrell, George Herbert
Morrison, James Archibald
Morton, Arthur H. Aylmer
Mount, William Arthur
Mowbray, Sir Robert Gray C.
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Myers, William Henry
Nicholson, William Graham
Palmer, Sir Walter (Salisbury)
Parker, Sir Gilbert
Parkes, Ebenezer
Pease, Herbert P. (Darlington)
Peel, Hn. Wm. R. Wellesley
Pemberton, John S. G.
Percy, Earl
Pierpoint, Robert
Pilkington, Colonel Richard
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plummer, Sir Walter R.
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pretyman, Ernest George
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Purvis, Robert
Pym, C. Guy
Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
Randles, John S.
Rankin, Sir James
Rasch, Sir Frederic Carne
Ratcliff, R. F.
Reid, James (Greenock)
Remnant, James Farquharson
Renshaw, Sir Charles Bine
Renwick, George
Ridley, S. Forde
Roberts, Samuel (Sheffield)
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Robinson, Brook
Rolleston, Sir John F. L.
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Rothschild, Hon. Lionel Walter
Round, Rt. Hon. James
Royds, Clement Molyneux
Rutherford, John (Lancashire)
Rutherford, W. W. (Liverpool)
Sackville, Col. S. G. Stopford
Sadler, Col. Samuel Alexander

Samuel, Sir Harry S (Limehouse)
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
Sassoon, Sir Edward Albert
Scott, Sir S. (Marylebone, W.)
Seely, Charles Hilton (Lincoln)
Seton-Karr, Sir Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw-Stewart, Sir H. (Renfrew)
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Sloan, Thomas Henry
Smith, A. B. (Hertford, East)
Smith, Rt Hn J. Parker (Lanarks
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Spear, John Ward
Stanley, Hn. Arthur (Ormskirk
Stanley, Rt. Hn. Lord (Lancs.)
Stewart, Sir Mark J. M'Taggart
Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Stroyan, John
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Talbot, Rt. Hn. J. G. (Oxf'd Univ.
Thorburn, Sir Walter
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Sir Wm. Edw. M.
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Tuff, Charles
Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward
Tuke, Sir John Batty
Turnour, Viscount
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. H (Sheffield
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Walrond, Rt. Hn. Sir William H.
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Warde, Colonel C. E.
Webb, Colonel William George
Welby, Lt.-Col. A. C. E. (Taunton
Welby, Sir Charles G. E. (Notts.)
Wentworth, Bruce C. Vernon
Wharton, Rt. Hon. John Lloyd
Whiteley, H. (Ashton und. Lyne
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Wilson, A. S. (York, E.R.)
Wilson, John (Glasgow)
Wilson-Todd, Sir W. H. (Yorks.)
Wodehouse, Rt. Hn. E. R. (Bath)
Worsley-Taylor, Henry Wilson
Wortley, Rt. Hn. C. B. Stuart
Wrightson, Sir Thomas
Wylie, Alexander
Wyndham, Rt. Hon. George
Yerburgh, Robert Armstrong

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—Sir Alexander Acland - Hood and Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.

Main Question again proposed.

Motion made, and Question, "That the debate be now adjourned,"—(Dr. Macnamara.) put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

Adjourned at five minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday, 17th February, 1905.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Abertillery Urban District Water Bill [H.L.]; Administrative County of London and District Electric Power Company Bill [H.L.]; Alexandra Park and Palace Bill [H.L.]; Bangor (County Down) Water and Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Blackpool Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Bristol Blind Asylum Bill [H.L.]; Clacton Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Clacton-on-Sea Commissioners Bill [H.L.]; East London and Lower Thames Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Formby Township Bill [H.L.]; Hastings Harbour Bill [H.L.]; Humber Conservancy Bill [H.L.]; Hythe Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Littlehampton Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Llandrindod Wells Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; London Squares and Enclosures (Preservation) Bill [H.L.]; Mansfield Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Matlock Bath Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Nine Mile Point Railway Bill [H.L.]; Nottingham Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Orphan Working School and Alexandra Orphanage Bill [H.L.]; Preston Corporation (Ribble Navigation) Bill [H.L.]; Sandgate Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Sheffield University Bill [H.L]. ; Southport, Birkdale, and West Lancashire Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation) Bill [H.L.]; Tees Valley Water Board Bill [H.L.]; Torpoint Urban District Water Bill [H.L.]; Tralee Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; University College, London (Transfer) Bill [H.L.]; Weaver Navigation Bill [H.L.]; Whitby Urban District Council [H.L.]. Read 1^a.

Barry Railway Bill [H.L.]; Blackpool, St. Anne's, and Lytham Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Bridgewater Canals Bills [H.L.]; Cardiff Railway Bill [H.L.]; Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation Bill [H.L.]; City of London Electric Lighting Company Bill [H.L.]; Commercial Union Assurance Bill [H.L.]; Cordoba and Rosario Railway Bill [H.L.]; East Cowes Gas Bill [H.L.]; Entre Rios Railways Bill [H.L.]; Gosport and Fareham Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Great Central Railway Bill [H.L.]; Great Central Railway (Pension Fund) Bill [H.L.]; Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment) Bill [H.L.]; Hastings Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Hessle Gas Bill [H.L.]; Leeds and Liverpool Canal Bill [H.L.]. Metropolitan and Great Central Railway Companies Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan District Railway Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District) Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers) Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan Railway Bill [H.L.]; Mexborough and Swinton Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill [H.L.]; Mortgage Insurance Corporation Bill [H.L.]; North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply Bill [H.L.]; Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Oldham and Saddleworth District Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Rhymney Railway Bill [H.L.]; South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways Bill [H.L.]; Southend and Colchester Light Railways Bill [H.L.]; South Lancashire Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Truro Water Bill [H.L.]; Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads Bill [H.L.]; West Cumberland Electric Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill [H.L.]; Western Valleys (Monmouthshire) Water and Gas Bill [H.L.]; Workington Harbour and Dock Bill [H.L.]. Read 1^a; and referred to the Examiners.

NEW BILL.

McCONNELL'S DIVORCE BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to dissolve the marriage of Sir Robert John McConnell, Baronet, of Windsor Avenue, in the county of the city of Belfast, with Elsie George McConnell, his now wife, and to enable him to marry again; and for other purposes. Presented (on petition), and a copy of the proceedings in, and of the decree of divorce of the King's Bench Matrimonial Division of the High Court of Justice in Ireland. Delivered (on oath); Bill read 1^a; and to be read 2^a on Tuesday, 28th March. The usual orders made.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

ROLL OF THE LORDS.

The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had prepared and laid it on the Table.

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member.

The same was ordered to be printed. (No. 9.)

RAILWAY AND CANAL TRAFFIC ACTS, 1854 to 1894.

Sixteenth Annual Report of the Railway and Canal Commission; with Appendix.

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).

No. 3324. Denmark (Supplementary Report for 1903).

No. 3325. Belgium (Finances for 1904–1905).

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Draft Order in Council continuing certain provisions contained in the Order in Council of 6th March, 1902.

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF LANCASTER).

Order made by the County Council of the County of Lancaster, re-dividing the Chorley Parliamentary Division into two convenient polling districts.

BUILDING SOCIETIES.

Tenth Annual Report by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies of the proceedings of the Registrars under the Building Societies Acts; with an abstract of the annual accounts and statements of the societies, for the year 1904.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION SCHEMES, INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT SOCIETIES, AND TRADE UNIONS.

Reports of the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies, for the year ended 31st December, 1904.

CERTIFIED INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES (REGULATIONS FOR MANAGEMENT).

Regulations made with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the management and discipline of the Lancashire Certified Inebriate Reformatory.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER.

Account of the receipts and disbursements of the Duchy of Lancaster in the year ended 21st December, 1904; also, a separate account of the capital of the said Duchy to the same date.

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS ACT, 1896, AND MOTOR CAR ACT, 1903.

Orders by the Secretary for Scotland prohibiting motor car traffic—

On special roads in the county of Perth. (20th August, 1904.)

On a road in the county of Perth. (3rd February, 1905.)

On certain roads in the county of Midlothian. (3rd February, 1905.)

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

SIR ANTONY MACDONNELL AND IRISH DEVOLUTION.

*THE EARL OF DUNRAVEN rose to call attention to certain references to Ireland contained in a speech of the Solicitor-General as reported in The Times of the 8th inst. He said: My Lords, I have to ask your Lordships' indulgence while I make, as briefly as I can, a statement which will be of the nature of a personal explanation; but I am afraid I shall have to tax your Lordships' patience by entering into many details which your Lordships will think small and trivial, and which are, in fact, small and trivial in themselves, but upon which a significance has been placed by very determined efforts on the part of some persons to attach a most sinister meaning to many entirely innocent actions and events.

On the 8th inst. The Times published a sort of postscript to a report of a speech delivered by the Solicitor-General on the 4th inst., and accompanied it by a note saying that the references of the Solicitor-General to Ireland had been unfortunately omitted in their first report. That, in itself, is a rather unusual thing for a newspaper to do, and indicated, I suppose, that in the opinion of the Solicitor-General or in the opinion of The Times, or in both their opinions, the references made by the Solicitor-General to Ireland in that speech were of very peculiar importance. In those references Sir E. Carson alluded to the scheme of devolution which I and some colleagues of mine have lately put forward in Ireland as > "A fatuous, ridiculous, unworkable, and impracticable scheme, lately set going in Ireland by certain gentlemen whose names had been attached to it."

Now, my Lords, it was impossible for the stupidest man in Sir E. Carson's audience to have mistaken the significance of that expression; it could only mean, and could only have been intended to mean, that certain gentlemen had acted as mere dummies in the matter and had attached their names to a policy and principles for which they were in reality not in the least responsible. I must acknowledge the gracious, though veiled, compliment paid by the Solicitor-General to myself and my colleagues, a few country gentlemen in Ireland, when he suggested that it was impossible that our brains could have orginated so fatuous and unworkable a scheme; but I cannot accept the compliment, because, as a matter of fact, we alone are responsible for that scheme. Sir E. Carson went on to say that

> "The grievance of Irish Unionists was, rightly or wrongly, that the scheme had originated with a permanent official retained under a Unionist Government at Dublin Castle."

Sir E. Carson made no charge, because to make a charge would be very unbecoming on his part; he contented himself with repeating that

> "The charge of the Irish Unionists, that a permanent civil servant retained under a Unionist Government at Dublin Castle had himself evolved a policy which had been disavowed by the Prime Minister and the Chief Secretary for Ireland."

I need not say that the civil servant referred to was Sir Antony MacDonnell. For months past there have been circulated in Ireland the most preposterous and ridiculous yarns and stories on this subject; clandestine meetings between myself and Sir Antony MacDonnell in remote inns in the wilds of Kerry have been mentioned, and all kinds of preposterous stories have been circulated—stories so ridiculous that I should have thought their very absurdity would have rendered them innocuous. These stories were all too silly to be taken notice of. But Sir E. Carson's speech, to my mind, puts an entirely different complexion on the case. The charge against us was there accurately formulated. It was that Sir Antony MacDonnell evolved a policy disavowed by his chief, and that he persuaded us, the Irish Reform Association, to publish it as if it had emanated from us; being afraid or ashamed to acknowledge himself the author he got us to assume the authorship. If such a charge were true Sir Antony MacDonnell must have pressed forward a policy disavowed by his superior officer; he must have used us to deceive his chief and we must have lent ourselves to that deception. After reading the charges so formulated I considered myself justified in making an explanation in your Lordships' House, and I need scarcely say that I have asked and received Sir Antony MacDonnell's permission to do so.

I am not at all concerned at this moment to defend our policy, nor am I concerned with Sir E. Carson's opinion regarding it. I will only say this, that the policy of devolution was put forward by us in all seriousness and honesty, believing, as we do, that it is essential for the better government of Ireland, and for the greater contentment of the country. It is also essential to put the legislative union between the two countries on a surer and firmer foundation than any upon which it can stand so long as legitimate and remediable grievances and causes of discontent in Ireland remain unremedied. As I say, I am not now concerned to defend our policy; what I am concerned to show is that we alone are responsible for that policy, and that we were parties to no deception whatever for the best of all possible reasons, that there was no sort of deception to be parties to.

Now, my Lords, what is the genesis of devolution? That is a question that has been bellowed at me through the megaphones of some of my fellow-countrymen persistently for the last few months. I cannot pretend to trace the origin of the policy down to its absolute roots; I daresay the idea may have been in men's minds for many years. But for all practical purposes our policy originated in a circular which was sent out on March 3rd, 1903, and signed by, I think, five members of the Land Conference Committee. I have that circular in my hand.

I need not trouble your Lordships with much of it, but I will read the most pertinent passage—

> "It is, however, now becoming evident that only in a reasonable system of gradual devolution of legislative powers is to be found the solution of the problem that demands such urgent consideration. In no other way can Parliament be relieved from the ever-increasing strain of public business, or the legitimate aspirations of Ireland for some definite form of self-government be met."

I think, my Lords, that indicates pretty clearly where the origin of devolution lies. That circular concluded by suggesting that a meeting should be held in Dublin, and asking for an expression of opinion as to the advisability of holding it.

I received a copy of that circular and gave it as my opinion that the time was not opportune for taking any definite action in the matter. I thought the time was not opportune for reasons which I am sure will appeal to your Lordships as practical and common-sense men. It is perfectly true that very different reasons were attributed to me by the Attorney-General for Ireland. He attributed to us the most sordid and unworthy motives, both in putting forward this policy of devolution, and in not bringing it practically forward at the date of the circular of 1903. Writing to The Times on October 27th, the Attorney-General asked—

> "Whether, in short, the devolution scheme is not the price secretly arranged to be paid for Nationalist acquiescence in a settlement of the land question on generous terms."

My Lords, that is a very serious charge to make against us. It is that we privately bargained with the Nationalists to get generous terms from the Land Conference, in consideration for which we were to bring in a scheme of devolution, but to postpone bringing in that scheme until we were practically certain that we were going to get good terms, and had sold our estates in a manner satisfactory to us. I am not going to trouble your Lordships with a denial of that. We disposed of that question at the time, and I need not allude to it further now. I did not advocate proceeding with this matter in March, 1903, because the Land Conference Committee had been appointed for a definite purpose which had not then been fulfilled; because all men's minds were then taken up with land purchase; because, if I may use a vulgar expression, we—the Land Conference Committees—had, I thought, "bitten off quite as much as we could chew." I therefore came to, I think, the very natural conclusion that it was not the time for us to embark on any new enterprise. So I wrote to my friends, and the matter was temporarily allowed to drop.

It was revived last August. I thought at that time that the Land Conference had done all the work it could possibly find to do, that it had fulfilled its purpose and had better be dissolved. I thought, too, for many reasons—local reasons with which I need not trouble your Lordships—that the time was then opportune for starting our policy of devolution sketched out in the circular from which I have quoted. I wrote on June 7th to the secretary of the Land Conference Committee, and suggested calling the committee together on August 25th. Colonel Poë happened to write to me on the very same day suggesting the same thing, and in reply to his letter I said I was quite agreed that the time was opportune for action, and I suggested a meeting on August 25th. I also sketched out what I thought our objectives should be, and among them was larger control for Ireland over her local affairs. We had, I think, one or two informal meetings and a committee meeting on August 25th, when we passed two resolutions—one dissolving the committee, and another forming the Irish Reform Association. At a meeting of the association on August 26th or 27th the report that we brought up was considered, amended, and adopted, and it was published on August 31st. That is the whole history of the genesis of the policy of devolution.

I am sorry to have to trouble your Lordships with all these small details, but after the charge which was formulated against us by the Solicitor-General it became absolutely necessary, for the sake of my colleagues and myself, to show that the whole principles of the policy of devolution originated with the Land Conference Committee, and not with Sir Antony MacDonnell, and that we decided to move that committee to take action in August without reference to Sir Antony MacDonnell or anybody else. On the details of the scheme and in getting it into shape I received much valuable help and assistance from Sir Antony MacDonnell, for which I am very grateful to him. As is very natural, I had many long conversations with Mr. George Wyndham and with Sir Antony MacDonnell on all kinds of subjects and topics connected with Ireland—not conversations with the Chief Secretary or Under-Secretary, but perfectly informal conversations and talks with Mr. Wyndham and Sir Antony MacDonnell. Among other subjects, we have often discussed the condition of what I may call moderate opinion in Ireland, the possibility of in any way making that opinion articulate, and the possibility, in fact, of creating anything like a Moderate Central Party.

I have always expressed my views freely on the matter. I thought that there did exist in Ireland a large body of moderate opinion, lethargic like moderate opinion generally is. Moderate opinion, so far as Unionists are concerned, disinclined, I thought, to any great organic changes, but profoundly dissatisfied with the existing system of Departmental Government in Ireland. I thought it dangerous that these legitimate causes of dissatisfaction felt by them should not be remedied. I thought it perfectly useless to start, or to help to create, a Moderate Party on a purely academic basis. I thought it absolutely essential to have a positive, constructive, democratic policy—the policy which has been wrought out in our proposals for devolution. On those ideas, broadly speaking, I have talked over and over again both with Mr. Wyndham and with Sir Antony MacDonnell. My impression always was—perhaps I may have been entirely wrong—that Sir Antony MacDonnell's views did not coincide with mine, but rather leaned to action on totally different lines. My impression also was that Mr. Wyndham saw no particular objection to a general scheme of administrative reform proposed by perfectly independent and private individuals being put forward for public criticism and discussion.

I remember very well having conversations with Mr. Wyndham and Sir Antony MacDonnell, not on any particular scheme or idea, but on the subject of a Moderate Party generally; and it was suggested—I do not remember by whom —that Sir Antony MacDonnell should invite some gentlemen to meet me who might be useful to me in forming the nucleus of such a Party. That idea was abandoned. I have a letter from Sir Antony MacDonnell, dated October, 1903, in which he says—

> "I have been thinking over our conversation the other day."

He was referring to the conversation I have mentioned; he could not have been referring to anything else. He abandoned the idea of asking the gentlemen to meet me, because, as he writes—

> "The business would speedily become known, and it would be said that Lord Dunraven was forming a new Irish Party."

To that Sir Antony MacDonnell did not see any particular objection, but he went on to say—

> "If the first meeting were held in my house, or at my invitation, everyone would say that Mr. Wyndham was a prime mover in the business."

And he added—

> "Any help I can give I shall be happy to give by supplying you with facts and information, but I think, and in this Mr. Wyndham, to whom I have spoken, agrees with me, it is better I should not appear prominently, or even to the extent of inviting men to meet you."

By that letter, my Lords, I have been guided ever since, and so, I believe, has Sir Antony MacDonnell. I had other talks with Mr. Wyndham last summer on this subject—if I remember rightly they were relative to certain propositions that were made to me, but which did not at all commend themselves to me—and the matter dropped until, as I have already told your Lordships, it was revived last August.

I think it was on the day before the meeting of the Land Conference Committee, when it was dissolved, that I first spoke on this subject to Sir Antony MacDonnell. I then asked him for information and advice on the subject, and I cannot imagine anything more natural for me to do. We had determined to create an association; we had decided that the principal plank in our policy was an extension of self-government to Ireland; we had decided upon the lines on which we were going—the lines indicated in the circular—namely, devolution, delegation of authority. I cannot imagine anything more natural in the circumstances for me to do than to ask for information and advice from the man who probably was better able to give me information and advice than any other human being in the country.

The publication of our first report on August 31st led to a great clamour, in Ireland, at any rate, for fuller particulars. Personally, I was averse to giving fuller particulars at that time. I did not think that the end of August was a very good period of the year for doing business. So far as I myself was concerned, I was on a yachting cruise, but, as a matter of fact, I was out of action, being in very dubious enjoyment of complete repose, owing to a very violent attack of gout in both my feet. All my colleagues were scattered about Ireland and were difficult to get at. In these circumstances I wrote to Sir Antony MacDonnell and asked him to draft out the heads of a more elaborate scheme on the lines of our first report, and he very kindly did so and sent them down to me in Kerry. Shortly afterwards he paid me a visit on his way to stay with my noble friend the noble Marquess (the Marquess of Lansdowne) and spent two days with me. We had plenty of time for going very thoroughly into the matter and we pretty well mapped out a report.

I was in a certain difficulty. Our first report had somehow or other been published in the London Press the day before we gave it out for publication in Ireland, which indicated a rather serious leakage somewhere in our machinery. I did not want that to occur again. I did want, however, to get a number of copies of the draft made as soon as I had perfected it to the best of my ability, and not knowing where to get them made I mentioned my difficulty to Sir Antony MacDonnell. I suggested to him, or he suggested to me—I do not know which, but I think he suggested to me—that if I would send him the draft when I had perfected it he would get sufficient copies typewritten for me to circulate among my colleagues on the organising committee, and this was done.

This draft was considered by the organising committee and amended considerably. It was then brought up at a meeting of the association, considered, amended, and adopted, and published on September 26th. Shortly after that came the Chief Secretary's letter in The Times, and shortly after that I received a letter from Sir Antony MacDonnell to say that in the circumstances I must understand that he did not feel himself to be at liberty any longer to give me any assistance of any kind. That, my Lords, is, I think, the whole history of the case, and I submit to your Lordships that the charges formulated by the Solicitor-General as charges made by Irish Unionists are absolutely disproved. I deny these charges which have been made, not by "the" Irish Unionists, as Sir Edward Carson says, but by some Irish Unionists. For this policy the Irish Reform Association is alone responsible; it was initiated two years ago by certain members of the Land Conference Committee, out of which the Irish Reform Association was formed; and we determined to bring it into active existence last August without consultation with, or the knowledge of, Sir Antony MacDonnell or any other human being. The whole thing was done within the action of the Land Conference Committee. Sir Antony MacDonnell, the very moment that policy was disavowed by his chief, informed me that he could no longer afford us any assistance of any kind. It is untrue to say that he pursued a policy which had been disproved of by his chief. I regret that the disavowal of our policy by the Chief Secretary did not take place a little sooner. Our first report, which was published on August 26th, set out our policy very plainly, and, goodness knows! enough fuss was made about it to attract the attention of a much less active and intelligent mind than that of the Chief Secretary even at ordinary holiday time. But no notice was taken of it. I am curious to know whether any communication passed between the Chief Secretary and Sir Antony MacDonnell on the subject of the first report. I can only say that I received a letter from Sir Antony MacDonnell on September 25th. I think I must have written to him about the dead-set that was being made against him in Ireland, because he writes to the effect that a friend had told him that a strenuous and most persistent effort was being made to force the Government to get him to resign his place, and he added—

> "I am bound to say that my relations with Mr. Wyndham are such that I attach very little importance or credence to these rumours."

I should gather from that letter, without any information to the contrary, that no remonstrance of any kind had been addressed by Mr. Wyndham to Sir Antony MacDonnell between the publication of our first report and our second report. But I am sure of this, that I heard nothing at all from Mr. Wyndham on the subject, and yet our first report sets out our policy pretty plainly, so plainly that I must ask your Lordships to allow me to read one passage from it. We say that—

> "We believe that the maintenance of the Parliamentary Union is compatible with the devolution to Ireland of a larger measure of local government than she now possesses. We consider that this devolution, while avoiding matters of Imperial concern and subjects of common interest to the Kingdom as a whole, would be beneficial to Ireland and would relieve the Imperial Parliament of a mass of business with which it cannot now deal satisfactorily, and which occupies its time to the detriment of much more important concerns. In particular we consider the present system of financial administration to be wasteful . . . . We think it possible to devise a system of Irish finance whereby expenditure could be conducted in a more efficient and economic manner and whereby the sources of revenue could be expanded. We believe that a remedy for the present unsatisfactory system can be found in such a decentralisation or localisation o Irish finance as will secure to its administration the application of local knowledge, influence, and ability without in any way sacrificing the ultimate control at present possessed by the Imperial Parliament."

That shows just as plainly as our more detailed second report our objects and intentions, yet I received no intimation of any kind from Mr. Wyndham on the subject after the publication of our first report.

I do not mean to say for a moment that if I had received an intimation from Mr. Wyndham I should have refrained from pushing this policy to the best of my ability, because I believe it to be absolutely essential both for the benefit of Ireland and the maintenance of the Union. But if I had heard from Mr. Wyndham it would at least have cleared up the position between myself and Sir Antony MacDonnell, and would have prevented the necessity that I am now under of entering into this long explanation. Sir Antony MacDonnell gave me his assistance as to the facts and information which he had promised to give in the letter of October 15th, 1903, which I have quoted to your Lordships. I was glad to have that assistance. I went to him naturally. If I had been proceeding on different lines, say on the lines of the provincial legislatures in Canada, I should have asked for information from somebody who was conversant with that system; but as we had determined to go on the lines of devolution—something in the nature of a Financial Council—I went to a man who, from his past experience in India of a system analogous to that, was best capable of giving us information.

I never had any idea of concealment, and certainly the idea could never have entered the head of Sir Antony MacDonnell. Sir Antony MacDonnell knew perfectly well that I would talk this matter over with both Mr. Wyndham and Lord Dudley when I met them. Is it conceivable, in these circumstances, that any man in his senses would have given me all that information, knowing that he was bound to maintain secrecy, without asking me to connive with him in thus deceiving his superior officer? I do not know whether, under ordinary circumstances, there is anything in the least improper in a civil servant giving this kind of information. If that is so, I would respectfully suggest that it would be a good thing to have a schedule of the topics which may be discussed between a private individual and an official in his private capacity.

When Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed it was currently stated that his appointment was of a very exceptional character. Whether that is so or not, and, if so, to what extent it was exceptional, perhaps my noble friend the noble Marquess when he replies will be able to tell us; but, whether that be so or not, of this I am certain, that it never entered into Sir Antony MacDonnell's head that in giving me the assistance he did he was in any way going behind the back of his superior officer. I must apologise for taking up your Lordships' time at this length, but I think noble Lords will agree with me that the charge made against me individually and against my friends in the Irish Reform Association is of so serious a nature that I was bound to justify myself before your Lordships from my place in this House. I have, of course, been obliged incidentally to frequently mention Sir Antony MacDonnell by name. It is not my business in any way to defend him; my object is to defend myself and my colleagues. But I will say this of Sir Antony MacDonnell. I have not had the honour of his acquaintance very long, but I have become intimately acquainted with him during the last two or three years, and I will say that a more impartial-minded man, a man more absolutely and fearlessly honest, a man more incapable of acting in any way disloyally behind the back of his chief, it has never been my privilege to meet.

*THE EARL OF WESTMEATH: My Lords, it will not be necessary for me to trouble the House at any length this afternoon, but I do not wish to let this occasion pass without expressing the relief which I, in common with all my colleagues and associates among the Unionists of Ireland, feel that His Majesty's Government, and particularly the Chief Secretary, have at length, almost at the point of the bayonet, consented to give us some explanation of this matter which has been troubling us so long. I do not think, my Lords, that it is possible for me to exaggerate the extreme sense of uneasiness which loyalists all over Ireland have been feeling at the vagaries of an official who, apparently without the sanction of his official chief, has taken upon himself to inaugurate a policy in Ireland which we Unionists emphatically and entirely disapprove of, and from which we wish in every way to dissociate ourselves.

All over Ireland the feeling has been one of great unrest, because we never know in Ireland whom we ought to attack. The Chief Secretary is nominally responsible to Parliament for Irish administration, but, rightly or wrongly, an impression has gained ground that the present Chief Secretary, Mr. Wyndham, has practically abdicated the position he ought to occupy, and the power has gradually passed from his hands into those of his official junior. There are even rumours that no less a person than the Lord-Lieutenant is not entirely without a policy of his own, and occasionally even my noble and learned friend the Lord Chancellor of Ireland is referred to in this connection, though I feel confident that in his case his instincts, when he is allowed to give proper expression to them, are on the right side. We feel that we have been badly treated by being kept so long in the dark in regard to this matter, and we demand to know what official, if any, is responsible for these absurd schemes.

I am one of those who do not like making a scapegoat of any one particular person unless I feel perfectly confident that that is the person who deserves the blame. For that reason I have, in common with many others, felt the greatest reluctance in joining in the campaign, as it has been called, which has been conducted against Sir Antony MacDonnell all over Ireland and in this country; but when we find so important an official as the Attorney-General for Ireland breaking what I believe was the silence of years and going up to his constituents and urging them to insist upon the origin of this scheme being announced publicly, and when we find no less a person in England than the Solicitor-General also insisting on this point, then it is perfectly plain that some such pronouncement as was made yesterday by the Chief Secretary becomes absolutely necessary. I think the statement which the Chief Secretary made yesterday has abundantly justified the attitude which we Unionists in Ireland have been forced to take. I certainly think this matter is one which should have been set at rest before.

The noble Earl, Lord Dunraven, who has occupied so large a share of public attention lately, has been appealed to over and over again to set this matter at rest. He has chosen not to do so. He has preferred to allow the unrest to go on. I do think this is a serious want of thought on the part of one who has lately been hailed by the somewhat exclusive title of the most thoughtful man in Ireland by one of that small but enthusiastic group of admirers who follow the noble Earl about from place to place, and who appear to play very much the same part as the Chorus in the Greek plays.

I think His Majesty's Government, knowing the unrest which has existed all over Ireland, might have taken an earlier opportunity of disavowing any connection on the part of the Government with this scheme. I think they have shown a self-denial and a meekness worthy of earlier days when we consider that not so very long ago Sir Antony MacDonnell went down to the West of Ireland and there permitted himself to receive an address from the Nationalist body congratulating him on his superior breadth of mind, and his general superiority over the rest of his colleagues. I believe that was so. I have never seen any contradiction of it, and I think a more improper action for a civil servant to take it would be impossible to imagine.

Let us hope, my Lords, that this show-up, if I may call it so, this fiasco will bring about the end of the policy of which we so bitterly complain—the policy of truckling to disloyalty and trying to conciliate those who will not be conciliated. The ignorance of people in this country with regard to Irish affairs never seems to grow less. As a small matter, I may mention that a few days ago I was travelling over from Ireland with an Englishman who had been spending a week in that country. He said, in the course of conversation, "Oh, you have no more real grievances in Ireland. You only bring them forward pour rire." When I recollected that the whole of his time had been spent in official circles in Dublin I was not so much astonished at that remark as I otherwise would have been. I would appeal to my noble friend Lord Dunraven to leave Ireland alone in future. He has taken up the land question, the University question, and Home Rule in disguise. Now, I earnestly suggest to him that he should remain in this country and take up some question here which will give vent to his great energy. What we want in Ireland is to be let alone. We want to manage our own affairs. We want to be free from agitators and faddists with, no doubt, excellent intentions.

With regard to the question of Private Bill legislation, there is a general feeling that if something in the nature of devolution could be brought about it would be a good thing. At the same time, I have never heard that any body has been suggested which would command the confidence of Unionists and Nationalists alike. I am very much afraid that if any tribunal of this kind could be constituted it would fall under the sinister influences which have made the position in Ireland what it is to-day. I wish, however, to say that if at any future time anything of this kind should be proposed I do not think Unionists should be considered bigoted if they scrutinise such proposals with great care and caution. The time may possibly come when Unionists and Nationalists may be able to work together, but that time has not come yet; and any attempt to force a union on lines which are not generally accepted by the country will only lead to trouble and annoyance and a repetition of the painful incident we are discussing to-day.

THE EARL OF MAYO: My Lords, I am sure the House will agree with me that Lord Dunraven has, to say the least, cleared the air in regard to this question of devolution. We now know that the scheme originated with the noble Earl and his colleagues, and that he consulted with the Under-Secretary upon it. Let me leave that for one moment and allude to the speech which has just been made by my noble friend Lord Westmeath. The noble Lord has attacked everyone all round; he has attacked the Government; he has attacked the Chief Secretary; he has attacked Lord Dunraven; and he has attacked the Under-Secretary. Living in Ireland as I do, and taking a great interest in affairs there, I feel quite certain that the Chief Secretary can well take care of himself, especially after his pronouncement in denial of the devolution policy which appeared in The Times. I quite understand the attitude which Lord Westmeath has taken up, because he was one of those noble Lords who, at the time we were trying to arrive at a little peace in Ireland, set his face entirely against it. He was one of those with whom we had the greatest difficulty in dealing, and therefore your Lordships must not take quite seriously all the very hard words he has just uttered.

As I was a member of the Land Conference I should like to take this public opportunity of denying that there was any bargain whatever made with the Nationalists in the Land Conference. These sort of rumours have been flying about all over the country, and now at last we have got to the bottom of things and know where we are. There was not even any chaff about there being Home Rule, or about our having any arrangement with them whatever. I am not one of those who joined Lord Dunraven in his devolution scheme, but there are parts of it with which I agree, notably the part referring to Private Bill procedure. I deny that there are not some means by which Private Bills could be dealt with in Ireland instead of being sent over at enormous cost to be dealt with at Westminster. If Irishmen are clever enough to come to an arrangement with regard to the land question, I think we can come to an arrangement with regard to Private Bill procedure, having before us the example of Scotland. I have to thank Lord Dunraven for clearing the air. I think, however, there are portions of his speech which, with all due deference to him, were somewhat mischievous, but we do not mind a little mischief in Ireland. We can get over it. We now, at any rate, know where we are, and can go ahead with that part of the scheme which does not tend to what Lord Westmeath described as absolute Home Rule.

* THE MARQUESS OF RIPON: My Lords, I do not rise for the purpose of interfering in the interesting domestic quarrels of the Irish Unionist Party. I leave them very readily to settle those matters among themselves. But I feel bound to rise for the purpose of saying something in respect to my right hon. friend Sir Antony MacDonnell. Sir Antony MacDonnell served under me when I was Viceroy of India. I have known him for a long time. I entertain the very highest opinion of the services which he rendered in India, and I am glad to see that my noble friend the noble Marquess opposite concurs in that opinion. For those services when he left India he received the highest distinction, except a Peerage, which can be given to any person in the Civil Service of this country. He was selected by Her Majesty's Government to be made an English Privy Councillor. He is a man of long and very varied experience. It was not, I believe, at any solicitation of his that His Majesty's Government selected him for the post of Under-Secretary in Ireland. I believe they picked him out because they thought him a man of great experience in administration, and of great ability, who would ably occupy the position of Under-Secretary in Ireland. That being so, and looking to his past career, I cannot help thinking that it is probable that they did not expect him altogether to confine either his activity or his influence within any narrow sphere of official duty.

There was a very famous Irish Under-Secretary towards the middle of last century, a man whose name is still cherished in Ireland—I mean Mr. Thomas Drummond. Mr. Thomas Drummond was subjected, at the time he held the office of Under-Secretary, to very much the same attacks from precisely the same quarters as those that are now being directed against Sir Antony MacDonnell. Mr. Drummond was gallantly defended in the House of Commons by Lord Morpeth, who was then Chief Secretary for Ireland. Mr. Drummond held office for something like five years, and he has left a memory in Ireland which I believe to be still green. But is it to be supposed, or does anybody who knows the history of those times imagine, that Mr. Thomas Drummond was only employed by the Government upon the ordinary routine duties of the office of Under-Secretary? I trow not, and I cannot help thinking that it is highly probable that when Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed his position was very similar in reality to that which Mr. Thomas Drummond filled.

I was very much struck by the statement in the speech made by my noble friend Lord Dunraven that certainly on one, if not on more than one, occasion he had an interview with Mr. Wyndham and Sir Antony MacDonnell together, and that at that interview or interviews Irish affairs were freely discussed. That in itself, I think, shows that the Chief Secretary employed Sir Antony MacDonnell in a different manner from that in which possibly persons of less experience might have been employed. Therefore, I think I may fairly conclude—my noble friend opposite will correct me if I am wrong—that the position which Sir Antony MacDonnell held was considered to be one of more extent and scope than that which other persons might have been allowed to occupy. It is, I think, remarkable, as the noble Earl said, that when the first report was published by the body which he got together, a document which certainly attracted considerable amount of public attention at the time, no communication was received by him from the Chief Secretary.

Surely we may conclude that in acting as he did—I am speaking of his action generally in communicating with outside persons with a degree of freedom perhaps unusual—Sir Antony MacDonnell was consistently keeping within the terms and conditions of his appointment. I have always understood that at the time of the preparation of the Land Bill Sir Antony MacDonnell was in communication with all sorts and conditions of men, including some who would be most obnoxious to noble Lords opposite, and that he had a considerable hand in the preparation of that successful measure. Then, again, there is the question of Irish University education. How was Sir Antony MacDonnell engaged in that matter? I should like to know whether I am right in thinking that he did hold, and was known by the Irish Government to hold, a position somewhat superior and wider than that of a mere ordinary subordinate officer. I am sure my noble friend opposite, when he addresses the House, will agree with me when I say that from our knowledge of the character of Sir Antony MacDonnell it is perfectly impossible that he could have been guilty of any improper or unworthy conduct. Any man may make a mistake, but it is the one thing which cannot be possible of a man of Sir Antony MacDonnell's high character that he should have done anything which deserves serious censure of a moral kind.

But there is one matter upon which we have no further information. The noble Earl, it has been said, has made a clean breast of it, and the noble Lord who just sat down rejoiced that we had now got to the bottom of this matter. But there is one person of whom nothing has been said—I refer to the Viceroy. Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed by, and was in constant communication with, the Viceroy. The Viceroy is not here to-night, but, if it is possible, I think it ought to be stated, in justice to Sir Antony MacDonnell, to what extent he was in communication with Lord Dudley upon the details of this question. Whatever may be the result of this discussion, I cannot but hope that your Lordships, whatever may be your opinions or feelings with regard to questions of Irish administration or Irish government, will not allow yourselves to be carried away by misrepresentations. Great misrepresentations have been made, but I trust your Lordships will not allow yourselves to be carried away by the strange forgetfulness of the Solicitor-General of the honourable understanding which exists between political and non-political servants of the Crown, and that whatever may be your views of my noble friend's scheme, you will not be ready to commit an injustice to one of the most distinguished servants that India has ever had.

*LORD RATHMORE: My Lords, I have no quarrel with Lord Dunraven's aspirations for the appeasement of unfortunate controversies in Ireland, and for the formation of what he calls a Party of moderate views on all Irish subjects. But setting rolling again the ball of Home Rule, which the noble Earl has undoubtedly done, is not the way to assuage the bitter controversies in Ireland which formerly raged over that subject, and which I, at any rate, had hoped were settling down. The noble Earl referred to the speech of the Attorney-General for Ireland. I had no idea he was going to refer to it or I would have refreshed my memory with regard to it. I cannot very accurately recall the particular part of the speech to which the noble Earl referred, and, therefore, I will not attempt to answer him; but I do remember that the speech of the Attorney-General for Ireland was a very powerful and, as I thought, complete destructive criticism of the plan with which the name of the noble Earl has been associated, and I also remember that he again and again called upon the noble Earl to let us know whether he had received any assistance from other quarters. The noble Earl, however, gave no answer to those appeals or to the other appeals made to him until the disclosure we have now before us was made.

I do not propose to occupy your Lordships' time on the present occasion by arguing with the noble Earl upon the general scheme which he has propounded. I would only incidentally refer to those clauses of the devolution scheme which were intended, I suppose, to create, and which certainly would have had the effect of creating, a subordinate Legislative Assembly in Ireland, composed mainly of Irish Members of Parliament and Irish Peers, with vaguely adumbrated functions and powers, which, from the nature of the scheme, were capable of indefinite extension. The noble Earl has told us that his scheme contains safeguards which he evidently considers would have had the effect of preventing the undue expansion of the powers he proposes to confer on this subordinate Legislature in Ireland, and would have maintained the absolute supremacy of the Imperial Parliament. But we were familiar with the same protestations from the lips of Mr. Gladstone when he introduced and endeavoured to carry his Home Rule Bills in 1886 and in 1893. That question was thoroughly gone into at that time. The judgment of the nation was challenged upon it. The greatest political controversy of a hundred years was fought over it, and we had thought that that controversy had been set at rest for ever.

I will not attempt to deal with the argument of the noble Earl on this subject. I have no doubt that he is sincere in his belief that his scheme is of a harmless and milk-and-water character, and that it is unjust to give it the nickname of Home Rule. I am content to say that if the noble Lord holds that opinion, he and his immediate followers are the only people in the three kingdoms who do. No sooner was his scheme published than the Chief Secretary thought it necessary to declare to the[1] public that the Government had nothing whatever to do with it, that they could not tolerate or support it, and that they would never consent to the establishment of a subordinate Legislature in Ireland. Not only did the Chief Secretary repudiate it, but all the organs of Conservative opinion denounced it as Home Rule in disguise, while the organs of the Liberal Unionist Party in Ireland denounced it as worse than the Home Rule of Mr. Gladstone. Not only the Unionist Party in Ireland, but also the Nationalist Party understood perfectly well what it was. No doubt they nobly proclaimed that it bore no affinity to the grander scheme which they would prefer, but I may say that any language used by my right hon. friend the Solicitor-General for England was mild in comparison to the language of contempt which a great many of the Irish patriots showered upon the proposals of the noble Earl. The Nationalists gladly accepted his destructive criticism of the existing state of affairs in Ireland. They adopted all the premises of his argument, and then contemptuously told him that the principles he had adopted would carry him much further than his halfway house, and that he was sowing seed which must have fruit of a much more important description. I do not know whether the noble Earl will find any supporters of his view as to the innocency of his scheme, but if he believes that the scheme is anything other than Home Rule in disguise or in embryo, then in that opinion he stands alone.

But, my Lords, what I thought we were going to discuss to-day was the speech of my right hon. friend the Solicitor-General, Sir E. Carson. It is not necessary for me to make any eulogy of Sir E. Carson. He won for himself in Ireland the first position at the Irish Bar. He transferred his professional labours to England, and, with extraordinary rapidity, obtained a place second to none at the English Bar. That great profession, with the generosity for which it is famous, accepted him and gave him all the honours which he had fairly won. Sir E. Carson is not only distinguished in his own profession, he has been identified with Unionism not only in these easier times, but in the dark days of the Land League and in the later struggles in the House of Commons. My right hon. friend was attending a quasi-political dinner, and, in the course of his speech, made some observations to which I think the noble Earl has very wisely made but a cursory reference. At that meeting

[1] Lord Rathmore.

Sir E. Carson, speaking on behalf of the Irish Unionists, deplored the fact that many of them intimated that they could no longer support His Majesty's Government—

> "It is," he continued, "the duty of the Government, of which I am a member, and which exists in power for the purpose of maintaining the Union, to sift to the bottom, and, if possible satisfy, the grievances of our fellow-Unionists in Ireland."

I suppose the noble Earl would not object to that part of the speech. Then Sir E. Carson proceeded to describe the devolution scheme. I will not quote the language he used—it might not be agreeable to the noble Earl—but he said that he himself would much prefer Imperial Union to any such tampering with constitutional government. He added that the scheme had not attracted many Unionists from their ranks. That is perfectly true, my Lords. I do not believe the noble Earl can name a score of men in the whole of Ireland, in the Unionist Party at all events, whose names are known or who have any influence whatever in the country, who have followed him in this crazy scheme of devolution.

The plain meaning of the whole speech of my right hon. friend was that it was the immediate duty of the Government to set at rest the suspicions of an important section of their followers, and that those suspicions, even if unfounded, should not be allowed to go uncontradicted. He did not make any accusation against Sir Antony MacDonnell or express his belief in the suspicions that had been aroused. Sir E. Carson did not, as a matter of fact, know at the time that these suspicions were well founded, but he saw that they were creating distrust and almost mutiny among the most loyal supporters of the Government. He said that if they were true, such conduct on the part of a permanent official was a scandal to the Civil Service. These were strong words, no doubt, but are they stronger words than have been used by the Cabinet themselves in the message they sent to Sir Antony MacDonnell telling him that his conduct was indefensible. We have now arrived at the truth of the matter, partly, I think, in consequence of the action taken my right hon. friend; and I say that, so far from being blameworthy from any point of view for what he said on that occasion, Sir E. Carson has done his duty not only to the Civil Service and to the Unionist Party but to the country at large.

I can assure your Lordships that I have no sort of personal feeling or animus of any kind against Sir Antony MacDonnell. I have not the pleasure of being acquainted with him, but from what has been told me by friends of mine who were with him in India, I should be inclined to agree that every word we have heard in his praise from the noble Marquess opposite is true. There is no doubt that Sir Antony MacDonnell was a very powerful and successful administrator in India, and in that way did good service to the Government under which he served. But, my Lords, I have also heard from my friends who were in India at that time that he was known to hold most advanced opinions on Irish matters, and that he earned for himself the sobriquet of "The Fenian"—of course not in any felonious sense. I feel not only no antagonism to Sir Antony MacDonnell, but considerable pride, as his fellow-countryman, that he has added another Irish name to the long list of famous men who have been identified with the expansion and safeguarding of our great Indian Empire; but all that can be said in favour of Sir Antony MacDonnell as a useful servant of the Crown in connection with India strengthens my amazement at his being transferred to Ireland. I cannot understand under what unhappy influence he was removed from his place on the Indian Council, where no doubt his experience and ability enabled him to be of great service, and sent to Ireland.

All Sir Antony MacDonnell's experience of government has been of the autocratic kind which prevails in India, and he was well known to be a man of domineering temperament and the most advanced views on Irish politics—yet this powerful influence was let loose in Ireland upon a community which is only too easily excited by influences of this kind. The noble Earl, Lord Dunraven, has taken exception to the suggestion that Sir Antony MacDonnell "evolved" this scheme of devolution, but according to the Chief Secretary himself, who has denounced this scheme, Sir Antony MacDonnell assisted in "discussing and formulating" its proposals. The position is worthy of a comic opera. The Under-Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant sits in Dublin Castle formulating a scheme for establishing some form of Home Rule in Ireland which is immediately denounced by his own Chief Secretary whose subordinate he was supposed to be and also by the Prime Minister as inadmissible and not to be entertained for one moment. I do not wish to speak of Sir Antony MacDonnell in any hostile spirit, but his retention in the office of Under-Secretary under a Unionist Government is grotesque. Personally, I should be only too glad if some sphere of honourable and useful employment under the Crown could be found for him out of Ireland—some sphere in which his great abilities could be utilised; but in the circumstances which have arisen his retention in the position of Under-Secretary is really impossible, and I trust that the noble Lord who will speak for the Government will give us some more definite information on that subject than we heard from the Chief Secretary in the other House.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (The Marquess of LANSDOWNE). My Lords, I cannot help thinking that I shall best consult the convenience of the House by avoiding any attempt at a discussion of the merits of the proposals embodied in Lord Dunraven's scheme, which has been analysed rather mercilessly by the noble and learned Lord who has just sat down. The merits of the scheme are not now before your Lordships' House and whether it deserves the more moderately worded condemnation which it has received at the hands of His Majesty's Government or the more trenchant vituperation it has encountered in other quarters does not, so far as we are concerned this evening, matter very much. In the same way, I doubt whether we can very profitably enter this evening into an examination of those other charges which have been brought against Sir Antony MacDonnell, and which were referred to by the noble Lord on the Back Benches. What I should like to say with regard to them is that, if any noble Lord chooses to bring them up in this House, we shall be prepared to meet them. They have been met in another place by my right hon. friend the Chief Secretary, and although I cannot pretend to have entered minutely into them, I know that to some, at all events, of the counts of the indictment a triumphant answer is forthcoming.

I may, however, notice now one particular incident to which the noble Lord behind me referred, that of the address of welcome presented to Sir Antony MacDonnell on his return to his native country. It was not very unnatural that an address should be tendered to him on his return to his home after many long years of brilliant service in India, but so strongly did he feel that any manifestations of this kind were dangerous that he actually refused to receive a public address, and the address which he did receive was, I believe, presented to him informally in the drawing-room of a private house, and under circumstances which made it, in his opinion, unnecessary that he should greatly concern himself as to the language in which it was worded. He had no idea it was to be made public, and no one was more surprised than Sir Antony MacDonnell when it appeared in the newspapers.

But the subject before the House this evening is the speech delivered by the Solicitor-General. As to that, let me say at once that I accept unreservedly the interpretation put upon it by the noble and learned Lord. I understood that speech as implying, in the first place, a strong expression of opinion that, as a matter of principle, it is wrong for the members of the Civil Service to concern themselves in political movements, and, in the next place, I understood the Solicitor-General to say that, if it was indeed true that Sir Antony MacDonnell had been the originator of this scheme, the matter was one which required further discussion—I think the expression he used was that it should be sifted and set at rest. The statement of the noble Earl, Lord Dunraven, threw an important light upon that particular point, for we learned from him that it cannot be said that Sir Antony MacDonnell was in the proper sense of the word the originator of the Dunraven scheme. That is stated categorically. We accept that statement of the noble Earl; but we must also accept from him that there is no doubt that Sir Antony MacDonnell was called in and did take part in putting the scheme into shape.

Lord Rathmore.

I will notice at this moment, lest I should forget it afterwards, the question which was asked by, I think, the noble Lord on the Back Benches. He asked why it was that the Chief Secretary did not at once put his foot down when the first notice of the scheme of the Irish Reform Association appeared in the newspapers. I think the answer is a two-fold one. In the first place, the first statement was much shorter, and was couched in much more general and indefinite terms than the second statement. I am speaking from memory, but I am almost confident that your Lordships would not find in the first statement the two particular proposals to which the Chief Secretary afterwards took special exception—I mean the proposal for the creation of a Financial Council, partly elected, and the proposal for the establishment of a statutory body to which legislation of a particular kind, and under specified restrictions, was to be entrusted. But whether or not, I am bound to add this, that the first scheme appeared in The Times at a moment when, after a particularly arduous session, the Chief Secretary, who is, after all, a mortal man, was taking a well-deserved holiday—I believe he was on the Continent at the time—and when he could hardly be expected to rush into print the moment he saw an announcement of this kind in the newspapers, without any particular knowledge of the circumstances under which it was made.

There has been so much controversy as to the facts of the case that I think it almost worth while to recapitulate very briefly those facts which have been ascertained, and which are not controverted, because there are a good many statements which are open to a good deal of controversy. In the autumn of 1904 the noble Earl and his friends were working out proposals for an improved scheme of local government for Ireland. We know that they called in Sir Antony MacDonnell, with whom they had on many previous occasions been in the habit of conferring, and with whom they had been in the habit of conferring with the full knowledge and approval of the Chief Secretary. We know also that Sir Antony MacDonnell's assistance was readily given; and we know that in the result the scheme of the noble Earl made its appearance, not, of course, as in any sense a scheme officially inspired, but as a scheme put forward by him and his friends as a basis for the discussion they desired to initiate upon the subject of Irish local government. When the noble Earl's scheme was made public, the Chief Secretary at once thought it his duty to make it known that, in his opinion, it was opposed to Unionist principles and that it was one from which His Majesty's Government desired entirely to dissociate themselves, and he dwelt particularly upon the two proposals which I described a moment ago. Upon that Sir Antony MacDonnell at once placed himself in communication with the noble Earl, and intimated to him that his connection with the noble Earl's association must from that moment cease and come to an end.

My Lords, these are the events as they happened, and upon these events His Majesty's Government took the following action. They intimated to Sir Antony MacDonnell that in thus connecting himself with the preparation and publication of these proposals he had been led into an error which they were unable to defend. But they added at the same time that they did not regard his conduct as open to the imputation of disloyalty, and that they did not in any way call in question his candour and integrity.

That is a bare historical statement of the facts which I thought it might be convenient that I should lay before your Lordships' House. But such a statement is perhaps not quite sufficient, in view of the speeches to which we have listened this evening; and I have to ask your Lordships to consider with me for a moment the circumstances in which this mistake of Sir Antony MacDonnell's was made. I think it necessary to take that course. I think it is due to him; I think it is due to us. I think it is due to him, because it is right that the circumstances under which he took this action should be understood. It is due to us because, if half the charges which have been made against Sir Antony MacDonnell were true, we should deserve to be assailed for not having treated him with infinitely greater severity.

Now, my Lords, Sir Antony MacDonnell came home from India in 1902, having served in that country for nearly forty years. During his career, after a long and laborious apprenticeship in a number of minor appointments, he held successively a series of the highest and most responsible posts in the Indian service. He was at different times at the head of the Government of Burma; at the head of the Government of the Central Provinces, with a population of 12,000,000 committed to his charge, and he was Chief Commissioner of the North-West Provinces, with a population of no fewer than 47,000,000 under his government. Subsequently he became a member of the Viceroy's Council, and on his return home, as the noble Marquess reminded us, he had the high honour of a place in the Privy Council conferred upon him. Now, my Lords, during that long and arduous service in India Sir Antony MacDonnell had to deal with the most difficult of the many difficult problems with which Indian statesmen are confronted. He dealt with great famines, and, thanks to his administration, waves of distress, the volume of which we can scarcely conceive in this country, passed over the districts committed to his charge and left the population scathless behind them. He dealt with religious difficulties in a country where there are cleavages of religion and race as bitter even as those which are to be found on the other side of the Irish Channel. He dealt with the great and intricate problems of Indian land tenure—problems as complicated as any with which we are familiar in these islands. And may I say that during the five years which I spent in India, years during which I was constantly in contact with Sir Antony MacDonnell, and had ample opportunity of watching his work, I came to the conclusion that amongst the many able, distinguished, and upright men with whom I had to deal no one was more distinguished, more able, or more upright.

I was sorry to hear my noble and learned friend trump up an old story that he was nick-named "The Fenian." I never heard the story during my stay in India, nor did I ever hear that while he was in India he ever proclaimed himself a partisan in regard to Irish politics, or asserted any strong views of his own in regard to them. My impression is that most of our Indian administrators have plenty to do in attending to Indian affairs, and that while they are absorbed in the duties of their posts they are apt to forget for the moment the, by comparison, almost microscopic affairs of these little islands. May I add as a personal reminiscence that, when I arrived in India, Lord Dufferin, another eminent Irishman, mentioned to me the name of Sir Antony MacDonnell as a man without reproach with whom I could safely confer upon the most delicate questions, and who was likely to render me the most invaluable service?

The Marquess of Lansdowne.

Well, my Lords, Sir Antony MacDonnell came back to this country with this great reputation and experience, and I am bound to say that it seemed to me that if ever there was an Irishman from whom it might be hoped that he would be able on his return to his own country to render good service in Ireland, that man was Sir Antony MacDonnell; and it was in the belief that he was such a man that I introduced him to the Chief Secretary. He produced on the Chief Secretary the same favourable impression that he had produced on me. At that moment there was no vacancy in the Under-Secretaryship; but not long afterwards the post became vacant, and the Chief Secretary offered it to Sir Antony MacDonnell. I think it is right that your Lordships should remember that when he accepted that onerous and almost thankless office he sacrificed for the sake of it a place on the Secretary of State's Council, a place full of interesting but not excessive work, most honourable to a man who has retired from the Indian service and which naturally must have had great temptations for him. And I do not think I am committing an indiscretion when I say that not long afterwards Sir Antony MacDonnell forwent another appointment in India, the appointment of Governor of the Province of Bombay, one of the most honourable in the whole of India, which was within his reach if he had chosen to be a candidate for it.

Now I suggest to your Lordships that it follows almost as a matter of course that a man of that kind, a man of those antecedents, could scarcely be expected to be bound by the narrow rules of routine which are applicable to an ordinary member of the Civil Service; and I answer the noble Marquess's question by telling him that when Sir Antony MacDonnell took up this appointment it was understood both by himself and the Chief Secretary that he was to have greater freedom of action, greater opportunities of initiative, than he would have expected if he had been a candidate promoted in the ordinary course. And it was also understood between Sir Antony MacDonnell and the Chief Secretary that there were certain subjects to which their efforts were to be addressed and which they had reasonable hope and expectation of being able to deal with should they remain in office; amongst those subjects one was the co-ordination of the many detached and semi-detached boards into which the government of Ireland is at present subdivided. Anybody who has studied that question is aware that there is room for considerable improvement in that old-fashioned and complicated organisation. I think I ought to explain that I say this to your Lordships with the knowledge and concurrence of my right hon. friend the Chief Secretary for Ireland.

In these circumstances does it not follow that Sir Antony MacDonnell was justified in assuming that he had more than usual freedom of action? He certainly acted upon that assumption, and acted upon it with the knowledge and approval of the Chief Secretary, and it was with the Chief Secretary's approval that Sir Antony MacDonnell made himself accessible to persons of many kinds and descriptions whose ideas upon important subjects were worth collecting. I maintain that, in endeavouring to arrive at that result, and to break down the barrier which has too long and too often divided Dublin Castle from the rest of the country, my right hon. colleague was taking a step in the right direction, and one for which he deserves the greatest possible credit. It may, I think, fairly be claimed that it was in some measure the result of this happier régime that that most difficult and intricate measure, the Irish Land Bill, was safely piloted through Parliament. We all knew that Sir Antony MacDonnell took an active part in the preliminary discussions, and in the course of the debates on the Land Bill the noble Earl more than once received congratulations from both sides of the House upon the success that had attended the efforts of himself and his friends to bring about an understanding on difficult technical points.

Well, that was the situation in the summer of last year. The noble Earl was taking a holiday in the not particularly favourable circumstances he has described to the House, but, although he was taking a holiday, he and his friends were engaged in the elaboration of the scheme they had so much at heart, and Sir Antony MacDonnell was called to their councils. Now, shall I be told that he ought to have refused that invitation? I have no doubt Sir Antony called to mind the understanding upon which he had taken office in 1902. I have no doubt he called to mind conversations and consultations with the noble Earl and his chief, recollecting that the subject of local government was one they had agreed to discuss and examine together. I say, therefore, that it appears to me Sir Antony MacDonnell might well feel himself able to take part in the symposium of the noble Earl with a perfectly clear conscience and without any idea that he was by so doing running counter to the wishes of his chief.

But while I have no difficulty in arriving at this point, I am bound to say that when as the result of these discussions the question arose of putting forward proposals for the creation of a partly elective financial board and of a statutory body with delegated legislative powers, Sir Antony MacDonnell might well have asked himself whether any instructions or authority that he had ever received covered proposals of that kind. I am sure he honestly believed he was not departing from Unionist principles or running counter to the wishes of his chief, but the fact remains that he did find himself involved in proposals which His Majesty's Government were obliged to repudiate. He interpreted his discretion in one way, His Majesty's Government in another. I do not know that the mistake was a very astounding one. It is curious that Sir Antony MacDonnell had a kind of premonition that trouble of this kind might arise, and I will read a passage in a letter he wrote to a friend at the time he took office—

> "My best friends tell me that I am deluding myself, that I shall be abused by Orangemen as a Roman Catholic and Home Ruler, and denounced by Home Rulers as a renegade, that I shall do no good, and that I shall retire disgusted in a year. But I am willing to try."

I think it did him credit that he tried, and I believe the efforts he made have not been without many excellent results. If at this particular point he overstepped the line which we consider he might have drawn or which might have been drawn for his guidance, we, nevertheless, hold strongly that his conduct has not in any way tarnished the high reputation for loyalty which he brought home with him from that Indian Empire which he served so well to the country of his birth, for which he desired to do something before he died.

*Earl SPENCER: My Lords, I feel that I must say a few words on the very interesting discussion that has taken place to-night. As your Lordships know, I have had considerable experience in Ireland, and particularly understand the relations between the Under-Secretary, the Lord-Lieutenant and the Chief Secretary. I am not going to follow the noble Earl who raised this discussion, nor the noble Lord opposite, Lord Rathmore, into the topics on which they enlarged. I do not think it necessary to discuss the principles of the proposals which the noble Earl and others in Ireland have put forward. All I would say in that connection is that I naturally look with sympathetic interest on those proposals, and shall watch their course with care. But I feel that it is necessary that I should say something with regard to the position of the Under-Secretary and the attacks which, I venture to think, have been unjustly made upon him. The noble Marquess rather put a gloss on the speech of the Solicitor-General. For myself, I certainly think that the language used by the Solicitor-General, though it was put in hypothetical form, was hardly such as one member of a Government should employ in reference to another.

The noble and learned Lord opposite very properly eulogised the many Irishmen who have distinguished thsemselves in India, but he attacked the Government for having appointed Sir Antony MacDonnell to the position he holds in Ireland. On that subject I feel that it is not necessary for me to add to the generous and eloquent defence of Sir Antony MacDonnell which we have heard from the noble Marquess the Leader of the House. I leave the defence of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment and conduct entirely in the hands of the noble Marquess. Though some criticism was mingled with the praise, a great deal turns upon the exceptional conditions upon which Sir Antony MacDonnell received his appointment. An ordinary Under-Secretary would not have been allowed such conditions, but, settled as they were by the Chief Secretary, an entirely different complexion is put upon the action of the Under-Secretary. The conditions to which the noble Marquess referred enumerated some of the questions in connection with which the noble Earl wished to introduce reform. What can be more closely identified with the proposals for reform in Ireland which Lord Dunraven proposes than the co-ordination of the boards and semi-boards that are so well known to exist in the government of Ireland. These conditions, it seems to me, justify action which an ordinary Under-Secretary would not have taken with regard to all these matters.

We know that directly Sir Antony MacDonnell noticed the view taken by the Chief Secretary on the detailed proposals which came out later in the newspapers, he at once ceased to give any help of any kind, showing, as I think, his loyalty to the Government. I would go further, and inquire whether he did not lay the effect of his communications with Lord Dunraven before the Lord-Lieutenant himself, and also before the Chief Secretary. It seems to me very improbable that, even under the conditions under which he held the office, he would go so far as he did without keeping the Lord-Lieutenant and the Chief Secretary acquainted with all he was doing in the matter. I have said these few words in justice to a very distinguished public servant, against whom I think a most unfair attack has been made. I confess I heard with great satisfaction the statement of the noble Marquess, but I think that even the noble Marquess's criticisms, though they were exceedingly mild, were hardly deserved, considering the remarkable conditions under which Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed to this office.

*THE LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL AND PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION (The Marquess of LONDONDERRY): My Lords, I hope my noble friend Lord Dunraven will not think I am guilty of any discourtesy when I say that he devoted far more time in his speech to an account of the career of the Irish Reform Association, of which he is president, than to the Notice on the Paper. I do not complain of that in the least. He made what I think was a very interesting speech, and I should not have spoken had it not been for the remarks of the noble Earl opposite. I am glad, however, that this discussion has been raised, for it has given His Majesty's Government the opportunity of repudiating entirely any idea of support of any sort or kind to the proposals put forward by the noble Earl and his association. This requires the more emphasis in view of the possibility that at a future time the Liberal Party—personally I think that the time when they will be in office is very far distant—recognising how impossible it would be for them to carry Home Rule, may adopt some such insidious scheme, but they can never taunt the present Government with anything but repudiation of such a scheme.

I pass on to the attack which has been made on the Solicitor-General by the noble Earl opposite. I think the noble Earl entirely misunderstood the speech of my right hon. friend. Had he carefully read that speech he would have recognised that its point turned on the word "if." The Solicitor-General said simply that, if the statements made about the actions of Sir Antony MacDonnell, which had created such alarm amongst Irish Unionists, were true, then the conduct of Sir Antony MacDonnell was scandalous. Sir Edward Carson did not assume that the Irish Permanent Under-Secretary would have a policy, not only of his own, but one directly opposed to the Government of which he was an official. Therefore, the Solicitor-General considered it his duty to endeavour to allay the alarm which prevailed in Ireland, and, that being so, he was absolutely justified in making the speech The principal author of the scheme in question, Lord Dunraven, has a quick brain and a very active body, and he always requires some occupation in the recess. At one time it is yacht-racing in America, at another he is evolving some scheme. During the last recess he formulated this scheme. I wonder what his scheme will be next autumn. At any rate, I can say this with regard to the present scheme, that hardly twenty Unionists in Ireland view it with approval.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: My Lords, if I am in order I should like to supply one omission. The noble Marquess opposite challenged me particularly as to the extent to which the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland was aware of Sir Antony MacDonnell's action. Lord Dudley anticipated that that question might be asked, and he has authorised me to say that he was aware that Sir Antony MacDonnell was helping Lord Dunraven, and that he discussed the reforms suggested in the noble Earl's scheme on several occasions with the Under-Secretary. He adds that he did not think that Sir Antony MacDonnell was exceeding his functions, because, in the first place, he knew that under the terms of his appointment his position differed from that of an ordinary Under-Secretary; and, secondly, that on two previous occasions—the Land Conference and the University question—Sir Antony MacDonnell had been in close communication with Lord Dunraven.

House adjourned at ten minutes before Seven o'clock to Monday next, a quarter before Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 17th February, 1905.

The House met at Twelve of the Clock.

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES, CONGESTED DISTRICTS, AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.

Petition from Lancashire, for continuance; to lie upon the Table.

JUVENILE SMOKING.

Petition from Burnley, for legislation; to lie upon the Table.

SUGAR TAX.

Petitions for repeal; from Newport (Mon.) (two); and Salford; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION (IRELAND).

Paper [presented 14th February] to be printed. [No. 34.]

GENERAL LIGHTHOUSE AUTHORITIES, ETC.

Return [presented 14th February] to be printed. [No. 35.]

PUBLIC OFFICES SITE (DUBLIN) ACT, 1903.

Account [presented 14th February] to be printed. [No. 36.]

RAILWAY AND CANAL TRAFFIC ACTS, 1854 TO 1894.

Copy presented, of Sixteenth Annual Report of the Railway and Canal Commission, with Appendix [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF LANCASTER).

Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of the County Palatine of Lancaster, dividing the Chorley Parliamentary Division into two convenient Polling Districts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES (REGULATIONS).

Copy presented, of Regulations made with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the management and discipline of the Lancashire Certified Inebriate Reformatory [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

CIVIL SERVICES AND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS (APPROPRIATION ACCOUNTS).

Appropriation Accounts presented, for the year ending 31st March, 1904, together with the Reports of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon and certain Reports upon Store Accounts [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 37.]

DUCHY OF LANCASTER.

Accounts presented, for the year ended 31st December, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 38.]

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Copy presented, of Draft Order in Council continuing certain provisions contained in the Order in Council of 6th March, 1902 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 39.]

PAUPERISM (ENGLAND AND WALES) (MONTHLY STATEMENTS).

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 16th February; Mr. Grant Lawson]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 40.]

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS ACT, 1896, AND MOTOR CAR ACT, 1903.

Copy presented, of Order by the Secretary for Scotland prohibiting Motor Car Traffic on certain roads in the county of Midlothian [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS ACT, 1896, AND MOTOR CAR ACT, 1903.

Copy presented, of Order by the Secretary for Scotland prohibiting Motor Car Traffic on special roads in the county of Perth [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS ACT, 1896, AND MOTOR CAR ACT, 1903.

Copy presented, of Order by the Secretary for Scotland prohibiting Motor Car Traffic on a road in the county of Perth [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Friendly Societies, Workmen's Compensation Schemes, Industrial and Provident Societies, and Trade Unions.—Reports of the Chief Registrar for the year ending 31st December, 1904 [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 41.]

Building Societies.—Copy of Tenth Annual Report by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies of the Proceedings of the Registrars under the Building Societies Acts, etc. [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 42.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Resolved, "That this House, at the rising of the House this day, do adjourn till Monday next."—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

NEW WRIT.

For the county of Bute, in the room of the right hon. Andrew Graham Murray, Lord Justice General and Lord President of the Court of Session in Scotland.—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Imperial Exchequer and Cost of Tibet Expedition.

MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): To ask the First Lord of the Treasury, seeing that the expedition to Tibet was determined on partly through Imperial interests and not in the interests of India solely, will the Government consider the expediency of charging the Imperial Exchequer with part of its cost.

(Answered by Mr. A. J. Balfour.) On 13th July, 1904,† the Secretary of State for India informed the hon. Member for West Denbighshire that the Tibetan question was essentially an Indian interest. Under these circumstances it seems neither just nor expedient that the expenditure should fall upon the British Exchequer.

Salary of Secretary of State for India.

MR. WEIR: To ask the First Lord of the Treasury if he will consider the expediency of placing the salary of the Secretary of State for India on the Estimates.

(Answered by Mr. A. J. Balfour.) His Majesty's Government do not propose to take any action in the direction suggested by the hon. Member.

Overtime in Linen Factories.

MR. SHACKLETON (Lancashire, Clitheroe): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department upon what representations he decided to issue the Special Exception (Overtime) Order with regard to the employment of women in the making up of any article of table linen, bed linen, or other household linen, and processes incidental thereto; and whether the Home Office took any steps to inquire what were the views of the workers concerned, either by communicating with the Textile Operatives Society of Ireland, the Belfast Trades Council, or with any other labour organisation in the districts affected by the Order.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers-Douglas.) It was brought to my notice last year that overtime was being worked in certain places in Ireland in the processes referred to, and inquiry showed that the practice had been in existence for many years, that the particular processes were carried on to a large extent in the same places, by the same classes of operatives, and under much the same conditions as other similar processes in which overtime was legal, and that the operatives concerned would strongly object to any interference with the practice. I informed the manufacturers that the practice could not be continued without an Order under the Factory Act; and, on an application being made for such an Order, I caused a draft Order to be published for forty days in accordance with the provisions of the Rules Publication Act. No objections having been sent to me within that period, I decided to make the Order. I may point out that textile workers were not concerned, as the

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxxvii., 1467.

Order applies only to non-textile factories and workshops.

Compensation Allowance for Indian Medical Service in Burmah.

MR. HEMPHILL (Tyrone, N.): To ask the Secretary of State for India whether his attention has been called to a memorial presented over three years ago on behalf of the officers of the Indian Medical Service in Civil employ in Burma, praying for the grant of compensation allowance for the extra expense of serving in that province, on the same footing as such allowance is made to the officers of the public works, telegraph, forest, and postal departments; and whether any steps are about to be taken to grant the prayer of such memorial.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) Officers of the Indian Medical Service in Civil employ in Burma were placed upon the same footing as officers in other departments in respect of local allowance in December, 1903.

Increase of Salary for Strabane Dispensary Doctor.

MR. HEMPHILL: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the recent resolutions of the Board of Guardians of the Strabane Union increasing the salary of Dr. Trimble, the medical officer of the Strabane dispensary district, from £120 to £150 a year, in consideration of his length of service and the heavy duties which he has to discharge; and, if so, whether he can state on what grounds such resolution has been disregarded by the Local Government Board; and whether effect will now be given to same.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The Local Government Board has not disregarded the resolutions. With a view to carrying out the proposal of the guardians the Board suggested that a scale fixing minimum and maximum salaries with interim incremental additions should be formulated and made applicable to the entire dispensary medical staff of the union. The Board consider that this alternative is preferable to increasing individual salaries at irregular intervals. In September last the guardians decided to prepare and submit a scale, which, however, has not yet been received.

Disposal of Site of Duke of York's School.

MR. WHITMORE (Chelsea): To ask the Secretary of State for War whether any decision has been arrived at as to the disposal of the site of the Government's Military School at Chelsea.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The question of the disposal of this site cannot be definitely decided until the provision of accommodation for the school elsewhere is further advanced.

British South Africa Company.

MR. LABOUCHERE (Northampton): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he will inform the House what is the total share capital of the Chartered Company of South Africa; at what price these shares have been respectively issued to the public; what is the amount, if any, of the debentures issued by the company; what is the amount of shares held by the company in other companies or undertakings; what is the monetary amount of interest held by the company in other companies, based upon the value of the shares of such companies at par; and what is the annual amount of the interest guaranteed by the company in respect of other companies or other undertakings.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) Much of the information desired by the hon. Member may be derived from sources which are open to the public, such as the published annual accounts of the company and "Burdett's Official Intelligence." For the rest the Secretary of State would be obliged to ask the British South Africa Company for a Return and for permission to publish it, and it would probably save correspondence if the hon. Member would apply to the company direct.

NEW BILLS.

SHIPOWNERS' NEGLIGENCE REMEDIES BILL.

"To enlarge the remedies of persons injured by the negligence of shipowners," presented by Sir Harry Samuel; supported by Mr. Brynmor Jones, Major

Evans-Gordon, Mr. Sydney Buxton, Mr. Hayes Fisher, Mr. Ernest Gray, Mr. Jacoby, Sir Ernest Flower, Mr. Marks, Sir Albert Rollit, and Mr. Harold Reckitt; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 3rd, and to be printed. [Bill 1.]

TRADES UNIONS AND TRADE DISPUTES BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Trades Unions and Trade Disputes," presented by Mr. Whittaker; supported by Mr. Henderson, Mr. Bell, Mr. Shackleton, Mr. Beaumont, Mr. Johnson, Mr. John Burns, Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Runciman, Mr. Paulton, and Mr. Fenwick; to be read a second time upon Friday, 10th March, and to be printed. [Bill 2.]

TOWN TENANTS (IRELAND) BILL.

"To improve the position of Tenants in Towns in Ireland," presented by Mr. Patrick O'Brien; supported by Mr. John Redmond, Mr. J. F. X. O'Brien, Mr. Dillon, Mr. Joseph Devlin, Mr. Clancy, Mr. Field, Mr. MacVeagh, Mr. Mooney, and Mr. Charles Devlin; to be read a second time upon Friday, 24th March, and to be printed. [Bill 3.]

COAL MINES EMPLOYMENT BILL.

"To amend the provisions of the Coal Mines Regulation Acts which relate to Employment," presented by Mr. Jacoby; supported by Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. William Abraham (Rhondda), Mr. Keir Hardie, Mr. Thomas Bayley, Mr. Joseph Walton, Mr. Parrott, Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Thomas Richards, Sir Joseph Leese, and Mr. Norman; to be read a second time upon Friday, 17th March, and to be printed. [Bill 4.]

COAL MINES (WEIGHING OF MINERALS) BILL.

"To amend the provisions of The Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, which relate to the Weighing of Minerals," presented by Mr. Compton Rickett; supported by Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. William Abraham, Mr. Caldwell, Mr. Haldane, Sir William Holland, Mr. Warner, Mr. Cremer, Mr. Hatch, and Mr. Parrott; to be read a second time upon Friday, March 31st, and to be printed. [Bill 5.]

MARRIAGE WITH A DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister," presented by Colonel Lockwood; supported by Sir William Gurdon, Sir Gilbert Parker, Mr. Broadhurst, Mr. Burt, Colonel Denny, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, Mr. Hambro, Sir Joseph Leese, Mr. David MacIver, and Sir Barrington Simeon; to be read a second time upon Friday, 7th April, and to be printed. [Bill 6.]

LAND VALUES (ASSESSMENT AND RATING) BILL.

"To provide for the separate Assessment and Rating of Land Values," presented by Sir John Brunner; supported by Mr. Trevelyan, Mr. Bell, Mr. Charles Douglas, Mr. William Jones, Mr. Lloyd-George, Mr. McCrae, Dr. Macnamara, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. J. H. Whitley, and Mr. Watson Rutherford; to be read a second time upon Friday, 14th April, and to be printed. [Bill 7.]

LIQUOR TRAFFIC LOCAL VETO (SCOTLAND) BILL.

"To give the ratepayers a direct veto on the Liquor Traffic in their respective areas in Scotland," presented by Mr. Hunter Craig; supported by Mr. Asher, Mr. Black, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Cameron Corbett, Mr. Crombie, Sir William Dunn, Dr. Farquharson, Mr. John Hope, Mr. Robert Wallace, and Mr. Eugene Wason; to be read a second time upon Friday, 5th May, and to be printed. [Bill 8.]

VEHICLES LIGHTS BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to lights upon vehicles on highways," presented by Mr. Bigwood; to be read a second time upon Friday, 12th May, and to be printed. [Bill 9.]

LAND VALUES TAXATION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

"To provide for the taxation for local purposes of Land Values in burghs in Scotland," presented by Mr. Ainsworth; supported by Mr. Black, Mr. Caldwell, Mr. Hunter Craig, Mr. Dalziel, Mr. Findlay, and Mr. J. D. Hope; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th May, and to be printed. [Bill 10.]

CANALS BILL.

"To establish public trusts under one control, with power to acquire, develop, extend, and administer the Canals and inland navigations of the United Kingdom, and to exercise all powers and authorities conducive or ancillary thereto," presented by Mr. Barran; supported by Sir John Brunner, Sir William Tomlinson, Sir William Holland, Sir Alfred Hickman, Mr. Channing, Mr. Platt-Higgins, Mr. Crombie, Mr. Kerr, Mr. Field, Mr. Trevelyan, Mr. McArthur, and Mr. Alexander Cross; to be read a second time upon Friday, 26th May, and to be printed. [Bill 11.]

PLURAL VOTING BILL.

"To prevent Plural Voting at Parliamentary elections," presented by Mr. Soames; supported by Mr. Harcourt, Mr. Henderson, Dr. Hutchinson, Mr. J. A. Pease, Mr. Price, Mr. Runciman, Mr. Shackleton, and Sir Edward Strachey; to be read a second time upon Friday, 2nd June, and to be printed. [Bill 12.]

WOMEN'S ENFRANCHISEMENT BILL.

"To enable women to vote at Parliamentary elections," presented by Mr. Slack; supported by Colonel Denny, Mr. Shackleton, Mr. Emmott, Mr. Nannetti, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. George Whiteley, and Mr. Keir Hardie; to be read a second time upon Friday, 12th May, and to be printed. [Bill 13.]

LOCAL AUTHORITIES (QUALIFICATION OF WOMEN) BILL.

"To enable women to be elected and act as members of county and borough councils and metropolitan borough councils," presented by Dr. Shipman; supported by Mr. Channing, Sir Richard Jebb, Mr. Henry Hobhouse, Mr. Emmott, Captain Norton, Mr. Bousfield, Mr. Yerburgh, Mr. Crooks, Sir Henry Kimber, Mr. Lough, and Mr. John Burns; to be read a second time upon Friday, 31st March, and to be printed. [Bill 14.]

PRIVATE LEGISLATION PROCEDURE (WALES) BILL.

"To provide for improving and extending the procedure for obtaining Parliamentary powers by way of Provisional Orders in matters relating to Wales," presented by Mr. Vaughan-Davies; supported by Sir Alfred Thomas, Mr. Brynmor-Jones, Mr. Osmond Williams, and Mr. Herbert Roberts; to be read a second time upon Friday, 5th May, and to be printed. [Bill 15.]

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS (SUNDAY) BILL.

"To prohibit the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday," presented by Mr. Perks; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. Cameron, Sir Frederick Mappin, Mr. Fenwick, Mr. Charles Wilson, and Mr. John Wilson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 26th May, and to be printed. [Bill 16.]

COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE TO CROPS BILL.

"To give compensation for damage by fires caused by sparks or cinders from railway engines," presented by Mr. Mount; supported by Sir Edward Strachey, Mr. Spear, Mr. Munro Ferguson, Mr. Hudson, Mr. Courtenay Warner, and Mr. Gardner; to be read a second time upon Friday, 3rd March, and to be printed. [Bill 17.]

DUBLIN POLICE ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Dublin Police Acts," presented by Mr. Clancy; supported by Mr. Harrington, Mr. Nannetti, Mr. Field, Mr. Mooney, and Mr. Waldron; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th May, and to be printed. [Bill 18.]

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Local Government (Ireland) Acts," presented by Mr. Mooney; supported by Mr. Clancy, Mr. Roche, Mr. McHugh, Mr. Kilbride, Mr. Hayden, Mr. J. P. Farrell, and Mr. Conor O'Kelly; to be read a second time upon Friday, 2nd June, and to be printed. [Bill 19.]

SMALL HOLDINGS BILL.

"To further facilitate the provision of Small Holdings," presented by Mr. Channing; supported by Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Herbert Samuel, Mr. Price, Mr. Bright, Mr. Lyell, Dr. Hutchinson, Mr. George White, and Mr. Slack; to be read a second time upon Friday, 24th March, and to be printed. [Bill 20.]

LAND DRAINAGE AND SEWERS BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the drainage of Land for Agricultural Purposes and the Law of Sewers," presented by Mr. Harold Reckitt; supported by Mr. Seymour Ormsby-Gore, Mr. Lambert, and Mr. Perks; to be read a second time upon Friday, 31st March, and to be printed. [Bill 21.]

CATHOLIC DISABILITIES REMOVAL BILL.

"To remove certain disabilities affecting Catholics," presented by Mr. MacVeagh; supported by Mr. Kilbride, Mr. Patrick O'Brien, Mr. Sheehy, Mr. Moony, Mr. McKean, Mr. Vincent Kennedy, Mr. Waldron, Mr. Delany, and Mr. Boland; to be read a second time upon Friday, 2nd June, and to be printed. [Bill 22.]

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SATURDAYS (IRELAND) BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the sale of Intoxicating Liquors in Ireland on Saturdays, and for other purposes connected therewith," presented by Mr. Sloan; supported by Sir James Haslett, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. Jordan, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. T. L. Corbett, Mr. Wood, and Mr. O'Shaughnessy; to be read a second time upon Friday, 7th April, and to be printed. [Bill 23.]

HOUSE-LETTING (SCOTLAND) BILL.

"To amend the system of House-letting in the burghs of Scotland," presented by Mr. Alexander Cross; supported by Sir John Leng, Mr. Hunter Craig, Colonel Bain, and Mr. T. W. Russell; to be read a second time upon Friday next, and to be printed. [Bill 24.]

CHURCH DISCIPLINE BILL.

"To deal with Church Discipline," presented by Mr. Austin Taylor; supported by Mr. William Lawrence, Mr. Charles McArthur, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. David MacIver, Mr. W. W. Rutherford, Mr. Channing, and Major Seely; to be read a second time upon Friday, 12th May, and to be printed. [Bill 25.]

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS (PERSONS IN CHARGE) BILL.

"To grant certificates to Persons in Charge of Steam Engines and Boilers," presented by Mr. Joseph Walton; supported by Mr. John Wilson, Mr. Fenwick, Mr. Cameron, Mr. Parrott, Mr. Jacoby, Mr. Levy, Mr. Shackleton, Mr. John Johnson, and Mr. Arthur Henderson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 26th May, and to be printed. [Bill 26.]

LEASEHOLD ENFRANCHISEMENT BILL.

"To provide for the Enfranchisement of Leaseholds," presented by General Laurie; supported by Mr. Spear, Mr. Cohen, Sir George Fardell, and Mr. Louis Sinclair; to be read a second time upon Friday, 7th April, and to be printed. [Bill 27.]

MEDICAL ACT (1886) AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend The Medical Act, 1886," presented by General Laurie; supported by Sir Walter Foster, Sir John Tuke, Mr. Rothschild, Sir Howard Vincent, Mr. Middlemore, and Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree; to be read a second time upon Friday, 14th April, and to be printed. [Bill 28.]

COLONIAL MARRIAGES BILL.

"To legalise certain Colonial Marriages," presented by General Laurie; supported by Mr. Rothschild, Mr. Arthur Stanley, Sir Gilbert Parker, and Captain Jessel; to be read a second time upon Friday, 5th May, and to be printed. [Bill 29.]

CONTEMPT OF COURT (IRELAND) BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to committals for Contempt of Court in Ireland," presented by Mr. Patrick Aloysius McHugh; supported by Mr. O'Dowd, Mr. Conor O'Kelly, Mr. Clancy, Mr. James O'Kelly, and Mr. William McKillop; to be read a second time upon Friday, 2nd June, and to be printed. [Bill 30.]

DRUNKENNESS (IRELAND) BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Drunkenness in Ireland, and for purposes connected therewith," presented by Mr. T. W. Russell; supported by Mr. Hugh Law, Sir James Haslett, Captain Donelan, and Mr. Wood; to be read a second time upon Friday, 31st March, and to be printed. [Bill 31.]

FRANCHISE AND REMOVAL OF WOMEN'S DISABILITIES BILL.

"To establish a single Franchise at all Elections, and thereby to abolish University representation and to remove the disabilities of women," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. Bell, Mr. John Burns, Mr. Keir Hardie, Mr. Atherley-Jones, Dr. Macnamara, Captain Norton, Mr. Shackleton, and Mr. Sheehan; to be read a second time upon Friday, 28th April, and to be printed. [Bill 32.]

WAGES BOARDS BILL.

"To provide for the establishment of Wages Boards," presented by Sir Charles Dilke; supported by Mr. Bill, Mr. John Burns, Mr. McKenna, Mr. Tennant, and Mr. Trevelyan; to be read a second time upon Friday, 28th April, and to be printed. [Bill 33.]

SUNDAY CLOSING (WALES) ACT (1881) AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend The Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881, and to make further provisions respecting the sale of Intoxicating Liquors in Wales and Monmouthshire," presented by Mr. Herbert Roberts; supported by Sir Alfred Thomas, Mr. William Jones, and Mr. Herbert Lewis; to be read a second time upon Friday, 19th May, and to be printed. [Bill 34.]

CHILDREN'S COURTS BILL.

"To establish Children's Courts," presented by Sir Howard Vincent; supported by Mr. Samuel Smith and Sir John Gorst; to be read a second time upon Friday, 3rd March, and to be printed. [Bill 35.]

MERCHANDISE MARKS BILL.

"To amend the sixteenth Section of The Merchandise Marks Act, 1887," presented by Sir Howard Vincent; supported by Mr. Evelyn Cecil, Mr. Middlemore, Sir. Carne Rasch, and Mr. Field; to be read a second time upon Friday, 3rd March, and to be printed. [Bill 36.]

PUBLIC TRUSTEE AND EXECUTOR BILL.

"To provide for the appointment of a Public Trustee and Executor," presented by Sir Howard Vincent; supported by Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. Howard, and Colonel Tufnell; to be read a second time upon Friday, 3rd March, and to be printed. [Bill 37.]

VOTING DISQUALIFICATION (POOR LAW) REMOVAL BILL.

"To prevent the disenfranchisement of persons receiving Poor Law relief," presented by Mr. Schwann; supported by Captain Norton, Mr. John Wilson (Durham), Mr. Churchill, Mr. Kearley, and Mr. Fenwick; to be read a second time upon Friday, 10th March, and to be printed. [Bill 38.]

MUNICIPAL FRANCHISE (COMPANIES) BILL.

"To confer the municipal franchise upon mercantile corporations and companies, and to amend The Municipal Corporations Act, 1882," presented by Sir Albert Rollit; supported by Sir James Woodhouse, Sir Fortescue Flannery, Sir William Holland, Mr. H. C. Richards, Mr. J. Howard, and Captain Jessel; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 39.]

CHURCH ORGANISATION AND DISCIPLINE BILL.

"To repeal certain enactments; to provide for the constitution of churchwardens' councils in England and Wales; to amend the Law relating to institution to benefices, to ecclesiastical suits, and to public worship; and to otherwise make better provision for the organisation and discipline of the Church of England," presented by Lord Hugh Cecil; to be read a second time upon Friday, 17th March, and to be printed. [Bill 40.]

LANDS VALUATION (SCOTLAND) AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend The Lands Valuation (Scotland) Act, 1854," presented by Mr. McCrae; supported by Mr. Bryce, Sir John Leng, Mr. Munro Ferguson, Mr. T. W. Russell, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. John Dewar, and Mr. Robert Wallace; to be read a second time upon Friday, 10th March, and to be printed. [Bill 41.]

PHARMACY BILL.

"To provide for the further regulation of the sale of poisons and the compounding of medical prescriptions, and to amend the Pharmacy Acts, 1852 and 1868," presented by Mr. Lough; supported by Sir Mancherjee Bhownaggree, Mr. Henniker Heaton, Mr. Crooks, Mr. Osmond Williams, Mr. Ellis Griffith, Mr. James Reid, Mr. Munro Ferguson, Mr. Marshall Hall, Mr. Remnant, and Mr. Ernest Gray; to be read a second time upon Friday, 24th March, and to be printed. [Bill 42.]

MILK DEPOTS (LONDON) BILL.

"To allow metropolitan borough councils to establish and maintain Milk Depôts," presented by Mr. Lough; supported by Dr. Shipman, Sir Charles Dilke, Dr. Macnamara, and Mr. J. H. Whitley; to be read a second time upon Friday, 12th May, and to be printed. [Bill 43.]

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

*DR. MACNAMARA (Camberwell, N.) said that last year, when the Transvaal Labour Ordinance was before the House, there were grave misgivings expressed, and not alone by men on one side of the House, lest we might be committing ourselves to a policy which would be fraught with great evil to the future of the Transvaal. To allay this apprehension the Colonial Secretary gave certain assurances, and without them the Ordinance would hardly have been passed. But as the session went on it became painfully clear that these assurances were not being carried out, though no discussion of the subject in the House was possible, because of the appearance on the Order Paper of a very remarkable variety of ingenious blocking Motions. They had consequently to fall back on the unfruitful task of bombarding the Colonial Secretary with questions. He did not think that under the circumstances the right hon. Gentleman would now complain because he had deliberately seized this opportunity of raising the whole question. The first grave apprehension was that, if the Chinese coolies went to the Transvaal unaccompanied by their women-kind, we should be setting up in the heart of our newest colony a cesspit of Oriental immorality. The Bishop of Worcester on that matter wrote a powerful letter to The Times on October 7th last year, in which he said—

> "I am informed by some who appear to speak with knowledge that the transportation of a great number of Chinese to the mines, especially apart from their women-folk, is certain to result in the establishment of demoralisation of a sort which I do not care to characterise more exactly."

The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Rochester and many others in another place expressed pretty much the same view, and in order to meet this anxiety, Lord Onslow gave an assurance that facilities would be offered, in the freest possible way, at the cost of the importer for the passages of the wives and children of the coolies. On February 16th, in the House of Commons, the Colonial Secretary in reference to the arrangement thus foreshadowed said—

> "Manifestly it would be most wrong that they should go without their women-folk. I undertake on behalf of the Government that all the coolies who wish to take their wives and children shall have the opportunity of doing so."

That reassured hon. Members. But what had proved to be the sequel? The right hon. Gentleman gave a Return on January 10th this year which showed that down to October last there were 12,965 coolies on the Rand; on Saturday last there were 27,182; and in a short time there were to be 34,000. Of all these thousands two only had brought their wives with them. He could not accept the excuse that the Government were not to blame, as they had provided all facilities, and he would tell the right hon. Gentleman why. In the first place, in the first draft of the Ordinance of December 5th, 1903, there was provision made for bringing the wives and children of the coolies. In the second draft—that of January 25th, 1904—that provision was dropped out, because, as he suggested, the mineowners looked upon it as an expensive, troublesome, and intolerable nuisance. Then the Bishops began to get apprehensive, and the provision was reinstated, in order, as he suggested, to allay the tender susceptibilities of the Episcopal conscience. He did not believe, however, that the Government, when the reinstatement was made, thought that it was worth the paper it was written upon. The Colonial Secretary would no doubt remember a letter sent to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Wolverhampton from a Chinese missionary, the Rev. Mr. Arnold-Forster, alleging that the recruiters were making no endeavour to inform the coolie that he might bring his wife and children. The Colonial Secretary promised, on August 1st, to send that letter to Lord Milner for his observations. Had these observations reached the right hon. Gentleman?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. LYTTELTON, Warwick and Leamington): Not from Lord Milner himself; but I have had information on the subject.

*DR. MACNAMARA said that the undertaking was given six months ago, and yet no observations from Lord Milner had arrived. Lord Milner had said that he did not care twopence for the opinion of people 6,000 miles away; but it was about time to make him care. He had in his possession a facsimile of the advertisement issued by the recruiting agents of Tientsin. He did not pretend to understand the document, but the translation of it showed that there was no hint of facilities being provided for the coolies taking their wives and children with them. Even the Colonial Secretary and the Archbishop of Canterbury could find no hint of that in the hieroglyphics. He would be interested to know what answer the right hon. Gentleman had to make to the charge that this particular assurance of his had not been carried out. Was the right hon. Gentleman quite easy in his mind when he thought of all these thousands of coolies cooped up together without their women-kind? "concerning whom it would be manifestly most wrong that they should come without their women folk."

Now, the next assurance which he held had not been fulfilled was with reference to the wages paid to the Chinese coolie. When they were discussing the Ordinance, a great many of them expressed the apprehension that the competition of the coolie would be used to make the Kaffir work for less than 2s. a day. But the Colonial Secretary repeatedly denied this. On March 21st the right hon. Gentleman asked whether it would not be a deplorable thing to prevent the coming of a Chinaman who is anxious and willing to work, and who would receive in the Transvaal "at least 2s. a day." They were very pleased to hear that, and said "Put it in the Ordinance," to which the right hon. Gentleman replied—

> "I do not consider it necessary or desirable to specify a minimum wage, but I have no fear that the standard of wages of the Chinese will be lower than that of the Kaffir labourers."

That was perfectly clear and unmistakable. The coolie was to have at least 2s. a day, and he was not to be paid a lower wage than the Kaffir. What was the sequel? On June 22nd, after the Ordinance was passed, the right hon. Gentleman admitted that, while the minimum wage of the Kaffir was 45s. a month, that of the Chinese labourer was 30s. a month; but he added that after the first six months the minimum was to be increased from 30s. to 45s. a month. The six months had expired, but the minimum still remained at 1s. a day. In that matter he submitted a grave charge rested against the Government for having got this Ordinance by the assurance that the coolie would not undercut the Kaffir and would get at least 2s. per day.

The third point to which he had to refer had reference to the nature of the work which the coolie had to do on the Rand. They were assured in the House any number of times that the coolie was to be engaged wholly and exclusively on unskilled labour. These were the precise words of the Colonial Secretary on May 2nd—

> "The indentured Chinese are restricted under the Ordinance to unskilled work in the mines, such as is usually performed by natives. This restriction would appear to exclude the Chinese from work of the class in which white men have hitherto been engaged."

On June 8th the right hon. Gentleman said that Section 9a of the Ordinance read in conjunction with the first schedule, made it clear that Asiatics were not excluded from acting as overseers, and that the actual gangers would probably be Chinese. On that point he desired to make a serious complaint. Before the Ordinance, under no circumstances were Asiatics to touch anything but unskilled work or act as overseers; immediately the Ordinance had been sanctioned the announcement was made that they could be overseers and gangers—positions which before the Ordinance were specially reserved for the white men. Then there was the assurance, without which the Ordinance would probably never have been passed, that the coming of the coolie would mean a large increase in the opportunities of employment for white men. Lord Milner stated in a letter that every ten Chinamen introduced would mean employment in mining operations for one more white man, and there was not a Unionist platform last year on which that declaration was not repeated. What were the facts? There had been an increase of white labour to the extent of 1,600 or 1,700 since the introduction of the coolie, but they had been engaged, as the Colonial Secretary admitted, not in mining work, but in the building of compounds and other incidental occupations which would disappear almost immediately. Moreover, the increase in the number of white men employed was going on at a rapidly diminishing rate, and would soon be extinguished. In a month, at the end of 1904, there were ninety-two additional white men employed on the Rand, while the number of coolies introduced during the same period was 5,583, or one white man, not for every ten, but for every sixty Chinamen, and there was no assurance that even those white men had been employed in mining operations. Never was a greater fraud perpetrated upon the British public than when they were assured that the introduction of the coolie would mean increased opportunities for the permanent employment of white men in the mining industry. These were four specific points as to which he would be glad to hear the right hon. Gentleman's reply. Last year if any hon. Member ventured to whisper the echo of a doubt that all would be well, the Colonial Secretary waxed very indignant indeed, laying his hand upon his heart, and soundly rating his opponents for doubting the word of a British Minister. In fact, there was just a little too much "hand-upon-the-heart" about the Colonial Secretary's attitude. On February 22nd last year, the right hon. Gentleman specifically stated—

> "I have given pledges in this House, a breach of which, if I should be so base as to depart from them, can be visited on me by this as well as by that side of the House, with the condemnation which I shall be worthy to receive if I do break them."

He did not doubt the right hon. Gentleman's word or his honour; what he doubted was his capacity to make the Rand magnates carry out his pledges. The Colonial Secretary was an English gentleman and a first-class sportsman, and he must often have thought that the way in which his pledges had been handled was not precisely "cricket." The right hon. Gentleman had one of two things to do—either to make the Rand magnates carry out the pledges given to the House or to resign his office as Colonial Secretary. He further complained that no attempt had been made to test the opinion of the Transvaal on the question of the introduction of coolies. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham took up an absolutely correct attitude on this point when, in a letter on April 21st last year, he wrote—

> "You are aware that while I was Colonial Secretary I laid down the principle on which I proposed to deal with the question—viz., to offer no opposition on the part of the Imperial Government to the employment of Asiatic labour if it were clearly shown that such employment was desired by the great majority of the white inhabitants of the two Colonies. . . . I assume that the Government have satisfied themselves that the condition I laid down is now fulfilled, and that the feeling of the white inhabitants is strongly in favour of the proposed employment."

That assumption was the absolute reverse of the fact. The present Colonial Secretary had flatly departed from the policy laid down by his predecessor. The Prime Minister himself had taken up a most amazing position on this point. In a letter to the electors of Chertsey, on July 5th last year, the right hon. Gentleman stated—

> "All fair-minded men will remember that these labourers, who came willingly on the terms offered to them, have been introduced into the Transvaal at the express wish of the white population."

Allowance had to be made for everybody at election times, but this suggestion of the Prime Minister was what the Americans call "rather steep." What evidence was there of the "express wish of the white population?" The Government would doubtless answer that the Legislative Council, by twenty-two to four, adopted the Ordinance. But who were the Legislative Council? That body consisted of twenty-seven persons, not one of whom was elected, there being thirteen Government officials and fourteen selected outsiders, and to say that the act of such a body represented "the express wish of the white population of the Transvaal" was the climax of effrontery. But there was some expression of the wish of the white people. First of all there were the Boers. ["Oh."] The Boers were now British subjects, and their opinion was surely worth some consideration. Two hundred delegates attended an important Congress at Pretoria on May 23rd, and unanimously passed the following resolution—

> "This meeting expresses its approval of the cable sent to the Secretary of State for the Colonies by the Boer leaders with reference to the importation of Chinese labourers for the mines, and expresses the feeling of the Boer population that [this step is a very dangerous one, which should not, under any circumstances, be taken without the constitutional approval of the people of the Transvaal."

The other section of the white population was the British, and at a congress in April last, British working-class representatives unanimously resolved—

> "That this council, comprising the whole of the trade unions of the Rand, carpenters' engineers, engine-drivers, typographical union, plasterers, bricklayers, boiler-makers, miners, bakers, masons, confectioners, shop-assistants, musicians, do hereby protest against the importation of Asiatics, being firmly convinced that it will ultimately result in a reduction of white labour, and thereby be detrimental to the State."

And the conviction of these men had been amply confirmed by the figures officially supplied. He was surprised that they were able to hold that meeting without being smashed up. They had all heard of that historic meeting in the Wanderers' Hall, Johannesburg, in favour of a referendum, which was smashed up by ruffians hired for the purpose at 15s. a time. Referring to this incident the South African Guardian said—

> "The day following the meeting at the Wanderers, a scene was witnessed in Johannesburg the like of which it may be safely said has never occurred before in a British colony. This was the paying off of the men engaged to attend the meeting to prevent Mr. Quinn getting a hearing. This was done in the building at the corner of two streets. On Friday afternoon hundreds of people congregated in front of the building, the crowd stretching right across the road. At the entrance to the room and standing in the street were two constables to preserve order in the admission of applicants, one by one, for the 15s., the pay of the night. The doorkeeper stood inside, and, with the door slightly ajar, took the name of each man, and admission was not granted until an inspection had been made of the register inside, which had been signed the day previously. Amongst the onlookers exclamations of surprise at the utter shamelessness of the proceedings were heard on every side."

If the Colonial Secretary would like to go further into this matter he could let him see a photographic reproduction showing those gentlemen receiving their 15s. for having broken up that meeting. Then there had been expressions of opinion from Australia. Lord Northcote, the Governor-General of Australia, had forwarded to the Government the following Resolution passed in both branches of the Federal Legislature—

> "That this House records its grave objection to the introduction of Chinese labour into the Transvaal until a referendum of the white population of the colony has been taken on the subject, or responsible government is granted."

The Colonial Secretary's reply to that was curious—"The Government adhered to the policy of treating the Transvaal as a self-governing colony."

MR. LYTTELTON: I do not think that is an accurate account of what I said, and I should prefer the hon. Member to quote the words from my telegram.

*DR. MACNAMARA said as far as he could remember it was to that effect. The Colonial Secretary appeared in this instance to have broken all records by his classic official evasion. With regard to the opinion of Australia Mr. Deakin, the Federal Parliament Premier, made a very important statement. He said—

> "Australia had been told that the war was a miner's war, but not for Chinese miners; a war for the franchise, but not for Chinese franchise. The truth, if it had been told' would have presented a very different aspect, and would have made a very different appeal to Australia."

Associated with Mr. Deakin was the Leader of the Opposition in the Federal Parliament, Mr. Reid, who said—

> "The Chinese stimulant to Empire-building is peculiarly offensive to Australian sentiment. It lowers the best Imperial standards to put capitalistic interests before colonising ideals. Slow progress under better auspices is best."

Next came the New Zealand Legislature, which had made urgent representations to the home Government in the following terms—

> "The Government of New Zealand foresees grave perils, racial, social, political, and sanitary, in the introduction of coolies."

The Ministers of Cape Colony said that the importation of Chinese—

> "Will greatly hamper, if not altogether prevent, the federation of South African Colonies. They plead for patience as the wise means of solution, and are assured that native labour in plenty will be forthcoming if a fair wage be offered and considerate treatment in the way of housing and food be accorded."

And all this time, while the Government were flouting colonial opinion upon this question, the ex-Colonial Secretary was going about the country on a pilgrimage as the missionary of Empire, insisting that they must, upon another question now before the country, respect colonial opinion. When the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham started his fiscal campaign in 1903 at Glasgow, he said—

> "Our children are calling to us. With them rests, as with us, the maintenance of the traditions of which we are proud—the continuance of the glorious history of our past. They invite you to co-operate with them. They stretch their hands to you across the seas. Will you not grasp them? Will you not do all in your power to make this vision real and hand down undiminished and untarnished the sceptre of that great dominion, and the recollection of that glorious past which we have received as an inheritance, due to the courage, the tenacity, and the self-sacrifice of our ancestors through many generations."

This flamboyant exhortation was all very fine, but they had to forget altogether the coolie on the Rand while they were saying it. They had also got to forget those appeals from the Colonies in protest against the introduction of Chinese labour to which they had to turn a deaf ear of cynical disregard. The ex-Colonial Secretary, in a speech at Birmingham on November 4th, said:—

> "For my part I say when I remember how the Colonies responded to our appeal, when I remember how when we were in stress and difficulty they sent us men in thousands and tens of thousands, how they paid money; when I remember how, when every one's hand seemed raised against us, we relied and rested on the moral support that we had from these great growing States across the sea—I for one am not prepared to treat their proposals with contempt."

As a Colonial born he agreed with that, for they had no right to treat proposals from the Colonies with contempt; but if that was good enough in regard to imaginary offers relating to trade preference, it was equally good in respect of the protests from the Colonies in regard to the shameful sequel to a war in which our brothers across the sea freely and even eagerly spent their blood and treasure. He begged to move.

*MR. HERBERT SAMUEL (Yorkshire, Cleveland), in seconding the Motion, said that in some quarters this question appeared to be regarded as a mere Party agitation on the part of the Opposition with no reality or substance in it, as a question taken up solely in order to win support in the constituencies. He assured the House that that was not so, for many of them felt a profound conviction that the introduction of Chinese labour under the conditions in which it had been introduced in the Transvaal was unnecessary for the economic development of that country, was injurious to British labour, opposed to the future well-being of South Africa, and deleterious to those principles of liberty to which this nation had long been profoundly attached. Would those who regarded this merely as a Party agitation explain why our great Colonies, who were far removed from any such considerations, had expressed opposition to the introduction of Chinese labour even more emphatically than it had been expressed in this country? They had now had six months experience of Chinese labour. 27,000 coolies had been introduced into the Transvaal and another 7,500 were upon the sea bound for the Transvaal mines. He thought the time had now come when they could review the results of this experiment. He had heard no complaints with regard to the feeding and housing of the Chinese coolies, and they seemed to be in this respect well treated; but there was still the essential evil, the essential blot upon the whole scheme, that this was an attempt to keep in isolation and subordination a vast body of men in the midst of the surrounding population. They had this helot community established in the midst of the surrounding white and black population on conditions degrading to those who suffered them, and still more degrading to those who inflicted them. Never in the history of the world had there been such an attempt as this to keep isolated and separated from the rest of the community a vast body of tens of thousands of labourers.

The Colonial Secretary said that he had done no more in this matter than previous Liberal Governments had done in the case of the West Indies. The employment of coolies in the West Indies was essentially different in principle to that of the Chinese coolies in the Transvaal, because there had never been any attempt to isolate them from the rest of the community. Nor were they limited to unskilled labour. The great majority of Indian coolies in the West Indies ultimately settled in the country—to the extent of about 62 per cent., and they were regarded as most valuable members of the community. This experiment of keeping 30,000 men within a ring fence was bound to break down. It was an impossible undertaking. There had been numerous cases of riots as a result of the conditions under which the Chinese labourers were confined. According to Mr. Harold Strange, the Chairman of the Transvaal Chamber of Mines, there were in January last 168 coolies in jail, twenty-one had deserted and 685 had died or had been sent back again to China. It was reported that these riots had occurred largely on account of conflicts between the Kaffirs and Chinese, because the Kaffirs were defending their women-folk from interference by the coolies. Last night the Prime Minister deprecated cross-examination across the floor of the House, but, nevertheless, he should like to ask a single question, which he thought would be considered pertinent and legitimate. Did the right hon. Gentleman still adhere to the view that it would be manifestly most wrong that they should go without their women-folk?

MR. LYTTELTON: I wish to point out that what I said is perfectly clear if the whole sentence is read. With the context the sentence makes it perfectly clear. I said it would be wrong for the coolies to go without their wives if they wished their wives. That is perfectly clear from the pledge I gave immediately afterwards.

SIR JOHN BRUNNER (Cheshire, Northwich): Is it quite right to desert their wives?

MR. LYTTELTON: I am answering the question of the hon. Member. I say that the context of the sentence which he read shows that what I said was that it was wrong that the coolies should go there without their wives if they desired to bring them. I gave pledges that they should have the opportunity, and full opportunity, of bringing them. I asked hon. Members whom I was addressing afterwards if they could make any suggestion whereby that facility could be increased. From that day to this I have heard none. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Forest of Dean showed that he understood the pledge which was given in that sentence.

*MR. HERBERT SAMUEL said he had not the whole of the speech of the right hon. Gentleman in his hand, but he had one or two sentences which came before the one he had quoted. The right hon. Gentleman said—

> "I entirely agree that the provisions for the reception and accommodation of the wives and families of these people should be clearly made. We were advised in this matter by men the most experienced in the whole Empire on the subject of Chinese labour. We were advised that the coolies would not go without their women-folk. Manifestly it would be most wrong that they should go without their women-folk. I undertake that if they wish to bring their wives and families they shall be allowed to do so. ["All of them?"] All of them . . . I undertake, on behalf of the Government, that all the coolies who desire to bring their wives and families shall have the opportunity to do so."

He did not know what was in the mind of the right hon. Gentleman, but he had always thought until this moment, and he thought the majority of the Members of the House were of the same opinion, that he regarded it on moral grounds objectionable that these Chinese should be herded together in large celibate communities on account of which certain practices were notorious. He had had the benefit of the advice of a man who was equal as an authority to any of those the right hon. Gentleman had consulted. This man, who had been for many years the Protector of the Chinese in the Straits Settlements, assured him that the Chinese would not take their women-folk with them when they went temporarily, and the result was that in the Malay Peninsula there occurred the abhorrent evils which they thought must occur in South Africa. That was one of the grounds on which hon. Members on his side of the House had opposed the introduction of Chinese labour in South Africa. The right hon. Gentleman said that it would be manifestly most wrong that the Chinese should go there without their women-folk. He would ask the right hon. Gentleman what steps he now proposed to take to stop what was a manifest wrong.

There was a second result which was important. In the six months from June to December there were 1,600 more white workmen employed on the Transvaal mines. His hon. friend had pointed out on the authority of an answer which the right hon. Gentleman gave to a Question that a proportion, but he did not know how large a proportion, of these men were employed, not as miners, but as builders in providing accommodation for the Chinese, who were being imported at the rate of 5,000 or 6,000 a month. His hon. friend had pointed out that these white workmen were rapidly decreasing, and that while in December 5,500 Chinese arrived, only ninety-two additional whites were employed. The right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary, and those who supported him, said that the effect of Chinese labour was to increase the number of white workmen. They on the other hand said that the effect of Chinese labour was to reduce the labour of the whites. Contradictory as it might seem, both these statements might be true, and both were true. We were increasing the number of supervisors, but we were excluding the labourers. We were increasing the employment of white men by hundreds, but shutting them out by thousands. A great deal turned on the question whether or not whites would work in the mines as unskilled labourers. That was a matter of controversy on the platforms throughout the country, and hon. Gentlemen opposite based their case on the statement that white men would not work in the Transvaal mines. On February 16th last year the Colonial Secretary said—

"It is, I think, more than unfortunate, but still an undoubted fact, that white men in Africa will not do the work which black men do."

Again and again they had proof that white men actually did this work in South Africa, not indeed side by side and in the same gangs with the Kaffirs or Chinese. No one had ever suggested that. The hon. Member for Chester had made an offer to his constituents that he would send out a certain number of selected men if they would undertake to work side by side in the Transvaal mines with Kaffir labourers. That offer was entirely beside the mark.

*MR. YERBURGH (Chester) said one reason he made the offer was because his statement that white men would not work side by side with Kaffirs was challenged.

*MR. HERBERT SAMUEL said the offer made by the hon. Member had fallen through, for local reasons, but the hon. Member was quite right in his contention that whites and blacks would not work together. No one had proposed that as a solution of the Transvaal Labour problem. But either in the mines or on the surface whites and blacks would work separately at unskilled labour. In his report for 1903, the Government mining engineer said—

> "In the majority of the crushing mills the native has been entirely replaced by the European."

If white men would not do black men's work, how did the right hon. Gentleman explain the fact that the black men had been replaced by the white men? On June 16th last the Colonial Secretary stated, in reply to a Question—

> "Lord Milner has furnished me with a statement showing that the number of whites employed in the Witwatersrand Gold Mines on unskilled labour, which prior to the war was performed by Kaffirs, is 998."

If, again, white men could not be got to do Kaffir work, how was it that there were 998 so employed in June last? They might say that it was uneconomical to employ white men, or that it was undesirable for social or political reasons. That was a question of argument. But as to the white men being unwilling to do work which black men do was a question of fact and not of argument, and the statement of the right hon. Gentleman had been absolutely disproved. These labourers had been rapidly displaced since the Chinese went there. In the Village Main Reef Mine, of which Mr. Creswell had been manager, white men were employed, and after Mr. Creswell was removed they were even increased; but as soon as Chinese were introduced in the Simmer and Jack Mine the blacks were sent from there to the Main Reef Mine, and the white men were dismissed. He had here a letter in which Mr. Strickland, the secretary of the Witwatersrand Trades and Labour Council, said—

> "These 200 boys were engaged by the Village Main Reef, and the two contractors are now lashing and tramming certain drives of the V.M.R. on contract with their boys, and at least 140 white men have been discharged. I interviewed the men, some young fellows who had fought through the war. They had hoped to have saved sufficient to pay their passage home. Now all they saw before them was the same hopeless struggle for work, and destitution staring them in the face. It was a most depressing interview. Others were Dutchmen, mostly living at Vrededorp. One old man named Steyn had been successful in getting the job and he had taken a part on contract, the whole male portion of his family were working with him and making a living, and I feel safe in saying that at least 1,000 members of the community have been deprived of their only hope of sustenance by the shifting of contract natives from one mine owing to the introduction of Chinese."

Mr. Herbert Samuel.

Mr. Albu, one of the leaders of the mining industry, speaking at Johannesburg in December, at a meeting of the Rand Collieries Gold Mining Company, said—

> "After careful calculation, the general manager of the Van Ryn mine has reported to me that with 2,650 coolies, which allows 12 per cent. for idlers and contingencies, he will be able to operate the whole 160 stamps, crush 24,000 tons per month, sort 25 per cent., and do the whole of the mining, stoping, and developing with hand labour, discarding all machine drills."

But hand labour was the work of the coolies, the machine drills gave employment to the whites.

Mr. Gillam, Chairman of the Van Ryn Company, speaking in London on 18th January last, said—

> "When the Chinese had become thoroughly proficient workmen it was the intention of the management to resort more and more to hand drilling."

There had been two courses open to the Rand mining industry, either to become more and more dependent on high-grade labour and high-grade methods as in the United States and in Western Australia, or to depend on low-grade labour and low-grade and primitive methods. The mineowners had always been determined to rely on the latter, not, he believed, for economic reasons, but for political reasons. They feared the power of the white man through his trade union and through his vote. According to an answer given by the Colonial Secretary to a Question, the ratio of white men per 1,000 coloured labourers employed was in 1897, 137; in 1898, 130; in 1899, 119; in 1902 after the war, 250; and in 1903, 174. In the first half of 1904 the figure was fairly stationary. There was a scarcity of labour in the middle of the year. The ratio per thousand in January was 170; February, 164; March, 159; April, 161; May, 169; June, 177; July, 183; August, 183. Then the Chinese began to come in; September, 170; October, 158; November, 150; December, 143. So that there had been an exceedingly rapid decline. The right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary had always proceeded on the theory that the amount of white labour was proportioned to the amount of coloured labour—that the more coloured labour there was employed the more white labour would be engaged, and that the scarcer the coloured labour the smaller would be the proportion of white labour employed. Now these facts proved precisely the contrary — that the more plentiful the coloured labour the smaller was the proportion of white labour employed. The outcome of all this was very obvious. There was in London an Emigrants' Information Bureau, which was under the Colonial Office, and the officials provided very reliable information to intending emigrants. In their last circular, issued in January, they said, in regard to the Transvaal—that was six months after the Chinese had been introduced there, and when there were 23,000 in the country, which ought on the Colonial Secretary's theory to have had a considerable effect on white employment. They said—

> "There is a considerable amount of distress in the Transvaal, both in the towns and in the country districts, owing to the general want of employment, so that persons are warned against going there at the present time in search of work. There is no demand for white miners, of whom there are large numbers on the spot without work."

That was the result of the Chinese Ordinance so far as the white miners were concerned. What was the result to the mineowners? He had been looking at the price of the shares of some of the mining companies in the Transvaal. He had not taken all, for they were very numerous; but he had taken the twelve largest, all those with a subscribed capital of over £1,000,000. He had taken the price of the shares of these companies at the end of the last half year, December 31st, and at the end of the previous half year, June 30th. Of the twelve companies, the shares of eleven of them had risen as the result mainly, of course, of the introduction of Chinese. The increase in value of the shares of all twelve in six months was £14,699,000, and that was on a total subscribed capital of £22,000,000. Well, it was worth taking a great deal of trouble to make a profit of £14,699,000 in six months. It was worth while conducting a prolonged political agitation for that. It was worth while packing a good many meetings on the Rand, and taking trouble to arrange petitions. It was worth while dismissing a good many mine managers and newspaper editors for a profit of £14,000,000.

He wished to refer very briefly to one other point. They had said from the very beginning that it would be possible to get a largely increased supply of Kaffir labourers if they were properly treated and cared for. He thought that all credit should be given to the Transvaal mining industry for the fact that the death-rate had recently very largely decreased. It was a matter for gratification that while in the first eight months of 1903 the death-rate was 72 per thousand, the death-rate in the first eight months of 1904 was 40 per thousand, or a reduction of 32 per thousand in one year. It was, indeed, still far too high. Lord Harris, Chairman of the Consolidated Gold Fields, had claimed that the death-rate was not now excessive, for that at Cape Town among the coloured people it was 50 per thousand; but he forgot that that included all the coloured people in the Cape—infants and aged, while the Transvaal figures only included able-bodied men in the prime of life engaged for six or twelve months at a time. This reduction had been achieved by better treatment, better feeding, and by not allowing the coloured people who arrived in a weakly state to work in the mines until they were fit. But why had not these measures been taken long before? It was not until the debates took place in this House, not until Lord Milner had found that the death-rate was the "weakest point in our armour." There had been a reduction of 30 per thousand amongst the 100,000 employed; that was, 3,000 lives had been saved. He thought that those of them who had taken a part in this matter ought to feel some satisfaction at the result. The reporter's gallery in the House of Commons was a wonderful sounding board; it enabled a whisper to be heard all over the world. The discussions in that House had had their effect in the compounds on the Rand. They who were interested in this matter had had to meet with many unfair attacks; they had been accused of false sentimentality, of exaggerating evils, of doing injustice to their own fellow-countrymen in the Transvaal. Yes; but they were right.

They said that the death-rate was unnecessarily high, and the event had proved it. In the consciousness that they had done some little to save 3,000 lives by their action last year they had their reward.

Now, what was to be done with the Chinese now in the Transvaal? The Government started with the policy that the Transvaal should be treated as a self-governing colony and that the opinion of the colony should decide the matter. That policy—the Colonial Secretary would contradict him if he was wrong—had been frankly abandoned. The right hon. Gentleman said he had not abandoned it, but the Prime Minister had. The Prime Minister on Tuesday, said—

> "If it should be found that the immigration of these labourers from any point of view was on the whole producing a balance of ill, the right hon. Gentleman may rest assured that we without hesitation should prevent any augmentation of their numbers."

That was, not the people of the Transvaal, but "we," the British Ministry. If a Liberal Government stopped the importation of the Chinese that would be a monstrous trifling with Imperial interests and making a colonial question a plaything of Party; but if a Conservative Government prevented the augmentation of their numbers that was a very proper proceeding. For his own part, he had always been content to leave the main issue to the people of the Transvaal themselves. England, indeed, had a right to a voice in the matter if she chose to exercise it. They had bought that right with £250,000,000, and, what was far more precious, with the lives of 20,000 of our soldiers. The other Colonies were also entitled to be heard for similar reasons. Nevertheless, they were willing to leave the ultimate decision of the question to a referendum of the people of the Transvaal. He trusted that when a Liberal Government came in they would stop the importation of the Chinese at once. If necessary that could be done by Executive Act. No Act of Parliament was requisite; no repeal of the Transvaal Ordinance was required. It could be done by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Transvaal by a discontinuance of the licences to import. It might be necessary to appoint an Imperial Commission to investigate the practicability of employing white labour in the Transvaal, and to state fully the facts of the case. Then let the matter be referred to the free voice of the white people in the colony, not confusing it with other issues, such as the relations between Boers and British, and not allowing the declaration of public opinion to be manipulated by financiers whose interest in South Africa was limited to the interest they drew out of it, but leaving it to the free, unfettered decision of the whole white population.

Amendment proposed—

> "At the end of the Question to add the words 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the facts now made known in respect of the importation of indentured Chinese coolies into the Transvaal show that Your Majesty's Government gave, during the discussion of the Transvaal Labour Ordinance in this House, assurances which have not been fulfilled; and represent further that this House expresses its regret that nearly a year has elapsed since the promulgation of the Ordinance without securing the opinion of the people of the Transvaal on the question of the policy of the Ordinance, especially since the opinion of the British Colonies generally, so far as officially expressed, appears to be vigorously opposed to that policy.' "—(Dr. Macnamara.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

SIR GILBERT PARKER (Gravesend) said he trusted that hon. Members on the other side of the House would not assume, because one might take a different view of this question from those hon. Members who had spoken, that one was necessarily swayed by what might be called the capitalist interest. He supposed that the hon. Member who moved the Amendment and the hon. Member who seconded it would credit him with the same amount of honesty of conviction by which, he believed, they were possessed in moving the Amendment. He had lately been in the Transvaal and had travelled a good deal in the Transvaal and in South Africa. He did not pretend that his knowledge or information was complete, because none of them were infallible; but he had had the opportunity of seeing the working of Chinese labour in the mines; he had seen the working generally of the mining industry, and he would dispute some of the statements made by hon. Members opposite. Some of them were, he thought, not in accordance with the real facts. It was interesting to know, as the seconder of the Amendment had stated, that he and his friends affirmed that a Liberal Government, if they came into power, would stop the importation of Chinese into the Transvaal. He presumed that they might consider that to be the intention of the Liberal Party. Well, it was quite possible that if a sufficient number of Chinese had been brought into the Transvaal to give that command of labour necessary for the proper development of the mines, that that might be a reasonable proposition. He did not disagree with it. But he held that it was a mistake to say that they should arbitrarily perform that act in spite of the local conditions which obtained. He also suggested that some of the references to the death-rate were inequitable. He wanted to put this point, because it might appear to play into the hands of his friends opposite—that in accounting for the very considerable death-rate of the natives in the Transvaal there had to be considered the natives from British Central Africa and from the Lower Zambesi. For himself, he spoke quite candidly on that point. He thought it was a very grave error to import natives from these tropical parts and it ought not to have been done. He visited the compounds when these natives were brought into the Transvaal. Fifty per cent. of the natives from these districts were suffering from cold and pneumonia. That accounted for the heavy death-rate among the natives. He did not pretend to be an authority on the question—a great many people who were unimportant professed to be authorities—but he maintained that the death-rate was due to an importation which ought never to have been carried out.

As regarded the question of white labour in the Transvaal, hon. Gentlemen opposite, he knew, presented their case with all sincerity, but what were the facts. He himself was not an authority: but he would quote an authority. Mr. Drummond Chaplin, in this month's National Review, discussed the question. He instanced the Simmer and Jack Mine, and showed that in May last the supply of unskilled labour was only 2,138 out of a total complement of 5,430. Now, 1,769 natives, 3,242 Chinamen and 575 Europeans were employed. The hon. Gentleman who moved the Amendment stated that the increase in the employment of white skilled labour in the mines was due to the putting up of compounds and similar work. In May, 394 skilled Europeans were employed; now there were 575 employed. That was a difference of 181; yet the number employed in the special work of erecting compounds was only seventy-three. It was only fair that the case should be presented fully. Every hon. Member knew that the permanent staff of a mine was kept up, no matter what the proportion of unskilled labour might be. The same amount of skilled labour was kept in a mine even when the unskilled complement was reduced to a minimum. There could be no increase in skilled appointments until the balance had been struck between skilled and unskilled labour. But as soon as that had been arrived at there would be an increase in the number of skilled appointments. Mr. Chaplin stated that in November the proportion of Europeans to unskilled coloured labourers employed on the Rand was one to six, although the aggregate number of Europeans employed had increased by 1,663. In the same way at the Simmer and Jack Proprietary Mines the proportion in May was 1 to 5·5, and in November 1 to 8·7, though the number of Europeans employed had increased by 181. Further, he stated—

> "Every mining company, if it is working at all, has to maintain a regular staff of Europeans whose numbers do not appreciably vary in proportion to the number of unskilled labourers on the mine. Their services are equally necessary whether the complement of unskilled men be complete or 50 per cent. below its strength. In the latter case the proportion is simply abnormal. It gradually rights itself as the complement of natives or Chinese approaches towards completion."

As to the statement that there was lack of employment and that the Emigration Office had advised emigrants not to proceed to the Transvaal, he accepted that. If he were asked to-morrow whether it was wise to go to the Transvaal he would say "No." Why? Because every unemployed man who could pay his way went there from every other portion of South Africa. The Secretary of the Rand Aid Association informed him that they had there useless people — "wasters" they were called—from every other part of South Africa. That was common to every mining community. It attracted the worst and the best. There would be found the loafer as well as the man who went to make his fortune. If the latter failed, he resumed his legitimate trade or occupation. At present the Transvaal was in a transitory condition. It could not yet absorb all the skilled labour, it would absorb eventually. Hon. Gentlemen had presented one side of the case; not the other.

It was said that with the introduction of the Chinese native labour would decrease. During the war the natives made a great deal of money; and were not inclined, in consequence, to return to the mines. They had wives and cattle, and were enjoying themselves. It was said that the Chinese would drive out native labour; but they had really increased it. In June, 1904, the number of natives in the mines was 68,174; in December, 1904, it was 76,611. That was a matter which ought to be taken into consideration. There had been a decrease in the death-rate, but he agreed with hon. Members opposite that the discussions in this House had brought that pressure to bear which was desired. He did not believe that any class of public men did their duty towards the public unless they were pressed. He did not impeach the mineowners for not having done their duty as regards the treatment of the natives, but he admitted that reasonable pressure brought to bear where the public might think that the natives were not being well-treated, was proper and right. Since the war the native administration had done a great deal to improve the condition of the natives. That was no argument against the present Administration of the Transvaal, but against the old conditions of things under the Boer Government. It was said that there had been riots among the Chinese and that they were a source of danger because of their quarrelsome dispositions. While he was in the Transvaal he had read telegrams which had been sent from this country dealing with the subject, and he was astounded to see the sensational statements made as to the riots. They were described in these telegrams as "a war," and one paper announced that a battle had taken place among the Chinese on the Rand. No doubt there had been a certain amount of disturbance, but it was not serious. There were faction fights among the Chinese, just as there had been similar fights among the natives, and he could cut out from South African papers reports of faction fights among the natives, which were more serious than those of which so much had been made in connection with the Chinese, of which nothing was known outside South Africa. Hon. Gentlemen did not trouble about them. They were more concerned with what advantaged them in their constituencies. Why, when these things occurred among the natives, did not hon. Members opposite raise the same question? [Cries of "We do."]

Stress had been laid on the opinion of the Colonies on this subject; but Canada had expressed no opinion because it was not subject to emotional prejudices in the same way as some other portions of the Empire. It was more easy to understand the position of Australia. He had lived in Australia and he could explain the position there. In Australia the Chinaman was admitted as a citizen and permitted to compete in the skilled labour market, and therefore the prejudice in Australia against the Chinaman was well founded. Canada had imported Chinese labour as long as it needed it. British Columbia had been developed practically by Chinese labour; but the colonists put a limit to the importation, as he believed a limit would be placed upon the importation of Chinese labour in the Transvaal. [OPPOSITION cries of "When?"] Hon. Members had quoted Canada, but they must remember that the Canadians were a shrewd and sensible people who were not going to throw themselves into any controversy which they had not made their own. The conditions of South Africa were totally different from those which obtained in every other colony, and hon. Members approaching this question from a colonial point of view did themselves a great injustice. They impeached their own knowledge. Everybody who knew the Transvaal knew that the ratio of unskilled to skilled labour was seven to one, in spite of the ambitions of hon. Gentlemen opposite, who were as ambitious to put as many white people as possible into the Transvaal as those who sat on the Unionist Benches.

He took the view, and still adhered to it, that white skilled labour did not work in the mines to any great extent. Mr. Creswell's experiment showed that the stay of white men in the mines was on an average seventeen days. Grievous pictures had been presented to the House about the conditions of Chinese slavery in the Transvaal. Hon. Members, however, must admit that their prophecies as to slavery had not come true. He had been in the Transvaal mines and had seen the Chinamen at work underground. They earned their wage of 2s. a day with comparative ease, for there had been established in the mines a rising scale of wages according to the amount of work performed. The House had been told that when these men, who had worked hard in the mine, had come out and enjoyed their luxurious bath, for they had as comfortable quarters as anyone in the House, they were apt to go abroad on an orgy of immorality and debauchery. He knew of no men who were less likely to do anything of the sort. Never in his life had he seen a more healthy-looking lot of men, and he did not see why the Chinamen should be suspected of greater immorality than British or any other workmen living under the same conditions of work. Would any Gentleman opposite say it was impossible for a race to avoid immorality, because, if that were so, he would be casting an imputation on a great many thousands of people who were not married, and others who were sent abroad for years on their country's business. Certainly his view was that hon. Members opposite were too apprehensive in the circumstances. He admitted that there were dangers, but they were not of that sensational character mentioned by hon. Members. The conduct of the Chinese had been exceptionally good, and he did not himself think that faction fights were the worst things that could occur with regard to the mines themselves and these so-called compounds, so little did they look like compounds, and so large were they that it was difficult to see the fences at all, and the Chinese went about them and were apparently as free as anyone. While there was discipline in the compounds there was also a relaxation of it, and he had met scores of Chinese outside their compounds interested in all that they saw. Indeed, there was as little an appearance of slavery as any one could imagine. The Kaffirs in the Kimberley compounds were under much more severe restrictions than the Chinese coolies, but no political agitation had been raised on their account. There the restrictions were so severe that he could hardly imagine even natives accepting them. The only thing was that there the natives stayed a less time. In the Transvaal compounds the restrictions did not keep the Chinese in any sort of terrorism or anxiety, and there had never been a protest from any of them since they entered the compounds. As to the attitude of the Boers in the two colonies, it would be impossible to get a dozen farmers to advocate the abolition of the Ordinance, because the Chinese labour set free Kaffirs for the farms. The Boer politicians were moved by the desire to put spokes in the wheel of the present Administration. Their action was political, and was not based upon the merits of the case. They were fighting for self-government, not with a view to co-operation with us, but to achieve that political domination which would in some degree compensate them for the loss of territorial domination. In conclusion, he did not believe the vote to be taken on this Amendment would be against the Government, but would support them in securing for a period the benefit of Chinese labour in the mines of the Transvaal.

MR. LABOUCHERE (Northampton) thought that the mover and seconder of the Amendment had made out a good case against the Colonial Secretary, and had shown that the promises the right hon. Gentleman had made to the House had been violated. He did not for one moment accuse the right hon. Gentleman of breaking faith. No doubt he made the promises in good faith, but anyone who had gone into the matter closely knew how impossible it was to trust to any assurance obtained from the authorities in the Transvaal. It was very weak on the part of anyone to suppose they would obey any order sent out from this country. Lord Milner had said he did not care sixpence for public opinion here, and no doubt he included in that the opinion of any Colonial Secretary who suggested anything of which he did not approve. The mover of the Amendment had suggested that the Colonial Secretary should resign. Well, they had been urging the Government to dissolve, which was much the same thing, but he did not think any hope could reasonably be entertained that any Minister would resign because the Opposition asked him to. But the right hon. Gentleman, having given these pledges to the House, ought to insist on their being carried out, and should make the authorities in the Transvaal understand that when a Minister in that House, with the full approval of the Chamber, promised that certain action should be taken it must be carried out, and not ignored by Lord Milner and his myrmidons in the Transvaal.

The only speech in support of the Government that day had been the one delivered by the hon. Member for Gravesend, and he had listened to it with great interest, hoping to find something in it to which he could reply. But he had been disappointed. The hon. Gentleman seemed to have taken the Colonies generally under his wing. He had, in the past, had much to say about Canada, and no doubt he would now be often on his legs discussing South Africa. The hon. Member for Gravesend had made some extraordinary statements. He had said that the British would get on exceedingly well in the Transvaal, but he advised no Briton to go there, not because of the presence of the Chinese, but because of the number of loafers from all parts of Europe who went there and were unable to get work. The fact of the matter was, that the hon. Member perceived that it was useless for any sensible British working man to go to South Africa with the expectation of getting work; he had to get some reason for it, and somebody had told him that cock-and-bull story. He had also stated that the best way to get the mines worked by natives was to fill them with Chinese, a proposition which on the face of it was absurd. There had also been repeated the old story of what an elysium the compound was. According to the directory, the hon. Member inhabited a fine house in Carlton House Terrace, and yet he declared that the miners in the compounds were lodged as well as he was! The hon. Member, together with the Colonial Secretary and others, did not really grasp what was the objection of the Opposition to this Ordinance. They did not care whether it was profitable or unprofitable. With the assent of the Chinese or without, the employment of these people under existing conditions was against their principles. Technically, and to a lawyer's mind, it was not slavery; but they considered that the status of these men was such that its existence in any country over which floated the British flag was derogatory to the name and honour of the nation. It was all very well to say that the Chinese desired to go. Everybody knew what China and her mandarins were; the House had been informed by a Blue-book of what happened in connection with similar contracts between Peru and the Chinese Government; and they knew that, through the intervention of the British Government in the name of morality and civilisation, those contracts were put an end to. Even though it were with the free assent of the Chinese, he should object to British colonies being made a dumping-ground for chattels of this description. No man could contract himself out of his inherent rights under the British flag.

What was the position of the Chinese when they reached the Transvaal? He totally denied that they were free men. They were shut up in compounds, flogged if they would not work, liable to arrest if seen wandering about, given a small pittance, and not allowed to return to their own country until the expiration of the term of their contract unless they paid their expenses, and that to men earning a shilling a day was practically an impossibility. He was a so-called "Little Englander;" he was a parochial Englishman. He looked to the worker of the United Kingdom and the leading Colonies, and did not trouble himself about what went on outside the British Empire. He had a certain sympathy for the suffering and oppressed of other lands, but considering the greatness of the Empire and the importance of this country, he thought a Member of the House of Commons had his hands full if he tried to look after the interests and the well-being of the people under the British flag. The presence of chattels of this description under the conditions existing in South Africa he regarded as harmful to the body politic, likely utterly to demoralise the public sense of right and wrong, and to attack the dignity of labour.

He also denied the soundness of the policy on economical grounds. There were in South Africa the three races of the Boers, the Britons, and the blacks. Every day the blacks were increasing in numbers and becoming more civilised, and the great danger to South Africa as a British colony was the vast numbers of the subject races already there. It was perfect madness that we should go out of our way to introduce the yellow race also. In the time of Boer rule there was undoubtedly a racial oligarchy in the Transvaal. The Boers were determined to remain political masters of the country. We made war on them because the miners were said to be treated as helots and so forth—a story which was somewhat exploded now. He did not contend that the Boer's was a perfect Government, but if he had to choose between living under the oligarchy of the Dutch Boers and living under the present autocracy of the mineowners, he would certainly select the former. The idea of the mineowners seemed to be that they should form themselves into a cosmopolitan class of rulers simply because they were wealthy, and that all manual labour should be done by serfs.

The falsity of the statement that the employment of Chinese would lead to greater employment of white men had been conclusively shown. What was really wanted was to attract a British population to the colony, and that unquestionably would not be done by the present policy. The reason Englishmen would not work in the mines was that the owners would not pay proper rates of wages. The owners pleaded that if higher wages were given the mines would not pay. Then why work them? There were many coal seams in the mines of England that might be worked if Chinese labour were employed. ["You could employ them."] The working men of the country would have a very strong word to say on that matter. People did not sufficiently realise that, although there were some honest men connected with the South African mining industry, speaking generally the whole thing was more or less of a swindle. The present market value of the shares of the different companies totalled up to about £300,000,000; only £50,000,000 had been bona fide spent on plant and so forth, so that £250,000,000 had gone into somebody's pocket. According to the returns for last year, gold to the value of £16,000,000 was extracted, and dividends to the amount of £4,000,000 were paid. Considering the character of the investment, a person ought reasonably to have 10 per cent. on his money in the mines. To pay 10 per cent. on the capital drawn from the British public would require the extraction of gold to the value of £120,000,000. But the total produce of gold all over the world was only £78,000,000, and it was estimated that at their present rate of output the mines would be exhausted in from twenty-five to thirty years. Would any mineowner venture to say that £120,000,000 worth of gold could be drawn from the mines in the Transvaal in a year? Therefore he submitted that the whole thing was more or less of a swindle, in the sense that the money had been obtained by persuading the public that the mines would yield an absolutely impossible return. The mineowners had made their money, not out of the mines, but out of the public, and when Parliament was asked to do this, that, or the other, it should be borne in mind that the so-called mining industry was really a doubtful species of roulette table. Immediately the war was over the mineowners claimed the right to tax the natives in order to compel them to work in the mines. It would be just as reasonable to tax landowners to such an extent as to compel them to work in their own fields for a portion of the year. So sure were the mineowners that they were masters of the situation that they reduced the already paltry wage, and then complained that the natives would not work. That dodge having failed, they fell back on the Chinaman, thinking he would be more profitable than the native, in that he would be paid less and would work the whole instead of a portion of the year. The object was simply to get rid of the shares on their hands, to bring out more companies, and to draw more money out of the British public.

But there was another objection to the presence of British working men. The mineowners feared the introduction of "the serpent of trade unionism" and the necessity of having to give British working men votes, the granting of which might result in the loss of their oligarchical hold of the country. It was not thus that our great Colonies had been built up; a community would not thrive if controlled by a comparatively small dominant class while the manual labour was supplied by subject races. What surprised him was the positive impudence of these millionaires. They forgot what we had spent to acquire the Transvaal. We got it and were not going to give it back; but it was not theirs. The millionaires wanted to rule there entirely and be the dominant factor in the State, while the British workmen, who had to pay largely through indirect taxation for the war, were to be kept out of the country because they would introduce trade unionism into the Transvaal and would require votes. He wondered why it was that such men had such influence with His Majesty's Government. Was there some dark secret connected with the Raid? He knew that when during the inquiry they were getting near to the question of the late Colonial Secretary being connected with the Raid he was stopped. With regard to the Government, to use a common expression, they knew enough about them to hang them. He noticed that a great deal of money was being spent by the Tariff Reform League. He should like to see the subscription list of the Tariff Reform League, for it would be well worth—

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Member is referring to matters which are not in order upon this Motion.

MR. LABOUCHERE said they were being asked to bribe the Colonies and invite them to join in a conference with us to discuss public affairs, but when those same Colonies protested against the introduction of Chinese labour into South Africa the Government would not listen to them. This policy was foolish from an economical point of view, because although by adopting it they might do a little business and obtain a spurious prosperity for a little time, when they considered the permanent interests of the Transvaal and the Empire as a whole, they would find that they could not possibly do a worse thing than introduce Chinese labour. He did not know exactly when the Liberals would come into office, but he knew it would be as soon as the electorate had a chance of turning the Government out. The members of the Government stuck like limpets to their places, and he believed that they would go on to the end of the septennial epoch, and probably at the end of that time they would bring in a Bill to continue in office. They had considerable difficulty in understanding whether the Prime Minister represented his own Party's views or not, but at any rate they knew he did not represent, and never would represent, the views or the intentions of hon. Members sitting on the Opposition side of the House. The Prime Minister had rightly said that if they asked for support for this Motion on the ground that they considered the introduction of Chinese labour a moral crime, and yet refused to reverse this policy, they would be hypocrites. The hon. Member, after quoting an extract from the Johannesburg Star, concluded by expressing the hope that the time would soon come when there would be a Ministry in power that would show these millionaires that they were not our masters, as they seemed to be under the impression, but that the Government were the masters of the situation.

*MR. WORSLEY-TAYLOR (Lancashire, Blackpool) said he had had the opportunity of trying to inform his mind upon this question during a very recent stay of two months in the Transvaal. He approached the consideration of it without any preconceived ideas or bias of any kind, having no investments whatever in South Africa, and no connection with its finance, and by no means approving of the financing and the speculation with which a legitimate industry had unfortunately been overlaid. In answer to the contention that the introduction of the Chinese was unnecessary in the interests of the mines themselves, he pointed to the shortage of labour, which seriously imperilled the white wages, and to the report of the Government mining engineer—which was absolutely conclusive to his mind—that a supply of labour could not be obtained from Africa. He laid emphasis on the fact of the heavy cost of procuring outside labour. When the mineowner had brought his Chinamen into the country, and housed them, and finally returned them, he would not have much left out of £20 a head. Applying that to 50,000 labourers—the number contemplated by next June—it was at once obvious that a very serious sum was being risked, because they did not know how the experiment would turn out. That was some proof that the mineowners felt there was good reason why they should seek for labour outside Africa. As to the point about employing white labour, nobody who knew the conditions had seriously suggested it. It had been honestly tried. The mineowners had tried to get white labour at 5s., 10s., and even 15s., and yet they could not get white men. Here, we could not appreciate the intensity of racial feeling out there. The Kaffirs lived under such conditions that when white men got out there, having gone out with the honest intention of accepting unskilled work, they would not work with the Kaffirs. When the white man realised the actual state of things he said, "I am not going to take on this Kaffir job," and he generally threw it up. The result was that white men generally stayed at this kind of unskilled work about seventeen days on the average, and they could not be induced to stay longer. White labour, therefore, had been tried and it had failed. Black and white labour could not be got to work together, and there was no other course available except the importation of labour from outside.

A great deal had been heard about the treatment of the Chinese. He had used the opportunities which had presented themselves to him of examining into the treatment of the Chinese labourers. It was his experience, as it was the result of the experience of every Englishman whom he had consulted there, that from the day when the labourer landed in Durban to the day when he was set to work and thenceforward he was treated well and liberally in every respect. Every mine was thrown open to inspection, and all information and statistics were placed at the disposal of the inquirer. He could wish nothing better than that the mover and seconder of this Amendment should go out and inspect the mines for themselves, and he at any rate would be bound by their report. The compounds were not narrow prisons. They were wide and spacious open squares, with good buildings round them. The rooms were comfortable, warm, well-ventilated, with baths and good sanitary arrangements. One of the complaints of the mineowners, indeed, was that the sickness rate had increased among the Chinese because they could not induce the men to take advantage of all the opportunities given to them to change their wet for dry clothes. He had examined the various kinds of food eaten by the labourers and tasted several of them. In quantity it was ample, and of good quality, so that no one could doubt that the men were well housed and well treated. The term "Helotism" had been applied to the Chinese because they were confined in compounds. They were not truly "confined" in compounds. The men were allowed to wander at will over the property of the company, and in some cases the property extended to hundreds of acres. When they wanted to go into the town they applied for a pass, and unless there were urgent reasons to the contrary the pass was granted as a matter of course. The treatment, indeed, was not practically different from that which had been meted out to thousands of Kaffirs as to whom no one had uttered a syllable of complaint.

Then it was said that promises had been broken with regard to wages. The Chinese were better off in this respect than the Kaffirs. There was no minimum wage for the Kaffir; there was for the Chinese. Again, the Chinamen had the opportunity to bring their wives with them. He challenged any hon. Member to say that what was done for the Chinese labourer in this respect was done for any other imported labourer in any part of the world. Everyone sympathised with the men who had been obliged to leave their wives and families, but this experience was not peculiar to the Chinese. There were thousands of our own fellow-countrymen in South Africa in precisely the same position. He travelled home with a professional man who had not seen his wife and children for two years, and there was an officer who had been kept away by duty from his family for five years because he could not afford to bring them out to South Africa. But it was not the Ordinance which restricted the Chinese from taking their wives with them. On the contrary, the Ordinance did all it could in this respect, for it gave the Chinese the opportunity of bringing their wives with them if they so desired.

DR. MACNAMARA: The coolies were never told that.

*MR. WORSLEY-TAYLOR said the Chinese were pretty cute in their business transactions. He had watched them in the mines when their wages tickets were being marked, and if hon. Members could only see this for themselves, they would be very much surprised at their sharpness and intelligence; and if there happened to be the slightest error they noted it at once and went off to their interpreter. He ventured to think that if these Chinese felt that they had been brought to the Transvaal under false pretences, and that the promises made to them had been broken, they would very soon have protested. Allusion had been made to the advertisements, but the hon. Member for North Camberwell did not give the date.

DR. MACNAMARA: It was the 14th of March, 1904.

*MR. WORSLEY-TAYLOR said if the hon. Member had inquired, he would find that that was explained by Mr. Perry, who was the principal agent in China of the Labourers Association for the importation of these labourers.

DR. MACNAMARA: Why were they recruiting coolies before the Ordinance had been passed?

*MR. WORSLEY-TAYLOR said that provisional arrangements were being made before the Ordinance was passed because there was urgent necessity for this labour. Hundreds of thousands of copies of the full terms of the Ordinance had been circulated in the districts where these Chinese labourers were recruited as soon as the terms were settled. So much for the charge of bad faith on the part of the mineowner.

In looking at the economic results of Chinese labour, he thought that no one would dispute the plain fact that it caused a great and decided increase in the output from the mines. The total output at the end of last year overtopped any previous record. At the end of December last there were 1,250 more stamps running than in the same month of the previous year. That was an increase of 25 per cent. But the most serious charge against the importation of Chinese was that it had been injurious to the employment of white labour. The white wages bill in the year before the importation was £4,500,000. Salaries and wages paid to white men amounted altogether to £4,500,000. There was not the shadow of doubt that the importation of Chinese labour assured that. Without that it would have been decreased. He ventured to say that if the importation of Chinese had done nothing more than that, it might be regarded as having done something considerable. But since that time it had also increased the number of white men employed by about 2,000, which meant another £500,000 of white wages. By June next it was in contemplation to have 50,000 Chinese at work, involving, according to the best estimates, the employment of another 5,000 white men. But even putting the figure at 4,000 it represented another £1,000,000 in white men's wages. He was putting it at a much lower figure than those on the spot. He had got a calculation from Mr. Evans, the manager of one of the large mines, putting the total additional expenditure at £7,000,000, and of that he calculated that the white men's wages would be £2,000,000. That was no inconsiderable addition to the income of white men now there, or who intended to go out there. But the matter did not stop there. It had been proved by experience, both before and since the war, that for every white man employed on the mines there were ten other white persons living on the Rand in some capacity. So that this importation of Chinese labour would increase the white population of the Transvaal by 40,000 or 50,000. He ventured to say that those who desired to see an increase in the voting power of the white men would have their desire fulfilled, and it would be fulfilled owing largely, mainly, in fact, to the importation of Chinese labour. Last year, largely moved by the prospect of imported labour, orders to the extent of £3,250,000 were given for new machinery, of which the greater part was for extensions. That would increase in future; and why should not the manufacturers and workmen of this country get their share of these orders?

But the mere direct addition to the number of whites employed in the Transvaal was the smaller part of the advantage which had been derived from this importation of Chinese. The Rand was the heart of South Africa, and if it were beating strongly it would send the life-blood coursing right to the extremities. Agriculture, the railways, the ports, and all the interests in South Africa were looking to the prosperity of the Rand, and were now convinced that that prosperity was assured. There might be difficulties, no doubt; and he approved of the Colonial Secretary keeping a watchful eye on future developments which might arise, and reserving power to deal with those developments. He understood his attitude to be that of satisfaction with the experiment so far as it had gone, and of watchfulness for the future. He entirely endorsed that attitude. The experiment had already proved itself a success, and if allowed to continue to a reasonable extent it would prove itself a still greater success.

The only other matter he desired to bring before the House had reference to public opinion—he meant instructed public opinion—the opinion of those on the spot who knew. The hon. Gentleman who seconded the Amendment referred to Mr. Albu, and he thought he might also quote the same Gentleman as showing the opinion of the mineowners.

Mr. HERBERT SAMUEL: I did not quote him as an impartial authority, but only as an authority as to the intention of the mineowners.

*Mr. WORSLEY-TAYLOR said the opinion of the mineowners was worth listening to. Addressing a meeting of the shareholders of the Rand Collieries, Mr. Albu said—

> "The employment of Chinamen on the Van Ryn and Aurora West has necessitated the engagement of a large number of additional white men on these properties, and I point this out advisedly, because it has been stated or hinted by the newspapers in England that the Chinamen would be used to replace or oust the white labourer, a statement which we need hardly refute here. It has been amply proved that as fast as we have been able to obtain Chinese labour we have employed more white men . . . Furthermore, an additional influx of Chinamen —and I do not limit myself to any particular number—will enable us to start developing a good many mines which have lain dormant for years and years owing to the want of labour. Of course, for the first three or four years these properties will be in a state of development, and I need not point out to those conversant with working conditions on the Rand, that the proportion of skilled labour on developing properties is much greater than on working mines. It is quite possible that, for every hundred Chinamen we are able to import, we shall be able to employ at least ten additional white men. Moreover, I wish to point out to you, and to the public in general, that whereas before the war we had something like 95,000 natives with whom to carry on work, the industry in a short time will require over 200,000 unskilled labourers. This means, if we are allowed to import the additional labour needed, we shall within a year two be able to employ another ten or fifteen thousand white labourers on the Rand as a result of the introduction of the Chinaman."

That was the opinion of the authority to whom his hon. friend on the other side had referred. In dealing with the matter of public opinion, he would refer hon. Members to one of the most outspoken and persistent opponents of Chinese labour before the facts were known. After he had had experience of it, Mr. Quinn said—

> "With regard to the Chinese question (continued Mr. Quinn), which your esteemed president alluded to in words that seemed to indicate something about it—gentlemen, let me ask you to believe me at once when I say that as far as I am concerned, and I speak not only for myself, but also for others who agree with me—I make no apology. I cannot make any apology for my past action with regard to the introduction of Chinese into this country. If you expect an apology from me you are bound to be disappointed; I cannot. Whatever my faults may be, and unfortunately I know they are many, I have always endeavoured to say what I believed to be true at the time, and if tomorrow or the next day I have occasion from new information or knowledge to change the views I held last week, I trust I shall be man enough to come forward and say so. [Hear, hear.] As far as I am concerned—please understand I speak for myself—the Chinese are here, the Ordinance is passed, the people appear to be contented, there is no objection raised, and as far as I am concerned, in any politics I may take part in in the future the question is finished, and I ask most strongly, and every fair-minded man will sympathise with me, not to have this honest objection raised and dragged out for the purpose of making an objection to my taking my part as a citizen, a part that I am entitled to take, in the politics of this country."

That was the statement of a man who fought tooth and nail against the introduction of Chinese before he knew the facts. One could not have stronger testimony in favour of Chinese labour than that. Then again, Sir H. Goold-Adams, governor of the Orange River Colony, said that 90 per cent of the thinking men in that colony were in favour of Chinese labour, as tending to release Kaffir labour for the farms. Sir Alfred Hime, ex-Premier of Natal, said—

> "I have had every reason to believe that there will be a great trade revival in the near future. It largely depends upon the Transvaal mining industry. As your readers know, the lack of labour on the Rand, combined with the overstocking by merchants, was chiefly responsible for the recent depression, but the work of the Chinese will remedy that. Once the mines are in full swing, all South Africa will feel the benefit, for money will circulate much more freely."

Mr. Worsley-Taylor.

Therefore they had testimony from the Rand, from the Orange River Colony, and from Natal. His own experience was that practically every man he talked to, no matter from what part of South Africa he came, agreed that, though he might have had objections to the Ordinance before he knew what the facts were, now the experiment had been tried there was no reason, up to the present at all events, for retaining those objections. Everyone was satisfied that the experiment had worked well and was promoting the prosperity of the mines and consequently the prosperity of the whole of South Africa. There was no point on which there was a stronger feeling in the Transvaal than the attacks made in the House of Commons and elsewhere on the policy of this Ordinance and the action of the mine owners under it. They felt that it was a matter which in its essence did not concern the interests or the honour of this country, but that it was a matter mainly for the Transvaal. [AN HON. MEMBER: Why not allow the referendum?] He thought that in the interest of harmonious relations between the mother country and the colony it was right that these attacks should cease, and that what had been a success in the past should be allowed to continue.

MAJOR SEELY (Isle of Wight) said the hon. and learned Member in his most lucid speech had shown that several things had taken place which he anticipated would take place—that, there being a shortage of labour, the easiest thing to do was to introduce Chinese, and that the Chinese were in point of fact well treated on the Rand, as, indeed, was only likely in the circumstances of the case. But that was not the ground on which he and his friends opposed the Ordinance. They did so because they believed it to be intrinsically wrong. They believed it to be wrong to break the solemnly pledged word of the country, and if there were any doubt whether that word had been broken, he would point out that the right hon. Member for West Birmingham solemnly pledged the honour of the country that the importation of Asiatic labour should be conditional on its being clearly shown that the great majority of the white inhabitants of both colonies were in favour of it. Had it ever been clearly shown that this was so? There was not an hon. Member opposite who would stand up in his place and say that it had been clearly shown. They all knew that the trade unionists of the Rand had practically declared against the importation of Chinese labour, and that on May 23rd the Dutch unanimously and emphatically declared against it. All would admit that the great majority had not been clearly shown to be in favour of it. If, in spite of there being no clear expression of the will of the majority of the inhabitants in favour of such importation, the Ordinance had received sanction, then they had deliberately cheated the people of the Transvaal, and no amount of wealth derived from the importation could possibly excuse so gross a crime. He had frequently ventured to put this before great audiences of his countrymen during the recess and he had never found a dissenting voice, and he would beg hon. Members to believe that he regarded this matter in no Party spirit. As one who had bore a humble share in the war he must know something of the feelings and aspirations of the country. He thought hon. Members would admit that one who spent very many months in the company of his fellow-country men in the Transvaal and the Orange River Colonies must get to know something of the reasons for waging the war. It was not for any Party reason that he spoke, but because he believed the thing was in itself wrong and he challenged any hon. Member to contradict him.

SIR FREDERICK BANBURY (Camberwell, Peckham): I certainly do.

MAJOR SEELY submitted that it had not been proved that a great majority of the white inhabitants were in favour of Chinese labour. On the other hand, the people of this country and the people of the Transvaal bitterly resented it. It was wrong in itself, because it was against the law of this country, and of every civilised country, to confine men under these conditions, and he said that on the authority of the standing counsel of the Government of India. Would the Colonial Secretary tell them why the Government of India were opposed to allowing our Indian fellow-subjects to go to South Africa under these conditions? The fact was that that Government regarded these conditions as degrading. Hon. Members on his side of the House asserted that what was not good enough for the British-Indian subjects of the King was not good enough for any man under the British flag. It was argued that Chinese labour led to an increase in the production of gold. [Laughter.] It was easy for hon. Members to laugh, but if the thing was morally wrong no material wealth would make it right. He had nothing more to say except to point out that the damage done to our Imperial interests in this matter had been very great. He thought it would be admitted that the Colonies felt deeply on this matter, and all who knew the facts would admit that the feeling was not dying down. He asked the House to remember that, so recently as last month, the principal newspaper in New Zealand, speaking of the proposed Colonial Conference, said that the memory of the hideous outrage that had been brought about in South Africa in this matter was too fresh in their minds for them to dance to any new Imperial tune at this moment. Therefore he would ask the House to reflect long and carefully before rejecting an Amendment which would tend perhaps to heal the sores created by this disastrous policy.

*MR. LYTTELTON: I agree with one sentiment expressed by the hon. Member for Northampton. He said that we were a very long way from the Transvaal. It is obvious to me that a great many statements which have been made in the course of these debates would not have been made if we were not a long way from South Africa. I would ask hon. Members opposite to exercise their imagination as far as they can and try to place themselves in the situation of an English Government face to face with a demand—I will make this good afterwards—which is practically unanimous on the part of the white inhabitants of the Transvaal for an Ordinance of this kind. Suppose for a moment that I am discussing this matter with a Transvaal citizen who says, "We are ourselves substantially unanimous upon the question; we require this unskilled labour in order to restore the fortunes of our country, which for a time have been desolated by war; we require it in order to enable us to discharge the burden of debt, which, I believe, is greater upon the Transvaal, and in contingent liabilities is certainly greater, than that upon any British colony; we require it for the purpose of recovering the country." I do not think any hon. Gentleman opposite will deny that that is a strong plea. He will have to admit that in cases of Crown colonies which we absolutely dominate we have permitted indentured labour in all essential points upon similar conditions. [OPPOSITION cries of "No."] I know that that is disputed, and that the hon. Member for Poplar said that there is a cardinal distinction, inasmuch as in Trinidad and British Guiana no opposition is made to settlement at the end of five years, whereas the Transvaal Ordinance provides for repatriation at the employer's expense at the end of three years. I ventured to say at the time that that argument was shallow and unsubstantial, and I put it to hon. Gentlemen that the fact that the Member for Wolverhampton expressly declined shortly afterwards even to argue the point corroborated my view. I will take back the House to the dialogue I am imagining. If I said there were certain provisions in the Ordinance which I myself, were I an employer of labour, might dislike, what would be the force of such an argument? I might be told that it was not my affair—that I and my predecessor had promised to treat the Transvaal in all matters in which there were not vital Imperial interests concerned, as a self-governing colony. With what face therefore, our record being what it is in regard to these other Crown colonies, could I refuse a demand which is almost unanimous, and for which it cannot be contended that there is not grave and substantial reason? That is the standpoint from which I beg the House to approach this subject. I do not claim any elevation in opinion or character above any other human being. Personally, as a matter of taste, I would prefer that anybody who was serving me should be absolutely free from restrictions. But that is not the question. The question is whether I am entitled to advise His Majesty's Government to advise the King to veto this legislation, which has been prepared with the most scrupulous care, and which is being administered with a jealous desire for fulfilment of its provisions.

I come to the questions that were put by the mover and seconder of the Amendment, for the House will forgive me for saying that since these two hon. Gentlemen spoke no real contribution has been made to the discussion [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh, oh!"] on that side of the House, but on this side very important contributions have been made to the argument on that subject by the hon. Member for Gravesend and the hon. and learned Gentleman behind me. Both these gentlemen were eye-witnesses of that of which they spoke. The first criticism of the hon. Member for Camberwell was that the Government had broken its pledges with regard to the introduction of women. The history of that is this. Early last session the seconder of this Amendment asked me a couple of questions as to whether there was any objection to giving facilities to the labourers to bring their wives with them. Later on I went into the matter, and on 16th February I said that it would be manifestly wrong that the coolies should go without their women if they desired to have them, and I undertook that, if they wished to bring their wives and families with them, they should be allowed to do so. Again, I undertook, on behalf of the Government, that if more was desired, to consider fully and give effect to any reasonable demand in regard to the matter. But I do not suppose the mover of the Amendment would go so far as to say that I should impose any compulsion on coolies to bring their wives with them. The House has a sufficient sense of humour not to credit me with saying what, of course, would be entirely absurd, that I would compel Chinese labourers to bring their wives if they did not desire it. It was said that the coolies did not know of this provision. This was a most extraordinary statement, in view of the fact that no fewer than 4,000 coolies have registered themselves as married men and have registered their wives under the Ordinance, in order to have an opportunity, if they wish, of sending for them afterwards. I think I may ask on what ground the Member for Camberwell alleged that this matter was not brought to the notice of the Chinese. I think it was because of an article by the Rev. Arnold-Forster.

DR. MACNAMARA said he went further and showed the right hon. Gentleman a facsimile of an advertisement for coolies by a recruiting agent in which he understood, for, of course, he could not read Chinese, there was no hint whatever of facilities being given to the coolies for bringing their wives.

MR. LYTTELTON: I thought it was so. The hon. Gentleman was misled by the mistake of the Rev. Arnold-Forster. I will explain exactly what happened. The Rev. Arnold-Forster, a missionary who lived 600 miles from Tientsin, saw in a newspaper in March, 1904, an advertisement which no doubt was an incomplete copy of the final form of the contract, and did not contain the provision in question. I will explain how that advertisement happened to be put in that paper. Before the final terms of the contract were settled a rough draft was circulated to certain firms; and one of these firms thereupon took steps to negative some of the preposterous falsehoods which were being circulated on the subject. That was in March, but before June, I am informed, thousands of copies of the full contract were sent into the districts concerned.

DR. MACNAMARA: The first arrival of coolies in the Transvaal was on June 21st.

* MR. LYTTELTON: Precisely. June was the month I mentioned. In June there was recruiting. This précis was drawn up for circulation in January and was forwarded to Tientsin in March. It was published in March. Recruiting did not take place until it had been superseded by documents containing the full contract and published by thousands in Tientsin itself. Can the hon. Gentleman tell us of any authority as to the fact that these men were not properly informed? Who would desire to mislead the coolies by placing an advertisement in an English newspaper costing ten cents, to which the coolies have no access at all and which they could not read? That shows the mare's nest which the hon. Gentleman has got hold of; and that is in keeping with what he says in regard to the substantial condition of the Chinamen who are now in the Transvaal. It is not easy to speak on the matter with plainness, and yet to speak with plainness is the only course. Innuendo and insinuation are only the more suggestive. I am asked to conjecture, because the coolies are unaccompanied by their wives, and though they are working ten hours a day on a vegetable diet, that they must be guilty of practices of the vilest kind. Not one single word even of gossip has been produced in this debate in support of this suggestion, although the compounds are open to everybody who likes to inspect them. The compounds are open to all ministers of religion in Johannesburg, and nobody can deny the inquisitional zeal of hon. Gentlemen opposite in this matter, and yet with all the resources at their disposition they have not been able to produce a statement or the suggestion of a statement of that kind. I feel that I am entitled to say that the case is not only not made out, but not attempted to be made out. I would refer hon. Members to the Report of an inquiry made by a Royal Commission on Chinese Labour in British Columbia, a Report made by Commissioners who were intensely hostile to Chinese immigration there. The Report dealt with a society of something like 3,000 adult Chinamen, among whom were only twenty-eight women—practically a celibate community of the same kind. This is what they say, and it is better than conjecture. They say that Chinamen have many noble virtues and characteristics, and though there are customs which, from a moral point of view, are to be condemned, generally speaking Chinamen compare favourably with others in their observance of law and order, and that there is very little doubt that to the frugality of their habits can be attributed the absence of sensuality among them. Only three cases of indecency were established against these men in fourteen years. If I may refer to the gentleman who has been quoted, the Rev. Arnold Foster, he stated in that particular article that every missionary of experience would agree as to the Chinaman's industry and carefulness, and as to the utter injustice of many of the charges brought against his moral character. In 1885 a Report was made by a Commission on the Settlement of Chinese in California, and it was there stated that the bad moral effects were grossly exaggerated. Hon. Gentlemen have had the whole world to gather evidence from as to the nameless vices which they have insinuated against the Chinese. I do not pretend to range over the whole world, but I think I have quoted enough to show there is no ground for these conjectures. The British Government cannot be asked to do more than they have done. They have done more, I believe, than any other Government have ever done — namely, to provide that this experiment should be made under conditions which enable a Chinaman, not only to take his wife at the expense of his employer, but actually, if he wishes to do so, to go out first himself and ascertain the nature of the place and the nature of the employment he is to have; and after that the employers will provide at their own expense for sending out the wives. I contend that it is premature to judge whether or not the Chinamen will send for their wives. I have argued the case on the footing that they might not, and I say that there is no evidence in the past or in the present on which it can be said that this experiment has been made on conditions any different, from the moral aspect, than those of any other.

The hon. Gentleman was solicitous on behalf of the Kaffir, and said that Kaffirs were the aboriginal inhabitants of the country.

Dr. MACNAMARA: British subjects.

Mr. LYTTELTON: And British subjects have a right not to be unfairly competed with by aliens. What are the facts? The facts are that since the Chinese came last June the native Kaffir workers in the mines have increased by almost 10,000, and are obtaining a higher wage now than they obtained in 1899, before the war. I appeal to the candour of the hon. Gentleman: is it not sheer nonsense to say that the Kaffirs have been undercut in their labour and unfairly competed with by Chinamen when the effect of that unfair competition is to increase their numbers in the mines and not to diminish their wages? No one would wish that even a mine-owner should pay unnecessary wages to a man who is malingering. There are a certain number of malingerers even among the Chinese, and if there is a high minimum wage it may encourage the malingerer; but if the minimum wage is put at 1s., and piecework is allowed at which some of the men may be able to earn, and have earned, as much as 2s. 9d., hard work would be encouraged and malingering discouraged. No one is hardy enough to say that the wages the Chinamen are obtaining at present are not six or seven times as much as the wages they can obtain in their own country. No one can pretend for a moment to say that in this House, whatever they may say out of it. Neither will any one contend for a moment that their situation, compared with that in their own country, is not one of affluence and comfort. I am supposed to have misled the House by saying that the Chinaman is not to be a skilled labourer. Hon. Members who are so jealous for the Chinaman's freedom and liberty are not content with the scheduling of fifty-four employments as employments in which he may not be engaged. He was to do unskilled work only. The hon. Gentleman who seconded the Amendment was not content with the restriction. He wished to knock off the ability of the Chinaman to become a boss boy. Boss boys among the Kaffirs are those who are employed to convey communications to those with whom they are working, and it is provided that the Chinaman should be able to take the place of these boss boys. The hon. Gentleman said that was purely overseer's work.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL: I said nothing on that point at all.

*MR. LYTTELTON: I beg the hon. Member's pardon. Look at the nature of the case. If it were not for the imperative demands of the white population of the Transvaal the mineowners need not have had this Ordinance. The only purpose of it is to impose certain limitations upon the introduction of Chinese. How does it work out? There is, if I remember right, a penalty of £500 on any evasion of the Ordinance prohibiting unskilled work. Should any Chinaman do skilled work, his employers are liable to a fine of £500. Who enforces that provision? The white men, the skilled men who work in the mines. The white men are there on the spot, and they have the greatest interest in the enforcement of the law. In them there is the most efficient police for carrying out this Ordinance that could possibly be found.

Then the Government are stated to have misled the House because they asserted that the importation of Chinese would bring a large accession of white skilled labour on to the Rand. I need not say a single word more on that subject than has been stated by my hon. and learned friend behind me. I would only point out that the increase of white labour in and about the mines has been 1,600 or more. It is perfectly true that a certain proportion of that increase is due to those who built and repaired the compounds, which is not an occupation for miners. It is perfectly true also that the ratio of the white men employed to the black men employed will somewhat diminish. That must obviously be the case. There must be a certain number of foremen in a mine who must be there whether 1,000 or 2,000 men are working in the mine. When a mine is opened up there will be a full establishment of white foremen, and the ratio of white men to black will be larger at first than it will be at a later stage when more black men are employed. But taking the broad fact, in 1899, before the war, the proportion of white men to black men in the mines was 119 to 1,000. It is to-day 143. Therefore, under the condition of things which now exists, in which Chinese labour has supplemented but not supplanted Kaffir labour, we have a higher amount of service and a higher proportion of wages for whites than before the war.

I think that exhausts all the arguments of the hon. Gentleman. I am glad to give credit to hon. Members opposite for having taken their part in reducing the mortality among the blacks, which reduction every one must rejoice at. I am glad also to give credit to those on the Rand who have worked hard and spent money generously to this end. They have succeeded in reducing the mortality from seventy to under forty—nearly half. In my own opinion the introduction of Chinese has also been one of the means contributing to this admirable result. In the mines there was in a time of great shortage of labour a temptation to recruit from the blacks of tropical climates men who were unfitted to stand the rigorous conditions of the mines. Looking to the humanity of the thing, it was far better that the Chinaman should be doing the work at a far less cost of life than that the mineowners should be put to the temptation of enlisting men who, by reason of their health, physique, and the climate they had been brought up in, were not fit for the hard tasks of the mine. The Chinese mortality is very much lower even than the improved result obtained among the Kaffirs. The hon. and gallant Member asserted that the British Government had broken their pledges to the inhabitants of the Transvaal by not withholding their assent to the Ordinance. I do not deny that at other times and under other conditions and in a different state of opinion my predecessor might have said what my hon. and gallant friend has quoted, but I have a precise statement subsequent to that read by the hon. and gallant Member which I have always regarded as my predecessor's undertaking. It was dated July 27th, 1903.

MAJOR SEELY: What I read out was written by the late Colonial Secretary in April, 1904.

*MR. LYTTELTON: My right hon. friend was not Colonial Secretary in 1904, and could not give a pledge on behalf of the Government. Moreover, unless I am mistaken, the Ordinance was sanctioned before that date. What my predecessor did say, in 1903, was that he believed that at that time the opinion of the Transvaal was hostile to the introduction of Asiatic labour, and that was why he would not assent to it if it were proposed; but he added that he thought it very likely that the opinion then hostile might not always be hostile, and he had received information that among the Boer farmers the pressure for labour was becoming very acute and a great change of opinion had taken place. The present Government believes that the opinion of the Transvaal is enormously in favour of this change, and the conditions, therefore, are changed from those under which that pledge was given. It seems to me an astonishing thing that any Member of the House should bring an accusation of this kind against the Government on these grounds.

MAJOR SEELY: Surely the right hon. Gentleman must have forgotten that subsequent to the passing of the Ordinance, a census showed that the Dutch were opposed to it.

*MR. LYTTELTON: There is no evidence or pretence of evidence to that effect. Six or seven leaders signed a document in which they stated they were against it; but with reference to the representation from 200 Dutchmen, what weight did they themselves attach to it? They had passed, on the occasion referred to, some twelve or fourteen resolutions. They were invited by Sir Arthur Lawley to come and discuss them at Pretoria. They had there a full and long discussion, and this resolution on Chinese labour was thought so unimportant by the Boers themselves that they never even mentioned it. If the hon. Member thinks this important, the Boers did not.

I am now in a position to sum up the results. It has been alleged that a disastrous blow has been struck at white labour. The answer is that the figures show conclusively an increase in white labour. Whether the absolute facts or the relative facts are taken, both are in favour of the introduction of Chinese. It has been suggested that we have misled the House by not preserving the Kaffirs from undue and unfair competition. Chinese labour has not starved or undercut Kaffir labour, for there are between 9,000 and 10,000 more Kaffirs employed at this moment than were employed before the introduction of the Chinese, and their wages have not been diminished, they have been increased as between now and 1899, and they have not diminished since the introduction of the Chinese. As regards the supposed moral danger, previous official records from which I have quoted have shown that the conjectures which have been made have no foundation so far as the evidence as to the past went, and it is not pretended that there is a single rag of evidence so far as the present is concerned. It has been alleged that recruiting had been unfairly conducted, and this on the evidence of the Rev. Arnold Forster, who was proved to have been mistaken in supposing that a document was used which had not been used. Again, it has been said that this was done against the will of the people. With regard to that, I ask the House to note the position of Mr. Quinn. Mr. Quinn, a worthy and zealous opponent, who was the protagonist in the fight against Chinese labour in the Legislative Council, and who is now living in the Transvaal, and is not a candidate for Parliament, states that people are content with the Chinese Ordinance, and that, so far as he is concerned, it is finished. Within a few months a representative Constitution will be granted to the Transvaal. If the Government are wrong—I do not think hon. Gentlemen opposite really believe they are—there will be an opportunity of correcting their mistakes; but hon. Gentlemen opposite know that there will not be a voice raised in any representative assembly against an introduction of Chinese, regulated as it is with scrupulous care, and which would never reach anything like the proportions which has been represented. The Government has a right to complain that, though the arguments in this House have been temperate and in good faith, it is not so and has not been so in the country. When my hon. friends on the Ministerial side described, from what they had seen, the health and comfort and sanitary conditions under which the Chinese were living in the Transvaal, there were loud cries of "Agreed, agreed" from the Opposition Benches. Did they cry "Agreed, agreed" to that in the country? Why, they talked of "slavery," and the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition talked of "quasi-slavery." I hope none of them were responsible for one of the most infamous documents that exists in the world—a document that has been extensively circulated in the constituencies and has probably misled thousands of voters—a picture representing Chinamen in chains with ghosts of dead British soldiers protesting. If a tithe of what has been said about the Chinese in the Transvaal were true, then, as the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Wolverhampton stated at the beginning of this controversy, the only right and just and sincere attitude to take up is to say, if this is slavery, it ought to be swept away from the Statute-book, even if it had been passed by a self-governing colony. The Leader of the Opposition, when asked the question what he would do, replied across the floor of the House, "Put us in and we will tell you." Later he gave a considered answer and said—

> "With regard to this topic, if and when the time comes for them to take over the responsibility of Government, he would only say in this confused matter that they would approach the question from the point of view of the permanent interests of the country and not merely from the point of view of the temporary exigencies of those who finance the gold mines."

That is a model statement for the apostle of the unambiguous.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: (Stirling Burghs): What is there ambiguous about that?

*MR. LYTTELTON: The House will judge of that. If, however, a tithe of the language used throughout the country were true, then it would be obvious that hon. Gentlemen opposite must sweep away the unclean thing. But there was no truth or sincerity in the language, and the declaration of their intentions showed that the leaders of the Opposition fully recognised the hollowness of the agitation.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 214; Noes, 275. (Division List No. 4.)

AYES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N. E.
Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Ainsworth, John Stirling
Allen, Charles P.
Ambrose, Robert
Asher, Alexander
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Asquith, Rt. Hon. Herbert H.
Atherley-Jones, L.
Barlow, John Emmott
Barran, Rowland Hirst
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Beamont, Wentworth C. B.
Bell, Richard
Benn, John Williams
Black, Alexander William
Blake, Edward
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Brigg, John
Bright, Allan Heywood
Broadhurst, Henry
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Burns, John
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Robert
Campbell, John (Armagh, S.)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Causton, Richard Knight
Cawley, Frederick
Channing, Francis Allston
Cheetham, John Frederick
Churchill, Winston Spencer
Clancy, John Joseph
Cogan, Denis J.
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Craig, Robert Hunter (Lanark)
Crean, Eugene
Cremer, William Randal
Crombie, John William
Cullinan, J.
Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, Alfred (Carmarthen)
Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan
Delany, William
Devlin, Chas. Ramsay (Galway
Devlin, Joseph (Kilkenny, N.)
Dewar, J. A. (Inverness-shire)
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Dillon, John
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark)
Duncan, J. Hastings
Edwards, Frank
Ellice,CaptEC(S.Andrw's B'ghs
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Emmott, Alfred
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Evans, Samuel T. (Glamorgan)
Eve, Harry Trelawney
Farrell, James Patrick
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Field, William
Fitzmaurice, Lord Edmond
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry
Freeman-Thomas, Captain F.
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Grant, Corrie
Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton
Hardie, J.Keir(Merthyr Tydvil)
Harrington, Timothy
Harwood, George
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir Arthur D.
Helme, Norval Watson
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Henderson, Arthur (Durham)
Higham, John Sharpe
Holland, Sir William Henry
Hope, John Deans (Fife, West)
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C.
Hutchinson, Dr. Chas. Fredk.
Hutton, Alfred E. (Morley)
Jacoby, James Alfred
Johnson, John
Jones, D. Brynmor (Swansea)
Jones, William (Carnarvonshire
Jordan, Jeremiah
Kennedy, V. P. (Cavan, W.)
Kilbride, Denis
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Langley, Batty
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cornwall)
Layland-Barratt, Francis
Leese, Sir J. F. (Accrington)
Levy, Maurice
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George David
Lough, Thomas
Lundon, W.
Lyell, Charles Henry
Macnamara, Dr. Thomas J.
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
MacVeagh, Jeremiah
M'Crae, George
M'Hugh, Patrick A.
M'Kean, John
M'Killop, W. (Sligo, North)
Mitchell, Edw. (Fermanagh, N.
Mooney, John J.

Morgan, J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
Moss, Samuel
Moulton, John Fletcher
Murnaghan, George
Murphy, John
Nannetti, Joseph P.
Newnes, Sir George
Nolan, Col. J. P. (Galway, N.)
Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)
Norman, Henry
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Brien, K. (Tipperary, Mid.)
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, N.)
O'Connor, J. (Wicklow, W.)
O'Connor, John (Kildare, N.)
O'Donnell, John (Mayo, S.)
O'Dowd, John
O'Kelly, Conor (Mayo, N.)
O'Kelly, J. (Roscommon, N.)
O'Malley, William
O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
Parrott, William
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, J. A. (Saffron Walden)
Perks, Robert William
Pirie, Duncan V.
Power, Patrick Joseph
Price, Robert John
Rea, Russell
Reckitt, Harold James
Reddy, M.
Redmond, John E. (Waterford)
Reid, Sir R. Threshie (Dumfries)
Richards, T. (W. Monmouth)
Rickett, J. Compton
Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, John
Roe, Sir Thomas
Runciman, Walter
Russell, T. W.
Samuel, Herbert L. (Cleveland)
Schwann, Charles E.
Scott, Chas. Prestwich (Leigh)
Seely, Maj. J. E. B. (Isle of Wight)
Shackleton, David James
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick, B.)
Sheehy, David
Shipman, Dr. John G.
Sinclair, John (Forfarshire)
Slack, John Bamford
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Soames, Arthur Wellesley
Soares, Ernest J.
Spencer, Rt. Hn. C. R. (Northants
Stanhope, Hon. Philip James
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Sir Edward
Sullivan, Donal
Taylor, Theodore C. (Radcliffe)
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, A. (Carmarthen, E.)
Thomas, Sir A. (Glamorgan, E.
Thomas, David A. (Merthyr)
Thomas, JA (Glamorgan, Gower
Thomson, F. W. (York, W.R.)
Tomkinson, James
Toulmin, George
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Ure, Alexander
Waldron, Laurence Ambrose
Wallace, Robert
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
WarnerThomeas Courtenay T.
Wason, Eugene, (Clackmannan)
Wason, J. Cathcart (Orkney)
Weir, James Galloway
White, George (Norfolk)
White, Luke (York, E.R.)
White, Patrick (Meath, North)
Whiteley, George (York, W.R.)
Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, Osmond (Merioneth)
Wills, Arthur W. (N. Dorset)
Wilson, Chas. Henry (Hull, W.)
Wilson, John (Durham, Mid.)
Wood, James
Woodhouse, Sir JT (Huddersf'ld
Young, Samuel
Yoxall, James Henry

Tellers for the Ayes—Mr. Herbert Gladstone and Mr. William M'Arthur.

NOES.

Agg-Gardner, James Tynte
Agnew, Sir Andrew Noel
Aird, Sir John
Allhusen, Augustus Henry E.
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Arkwright, John Stanhope
Arnold-Forster, Rt. Hon. H. O.
Arrol, Sir William
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Aubrey-Fletcher, Rt Hn. Sir H.
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Bain, Colonel James Robert
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch'r)
Balfour, RtHnGerald W. (Leeds
Balfour, Kenneth R. (Christch.
Banbury, Sir Frederick George
Barry, Sir Francis T. (Windsor)
Bartley, Sir George C. T.
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach, Rt. Hn. Sir Michael Hicks
Bentinck, Lord Henry C.
Bignold, Sir Arthur
Bigwood, James
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bond, Edward
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith
Boulnois, Edmund
Bowles, Lt.-Col. H. F. (Middlesex
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brown, Sir A. H. (Shropshire)
Brymer, William Ernest
Bull, William James
Burdett-Coutts, W.
Campbell, Rt. Hn. J. A (Glasgow)
Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin Univ.
Carson, Rt. Hon. Sir Edw. H.
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbyshire
Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)
Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. (Birm.
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. JA (Worc.
Chapman, Edward
Clare, Octavius Leigh
Coates, Edward Feetham
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Rt. Hn. Sir John C. R.
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Compton, Lord Alwyne
Corbett, T. L. (Down, North)
Craig, Chas. Curtis (Antrim, S.)
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Crossley, Rt. Hon. Sir Savile
Cubitt, Hon. Henry
Cust, Henry John C.
Dalkeith, Earl of
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Davenport, William Bromley
Davies, Sir H. D. (Chatham)
Denny, Colonel
Dickson, Charles Scott
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. Dixon
Douglas, Rt. Hn. A. Akers
Doxford, Sir William Theodore
Duke, Henry Edward
Durning-Lawrence, Sir Edwin
Dyke, Rt. Hn. Sir William Hart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Faber, Edmund B. (Hants, W.)
Fardell, Sir T. George
Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J. (Mancr.
Fielden, Edward Brocklehurst
Finch, Rt. Hon. George H.
Finlay, Sir R. B. (Invern'ss B'ghs
Firbank, Sir Joseph Thomas
Fisher, William Hayes
FitzGerald, Sir Robert Penrose
Fitzroy, Hon. Edw. Algernon
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Flower, Sir Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Foster, P. S. (Warwick, S.W.)
Galloway, William Johnson
Gardner, Ernest
Garfit, William
Gibbs, Hon. A. G. H.
Godson, Sir Augustus Fredk.
Gordon, Hn. J. E. (Elgin & Nairn
Gordon, Maj Evans-(T'r H'mlets
Gore, Hon. S. F. Ormsby-
Goschen, Hon. George Joachim
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Green, W. D. (Wednesbury)
Greene, Sir EW (B'ry S. Edm'nds
Greene, H. D. (Shrewsbury)
Greene, W. Raymond (Cambs.)
Grenfell, William Henry
Gretton, John
Greville, Hon. Ronald

Hall, Edward Marshall
Halsey, Rt. Hon. Thomas F.
Hambro, Charles Eric
Hamilton,Marq of(L'nd'nderry
Hardy, L. (Kent, Ashford)
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Harris, F. Leverton (Tynem'th
Haslam, Sir Alfred S.
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Hay, Hon. Claude George
Heath,SirJames (Staffords.NW
Heaton, John Henniker
Helder, Augustus
Henderson,SirA. (Stafford, W.)
Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T.
Hickman, Sir Alfred
Hoare, Sir Samuel
Hobhouse,RtHnH. (Somers'tE
Hope,J.F.(Sheffield, Brightside
Horner, Frederick William
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Hoult, Joseph
Houston, Robert Paterson
Howard,J.(Midd., Tottenham)
Hozier, Hn. James Henry Cecil
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hunt, Rowland
Hutton, John (Yorks., N.R.)
Jameson, Major J. Eustace
Jeffreys, Rt. Hn. Arthur Fred.
Jessel, Capt. Herbert Merton
Kennaway, Rt. Hn. Sir John H
Kenyon, Hn. Geo. T.(Denbigh)
Kenyon-Slaney, Rt. Hn. Col.W
Kerr, John
Keswick, William
Kimber, Sir Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles, Sir Lees
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Law, Andrew Bonar (Glasgow
Lawrence,SirJoseph(Monmouth
Lawrence, Wm. F. (Liverpool)
Lawson, Hn.H.L.W. (Mile End)
Lawson, John G. (Yorks., N.R.
Lee, ArthurH.(Hants.,Fareham
Lees, Sir Elliott (Birkenhead)
Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage
Llewellyn, Evan Henry
Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
Long,Col. Chas. W. (Evesham)
Long, Rt. Hon. W. (Bristol, S.)
Lonsdale, John Brownlee
Lowe, Francis William
Lowther, C. (Cumb., Eskdale)
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lucas, Col. Francis (Lowestoft)
Lucas, Reginald J. (Portsm'th)
Lyttelton, Rt. Hon Alfred
Macdona, John Cumming
MacIver, David (Liverpool)
M'Calmont, Colonel James
M'Iver,SirLewis(Edinburgh, W
Majendie, James A. H.
Malcolm, Ian
Manners, Lord Cecil
Marks, Harry Hananel
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W.F.
Maxwell,Rt HnSirH.E (Wigt'n
Maxwell,W. J.H. (Dumfriessh.
Milvain, Thomas
Molesworth, Sir Lewis
Montagu, G. (Huntingdon)
Montagu, Hn. J. Scott (Hants).
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Moore, William
Morgan, D. J. (Walthamstow)
Morpeth, Viscount
Morrell, George Herbert
Morton, Arthur H. Aylmer
Mount, William Arthur
Mowbray, Sir Robert Gray C.
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry
Myers, William Henry
Nicholson, William Graham
Palmer, Sir Walter (Salisbury)
Parker, Sir Gilbert
Parkes, Ebenezer
Peel, Hn. Wm. Robt. Wellesley
Pemberton, John S. G.
Percy, Earl
Pierpoint, Robert
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plummer, Sir Walter R.
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Pym, C. Guy
Rankin, Sir James
Rasch, Sir Frederic Carne
Ratcliff, R. F.
Reid, James (Greenock)
Remnant, James Farquharson
Renshaw, Sir Charles Bine
Renwick, George
Ridley, S. Forde
Roberts, Samuel (Sheffield)
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Robinson, Brooke
Rolleston, Sir John F. L.
Rothschild, Hn. Lionel Walter
Round, Rt. Hn. James
Royds, Clement Molyneux
Rutherford, John (Lancashire)
Rutherford, W. W. (Liverpool)
Sackville, Col. S. G. Stopford
Samuel, Sir H. S. (Limehouse)
Sandys, Lieut.-Col.Thos. Myles
Sassoon, Sir Edward Albert
Scott, Sir S. (Marylebone, W.)
Seton-Karr, Sir Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw-Stewart, SirH (Renfrew)
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Smith, A. H. (Hertford, East)
Smith,RtHnJ.Parker (Lanarks
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Spear, John Ward
Stanley, Hn. Arthur(Ormskirk)
Stanley, Rt. Hn. Lord (Lancs.)
Stewart, Sir Mark J. M'Taggart
Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Stroyan, John
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Talbot,Rt.Hn.J.G.(Oxf'd Univ
Thorburn, Sir Walter
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Sir Wm. Edw. M.
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Tuff, Charles
Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward
Tuke, Sir John Batty
Turnour, Viscount
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent,Col.Sir CEH (Sheffield)
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Walrond,Rt.Hn.SirWilliam H.
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Warde, Colonel C. E.
Welby,Lt.-Col.A.C.E. (Taunt'n
Welby,SirCharles G.E. (Notts.)
Wentworth, Bruce C. Vernon-
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Wilson, A.Stanley (York, E.R.)
Wilson, John (Glasgow)
Wilson-Todd,Sir W.H.(Yorks.)
Wodehouse,Rt.Hn.E.R. (Bath)
Worsley-Taylor, Henry Wilson
Wortley,Rt. Hn. C. B. Stuart
Wrightson, Sir Thomas
Wyndham, Rt. Hon. George
Yerburgh, Robert Armstrong

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—Sir Alexander Acland - Hood and Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.

Main Question again proposed.

Motion made, and Question, "That the debate be now adjourned,"—(Mr. John Redmond)—put, and agreed to.

Debate to be resumed upon Monday next.

PREFERENTIAL AND RETALIATORY DUTIES.

Order [2nd February, 1904] that the Return relative to Preferential and Retaliatory Duties do lie upon the Table, read, and discharged. Paper withdrawn. —(Mr. Victor Cavendish.)

Adjourned at twenty minutes before Six o'clock till Monday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 20th February, 1905.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

Central Electric Supply Bill [H.L.]; County of London Electric Supply Company Bill [H.L.]; Dearne Valley Railway Bill [H.L.]; London and India Docks Company Bill [H.L.]; Medway and Thames Canal Bill [H.L.]; Shepton Mallet Gas Company (Electric Lighting) Bill [H.L.]; Buenos Ayres Grand National Tramways Bill [H.L.]; Wellingborough and District Tramroads and Electricity Supply Bill [H.L.]. Presented; read 1ª; and referred to the Examiners.

Marylebone Chapels Bill [H.L.]; Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Naval Works (Portsmouth Barracks Site) Bill [H.L.]; West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Bill [H.L.]. Presented, and read 1ª.

Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Bill. Brought from the Commons, and (pursuant to the Resolutions of the 8th of August last), read 1ª, 2ª, and committed.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TREATY SERIES, No. 3 1905.

Agreements between the United Kingdom and France referring to arbitration the question of the grant of the French flag to Muscat dhows; signed at London, 13th October, 1904, and 13th January, 1905. (Ratifications of agreement of 13th October, 1904, exchanged at London, 18th January, 1905.)

STATISTICS.

Statistical abstract for the British Empire in each year from 1889 to 1903. First Number.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member.

PRISONS, ENGLAND AND WALES (VISITING COMMITTEES).

Draft rules proposed to be made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department under the Prison Acts, 1877 and 1898, with respect to the constitution of the Visiting Committee of Stafford Prison.

NATIONAL DEBT (MILITARY SAVINGS BANKS).

Account of the gross amount of all moneys received and paid by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, on account of the Fund for Military Savings Banks, from 19th September, 1845, to 5th January, 1905.

BANK OF ENGLAND.

Applications made by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England for advances to Government authorised by Parliament from 5th January, 1904, to 5th January, 1905.

SUPERANNUATION.

Treasury Minute, dated 16th February, 1905, declaring that Edward George Gausden, labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service certificate through inadvertence on the part of the head of his Department.

BANKRUPTCY.

General rules, dated 5th January, 1905, made pursuant to Section 127 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

NEW BILL.

SUNDAY CLOSING (SHOPS) BILL [H.L.].

An Act to provide for the closing of shops and the prohibition of street trading on Sunday. Was presented by the Lord Avebury; read 1ª; and to be printed. (No. 10.)

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING.

The Earl of MEATH: My Lords, I rise, in accordance with notice, to draw the attention of His Majesty's Government to the following paragraph from the pen of Field-Marshal Earl Roberts, K.G., which appeared in an article in the January number of the Nineteenth Century and After—

> "I maintain that it is the bounden duty of the State to see that every able-bodied man in this country, no matter to what grade of society he may belong, undergoes some kind of military training in his youth, sufficient to enable him to shoot straight and carry out simple orders if ever his services are required for national defence."

and to ask whether, in view of the above expression of opinion in favour of the military training of youths from so eminent an authority as Earl Roberts, His Majesty's Government will take steps to appoint a War Office and Board of Education Inter-Departmental, or other Committee, to consider and report on the best means of carrying such training into effect?

To justify universal military training for lads two questions must be answered in the affirmative. They are (1) is some form of universal military training necessary for the safety of the Empire? (2) would such training given in youth be sufficient to meet the military requirements? Now, with regard to the first question, it seems to me that no individual who has given attention to the subject of the defence of the Empire can come to any other conclusion than that it would be impossible, if we were at war with a first-class Power, to come out successfully with the form of military service which we have at present. We have an ever-increasing Empire with extensive land frontiers, and I am afraid there are many who do not appreciate the extent of those frontiers. For so long in our history were we an island kingdom that we have got accustomed to think that we still are more or less an island Empire. But is that the fact? It is anything but the fact.

If we look into the matter, we find that our Empire has extensive frontiers conterminous with the United States, France, Germany, Russia, Spain, Portugal, Holland, Belgium—if the Congo Free State be considered as practically administered by Belgium—Italy, Turkey, China, Persia, Siam, Mexico, Venezuela, and Guatemala, and with numberless semi-civilised or barbarous States and tribes with whom, do what we will, we must often come into hostile contact. The dominions of the King are to be found in Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australia, and the land frontiers of our Empire are probably more extensive than those of any other Power in the world.

What the actual length of our land frontiers is I have not been able accurately to discover, but I can give your Lordships an idea of them by saying that the frontier of Canada alone, including Alaska, is over 6,000 miles in length. It is about the same length as the new line of railway from St. Petersburg to Port Arthur.

It is most earnestly to be hoped that we shall never be at war with our friends the United States. We hope that such a calamity may never overtake the world. But still it is only right for a nation to consider all eventualities, and because we hope never to go to war we ought not to neglect to be prepared for war even against those with whom we think there is little chance of ever having to contend. Here we have a frontier of 6,000 miles to defend. Now, it may be said that we have the pre-eminence on the sea. So we have. May we long maintain it. It is absolutely necessary for our Empire that we should have predominance at sea; we should be starved out if we failed to maintain that predominance. Moreover, we should be unable to defend our Empire by conveying our troops across the ocean. On the other hand, we must remember that, although we may possess that predominant power at sea, still it will not in any way prevent certain nations from being able to make land wars upon us. The United States would be one.

Coming over to Europe and Asia, we find that there are other powerful nations that could attack us by land. I allude in the first place to Russia, and if Russia were combined, which is not impossible, with Germany and France, we should have to fight Russia, Germany, and France by land. At this moment there are two lines of railway that come direct from St. Petersburg to the Afghan and close to the British frontiers—the one line approaching from the Caspian, the other from the Trans-Siberian line, emerging, the former at Kushk, and the latter very shortly at Farmys. Both these lines are united, and, therefore, the power of Russia could be brought from east and west to converge in two lines on our Afghan frontier. Let us consider what this portends. It means that the Anglo-Indian Army, a voluntarily recruited Army, would have to contend with the conscripted millions who could be brought into the field by Russia, or, if allied with Germany and France, by all three Powers, which have at their disposal the entire manhood of their respective nations—in figures 11,000,000 of men.

What number could we bring to oppose these masses? Lord Kitchener has recently been organising the Anglo-Indian Army with a view to its being able to take the field at a moment's notice, and he states that at the first alarm of war he hopes to have at his command some 135,000 British and Indian troops. Well, what are those compared to the enormous masses which could be brought against us from Russia alone? It may be said that we could increase that number under the present system. So we could; but we had an object-lesson in regard to that in South Africa. We know that, with the utmost exertions, and by paying 5s. a day, 230,000 was the highest number of men which the Empire was able to place at one time in the field during that campaign. At this moment we are informed—I take it from Russian sources, and it may be exaggerated—that Russia has some 400,000 men in Manchuria alone, and is reinforcing them at the rate of 25,000 per month. If she is able, with one line of railway, to place such a huge army in the field at a distance of over 6,000 miles, how much easier would it be for her to place her overwhelming forces on the Indian frontier at half that distance and along two lines of railway?

Having shown that the possession of an all-powerful Navy, although imperative on Great Britain if she intends to maintain her Empire, would not prevent certain great Powers from assailing her in vulnerable parts in Asia or America, with all the advantages to be obtained from the enormous numbers raised by conscription, it surely follows that some form of universal military training is necessary for the safety of the Empire. If this be acknowledged, it may be said, "Very well, let us then meet conscription by conscription." Although personally not in favour of what is known on the Continent as conscription, I answer, "By all means, if the country be prepared to accept the burden of universal military service." But is there the least chance of the country doing anything of the sort in time of peace? and when war has once commenced it would then be too late to take effective action. Only after a crushing defeat, and when the shores of Britain were actually either invaded or most seriously threatened, is it likely that the British nation would ever consent to submit to compulsory adult military service. It may be said there is another alternative—that advocated with such force and admirable persistency by the noble Earl who usually sits on the Cross Benches, Lord Wemyss, namely, the enforcement of the ballot. There appears to me even less chance of this ancient enactment being put into force, inasmuch as it is less in touch with modern democratic feeling, which might tolerate universal service but would fight shy of the selective principle.

Very well, my Lords, if there is no chance of obtaining conscription, which I do not want, nor of obtaining the adoption of the Militia ballot, what is to be done? Something must be done, or it is absolutely certain that if we are at war with any great Power we shall find ourselves in a very awkward position. I do not think at this moment we can say that the present Secretary of State for War has been very successful in solving the problem. The objections to adult compulsory military service may, I take it, be summed up as follows:—(1) the infringement of the liberty of the adult citizen; (2) the interference with his industrial pursuits; (3) the disorganisation caused to trade, commerce, and agriculture by the withdrawal of men from their prosecution; (4) the moral objection to the housing of large numbers of men in barracks. None of these objections would be applicable to the training of lads during the educative period of their lives. The liberty of boys is always restrained with universal consent. They are not asked whether they will learn to read or write, but are compelled by law to submit to tuition. Now, I ask, what would be the hardship of requiring the lads to perfect themselves in another branch of knowledge, that of being able to use the rifle? To my mind it would be exceedingly popular. The lads would like it; they would not attempt to run away from it; they would look upon it as a sport. Such training could be given so as not in the least to interfere with their preparation for the business of life. On the contrary the discipline and healthy exercise would improve their health, strengthen their moral and physical fibre, and add to their professional, industrial, or labour value when they attained to manhood and entered on the serious business of their lives.

Now, let us consider the second question which I commenced my remarks by saying required an affirmative answer in order to justify the adoption of universal military training of lads. Would such training given in youth be sufficient to meet the military requirements? The extract quoted in my Question gives the latest opinion of Lord Roberts on this point, and I may add that a few years ago he stated that—

> "Lads who have been efficiently trained would probably become quite as efficient soldiers as would Reserve men after they had been away from the colours for three or four years."

The truth of this statement was amply proved by the Natal Cadets in the South African War, to whom Lord Roberts was referring when at Pietermaritzburg he said—

> "I hope the old country will follow the example of one of her children and insist upon all boys joining cadet corps."

Lord Roberts is not alone amongst distinguished soldiers in thus highly rating the value of youthful training, and I shall take the liberty of quoting other opinions to your Lordships in a moment. The South African War showed plainly that under modern conditions our Army is inadequate to compete with first-class nations, and that, therefore, some plan must be devised by which we shall be able, in time of need, largely to increase our Army.

If training in youth were made universal, not only would the adult male be capable of taking his place in the ranks, but, what is of still greater importance almost, the spirit of patriotism and the sense of duty would be quickened in the nation, and in time of difficulty young men would rush to the ranks and compulsion would be unnecessary. Moreover, by the training of young men no military caste or profession would be created which would desire war. There are a number of people who are terribly afraid of militarism. Since it became known that I intended to speak to-night on this subject, I have received remonstrances with regard to my wicked desire to create wars and increase militarism. Now, if I felt in the smallest degree that I was doing that I should have absolutely nothing further to say; but I feel perfectly certain that the very reverse would be the case. I notice in foreign newspapers that there is a very strong feeling abroad that we are much more likely to go to war than any other nation, from the very fact that so large a proportion of our population know that under no circumstances could they suffer in their bodies by war. Whether that is true or not it is difficult to say, but I certainly think there is a good deal in it, and that if every lad were trained to arms and taught that it was his duty, if necessary, to come forward and volunteer for the service of the country he would think twice before he went to a music-hall and waved a British flag with a view to creating a war simply and solely for the sake of glory. He would have to take part in that war, and he would think twice before he rushed into it. That is my firm opinion. In other words, there would be much less chance of militarism if our youths were trained to arms and knew in some degree what war meant, with all its horrors. There would, indeed, be much less music-hall vicarious pseudo-patriotism which calls for war, and which, when blows are struck, is willing to shelter itself behind a professional army. The sense of duty and moral responsibility would be quickened.

What do we see taking place in Japan? The spirit of Japan has been an object-lesson to the world, and I hope we are learning from it. It may not be known to all your Lordships that it is not altogether to the military efficiency of the Japanese army, in the sense of great preparations, that their success has been due. The success has been attained in the schools of Japan. Ever since the revolution in 1867, day by day Bushido, or the spirit of chivalry, has been taught in the schools—patriotism, obedience to authority, self-sacrifice. The children are taught that the individual is nothing and that the State is everything. In every school in Japan there is a picture of the Emperor, veiled. It is not shown except on three or four days in the year, when it is unveiled with great ceremony. All these things tend to create a patriotic spirit, and we see what has been the effect of it in this war. It is not only in war that this spirit can be seen. In a few years time I venture to prophesy that we shall see the same spirit thrown into the avocations of peace.

The spirit which makes a man do the best for his country under all circumstances will come to the front in Japan. A man will not consider whether he is receiving perhaps a few pence or a few pounds more than he ought; he will do the best work he can for his country's sake and for the honour of his country; and by that means I believe the training the youth are receiving in Japan is not only one for war but one calculated for peace. I wish to see some kind of imitation of Bushido in our schools. I want to see the children trained, not in militarism, but to understand the horrors of war and to be able to take their part in avoiding, if possible, those horrors coming upon the shores of our Empire. It is a curious fact, but it was told to me yesterday by a distinguished ex Cabinet Minister of Japan, that the idea of training the youth of that country to arms in the schools came from this country—this country that has not adopted this country that is so afraid of putting arms into the hands of its lads.

My opinion on this subject is of absolutely no weight whatever, but I should like to call witnesses whose opinions are worth considering. In the first place I should like to call as a witness Dr. Macnamara, a Liberal Member of Parliament. Dr. Macnamara says that—> "He would make gymnastic training a compulsory feature of every evening continuation school. He would go still further. He thought that every young man between sixteen and twenty ought by law to be compelled to give two hours a night for two nights a week, for two years, to compulsory physical evening training, which would include first-class gymnastic training, such formations as might be necessary for the moving together of large bodies of men, and practice in the use of the rifle. That was not conscription. Conscription, of course, was a very ugly word which we must never mention. But what he suggested was, in his opinion, one way of obviating conscription. Every young fellow who was physically fit should be compelled to undergo that course."

I have read the views of Lord Roberts. I will now quote a former Liberal Prime Minister, who telegraphed to me that he was unable to be in his place to-day—I refer to Lord Rosebery. Lord Rosebery, in a letter to Mr. G. S. Hazlehurst, late Mayor of Birkenhead, dated October 31st, 1903, said that—

> "I quite agree with the view expressed by Lord Kitchener that it is very desirable that some elementary military training should be added to the curriculum of instruction in public schools."

That distinguished General Sir Ian Hamilton, whose deeds in South Africa still ring in our ears, stated in his evidence before the Scottish Commission on Physical Training that—

> "He would feel very confident of obtaining creditable results if he were placed in command of a mounted infantry brigade composed of boys who had previously been well grounded in handling arms, in skirmishing, and the attack."

About an hour ago I received a letter from Lord Methuen expressing his firm belief that there is a great future before this movement, and appealing for the support of the governing body of schools and the powerful influence of county councils through their education committees in bringing it about. In an article in this month's Nineteenth Century and After Lord Methuen urges the military training of boys, and recalls the old English law that every lad should be an expert with the bow and arrow. I will now quote a witness from Canada. General Lord Dundonald, referring to the cadet system in Canada, says—

> "Youth is the time for improvement—the season for preparation. A well-trained and disciplined cadet, with all the self-sacrifice that this involves, will not only be of great value to his country when it needs him, but he will be a better citizen and a better man."

Admiral Lord Charles Beresford has said that—

> "Lads should be taught to load and fire rifles at 100 yards and have to undergo company drill and discipline. Such lessons, once learned, are never forgotten."

Major-General Sir Edmund Barrow says that—

> "When every healthy boy in the United Kingdom has been compelled by law to learn the rudiments of discipline and the use of arms; when he is fitted by early training to take his place in the defence of his country or its interests; when he is taught that the profession of arms is an honourable one, and that his first duty is to his country, then we may be sure that the Army will be popular and will attract to its ranks the flower of the nation's youth. That, to my mind, is the bedrock of military organisation."

I would desire, through the noble Earl Lord Donoughmore, to draw the special attention of the Secretary of State for War, who professes to be so anxious to popularise the Army, to these remarks. My witnesses are not all military men. I have already quoted the remarks of Lord Rosebery and of Dr. Macnamara, M.P. I will now call upon headmasters as represented by the Rev. C. G. Gull, who, on November 25th, 1902, said—

> "The aim which both the Headmasters' Conference and the Headmasters' Association, the two bodies which together represent the whole of the public secondary schools, have set before the War Office and before themselves is that every boy, if in sufficient bodily health, in their schools should be trained to the use of arms."

The Earl of Meath.

Next I will call as a witness one of our most distinguished Empire-makers, Sir George Taubman-Goldie, who in his note attached to the Report of the Royal Commission on the South African War advocates national juvenile military education—

> "As vital to the security of the British Empire," and he states that he—

> "Is firmly of opinion that it would result in great diminution of expenditure by permitting a large reduction of the number of men serving with the colours."

Our Colonies are far ahead of us in this respect. All our Colonies, more or less, have got trained cadets, and in Canada they have lately reorganised their cadet system and placed it on a satisfactory footing. In Australia the cadets are under the Commonwealth Defence Act. In his report on the military forces of the Commonwealth, General Hutton says—

> "It is impossible to overestimate the value of military discipline on the rising generation."

In Natal a staff officer for cadets has been appointed, and in his report the Commandant of the Natal Volunteers refers to the appointment as an "important one," and adds—

> "When it is remembered that the future defence of the colony is in the hands of our youth the importance of early training in the use of arms is one that no State, looking to the future, can afford to neglect."

In New Zealand, owing largely to the influence of Mr. Seddon who is a great enthusiast for the training of lads to arms, the number of cadets has increased from 4,126 in July, 1902, to 12,000 in 1904. When we consider what the population of that little island is, I think it will be seen that New Zealand has produced a very large number of trained lads. With regard to these cadets, the Prime Minister of New Zealand writes—

> "It would be difficult to lay sufficient stress on the importance to be attached to the cadet movement in this colony."

Now, what is the position at home? The War Office recognises such training. It is not compulsory as in many of our Colonies, but as long as boys wear uniform—and this is a sine qua non—the War Office will supply free arms and ammunition to the boys—i.e., 50 per cent. serviceable arms, 50 per cent. defective, or D. P. arms, and eighty rounds miniature or sixty rounds ball per boy. The restriction of the Government grant to the corps which can provide themselves with uniforms practically gives the grant to the sons of rich men and withholds it from the sons of poor men. This is an invidious anomaly which should be rectified.

The Lad's Drill Association, of which I am chairman, has approached the Government and asked that the sons of men who cannot afford uniform should be placed on the same footing as the sons of richer men as regards ammunition, and that one serviceable rifle be given for every fifteen boys. This is a very modest proposal. It is less than what strict justice would demand, but even this proposal has not yet been accepted. I trust that it may not be long before the Government will recognise that the best and most economical guarantee of national security and of peace would be the universal training of British youths to arms, following the wise and patriotic example set to the Motherland by her self-governing Colonies. If this were done, I am confident that the Empire would never need to resort to any system of compulsion in order to fill the ranks of her Army. In time of need the trained manhood of the country would rush to arms, and those who offered themselves would not be, as was so often the case in the Boer War, men who were absolutely useless in the field, but those who from their youth had been made familiar with the use of weapons, and with bodies and minds strengthened and quickened by healthy exercise and by wholesome discipline. We who advocate this training entertain the ideal so well expressed by Dr. Morrison, Principal of the Presbyterian College at Melbourne, when, in an address presented to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, Patron of the Lads' Drill Association, he said—

> "We have striven to send forth from our schools good and true men, loyal and patriotic citizens, who will not only do their work well in every social, civil, and religious capacity, but will fight, if need be, for their King and country, as so many of our old boys recently have fought."

*EARL STANHOPE: My Lords, I rise to say a few words in support of the proposal brought forward by the noble Earl. I feel as strongly as he does the necessity of military education being afforded in the schools, not only of the rich, but of the poor, and of instruction being given in the use of the rifle. It is not only good for the health of lads that they should be trained to bear arms and obey orders, but it is absolutely necessary that some attention should be given in this country to rifle-shooting. Noble Lords are aware that at our public schools very efficient Volunteer corps have been created and are supported by the masters of those schools. Harrow, Eton, and Winchester have their Volunteer corps, but the restriction, which has been referred to by the noble Earl, of the Government grant to the corps which can provide themselves with uniform, certainly ought to be done away with if possible. I hold very strongly that it is not only the sons of rich men who ought to be taught military training, but also those of the poor.

If I may be allowed to state a case within my own knowledge, I would inform your Lordships that in an industrial school of which I have been for thirty years chairman, in the county of Kent, we there train the boys on military lines. Two hundred boys are drilled in a military way by a drill-master, and we have also lately established a rifle-gallery where they are taught the use of the rifle. I was able some time ago, by the aid of the War Office, to purchase about 200 disused rifles. The price was certainly within our means, for we were only charged 1s. 6d. each. They were useless, the barrels being condemned, but we bought them in order that the lads might be exercised in rifle drill. We now have amongst the lads many excellent shots. That is only one instance. I hope this movement will receive support from His Majesty's Government and in the schools of the country, and that every lad will undergo sufficient military training in his youth to enable him to shoot straight and carry out simple orders if ever his services are required for national defence. I trust my noble friend the Under-Secretary of State for War will find it possible to give a favourable answer to my noble friend.

*EARL EGERTON: My Lords, I desire to say a few words in support of this proposal. No one who lives in the neighbourhood of the large and populous districts in Lancashire and Cheshire, as I do, can have failed to observe the great physical deterioration in the rising generation. That can be to a very large extent counteracted by giving them healthy exercise, and I believe it is admitted by everyone that no exercise is more beneficial than the ordinary military drill. It gives lads respect for discipline and order, and leads to their becoming, when they leave school, not hooligans, but respectable members of society. I have supported these cadet corps in my neighbourhood, but owing to their not being sufficiently encouraged by the Government, they are unable to get the necessary rifles or to go into camp, and it is essential, in the case of corps in large towns, that they should be able to go into camp. In Macclesfield a Patriotic Association, I believe with the approval of the Education Department, has 2,000 boys and girls under training, the boys in addition to the usual exercises being instructed in the use of the rifle. This example should be followed universally.

Some sort of drill of this kind is necessary for the physical improvement of our rising generation, and is also a great insurance for the defence of the country. That has been clearly shown by my noble friend. It is important that our rising generation should be trained in such a way that the training will be useful to them in after life. Our educational system in the past has not taken sufficiently into consideration the training of character in the case of boys, and instruction in domestic cookery in the case of girls. That is beginning to be improved, but we are still hesitating before adopting a system of compulsory drill in our schools. I know it is very difficult to suggest to the War Office anything which would add to the expense of military defence at this time, but I trust the noble Marquess the Lord President of the Council will see his way to do something in the direction desired. I can assure him that no expense of this kind would be begrudged by the country. We ought not to be behind our Colonies and other countries in this direction. Whether or not we shall come to compulsory military service in this country I do not know. I think we shall, but we are not ready for it yet. If boys were well trained at school they would have very little difficulty in complying with some sort of universal service for, say, a year or two. I trust that something of the kind advocated by the noble Earl may be brought about.

THE EARL OF RANFURLY: My Lords, it has been stated by many that drill in school is a stepping stone to conscription. Personally, I do not think it has anything whatever to do with conscription. I am a firm believer in drill. I had the honour to represent His Majesty in New Zealand during the time that drill in schools was initiated and the cadet corps established. The question arose, would they be popular? I can assure your Lordships that these corps are most popular both with the boys and with their parents. The great difficulty in that country was that there were no proper shooting ranges in the interior, and therefore rifle practice could not be so efficiently carried out as one would wish. The Government, desirous to encourage rifle practice in every way, gave shields as well as monetary prizes, and there were held great competitions amongst the various schools for these prizes.

I hope that compulsory drill, with rifle practice, will be instituted in the State schools of this country. I feel that the boys would be further developed bodily thereby, and that no harm under any circumstances could arise from it. In New Zealand there is, however, one mistake, in my opinion, with regard to these corps, and that is that the State school cadet corps are all under the Education Department. I confess I think they would be better looked after if they were under the Defence Department. However, the Defence Department finds it very difficult to get its Estimates passed. There is no doubt more criticism over them than over the Estimates of the Education Department, and I am pretty certain that this was the reason why the corps were placed under the Education Department.

I do not myself consider that this drill will, as the noble Lord who proposed this said, add to the patriotism of the people. He mentioned that in the schools of Japan a picture of the Emperor was in every school, and was only unveiled on certain occasions. I confess I should like to see throughout the Colonies His Majesty's portrait in schools and public buildings. I do not believe that when I left New Zealand there was anything beyond small photographs of him in the country. I believe it is the same in the other Colonies, and when one remembers that these youths who are now being drilled in the Colonies have never seen the Motherland, one can well understand how desirable it is that they should be brought up to be as patriotic as possible. Though not wishing to inculcate too great a martial spirit in them, I do think something should be done to show them what the Empire is, and who the men are who have made it. I think that this could best be done by some series of lectures under the Education Departments throughout the Colonies of the Empire. I am afraid, however, I am travelling from the subject before your Lordships. In concluding, I can only repeat the hope that the noble Lord will do all in his power to get drill and rifle practice introduced in the schools in this country.

*LORD BALFOUR OF BURLEIGH: My Lords, I did not intend to take part in this discussion when I entered the House a few moments ago, but I rise very respectfully to put in a word of caution, and even of protest, in regard to some of the remarks made by the noble Earl who has just sat down. It seems to me that we are in danger to-night of mixing up two things. There is the military side of this question, and there is the side which is concerned with the perfecting of education, and, incidentally, of physical development. Now, my Lords, I hope that I shall not be taking too great a liberty with your Lordships if I express a very earnest hope that these two aspects of the question will be kept entirely distinct. So far as cadet corps and all agencies for that class of training go, they have, in their own proper place, my warmest and most hearty support, and so, I gather, have they the support of all the noble Lords who have spoken. But I think you will prejudice this movement if you let it go forth to the public that it is only and entirely a part of a defence movement, or that you are in any way whatever, even in the most indirect way, leading up to a system of conscription or of compulsory military service.

I had the honour of doing something, when I was Vice-President of the Council, to give greater encouragement to drill as a part of the regular school curriculum in what we call in Scotland our public schools. I agree with the noble Earl on the Back Benches who praises drill as a means of giving healthy exercise to our rising generation. I believe that in that aspect it is one of the most valuable things you can do. It teaches a boy to obey the word of command; it makes him more capable of organisation in labour; and it gives him a healthy exercise for some of the hours when he may be in the school or its immediate vicinity without unduly wearying his brains, and to that extent I believe you will have absolutely the unanimous support of the whole population for this movement. But it is watched in some quarters, and, in my opinion, rightly watched, with a jealous eye, for fear it unduly encourages what I may call the military spirit.

The noble Earl who introduced this question spoke most temperately and reasonably about it, but the text of his speech was a quotation from an article by the noble and gallant Field-Marshal Lord Roberts, whose words are upon the Paper. These words, and most of the speech of the noble Earl on the Cross Benches, seemed to me reasonably and properly directed towards the encouragement of cadet corps rather than drill in ordinary schools. If I rightly understood the noble Earl who spoke last, he would like to see the cadet-corps principle extended down into all the schools. Now, my Lords, I think that would be a fatal mistake. I am prepared to advocate ordinary physical drill as a compulsory subject in part of the general curriculum of education: I am not prepared to advocate to the same extent anything which seems to train the military side of human nature. It is because I am in favour of the movement in its general principle, because I am anxious that it should not be prejudiced by undue association with the idea of conscription, that I rise to enter my protest. I would prefer to see it under the control of the education authorities rather than under the control of the military authorities, although I need hardly say that the education authorities would not be as wise as I believe they are, both in England and Scotland, if they did not take counsel with the military authorities as to the best means of carrying out the drill. At the same time I do think, differing from the noble Earl who spoke last, that this matter is safer in the hands of the education authorities to be developed on its educational side, rather than upon the other side to which reference has been made to-night.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (The Earl of DONOUGHMORE): My Lords, I can assure the noble Earl on the Cross Benches that I have no quarrel with him whatever for having introduced this subject, to which I know he has given such great attention, and in connection with which he is, and always has been, such an enthusiast. The noble Earl supported his case with arguments that were both theoretical and practical. My objections to what he advocates are mainly practical, and practical largely, I think, for a financial reason. I entirely agree with all that has been said as to the necessity of engendering discipline among our young people, and of encouraging a spirit of patriotism; but I am not convinced that compulsory military training in our schools is the only way by which these desirable ends can be attained. I have a very small experience as a manager of a board school. My tenure of that post was short, but it was sufficient to convince me of the excellence of the discipline which is maintained in our board schools—discipline which I am perfectly certain cannot have other than a most beneficial effect. As regards encouraging a spirit of patriotism, I am not prepared to admit that we, as a nation, are unpatriotic.

THE EARL OF MEATH: I did not say that. What I said was that I did not think sufficient stress was laid on the teaching of patriotism.

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: Well, my Lords, I am not prepared to admit that there is any very great necessity for teaching it more than we do teach it. I entirely accept the noble Earl's correction; but it is sometimes argued in certain quarters that we are not as patriotic a nation as we used to be. I am not prepared to admit that argument, which is generally put forward without proof. Again, I cannot admit that we should be justified for this reason in coming forward and advocating compulsory drill in our schools. We already do something on a voluntary basis. This fact was referred to by the noble Earl in his speech. A drill book has been issued, through the Board of Education, for the use of schools, if they choose to adopt it. We are prepared to inspect the drill classes of any schools which ask us to so inspect them. Indeed we offer our services to them. We supply them with Morris tube carbines at a cheap rate, though not always at quite so cheap a rate as that mentioned by my noble friend behind me. We give them Morris tube ammunition, also at a cheap rate. This experiment has been going on for some three years, and, honestly, I cannot say that the results have been very satisfactory.

The noble Earl stated that the headmasters of our schools were keen upon this subject. Our experience, my Lords, will not enable me to agree with him. Some of them are keen, but the majority are indifferent to our offers. We were supplied by the Headmasters' Association with a list of 675 schools. We offered these small services to them. The figures for 1904 are not yet available, but in 1902 only eighty-four—that is, one-eighth of the total number—accepted our offers, and in 1903 only 167, a quarter, accepted them. We naturally made inquiries. We asked our officers in the different parts of the country, who had been entrusted with offering their services to the schools, what in their opinion was the reason the offers had not been more frequently accepted, and the general consensus of their replies amounts to this, that they think headmasters are suspicious of us; they think that the War Office is merely using this as the thin end of the wedge, to introduce compulsory military drill in the schools, the one thing that the noble Earl wants to see introduced there. We have actually had protests from schools, telling us that our offers were not wanted. In view of this evidence, that our offers of aid on a voluntary basis are not very keenly received, the noble Earl will, I am sure, admit that we are right in not believing very strongly that a compulsory attempt would be successful.

THE EARL OF MEATH: Are you speaking of secondary schools?

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: Yes, I am speaking entirely of secondary schools. Therefore, my Lords, with this experience behind us I say we are not encouraged to attempt any starting of compulsory drill in these schools. We object to compulsion for reasons that have been very often discussed in your Lordships' House, and there is no evidence that that strong public opinion is present which would justify us in doing what we could only do by submitting legislation to Parliament. This could not be done by a scheme drawn up by a Committee such as that suggested by the noble Earl. We also object, as I have already hinted, to what we believe would be the cost of this scheme. The noble Earl's demands, I admit at once, are very modest, but Lord Roberts would obviously, from the extract which is quoted, go a great deal further. Indeed, very much more extensive demands have been put forward in times past by the noble Earl himself and by those who think with him. It would naturally be argued that if you made military drill compulsory in schools you would have to pay for it. The same argument was used at the time compulsory education was introduced. We were told that if we forced children to be educated we must give them that education for nothing. We would, therefore, have to provide instructors; we would have to provide accommodation in the schools for instructing the masters; and we would have to provide rifle ranges, rifles, and ammunition.

From the report of a deputation which waited on Mr. Brodrick when my right hon. friend was Secretary of State for War in 1901, I find that the noble Earl himself asked for a grant of 10s. As there are some 60,000 to 70,000 scholars in the secondary schools of this country your Lordships will understand that we should be starting upon a line that might lead us to very considerable expense in the future if we now acceded to the noble Earl's wishes. I notice that one member of the deputation advocated the measure as a means of assistance to clergymen in their parish work. Though I do not wish to say anything disrespectful of parish work, I hardly think this is an ideal to secure which the War Office need necessarily take steps in advance. It is quite true the Colonies do a great deal more than we do in this direction but the Colonies have no big Army to maintain. They are to be congratulated upon the fact that they are able to find money for this purpose, but I am afraid we cannot see our way in this country to do so at any early date. In view of this financial difficulty—a difficulty which I notice was pointed out to the noble Earl by Lord Roberts himself at this deputation in 1901—I am afraid I cannot see that any practical good would be obtained by the appointment of a Committee such as the noble Earl suggests.

It is quite true, as my noble friend Earl Egerton and the noble Lord behind me, Lord Balfour of Burleigh, said, that there is another side to this question, and one which is almost, if not quite, as important as the question of drill, and that is the physical improvement of our people, and no one has shown himself more enthusiastic in that direction than the noble Earl himself. I have always taken, I hope not without success, some interest in the proper development of the human frame, and my experience has led me to believe in the same system of development as that in connection with which the noble Earl is such an enthusiast—the Swedish system, and London owes a great debt of gratitude to the noble Earl for presenting not very long ago a complete system of Swedish apparatus to one of our schools in the South of London. A Committee was assembled by my noble friend the Lord President of the Council, last year, I think.

THE LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL AND PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION (The Marquess of LONDONDERRY): Together with the Scottish Office.

THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: Together with the Scottish Office. The noble Marquess assembled a Committee, and this Committee drew up a new syllabus in connection with physical education which, I believe, has given universal satisfaction. I cannot help fearing that whilst the time at the disposal of physical exercises is not very great in our schools, if we were to impose compulsory drill upon them there might be a danger of that drill being carried out to the sacrifice of some of the time now devoted to physical development, and I myself believe that that would be every bit as disadvantageous to the Army as it would be to the nation at large. I always regret giving an unfavourable answer to one whom I know is enthusiastic in the cause which he advocates, but I hope I have said enough to show that we are not unreasonable in taking up the position that we do, and stating that it is impossible for us to meet the noble Earl's wishes at the present moment.

House adjourned at ten minutes before Six o'clock, till tomorrow, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 20th February, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

ABERDARE TRAMWAYS BILL.

"To enable the Aberdare Urban District Council to make and maintain tramways and street improvements; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

ACCRINGTON CORPORATION BILL.

"To authorise the Corporation of Accrington to construct and work tramways; to execute street works and improvements; and to make further provision for the improvement, local government, and health of the borough of Accrington; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

ACCRINGTON DISTRICT GAS AND WATER BOARD BILL.

"To authorise the Accrington District Gas and Water Board to make new waterworks; to extend their limits of supply for gas and water; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

ACTON SEWAGE BILL.

"To authorise the Urban District Council of Acton to construct and maintain sewerage and sewage outfall works; and to make further provision for the admission of sewage into the Metropolitan Main Drainage System from a portion of the Urban District of Acton; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

ANDOVER LIGHTING AND POWER BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers upon the Andover Lighting and Power Company; and for other purposes, presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

AYLESBURY GAS BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Aylesbury Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

BAKER STREET AND WATERLOO RAILWAY BILL.

"To confer further powers on the Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

BIRMINGHAM CORPORATION BILL.

"To empower the Corporation of Birmingham to construct additional tramways; to make certain street works; to amend certain provisions of the Acts relating to their waterworks undertaking; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

BOLTON CORPORATION BILL.

"To authorise the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Bolton to construct additional waterworks; to make street improvements; to confer upon them further powers with respect to the supply of electricity, streets, buildings, sewers, and drains, and with respect to the local government and health of the borough; to raise additional money; to make further provisions as to rates and rating in the borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

BOOTLE CORPORATION BILL.

"To extend the borough of Bootle; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

BRENTWOOD GAS BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Brentwood Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

BRISTOL CORPORATION BILL.

"To empower the Corporation of Bristol to execute works; to make further provision for the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the city of Bristol; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

BROMPTON, CHATHAM, GILLINGHAM, AND ROCHESTER WATER BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Brompton, Chatham, Gillingham, and Rochester Waterworks Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

CENTRAL LONDON RAILWAY BILL.

"To empower the Central London Railway Company to construct new railways; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

CHANNEL FERRY RAILWAY AND QUAY BILL.

"To incorporate the Channel Ferry Railway and Quay Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

CHARING CROSS, EUSTON, AND HAMPSTEAD RAILWAY BILL.

"To confer further powers on the Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

CHELSEA ELECTRICITY SUPPLY BILL.

"For providing for the extinction of the Founders' Shares of the Chelsea Electricity Supply Company (Limited), and the substitution therefor of Ordinary Shares in the capital of that Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

CITY OF LONDON (ESCAPE FROM FIRE) BILL.

"For the provision of means of escape from fire in and upon buildings within the City of London," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

CLAY CROSS RAILWAY (ABANDONMENT) BILL.

"For the abandonment of the Clay Cross Railway; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

COLNE CORPORATION BILL.

"For making further and better provision in regard to the markets and the supply of gas, water, and electricity by the Corporation of Colne, and the improvement, health, and good government of the borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

CORK JUNCTION RAILWAYS BILL.

"To incorporate the Cork Junction Railways Company, and for making railways in the county borough of Cork and in the East Riding of the county of Cork, and to confer working agreement, subscription, and other powers on certain existing railway companies and others; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

CROYDON CORPORATION BILL.

"To divide the West Ward of the county borough of Croydon, and to increase the number of aldermen and councillors; to authorise the Corporation of the borough to construct and work additional tramways, and to execute certain street improvements; to make further provision for the government and for the preservation of the health of the inhabitants of the borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time,

CROYDON GAS BILL.

"To provide for the transfer to the Croydon Gas Company of the undertaking of the Caterham and District Gas Company; to extend the limits of supply of the Croydon Gas Company; to authorise that Company to raise additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

DUBLIN CORPORATION (SUPERANNUATION) BILL.

"To enable the Corporation of the City of Dublin to grant pensions or other superannuation allowances to artisans, workmen, labourers, and servants in their service, in certain cases; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

DUBLIN UNITED TRAMWAYS BILL.

"To transfer the undertakings of the Dublin United Tramways Company and the Dublin Southern District Tramways Company to the Dublin United Tramways Company (1896), Limited, and to amend the Acts relating to those companies; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

DUBLIN, WICKLOW, AND WEXFORD RAILWAY BILL.

"To confer further powers on the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Company in relation to their general undertaking, and their separate undertaking of the New Ross and Waterford Extension Railways; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

EALING CORPORATION BILL.

"To confer upon the Corporation of the borough of Ealing further powers with respect to their electric lighting undertaking, and with respect to the regulation of streets and buildings, sanitary matters, recreation grounds, and milk supply; and to vest in the Corporation the appointment of collectors of poor rates; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

EDGWARE AND HAMPSTEAD RAILWAY BILL.

"To authorise a deviation of part of the Edgware and Hampstead Railway; and to confer further powers on the Edgware and Hampstead Railway Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

EPPING GAS BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Epping Gas Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GAS LIGHT AND COKE, SOUTH METROPOLITAN, AND COMMERCIAL GAS COMPANIES BILL.

"To amend the Acts relating to the Gas Light and Coke, South Metropolitan, and Commercial Gas Companies with regard to the testing of gas, procedure for forfeitures, and otherwise," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT BERKHAMPSTEAD GAS BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers upon the Great Berkhampstead Gas Light and Coke Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY BILL.

"For conferring further powers on the Great Eastern Railway Company; for enabling the Great Northern and Great Eastern Joint Committee to acquire additional lands; for extending the periods limited for the completion of works by the Company, the Hertfordshire County Council, and the Epping Rural District Council, and for the purchase of lands by the Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT NORTHERN (IRELAND) AND MIDLAND RAILWAYS BILL.

"To provide for the vesting of the undertaking of the Donegal Railway Company in the Midland Railway Company and in a Joint Committee of that Company and the Great Northern Railway Company (Ireland); to incorporate such Joint Committee and to transfer to that Committee certain of the powers of the Great Northern Railway Company (Ireland) in connection with the undertaking of the Strabane and Letterkenny Railway Company; to confer further powers upon the Great Northern Railway Company (Ireland); and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT NORTHERN, PICCADILLY, AND BROMPTON RAILWAY (No. 1) BILL.

"To confer further powers on the Great Northern. Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT NORTHERN, PICCADILLY, AND BROMPTON RAILWAY (No. 2) BILL.

"To empower the Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway Company to construct new railways in extension of their authorised railways; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY BILL.

"To authorise the construction of a bridge over the River Witham at Langrick Ferry, and to confer powers on the Great Northern Railway Company and the county councils of the administrative counties of the parts of Lindsey and the parts of Holland, in the county of Lincoln, with reference thereto; to confer powers on the company with reference to certain footpaths and the purchase of lands; to confirm the purchase of certain lands by the Great Northern and Great Eastern Joint Committee; to extend the time limited for the completion of certain works and the purchase of certain lands by the company; to authorise the abandonment of certain authorised railways at Grantham; to empower the Horncastle Railway Company to raise further moneys by borrowing; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY (ADDITIONAL POWERS) BILL.

"For conferring further powers upon the Great Western Railway Company in respect of their own undertaking, and upon that Company and the London and North Western Railway Company in respect of an undertaking in which they are jointly interested, and upon the Great Western and Metropolitan Railway Companies in respect of an undertaking in which they are jointly interested, for amalgamating the Wye Valley Railway Company and the Lambourn Valley Railway Company with the Great Western Railway Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY (NEW RAILWAYS) BILL.

"For empowering the Great Western Railway Company to construct new railways; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

HALIFAX CORPORATION BILL.

"To confer further powers on the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the county borough of Halifax with respect to the disposal of liquid trade refuse; and for the construction of additional tramways and street widenings; and in regard to streets and buildings; and for the health, local government, and improvement of the borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

HIGHAM AND HUNDRED OF HOO WATER BILL.

"To empower the Higham and Hundred of Hoo Water Company to raise additional capital; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

HITCHIN AND DISTRICT GAS BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers upon the Hitchin Gas Company, Limited; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

HULL, BARNSLEY, AND WEST RIDING JUNCTION RAILWAY AND DOCK BILL.

"To extend the time for the purchase of lands and completion of works authorised by the Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Junction Railway and Dock (South Yorkshire Extension Lines) Act, 1902; to amend the Acts relating to the Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Junction Railway and Dock Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills

ILFRACOMBE HARBOUR AND IMPROVEMENT BILL.

"To confirm an agreement for the acquisition by the Ilfracombe Urban District Council of part and the lease (with an option of purchase) of the remainder of the Ilfracombe Pier and Harbour undertaking, including Lantern Hill and other lands held therewith; and to enable the Council to carry out street improvements; and to make further and better provision for the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

LIVERPOOL CORPORATION BILL.

"For conferring on the Corporation of the City of Liverpool further powers for the protection of the public health; for the better prevention of smoke nuisance, for the regulation of public meetings, and for licensing cattle drovers; for making provisions as to the acquisition of lands by the Corporation and as to the repayment of moneys borrowed by the Corporation for certain objects; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY BILL.

"For conferring further powers upon the London and North Western Railway Company in relation to their own undertaking and upon that Company, in conjunction with the Great Western Railway Company and the Furness Railway Company, in relation to their respective joint undertakings; and upon the North and South Western Junction Railway Company in respect of their undertaking and upon the London and North Western Railway Company in relation to the undertaking of the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LONDON BUILDING ACTS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

"To amend the Acts relating to buildings in London; to confer various powers on the London County Council; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (GENERAL POWERS) BILL.

"To empower the London County Council to execute works and to acquire lands and utilise other lands; to make provisions with respect to milk supply and sale of food and drugs; to authorise the extension of Hampstead Heath and the exchange of lands in connection with parks, commons, and open spaces; to extend the time for the completion of certain authorised works; to provide for the licensing of employment agencies; to empower councils of metropolitan boroughs to supply electric fittings; to confer further powers upon the Council of the Metropolitan Borough of Battersea with respect to Latchmere Allotments; to provide for contributions by the councils of metropolitan boroughs to expenditure by the London County Council; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (TRAMWAYS) BILL.

"To enable the London County Council to construct and work tramways in the County of London, and to deviate the authorised subway from Southampton Row to the Victoria Embankment; to extend the time limited for the completion of certain authorised tramways; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

LONDON GAS BILL.

"To amend the Acts relating to the supply of gas in London, and to make further provisions with reference thereto," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

LONDON PORT AND DOCKS COMMISSION BILL.

"To constitute and incorporate a Commission for the administration of the Port of London and for transferring to the Commission the undertakings of certain dock companies and certain powers and duties of the Conservators of the River Thames and the Watermen's Company; and for other purposes connected therewith," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

LONDON SOUTHERN TRAMWAYS BILL.

"To authorise the use on the tramways of the London Southern Tramways Company of mechanical power and to empower that Company to purchase lands and construct works; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LONDON UNITED TRAMWAYS (EXTENSION OF TIME) BILL.

"To extend the time limited by the London United Tramways Act, 1901, and the London United Tramways Act, 1902, for the construction of tramways and the acquisition of lands," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LOUGHBOROUGH CORPORATION BILL.

"To extend the time limited for the construction of waterworks by the Loughborough Corporation Act, 1897, and to enable the Corporation to purchase further lands, and to borrow further moneys for their waterworks; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

METROPOLITAN ELECTRIC TRAMWAYS BILL.

"To confer powers on the Metropolitan Electric Tramways, Limited, for widening and altering roads and acquiring lands in the county of Middlesex; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

METROPOLITAN PNEUMATIC DESPATCH BILL.

"For incorporating the Metropolitan Pneumatic Despatch Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

MIDLAND RAILWAY BILL.

"To confer additional powers upon the Midland Railway Company for the construction of works and the acquisition of lands; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

MORLEY CORPORATION BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Morley in relation to their water and electric lighting undertakings; and to make further provision in regard to the health, improvement, and good government of the said borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

NORTH EASTERN RAILWAY BILL.

"To confer additional powers upon the North Eastern Railway Company for the construction of new railways, dock works, and other works, and the acquisition of lands; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

NORTH EASTERN RAILWAY (STEAM VESSELS) BILL.

"To authorise the North Eastern Railway Company to own and use vessels for the conveyance of traffic between the ports of Hull and Goole and certain Continental ports, and to subscribe to the funds of steamship companies; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

NORTH EAST LONDON RAILWAY BILL.

"For incorporating the North East London Railway Company, and for empowering them to construct railways from the City of London to Walthamstow, Epping Forest, Waltham Abbey, and Cheshunt; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

NORTH SUSSEX GAS BILL.

"To incorporate the North Sussex Gas Company, and to enable that company to supply with gas certain parishes in the county of Sussex," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

NORWICH UNION LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY BILL.

"To alter the constitution of the Norwich Union Life Insurance Society by substituting a Memorandum and Articles of Association for its existing Laws and Regulations, and to repeal the Acts relating to such Society; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

NOTTINGHAM AND RETFORD RAILWAY BILL.

"To extend the time for the purchase of lands for and the completion of railways authorised by the Nottingham and Retford Railway Act, 1902; to amend that Act in various respects; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

OTLEY GAS AND IMPROVEMENT BILL.

"To empower the Urban District Council of Otley to supply gas, and to provide for the transfer of the undertaking of the Otley Gas Company to the Council, and to make further and better provision with regard to the improvement, health, local government, and finance of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

RATHMINES AND RATHGAR EXTENSION AND IMPROVEMENT BILL.

"To extend the boundaries of the Rathmines and Rathgar Urban District; to confer further powers on the Urban District Council of Rathmines and Rathgar with respect to streets and sanitary and other matters for the improvement and good government of their district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

RHONDDA URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL BILL.

"To extend the time for the purchase of land and construction of waterworks, tramways, street widenings, and other works by the Rhondda Urban District Council; to authorise the Council to construct new gasworks; and to confer upon the Council further powers with regard to the health, improvement, and local government of the district; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

ROTHERHAM, MALTBY, AND LAUGHTON RAILWAY BILL.

"For incorporating the Rotherham, Maltby, and Laughton Railway Company, and authorising them to construct railways in the west riding of the county of York; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

SALE OF BREAD (LONDON) BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the Sale of Bread in the county of London; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

SEAHAM GAS BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers on the Seaham Gas and Lighting Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

SHROPSHIRE AND WORCESTERSHIRE ELECTRIC POWER BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Shropshire and Worcestershire Electric Power Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

SKEGNESS WATER BILL.

"To incorporate and confer powers upon the Skegness Water Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

SOUTHAMPTON AND WINCHESTER GREAT WESTERN JUNCTION RAILWAY (ABANDONMENT) BILL.

"For the abandonment of the Southampton and Winchester Great Western Junction Railway," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

SOUTH METROPOLITAN GAS BILL.

"To provide for the retirement of the gas referees appointed in relation to the testing of gas supplied in the Metropolis; to empower the South Metropolitan Gas Company to purchase lands; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

SOUTH OXFORDSHIRE WATER AND GAS BILL.

"For incorporating and conferring powers on the South Oxfordshire Water and Gas Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

SOUTH SUBURBAN GAS BILL.

"To alter the provisions of the Acts relating to the South Suburban Gas Company with respect to the illuminating power of gas supplied by them and the testing of gas; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

SOUTH WALES ELECTRICAL POWER DISTRIBUTION COMPANY BILL.

"To transfer to and vest in the South Wales Electrical Power Distribution Company the undertaking of the Carmarthenshire Electric Power Company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

STOCKPORT CORPORATION BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the county borough of Stockport with reference to the construction of waterworks and otherwise for the better local government and improvement of the borough; and to make provision with reference to the borrowing powers of the Corporation; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

SUNDERLAND AND SOUTH SHIELDS WATER BILL.

"To authorise the Sunderland and South Shields Water Company to construct additional waterworks; to raise additional capital; to extend the limits of supply of the company; to confer further powers upon the company; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

SWANSEA CORPORATION BILL.

"To make provision for the acquisition by the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Swansea of the undertaking of the Swansea Improvements and Tramways Company; and to confer further powers upon the said Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses in regard to their water undertaking; and the acquisition of lands for street improvements; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

THAMES CONSERVANCY BILL.

"To confer further money and other powers on the Conservators of the River Thames for the deepening, widening, and improvement of its bed and channel; to provide for the licensing of persons in charge of launches propelled by mechanical power on the River Thames; to amend the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

ULSTER AND CONNAUGHT LIGHT RAILWAYS BILL.

"To authorise the Ulster and Connaught Light Railways Company to acquire additional lands; to extend the time limited by the Newry, Keady, and Tynan Light Railway Act, 1900, and the Ulster and Connaught Light Railways Act, 1903, for the compulsory purchase of lands for the purposes thereof, and for the completion of the Railways thereby authorised; to sanction the purchase of the Bessbrook and Newry Railway; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

WALKER AND WALLSEND UNION GAS BILL.

"To empower the Walker and Wallsend Union Gas Company to acquire additional lands and construct additional works; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

WEYBRIDGE AND WALTON-UPON-THAMES ELECTRIC SUPPLY BILL.

"To confer further powers upon the Urban Electric Supply Company, Limited, with respect to their electric lighting undertakings in the urban districts of Weybridge and Walton-on-Thames respectively; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

WHITECHAPEL AND BOW RAILWAY BILL.

"To authorise the Whitechapel and Bow Railway Company to raise additional capital; and the London, Tilbury, and Southend and Metropolitan District Railway Companies to subscribe thereto; and to raise additional capital for that purpose; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

WOOLWICH BOROUGH COUNCIL BILL.

"To authorise the Mayor, Aldermen, and Councillors of the Metropolitan Borough of Woolwich to widen Wickham Lane, Bexley, and to acquire lands for various purposes; and to confer upon the said Mayor, Aldermen, and Councillors further powers with respect to their electrical undertaking; and to make further provisions in regard to the health and government of the borough; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and ordered to be read a second time.

WREXHAM GAS BILL.

"For conferring further powers on the Wrexham Gaslight Company," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LEEDS CORPORATION (CONSOLIDATION) BILL (IN PURSUANCE OF STANDING ORDER OF 10th AUGUST, 1904).

Read the first and second time, and (the Bill having been reported and considered in Session 1904 of Parliament) read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE LEGISLATION PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899.

The Chairman of Ways and Means reported, That, after conferring with the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords for the purpose of determining in which House of Parliament the respective Bills should be first considered, under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, they had determined that the following Bills should originate in the House of Lords, viz.:—Clyde Navigation; Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution). Report to lie upon the Table.

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES, CONGESTED DISTRICTS, AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.

Petition from Liddesdale, for continuance; to lie upon the Table.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS ACT, 1897.

Petition from Bristol, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

DIFFERENTIAL DUTIES.

Copy presented, of Return of Differential Duties imposed, raised, reduced, or repealed in the years 1823, 1824, 1825, 1826, 1842, 1843, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1853, and 1860, stating (1) the rate of duty levied, and (2) the revenue derived from, and the quantities imported of, the articles concerned in the three years preceding and in the three years following such change [by Command]: to lie upon the Table.

NAVY (APPROPRIATION ACCOUNT).

Copy presented, of the Appropriation Account of the Navy for 1903–4, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon, and upon the Store Accounts of the Navy [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 43.]

NATIONAL DEBT (MILITARY SAVINGS BANKS).

Account presented, of the Gross Amount of all Moneys received and paid by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt on account of the Fund for Military Savings Banks, from 19th September, 1845, to the 5th January, 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 44.]

ARMY (APPROPRIATION ACCOUNT).

Copy presented, of the Appropriation Account for 1903–4, with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon, and upon the Store Accounts of the Army [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 45.]

SUPERANNUATION ACT, 1884.

Copy presented, of Treasury Minute, dated 16th February, 1905, declaring that Edward George Gausden, Labourer, Royal Laboratory, War Office, was appointed without a Civil Service certificate through inadvertence on the part of the head of his Department [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).

Copy presented, of Draft Rules proposed to be made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department under the Prisons Acts, 1877 and 1898, with respect to the constitution of the Visiting Committee of Stafford Prison [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

TREATY SERIES (No. 3, 1905).

Copy presented, of Agreements between the United Kingdom and France referring to arbitration the grant of the French flag to Muscat dhows. Signed at London, 13th October, 1904, and 13th January, 1905 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

TRADE REPORTS (ANNUAL SERIES).

Copies presented, of Diplomatic and Consular Reports, Annual Series, Nos. 3324 and 3325 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT (BRITISH EMPIRE).

Copy presented, of Statistical Abstract for the British Empire in each year from 1889 to 1903. First Number [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

BANKRUPTCY (RULES).

Copy presented, of General Rules, dated 5th January, 1905, in pursuance of Section 127 of The Bankruptcy Act, 1883 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PAPERS LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Inquiry into Charities (County of Wilts).—Further Return relative thereto [ordered 9th August, 1901; Mr. Griffith Boscawen]; to be printed. [No. 46.]

Bank of England. — Copy of all applications made by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England for advances to Government authorised by Parliament, from 5th January, 1904, to 5th January, 1905 [by Act]; to be printed. [No. 47.]

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Plans of New Processional Road into Charing Cross.

MR. WHITMORE (Chelsea): To ask the hon. Member for Chorley, as representing the First Commissioner of Works, whether he will have placed in the Tea Room plans showing how the opening of the Mall into Charing Cross will be carried out, and also drawings of any architectural features that are to form part of the general design.

(Answered by Lord Balcarres.) These drawings will be placed in the Tea Room at the earliest date possible.

Promotion and Retirement of Abstractor Clerks in the War Office.

SIR THOMAS ESMONDE (Wexford, N.): To ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether, before replying to the Question put on August 15th last,† he was made aware that the calculation asked for in the cases of the three abstractor clerks superannuated from the War Office at the respective ages of 60, 62, and 60, had been made by that office, and showed that £564 was the actual minimum loss that must be sustained by one of these clerks, owing to his being compulsorily retired at 60 years of age while efficient and with less than 40 years of service; and whether, in view of the pension of £69 per annum granted to a clerk compulsorily retired in 1897 owing to acute incapacity, he will cause an open official inquiry into the treatment of the efficient clerks selected for beneficial promotion from temporary copyists, through which the State has so materially gained in money.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxl., 559.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) I regret I am unable to add to the ample information which has already been given to the hon. Baronet on this subject.

Landing of Fish Illegally Trawled in the Moray Firth.

MR. CROMBIE (Kincardineshire): To ask the Lord Advocate whether, in view of the recommendation by the Fishery Board for Scotland in favour of closing all ports in the Kingdom to fish illegally trawled in the Moray Firth, legislation to effect this purpose will be introduced this session.

(Answered by Mr. Scott Dickson.) The Secretary for Scotland would be glad if the Law affecting the sale of fish caught by trawlers in the Moray Firth were identical in England with that prevailing in Scotland, but on the question of legislation he will confer in the first instance with the President of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries.

Imports of Sugar from Brazil.

MR. BRIGHT (Shropshire, Owestry): To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the imports of sugar into this country from Brazil during the last three years; what are the total exports from this country to Brazil; and whether any communication has been received by His Majesty's Government from the Brazilian Government with respect to the proposed exclusion of Brazilian sugar from this country by the Brussels Convention.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) The imports of sugar from Brazil into the United Kingdom during the last three years were:—1902, 578,030 cwts.; 1903, 78,761 cwts.; 1904, 84,301 cwts. The value of British exports from the United Kingdom to Brazil in 1904 was £5,867,701. The only communication received from the Brazilian Government with regard to the Sugar Convention is a copy of the despatch addressed to the Belgian Government, the purport of which is stated in the printed correspondence (Cd. 2349, p. 10).

Construction of H.M.S. "Orion."

MR. J. F. HOPE (Sheffield, Brightside): To ask the Secretary to the Admiralty what steps are being taken towards the construction of the armoured cruiser "Orion."

(Answered by Mr. Pretyman.) The information desired will be contained in the Explanatory Statement which will shortly be issued by the First Lord of the Admiralty with the Navy Estimates.

Postal Facilities in the North of Ireland.

MR. T. W. RUSSELL (Tyrone, S.): To ask the Postmaster-General whether it is proposed to increase the postal facilities between the North of Ireland and England viâ Greenore; and if he will consider in connection with any such proposal the advisability of authorising letters to be carried from the stations on the Clogher Valley line by the afternoon trains, thus allowing replies to correspondence to be sent on the same day as the receipt thereof (Answered by Lord Stanley.) I am considering the question of improving the mail service between England and the North of Ireland, and the desire of the residents in the Clogher Valley district to participate in any improvement shall receive attention before a decision is arrived at.

Memorial of Belfast Postal Employees.

MR. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): To ask the Postmaster-General if he can state on whose authority the postal superintendent at Belfast, on receipt of a memorial from individual members of the staff, questioned the memorialist as to whether or not assistance was secured by him in preparing the memorial, and demanded the name of the official who rendered such assistance; and was it with his sanction that a male learner was recently severely reprimanded in the name of the Postmaster-General for hesitating to divulge the name of the individual to whom he was indebted under such circumstances.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) As I explained to the hon. Member in my letter of the 30th of November, the superintendent saw that the memorial to which he refers related to an instruction to the postmaster which had not been circulated to the staff, and he acted rightly under the postmaster's authority in inquiring how information had been obtained in regard to instructions which were regarded, and properly regarded, as confidential. A male learner, who refused at first to answer these inquiries, was warned, under my authority, that such refusal was regarded as an act of insubordination.

Learners in Belfast Post Office.

MR. SLOAN: To ask the Postmaster-General if he can state why male learners at Belfast have been informed that they can no longer be relieved from school attendance after they have earned a full proficiency certificate; and whether, in view of the fact that this alteration of the rule involves their giving a four hours per day attendance gratuitously, he will cause an inquiry to be held into this matter.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) As I explained to the hon. Member very fully in my letter of the 30th November last, the instructions which had been issued giving the postmaster authority to excuse the learners at Belfast from further school attendance as soon as they were certified to be fully qualified were subsequently modified to the extent that the postmaster was authorised to use his own discretion in the interests of the learners and of the service as regards requiring a continuance of school attendance. It was found that regular daily practice is necessary to enable qualified learners to maintain their qualifications, and it is very undesirable, therefore, to excuse the fully qualified learners from further school attendance.

Restrictions on Movement of Irish Swine.

MR. DELANY (Queen's County, Ossory): To ask the hon. Member for North Huntingdonshire, as representing the Board of Agriculture, whether he will state (1) what steps were taken by the English Board of Agriculture, before issuing the recent Order imposing restrictions on the movement of Irish swine in this country, to ascertain the extent to which swine fever existed in Ireland; (2) whether the Irish Department of Agriculture was consulted; and, if so, what opinion was expressed by that Department; (3) and whether he can state the number of cases of swine fever which occurred in England and Ireland respectively during the year 1904 amongst pigs reared therein.

MR. DELANY: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, (1) whether the Department of Agriculture made any representations to the English Board of Agriculture with reference to the recent Order of the latter body placing restrictions on the importations of Irish swine; (2) and whether, considering the importance of the pig-rearing industry to the poorer districts of Ireland, and in view of the fact that swine fever is practically non-existent in the country, he will take steps to have the Order revoked.

(Answered by Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.) Perhaps I may be allowed to include in my reply an Answer to the hon. Member's Question addressed to my right hon. friend the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. The Board were in frequent communication with the Irish Department of Agriculture prior to the passing of the Order to which the hon. Member refers, and they gave the fullest consideration to the desire expressed by the Department that if possible the imposition of any restrictions on the movement of swine from Ireland into Great Britain should be avoided. The number of outbreaks which occurred in Great Britain and Ireland last year was 1,196 and 182 respectively, but the figures are not in any way comparable, the definition of an outbreak differing materially in the two countries. I may add that the recent action of the Board was founded upon the fact that in Ireland no precautionary measures are taken against the movement of diseased swine or of swine which may have been exposed to infection, such as those which have been adopted with so much success in Great Britain. Experience has shown that the Board cannot, consistently with safety against the introduction of disease, accord more favourable treatment to Irish swine than is allowed in the case of pigs moved from one part of Great Britain to another.

Dir and Nowagai.

Sir BRAMPTON GURDON (Norfolk, N.): To ask the Secretary of State for India what is the distance by road from the British-Indian frontier to the chief town of the Khan of Dir; whether the movable column, under orders to proceed from Malakshand to intervene between that Chief and the Khan of Nowagai, has already marched; and whether the Khan of Dir receives any subsidy from the Indian Government.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) The distance from Dargai to Dir is about ninety miles. At the end of December a movable column was ordered to be in readiness to move to Chandara if required, but I have received no information that the necessity has arisen. In 1895 an agreement was made with the father of the present Nawab of Dir under which, in return for certain services, he received a subsidy of Rs. 10,000 a year. The present Nawab has been recognised by the Government of India, and presumably the arrangement with his father holds good.

The Lucan Estate.

Dr. AMBROSE (Mayo, W.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland what extent of the Lucan Estate, in the Westport Union, has been sold to the Congested Districts Board from 1898 to the present date; what is the amount of the acreage which has been distributed amongst tenants for the relief of congestion during that time; what is the number of acres in the hands of the Congested Districts Board; what is the cause of the delay in the distribution of the portion in the hands of the Board, and whether, considering the distress prevailing in the Westport Union at present, he will urge the Board to commence the distribution of such lands at once.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) In 1899 the Congested Districts Board agreed to purchase from Lord Lucan 233 acres in the Westport Union, which were conveyed to the Board in December, 1904, and are now in the occupation of nine tenants. In 1900 the Board agreed to buy 355 acres in the same union, and in 1903 a further lot of 37,535 acres from Lord Bingham on the same estate in the union. The fee of the second lot, 355 acres, was conveyed to the Board in December, 1904, but the land is still in the occupation of Lord Lucan's tenant, who is now under notice to quit. Owing to the change of procedure caused by the Land Act of 1903 the last lot, 37,535 acres, has not yet been conveyed to the Board, but it is expected it will be conveyed a couple of months hence. There is, consequently, no part of the estate in the Westport Union in the occupation of the Board at present.

Distress in Achill Island.

Dr. AMBROSE: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he will use his influence with the Congested Districts Board with a view to inducing that Board to start relief works in Achill Island, in order to enable the inhabitants of the island to tide over the distress caused by the failure of the crops.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The Congested Districts Board is not authorised to undertake works for the relief of distress. This is the function of the Guardians of the Westport Union, who have prepared schemes for the purpose and will, I understand, submit them to the Local Government Board in the course of a few days.

Strength of Metropolitan Volunteer Regiments.

Sir HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): To ask the Secretary of State for War what was the strength in officers and members, excluding cadets, on 31st January, 1905, of each of the following corps of Metropolitan Volunteers, namely: Queen's Westminsters, London Scottish, Artists, Civil Service, St. George's, London Rifle Brigade, London Irish, and Inns of Court; how it compares with 31st January, 1902, 1903, and 1904; and by how many officers and Volunteers these eight corps are now short of their establishment.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The figures available are as follows:—

	Strength on				Establishment on 1/1/05.	Short of Establishment.
	1/1/02.	1/1/03.	1/1/04.	1/1/05.
13th Middlesex Vol. Rifle Corps (Queens)
Officers - - - -	55	56	50	47	60	13
N.C.O.s and men - -	1,639	1,526	1,284	1,027	1,825	798
Total - -	1,694	1,582	1,334	1,074	1,885	811
7th Middlesex (London Scottish)
Officers - - - -	36	36	33	33	33	—
N.C.O.s and men - -	863	813	667	580	1,127	547
Total - -	999	849	700	613	1,160	547
20th Middlesex (Artists)
Officers - - - -	42	38	35	31	43	12
N.C.O.s and men - -	978	735	559	490	1,353	863
Total - -	1,020	773	594	521	1,396	875
12th Middlesex (Civil Service)
Officers - - - -	37	33	34	35	36	1
N.C.O.s and men - -	848	740	632*	690†	1,128	438
Total - -	885	773	666	725	1,164	439
1st Middlesex (Victoria and St. George's)
Officers - - - -	37	35	26	29	38	9
N.C.O.s and men - -	836	782	605	508	1,151	643
Total - -	873	817	631	537	1,189	652
1st London (London Rifle Brigade)
Officers - - - -	45	39	33	28	40	12
N.C.O.s and men - -	912	741	605	516	1,352	836
Total - -	957	780	638	544	1,392	848
16th Middlesex (London Irish)
Officers - - - -	35	29	26	26	43	17
N.C.O.s and men - -	1,035	873	678	634	1,353	719
Total - -	1,070	902	704	660	1,396	736
14th Middlesex (Inns of Court)
Officers - - - -	31	29	28	26	33	7
N.C.O.s and men - -	677	549	451	402	924	522
Total - -	708	578	479	428	957	529

---

* Including 34 Cadets who are enrolled Volunteers. † Including 107 Cadets who are enrolled Volunteers.

Embargo on Canadian Cattle Importation.

SIR JOHN LENG (Dundee): To ask the hon. Member for North Huntingdonshire, as representing the Board of Agriculture, whether the Home Government has received a despatch from the Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada complaining of a misapprehension of Canadian opinion by the British Minister of Agriculture regarding the embargo on the importation of Canadian cattle; if so, whether an answer has been sent to that despatch, and whether copies of the despatches can be laid upon the Table of the House.

(Answered by Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.) I would refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for East Perthshire on the 16th inst.,† in which I stated that we had been assured by the Canadian Government that public feeling and opinion in the Dominion were still in favour of the repeal of the existing statutory restrictions on the importation of live animals into this country, so far as Canadian cattle are concerned. A suitable acknowledgment has been sent, but we do not think that the publication of the correspondence is necessary, especially in view of the communication to the Press, recently issued by the High Commissioner, which fully sets out the views of his Government on the subject.

Revenue of the Transvaal and Orange River Colony.

MR. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies what are the figures of revenue and expenditure of the Transvaal and Orange River Colony respectively for the six months ending 31st December, 1904, and the estimated figures to 30th June, 1905, also the Inter-Colonial revenue and expenditure for the same periods.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) The ordinary revenue of the Transvaal for the six months ending on the 31st of December was £1,865,000, and the ordinary expenditure £1,911,000, which includes a contribution of £500,000 to the Inter-Colonial Council. Figures for the Orange River Colony have not yet reached me for a later period than the five months ended on the 30th of November. For that period the ordinary revenue of the colony was £303,000, and the expenditure £287,000, including a contribution of £30,000 to the Inter-Colonial Council. The ordinary revenue and expenditure of the Inter-Colonial Council for the six months ending on the 31st of December were £1,247,000 and £1,219,000 respectively. The Estimates for the twelve months ending on 30th June, 1905, were as follows—

	Transvaal.	Orange River Colony.	Inter-Colonial Council.
	£	£	£
Revenue -	4,283,000	771,700	2,586,000
Expenditure	4,157,000	760,000	2,588,000

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

Ullapool Royal Naval Reserve Station.

MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty if he will state what progress has been made with the establishment of a Royal Naval Reserve Station at Ullapool, Ross-shire.

THE CIVIL LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. ARTHUR LEE, Hampshire, Fareham): The site for this station has been obtained; contract particulars are ready, and tenders are being invited. The work will be commenced immediately upon the acceptance of the tender.

Board of Admiralty Administration.

SIR JOHN COLOMB (Great Yarmouth): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether any changes have recently been made in the system of administration or the distribution of business and responsibilities among members of the Board of Admiralty and heads of departments; and, if so, whether he will lay upon the Table a statement showing the new system and that which it superseded or altered.

THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. PRETYMAN, Suffolk, Woodbridge): A statement showing the present distribution of business between the various members of the Board of Admiralty, and that which it superseded, is now being printed, and will shortly be laid upon the Table of the House. There have been no important changes in respect to the business and responsibilities of heads of departments.

---

†See page 320.

The New Rifle.

SIR JOHN COLOMB: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether the adoption of the short rifle for general use of the Army was sanctioned and approved by the Commander-in-Chief before the abolition of that office.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER, Belfast, W.): Yes, Sir. In 1901 the Commander-in-Chief decided that it was most important that the manufacture of the modified shortened Lee-Enfield Rifle should be proceeded with without delay.

Automatic Fuse Setters.

MR. SOAMES (Norfolk, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War if he has any information whether an automatic fuse setter is in use in any Continental armies; and whether such a fitting will be supplied with the new 18-pounder guns to the British Army.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: Various forms of fuse setters are in use in some of the Continental armies. The question has received and is still receiving attention in regard to the new Horse and Field Artillery equipments, but a pattern has not yet been decided on.

15-Pounder Breech-Loading Guns.

MR. SOAMES: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War if he can state when the 15-pounder breech-loading guns, Mark I., were issued; how many batteries are still armed with them; and whether the new guns will first be issued to those batteries which are armed with the oldest types of guns.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: The first issue of the Mark I. guns was made in 1883, and seventy batteries are still armed with guns of that issue. It is not possible at the present moment to state definitely which batteries it will be found expedient to re-arm first with the new guns.

Shooting of Private Mahon at Pekin.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether he is aware that Private Mahon, of the 1st Derby Regiment, was shot dead in Legation Street, Pekin, in June last, by a non-commissioned officer of his own regiment, and that his death under these circumstances was the subject, not of a trial by Court-martial, but of investigation by a Court of inquiry conducted with secrecy, an order having been given by the Commanding Officer that any man speaking about the shooting of Private Mahon would be brought up for trial by a district Court-martial; whether the War Office authorities can give any explanation of the method of investigation thus adopted; and whether, having regard to the suspicion entertained by his Irish comrades that this man's death was not the result of misadventure, and the method of investigation adopted, steps will be taken to obtain an explanation from the Commanding Officer of his conduct in this matter, and a public and impartial investigation of the manner in which Private Mahon lost his life.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: This man was shot at Pekin by a non-commissioned officer of his own regiment, forming part of a mixed patrol, on 26th August last. The man had armed himself with a rifle and bayonet, had wounded two Chinamen, and had threatened violence to a British officer. He refused to surrender to the patrol and threatened them. The patrol then fired in self defence. A court of inquiry was, by orders of the officer commanding the troops at Pekin, held in conformity with the rules of procedure under the Army Act. The holding of this Court was in accordance with the law and the custom of the service. The proceedings of the Court were submitted to the General Officer Commanding the troops in North China, who considered that the action of the patrol was justified. In these circumstances no Court-martial is necessary. Nothing is known of any suspicions entertained by the Irish comrades of the deceased as suggested in the Question, and I can assure the hon. Member that there are no grounds whatever for entertaining the belief that the death occurred otherwise than as stated above.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Why has the Commanding Officer given orders to Court-martial any man in the regiment who presumes to speak about this Irish soldier's death?

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: I have no information of that.

Cost of the South African Garrison.

MR. WHITLEY (Halifax): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War if he can state the number and annual cost of the troops at present maintained in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies, and the capital cost of the barracks and hutments that have been or are being erected; and is any provision being made for the repayment of the latter amount on the grant of representative government to the Colonies.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: There are at present about 17,000 troops in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies. The annual cost is about £2,300,000. The capital cost of barracks, etc., is £3,200,000. No such provision as that indicated in the Question has been made.

New Army Scheme.

*MR. McCRAE (Edinburgh, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether it is proposed, under the new Army Scheme, to reduce the expenditure on the Regular Army by £792,000 on a total expenditure of £26,890,000; and to reduce the expenditure on the Volunteer Force by £300,000 on a total expenditure of £1,220,000, equal to a reduction of one-fourth of the present Estimates.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: It is not possible within the limits of a reply to a Question to give the hon. Member the information he requires, but all proposals with regard to expenditure will appear in the Army Estimates, which will shortly be submitted to the House. It is not proposed to make any reduction on the Volunteer Vote for the coming year.

White Labour in the Witwatersrand Mines.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL (Yorkshire, Cleveland): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he will state what proportion of the 998 white men who, according to Lord Milner's report, were employed in June last in the Witwatersrand gold mines, on unskilled labour which prior to the war was performed by Kaffirs, are still employed on such labour.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. LYTTELTON, Warwick and Leamington): The information asked for is not available, but I have called for it.

Chinese Labour Riots.

MR. WHITLEY: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies under what statute a sentence of four months hard labour, with twenty lashes each, was passed on five Chinese labourers on 22nd October in connection with a riot on the Geldud Mine.

MR. LYTTELTON: Full information was given in reply to a similar Question on 16th February † which was addressed to me by the hon. Member for the Cleveland Division.

British Missionaries in the Congo Free State.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL: I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he will lay upon the Table any correspondence which has passed during recent months between His Majesty's Government and the British Consul at Boma with regard to the treatment of British missionaries residing within the concession of the Abir Company in the Congo Free State.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Earl PERCY, Kensington, S.): There is not much correspondence of the kind described which could be laid. But I will bear the hon. Member's suggestion in mind in connection with any further collection of Papers which may be presented to Parliament.

---

† See page 303.

Congo Free State—Case of Monsieur Van Calcken.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL: I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he can state what were the charges on which Monsieur Van Calcken, the head agent of the Abir Company at Baringa in the Congo Free State, was recently arrested; and whether His Majesty's Government will instruct by cable the British Consul at Boma to forward a copy of the minutes of the trial, and of the judgment which has been delivered.

EARL PERCY: Monsieur Van Calcken was tried on the following charges:—1. Having ordered certain "gardes-forestiers" to proceed to the neighbourhood of Baringa in order to kill natives who refused to collect rubber —which order was carried out. 2. Having armed his "gardes-forestiers" with Albini rifles. 3. Having tied up and arbitrarily detained as hostages several Ngombe women. A copy of the judgment has been received from the Acting British Consul.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL: Will the Papers be published?

EARL PERCY: I will consider if it can be done with other Papers. It is hardly worth while publishing them separately.

Income-Tax.

MR. WHITLEY: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount of Income-Tax has been recovered as the result of the decision of the High Court on 9th March, 1904, in the case of Rex v. A. Goerz and Co., Ltd.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN, Worcestershire, E.): I am unable to give the information for which the hon. Member asks. To do so would be contrary to the accepted principle that absolute secrecy shall be maintained in regard to the business concerns of taxpayers.

MR. WHITLEY: Has any recovery been made?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: Yes, Sir.

Income-Tax Collection.

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, considering the rates of taxes now being enforced, and the depression existing in some important businesses, he can see his way to suspend the recent order of the Board of Inland Revenue under which collectors of taxes are directed to close their accounts at earlier dates than last year, and to lay these rules before the House of Commons in order that an opinion may be expressed with regard to them before they are finally put into operation.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The dates for the closing of collectors' accounts have this year been fixed on a new basis, viz., by reference to the number of taxpayers in the district instead of by reference to the total amount of tax to be collected in the district. This arrangement is much fairer to the collectors, and, although it will result in an earlier closing of accounts in many districts, it by no means follows that it will necessarily create a difficulty in the way of allowing reasonable delay to taxpayers who can plead good cause for indulgence as regards date of payment. The machinery of the Board of Inland Revenue allows of such cases being dealt with without interfering with the prescribed date for closing the collector's account. The object that the hon. Member has in view can therefore be adequately insured without suspending the recent orders, which would seriously disturb and confuse the business of the Department.

MR. LOUGH: Cannot the right hon. Gentleman lay the rules before the House in such an important matter as this so that it may consider the question?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: No, Sir; they are already in operation and cannot be suspended. But I will give the hon. Member a copy of the rules.

SIR GEORGE BARTLEY (Islington, N.): Are the threatening notices of process against those who do not pay much sooner to be put in force than has been the case before?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: That Question hardly arises out of the one on the Paper. It is a little difficult to answer it properly in reply to a supplementary Question. The notices which have been issued are in exactly the same terms as those that have been used for many years past. For many years past the date at which the second notice had to be issued was 23rd January, or three weeks after the taxpayer had received his first notice. I have not altered the date, and if there has been any change it is in consequence of the first notice having been sent by post, thus causing it to be received earlier by more taxpayers. This accounts probably for more taxpayers having received the notice this year than in former years.

MR. LOUGH: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the authority for the statement made by the Board of Inland Revenue in a letter to the Chairman of the East Finsbury Conservative Association that Income-Tax is by law payable by all taxpayers alike on or before the 1st of January; whether, in view of the admission in a subsequent clause in the same letter that in one district of East Finsbury the accounts hitherto were not required to be closed till the 31st of May, and in another till the 30th of June, he will say whether any such law has been, in fact, enforced in this country up to the present time; and whether it is the intention of the Government to enforce such a collection.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The authority for the statement in question is Section 82 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880. It has never been the practice to employ compulsion in order to enforce literal compliance with the law in this respect, although, in fact, a certain number of taxpayers have always complied with it voluntarily. Pressure has always begun to be exercised in the fourth week of January on those who have not paid by that time, and this practice must be continued if the tax is to be collected within the financial year. There must, however, always be a certain number of cases in which, from one cause or another (appeals, removals, errors, omissions, etc.), liability may remain unsatisfied by the end of the financial year. It is merely a matter of administrative discretion to determine how long an account between the collector and the Board of Inland Revenue should be kept open for the sake of bringing in all such loose ends.

MR. LOUGH: Will any greater severity be exercised this year than in former years?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I do not desire not to give an Answer to what appears to be a very simple Question; but it is very dangerous to answer suddenly Questions of this kind across the floor of the House. I have said exactly what has been done. Complaints about the collection of Income-Tax are chronic, but some pressure must be employed if there is to be any equality in the treatment of different taxpayers, or if the revenue is to be collected at the right time. Cases deserving exceptional treatment will receive the same consideration as in other years.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): Has the collection of Income-Tax in other years been inadequate under the previous system?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: Yes, Sir.

Transvaal War Loan.

*MR. McCRAE: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the sum of £3,000,000 advanced to the Transvaal, and included as an asset against capital liabilities, which has been repaid by the Transvaal, has been applied to purposes of revenue expenditure.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I must ask the hon. Member to refer to the very full Answer which I gave to a Question put by him on April 21st last.† I can add nothing to the information which I then gave him.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxxiii., 836.

Transvaal War Loan Guarantee.

*Mr. McCRAE: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in view of the fact that the guarantors of the first instalment of the £30,000,000 Transvaal Loan are prepared to fulfil their obligation, and having regard to the amount of the Unfunded Debt, he will arrange for the first instalment of £10,000,000 being paid before the close of the present financial year.

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I informed the House as recently as Thursday last † that I was not at present in a position to make any further statement on the subject of the War Contribution.

Mr. McCRAE: Will the right hon. Gentleman give the reason for this inaction on so serious a matter?

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: Does the right hon. Gentleman remember that the House was led to expect that this instalment would be paid in the beginning of the year 1904?

[No Answer was returned.]

Russian Duty on Indian Tea.

*Mr. EUGENE WASON (Clackmannan and Kinross): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he can state what is the amount of extra duty the Russian Government have put upon Indian tea, or tea coming from British Possessions, since the passing of the Sugar Convention Act, 1903.

The PRESIDENT of the BOARD of TRADE (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central): The increase is about 1d. per lb., viz., from 1s. 10¼d. to 1s. 11¼d. per lb.

Withington Postmen's Pay.

Mr. SCHWANN (Manchester, N.): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General if he purposes placing the postmen employed within the area of the late Withington Urban District Council (now amalgamated with Manchester) on the Manchester scale of pay, seeing that those men now perform their duty within the Manchester city boundary; and, if so, how soon the increased pay will commence.

The POSTMASTER-GENERAL (Lord Stanley, Lancashire, Westhoughton): I will consider the question, which is under consideration, but I cannot promise an immediate decision, as other cases have to be considered at the same time.

Importation of American Store Cattle.

Mr. EDWARD MITCHELL (Fermanagh, N.): I beg to ask the hon. Member for North Huntingdonshire, as representing the Board of Agriculture, whether he can say if it is the intention of the Government to allow American store cattle into England and Scotland immediately; and, if so, can he say whether the Government have taken into consideration the loss that must arise to Irish farmers in consequence thereof.

Mr. AILWYN FELLOWES (Huntingdonshire, Ramsey): I would refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to a somewhat similar Question from the hon. Member for East Cork on the 16th inst.‡ I then stated that my noble friend was of opinion that any amendment of the law in the direction indicated would be undesirable.

Heavy Motor-Car Traffic—Compensation for Damage.

Mr. CATHCART WASON (Orkney and Shetland): I beg to ask the Secretary of the Local Government Board if, in view of the fact that under the Statutory Rules and Orders, 1904, No. 1809, heavy motor-cars weighing up to twelve tons are permitted to be driven at a speed of twelve miles an hour, the Government will pay compensation to the local authorities for damage that may be done to the roads, bridges, and sewers, gas and water mains by such heavy motors; and if he will lay the said Rules and Orders on the Table, and give the House an opportunity of expressing its opinion thereon before bringing them into force.

The SECRETARY to the LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. Grant Lawson, Yorkshire, N.R., Thirsk): The provisions in the Order referred to by the hon. Member which permit a maximum speed of twelve miles an hour, in certain circumstances, are in accordance with the recommendations of a Departmental Committee who heard evidence on the subject. I am not aware of any sufficient reason for the proposal that the Government should pay compensation to local authorities as suggested in the Question. The Order has, in accordance with the statute, been laid on the Table of the House. I am not in a position to promise any opportunity for discussing its provisions before it comes into operation.

---

† See page 315.

‡ See page 319.

The Green Park.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask the hon. Member for Chorley, as representing the First Commissioner of Works, can he explain the object of the extensive works of excavation drainage, extending over a width of sixty feet, and bearing the appearance of the making of a broad roadway across the Green Park from the Victoria Memorial to Half Moon Street, Piccadilly. Is it intended to make a road, and, if so, what will be its extreme width, what its cost, and what its purpose; has the advice, either of the London County Council, or of any other public body, been asked for or received on the subject? Is this the same road as to which an official statement was authorised and published in November, 1903, that there was no foundation for the report that it is proposed to make a new roadway across the Green Park, and that no such scheme has ever been contemplated. And, in view of the injurious effect on the Green Park and the disfigurement of running a public road across it, and thus cutting into two the smallest of the Parks, will the scheme now being carried out be reconsidered.

*Lord BALCARRES (Lancashire, Chorley): A path, sixty-five feet wide, is being made from the Victoria Memorial to Piccadilly; it will have a grass border of fifteen feet on either side, and will be planted on either side with a double avenue of trees. It is not intended to make a road either now or in the future.

In answer to a further Question by Mr. Gibson Bowles, Lord Balcarres said the amount of the grass which would disappear was represented by the breadth of the pathway, sixty-five feet, multiplied by its length, some 200 yards.

Mr. C. R. SPENCER (Northamptonshire, Mid.): Are we to understand that there will never be a road across the Green Park?

*Lord BALCARRES: Not in the sense of a public road along which wheeled traffic will be allowed to go.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: What is the object of the foundation of two or three feet of broken brick?

*Lord BALCARRES: I understand it is mainly for drainage purposes.

Deer Forest Return.

Mr. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate if he will grant the Deer Forest Return, notice of which appears on the Paper.

*The LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. Scott Dickson, Glasgow, Bridgton): The Secretary for Scotland is prepared to grant a Return, as promised by his predecessor Mr. Graham Murray, if the hon. Member will first communicate with the Secretary for Scotland as to the form in which the Return is to be made.

The Return referred to is as follows—Deer Forests (Highland Crofting Counties)—Return giving the name of each Deer Forest in the six Highland Crofting Counties, amount of its assessment, and the increase or decrease in the acreage of each Forest as compared with 1883, 1891, and 1898, in the following form—

County.	Name of Deer Forest.	Assessment.	Acreage, 1883.	Acreage, 1891.	Acreage, 1898.	Acreage, 1904	Increase.	Decrease.

Moray Firth Fisheries.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate, as representing the Secretary for Scotland, whether the Report of the Mansfield Commission of Inquiry into the cause of the decline in the fishing industry on the northern shores of the Moray Firth will be laid upon the Table of the House.

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: The Answer to the hon. Member's Question is in the affirmative.

Congested Districts (Scotland) Act.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate whether the Congested Districts Act Amendment (Scotland) Bill will be introduced at an early date and facilities granted for its speedy consideration.

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: The Bill referred to by the hon. Member will be introduced at an early date, and will be brought on as soon as the exigencies of public business permit.

Crofters Act—Culloden Estate Tenants.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate whether the Secretary for Scotland has received a copy of resolutions unanimously adopted at a recent meeting of crofter leaseholders and other tenants on the Culloden Estate, in the Ferintosh district of Ross-shire, deploring the continued exclusion of leaseholders from the benefits of the Crofters Act, and urging that all tenants whose rents do not exceed £30 per annum should receive the benefits of the Act; and will he state what action it is proposed to take in the matter.

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: The Secretary for Scotland has not received the copy of the resolutions referred to in this Question.

MR. WEIR: I will see that a copy of the resolutions is sent to the right hon. Gentleman.

Motor Traffic Regulations in Ayrshire.

MR. CATHCART WASON: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate if he has been furnished with a report of the inquiries held by the Local Government Board early in December on the application of the Ayrshire County Council to regulate the motor traffic within that county; when such report was received; and if the decision of the Secretary for Scotland has yet been communicated to the Ayrshire County Council.

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: The Answer to the first part of the hon. Member's Question is in the affirmative; the report was made on the 29th of November. The decision has practically been arrived at, and the Secretary for Scotland is at present corresponding with the Ayrshire County Council as to the details of the final form.

Scottish Lords of Session—Table of Precedence.

MR. CALDWELL (Lanarkshire, Mid.): I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate whether, by the Warrant issued under His Majesty's Royal Sign Manual of date 3rd instant, under which every Senator of the College of Justice in Scotland on his retirement shall be entitled to retain the title of Lord with the prefix of Honourable enjoyed by him as a Lord of Session, and the wife of every Senator of the College of Justice shall be entitled to assume and use the title of Lady and to continue to use the same during the life of her husband and after his death so long as she remains a widow, it is intended to confer any precedence on such Senator or his wife or widow, and, if so, what precedence is to be given to them respectively; and whether the practice of granting title and fixing precedence in the same Warrant has been departed from in this instance, and, if so, why.

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: There is at present no Table of Precedence in Scotland of any authority, and consequently it was impossible to fix precedence in the Warrant. The question of establishing a Scottish Table of Precedence by Royal Warrant is at present under consideration.

Dublin Hackney Car Licences.

MR. NANNETTI (Dublin, College Green): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he will direct the Commissioner of Police in Dublin to refuse to issue any more new licences for hackney cars during the summer months, so as not to interfere with the regular trade of men who ply their avocation the whole year round, or until such time as from inquiry he finds that the needs of the public require such licences.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): The conditions upon which licences may be granted are specified in Section 2 of the 17 and 18 Vict., cap. 45. The Commissioner has no power to refuse a licence in the manner suggested in the Question.

Dublin Carriage Inspector.

MR. NANNETTI: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will explain why a shareholder in the Dublin Tramways Company has been appointed the carriage inspector for Dublin, in view of the fact that the interests of the cab and car owners of the city and those of the Tramways Company are opposed to one another.

MR. WYNDHAM: The carriage inspector is not, and never has been, a shareholder of the Tramway Company.

Estates Commissioners' Report.

MR. T. W. RUSSELL (Tyrone, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland when it is proposed to present the Report of the Estates Commissioners for the year ending December 31st, 1904, and if care will be taken to lay it upon the Table in such time as will permit adequate consideration and discussion.

MR. DILLON (Mayo, E.): I beg also to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland when the Report of the Estates Commissioners will be laid upon the Table.

MR. WYNDHAM: The Irish Government is in correspondence with the Treasury in respect both to the form of the Report and the period to be covered by it. A decision will, it is expected, shortly be reached.

MR. DILLON: Will the right hon. Gentleman impress on the Treasury the great inconvenience of the period ending March 31st which deprives us of an opportunity of discussing the Report of the current year. It would be much more convenient to bring it up to December 31st.

MR. WYNDHAM: I will convey that to the Treasury.

King's County and Sligo Constabulary.

*MR. LONSDALE (Armagh, Mid.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland has the number of constabulary considered by the Lord-Lieutenant (by Order in Council of May 19th, 1903) to be required for the King's County and the county of Sligo respectively, been reduced; and what is the present number in each of these counties.

MR. WYNDHAM: The numbers of the Free Force assigned to King's County and Sligo by the Order in Council of May, 1903, were 202 and 211 respectively. These numbers have not been varied. The actual strength of the Free Force on January 31st was 176 in King's County and 197 in Sligo.

Tinahely Dispensary Officer.

MR. JAMES O'CONNOR (Wicklow, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether in the case of the Inquiry held in March, 1903, by Sir Acheson M'Cullagh, Local Government Board Inspector, into charges of neglect of duty, made by Mr. Patrick Coogan against Dr. Bolster, late medical officer of Tinahely Dispensary District, the accused officer's expenses were paid; and, if so, out of what fund; and can he state the grounds of the refusal of the Local Government Board to pay the expenses of the witnesses examined in support of the complainant's allegations.

MR. WYNDHAM: The expenses of Dr. Bolster were not paid by the Board, or by the guardians with the Board's consent. The Board defrayed the expenses, amounting to £2 10s. 0d., of five witnesses summoned by its inspector to attend the inquiry. It would be contrary to the invariable rule to defray the expenses of any other witnesses produced who were not summoned by the Inspector.

Land Act Rules.

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether any instructions in connection with the administration of the Land Act have been issued by the Lord-Lieutenant to the Estates Commissioners; and, if so, when they will be laid upon the Table.

MR. WYNDHAM: No such instructions have been issued to the Estates Commissioners. The hon. Member may, however, have in view the instructions to be issued by the Estates Commissioners for the guidance of their inspectors. The question of laying these instructions on the Table is under consideration.

In reply to a further Question by Mr. DILLON as to whether any instructions at all had been issued—

Mr. WYNDHAM said there had been Departmental instructions sent out. He would consider if they could be laid.

MR. T. W. RUSSELL: Did you not give a definite promise that the instructions should be laid before Parliament?

MR. WYNDHAM: No. There is a distinction to be drawn between Departmental instruction and ordinary rules.

Future Tenants in Ireland.

MR. O'DOWD (Sligo, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that there are on estates in Ireland numbers of tenants who, under pressure of eviction and from other causes, have been forced into the position of future tenants on the landlords' terms as regards rents; and whether, as such tenants are debarred from entering the Land Courts to have fair rents fixed, their cases will be specially considered by the Estates Commissioners when sanctioning sales of all estates on which such cases may arise.

MR. WYNDHAM: It is competent to tenants of this class to purchase under the Act of 1903, and the Commissioners, before making advances for the purpose, must be satisfied as to the security of the holdings.

Sir Antony MacDonnell.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE (Antrim, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if Sir Antony MacDonnell was aware before the preparation of the Dunraven proposals that for a Civil servant to take part in a political propaganda was a breach of rule; had Sir Antony, before doing so, informed any of his superiors in the Government of Ireland of his intention to do so; if so, were the proposals so made with the previous knowledge, sanction, or approval of any of such superiors, or did Sir Antony act in the matter without any encouragement or approval and absolutely on his own initiative.

MR. WYNDHAM: (1) Yes, Sir, but the question of the extent to which Civil servants may assist their friends turns on whether the assistance given is for projects of which the Ministers, under whom they serve, approve. (2) Sir Antony MacDonnell had my full leave and approval to confer with Lord Dunraven. Owing to his misunderstanding of distinctions which are clear to me, though not to him, he assisted in the formulation of proposals to which I object. (3) He informed Lord Dudley of the nature of those proposals in the belief that I would not be hostile to their public discussion.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE: Will the right hon. Gentleman say whether he objected at the time or afterwards?

MR. WYNDHAM: I objected the day I saw them.

*MR. LONSDALE asked whether, after the receipt of the reprimand by the Cabinet, and the formal severance of his connection with the movement, Sir Antony MacDonnell had not during the present year been present with the chairman and the secretary of the movement at a private meeting at which they discussed the principles and methods of devolution; and, if so, what steps would be taken by the Government?

MR. WYNDHAM: Sir Antony informs me that the suggestion in the second part of this Question is totally without foundation.

Mr. DELANY (Queen's County, Ossory) asked whether Sir Antony MacDonnell did not act with the knowledge and approval of Lord Dudley, and whether the terms of his appointment did not justify him in inquiring into the conditions of Irish Government.

*Mr. LONSDALE asked whether Sir Antony MacDonnell was present at such a meeting as he had suggested.

Mr. T. W. RUSSELL: May I ask whether a detective has been placed to watch the movements of Sir Antony MacDonnell?

Mr. WYNDHAM: I cannot answer all these supplementary Questions. It will be quite in order to criticise these matters on the Motion before the House, and I shall then be only too glad to deal with them.

Mr. JOSEPH DEVLIN (Kilkenny, N.): Will the right hon. Gentleman resign his office after the speech of Lord Lansdowne last Friday?

Mr. CHARLES CRAIG (Antrim, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if, before the Second Reading of the Land Bill of 1903, Sir Antony MacDonnell had informed Lord Dunraven that he was in favour of the policy of extension of administrative powers in Ireland on lines corresponding to those produced in September, 1904, and known as the devolution proposals, and had he any authority to make such a statement from any person competent to give him such authority.

Mr. WYNDHAM: I am informed by Sir Antony MacDonnell that he has no recollection of having made any such statement, and believes, as a matter of fact, that he did not make it.

Land Purchase in County Cavan—Case of Owen M'Cabe.

Mr. VINCENT KENNEDY (Cavan, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that Owen M'Cabe, of Latnadronagh Crosserlough, county Cavan, has been served with a claim for £25 by George Stewart Smith, his landlord, for using a quarry on his own farm, as he had been doing for past forty years; that this tenant previously refused the terms of purchase offered by the landlord; and, if so, whether he will introduce legislation to protect the tenants in such cases.

Mr. WYNDHAM: I have no information on the first part of the Question. The respective rights of landowners and tenants in respect of quarrying are already defined by law, and it is not proposed to introduce further legislation.

Drumheel Evicted Farm.

Mr. VINCENT KENNEDY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if the Estates Commissioners have received a report that the bailiff and one Goggins on the George Stewart Smith Estate, county Cavan, have recently been accepted as tenants of an evicted farm at Drumheel containing some eighty Irish acres; and, if so, whether, in view of the fact that this estate consists of seven congested holdings, will the Estates Commissioners be instructed to exercise in an especial way their powers in this case, and so finally remove this alleged grievance.

Mr. WYNDHAM: A representation to this effect has been made to the Commissioners. But the estate has not otherwise come before them, and until this has been done they cannot consider the representation.

Mitchelstown Sub-Commission—Case of Michael O'Neill.

Mr. WILLIAM ABRAHAM (Cork County, N.E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will explain why the application of Mr. Michael O'Neill, Skebeen, Mitchelstown, to have a second-term rent fixed was not included in the list of cases for hearing before the Sub-Commission sitting in Mitchelstown; and whether he can state when and where the applications of Mr. O'Neill and some thirty other tenants on the Kingston Estate to have second-term rents fixed will be heard and decided upon.

MR. WYNDHAM: The cases on the list now being heard include all cases lodged prior to 1st April, 1904. The application of Mr. O'Neill and the other tenants in question were subsequently received, and will be listed for hearing at a future sitting, the date of which cannot now be stated.

Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Longford, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the urban council of Granard have recently passed a resolution calling for the repeal of such sections of the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, as imposes on tenants rated at £4 and under the payment of rates; whether he is aware that this clause is largely inoperative owing to the poverty of many of these tenants, and leads to annoyance to them and to the collectors of such rates; and whether it is his intention to propose legislation reimposing such rates on the landlords who formerly paid them.

MR. WYNDHAM: It is not correct to say that the provisions of the Act in this respect are inoperative. The Act was based on the principle that the occupier should be rated, and the Agricultural Grant was fixed upon this understanding. The fundamental change suggested is neither practicable nor desirable.

Doctor Pentland of Mohill.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that, although frequently requested to reside in his dispensary district, Dr. Pentland, of Mohill, persists in residing in that town; and, if so, whether, in the interests of the sick poor, Dr. Pentland will be now directed to take up his residence in the dispensary district he serves, the same as other dispensary doctors in Ireland.

MR. WYNDHAM: The Local Government Board is making inquiries in this matter.

Irish Local Government Board—Public Accounts Order.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will state the name or names of the officials of the Local Government Board for Ireland at whose suggestion the Public Accounts Order, 1899, has been abrogated and a new series of forms of account for county, district, and urban councils set up; whether he is aware that the proposed new machinery will entail extra labour on local clerks and officials, and has been objected to as costly and unnecessary by the county councils in Ireland; and, if so, is it intended to enforce this new Order?

MR. WYNDHAM: The hon. Member's attention does not appear to have been directed to my reply to the somewhat similar Question of the 16th instant.† The recent Order was made by the Board. The reply to the concluding inquiry is in the affirmative.

Land Purchase in County Sligo.

MR. O'DOWD: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that certain of the largest landowners in the county of Sligo have refused to sell at any price to their tenants under the provisions of the Land Act of 1903; and, if so, what steps, if any, will be taken by the Estates Commissioners to induce such landlords to sell.

MR. WYNDHAM: I have no information on the first part of the Question. The Government has no power to take action in the direction suggested.

Belfast Constabulary Doctor.

MR. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will explain why the position of constabulary doctor, recently vacant in one of the divisions of Belfast, has not been filled in the usual manner; and if he will give the names of the doctors to whom the work has been allocated.

MR. WYNDHAM: It was not considered necessary to fill the vacancy, and the work hitherto done by five doctors is now done by four — Dr. O'Connell, Dr. Montgomery, Dr. Maguire and Dr. O'Brien.

---

† See page 322.

Mr. SLOAN: But which doctors have to do the extra work?

Mr. WYNDHAM: I cannot say.

The Rev. M. MacDonnell.

Mr. SLOAN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, whether, in view of the fact that the case against Rev. M. MacDonnell, Roman Catholic administrator, was dismissed by a majority of magistrates at Westport on the 16th instant, on the charge of knocking down and kicking a young man named MacAskall on the 6th ultimo, while under police protection, he will order further inquiry into the whole circumstances of the case.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The case has been heard and determined by the tribunal appointed by law to entertain it. I have no power to direct any further inquiry into the matter.

Poor Rate Collections in Galway.

Colonel NOLAN (Galway, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if the new Article 91 issued by the Local Government Board requires that poor rate collectors shall lodge each half year the whole amount included in their warrant, whether collected or not, before any poundage can be paid to them, if the Grand Jury of county Galway acted for a century on the opposite system, and paid poundage on the amount actually collected, and if the Galway County Council has hitherto found its rate collections satisfactory when paying poundage on the amount collected, and if the Local Government Board has stated that it is so thoroughly acquainted with the conditions prevailing in Galway that it considers itself justified in upsetting the system adopted by the county council.

Mr. WYNDHAM: Before the issue of the recent Order, twenty-eight out of thirty-three county councils in Ireland had voluntarily adopted the system prescribed by Article 91 of the Order, on the ground that it was attended with much better results than the system prevailing in the remaining five counties. With a view to uniformity and to efficiency the Board embodied in its Order the procedure adopted by the majority of the county councils.

Galway County Council Minutes.

Colonel NOLAN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware that regulations have lately been issued by the Local Government Board ordering county councils to forward to the Local Government Board copies of the county council minutes, and that such copies have hitherto been forwarded by the Galway County Council as a matter of courtesy, but that this courtesy did not imply a right on the part of the Local Government Board to review the proceedings of the county council unless where specifically empowered by statute to do so; and, if so, can this Order be withdrawn and matters be allowed to stand on their hitherto satisfactory footing.

Mr. WYNDHAM: To enable the Local Government Board to fulfil its statutory obligations it is essential that county councils should furnish it with copies of their minutes of proceedings which deal with certain specified matters. Since the passing of the Act of 1898, the councils have sent complete copies of all their proceedings, rather than impose on their officers the trouble of making extracts from the minutes under the specified heads. The Board's recent Order merely continued this system. It is open to the Galway County Council to communicate separately with the Board on matters in respect of which it is necessary the Board should have information, if the council prefers that course. The council has already been so informed.

Strabane Rate Collector.

Mr. WILLIAM MOORE: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if the Irish Local Government Board have approved of the acting Nationalist Registration Inspector for North Tyrone, named Torish, being appointed a rate collector for the urban council of Strabane in that division; and, if so, whether, seeing that it will be this man's duty as rate collector to put political opponents on the register and his interest as registration agent to keep them off, he will state on what grounds the appointment has been sactioned.

Mr. WYNDHAM: In consequence of the illness of the permanent rate collector, the district council on January 12th appointed Mr. Torish to complete the collection of the second moiety of the rate for the current year. The appointment is a temporary one and was sanctioned by the Local Government Board. It was represented that Mr. Torish had been a registration agent but that he was not at present employed in that capacity nor would he be so employed during his term of office as collector.

Irish Income-Tax Collection.

Mr. JAMES O'CONNOR: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has seen a copy of a circular, dated Custom House, Dublin, January 20th, 1905, and signed "Comptroller," addressed to tenants of a certain estate in Ireland, informing them that their landlord had not paid the Income-Tax due on their holdings for the year ended April 5th, 1904, and threatening to recover the tax by distraint of their property unless they put pressure upon the landlord to pay the Crown's claim within ten days; whether any tenants have been distrained to pay their landlord's Income-Tax; and whether the Comptroller has acted with his sanction.

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY (Limerick, W.): I also beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Comptroller of Income-Tax has written to the tenants on a certain estate in the county of Limerick threatening to distrain on their lands for the amount of Income-Tax under Schedule A, due by their landlord in respect of same for the year ending April 5th, 1904, unless they are prepared to put pressure on the landlord to pay the claim; and, if so, will he say whether this is the usual practice of the Inland Revenue Department; and will he take steps to prevent it.

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The Board of Inland Revenue inform me that the letter in question was issued by the Comptroller of Stamps and Income-Tax in Dublin in certain cases in which it had been found impossible to recover taxes due in the usual manner through the agent of the owner of lands, and in which the name of the owner was not known. The process of recovery from the tenant (if necessary by distraint) is authorised by Section 17 of the Income-Tax Act of 1853, and is employed only in the last resort, the tenant, of course, having the right to recover from his landlord on the next payment of rent. The object of the Comptroller in issuing the letter referred to, was to acquaint tenants of this fact, so that they might take the steps necessary to protect themselves. It has been very successful in securing this result, and in no case has the Department had to resort to distraint. At the same time, the Board of Inland Revenue consider that the terms of the letter, which they had not previously seen, are open to objection: and they have instructed the Comptroller to discontinue its issue. It appears to them that the object aimed at, while proper in itself, can be secured without giving the opening for misapprehension which the circular in use seems to offer. I have taken it for granted that both hon. Members have the same case in mind.

Potato Seed Grants.

Colonel NOLAN: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has found on investigation that, under the first Potato Seed Act, the whole interest on the loans then made to unions was defrayed from the Imperial Exchequer; and if he will now follow this precedent, so as to permit of the £10,000 contributed, from exclusively Irish resources, by the Agricultural Department, being devoted to cheapen the cost of the new seed to the small occupiers; also, if the total amount of interest is about £3,000.

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: There is no parallel between the condition of Ireland now and at the time to which the hon. and gallant Member refers. When the Seed Supply Act of 1880 was passed the distress among the agricultural classes in all parts of Ireland was so great that a sum of nearly £2,000,000 was expended from public and private sources in relief of the distress, apart from the £500,000 advanced for seed. The remission of interest could, therefore, be regarded as a Relief Grant in 1880, but could not be so regarded this year, as seed is being supplied to parts of the country where it is not alleged that any abnormal distress exists, but where, owing to the bad seed on hand and the impossibility of procuring good seed locally, a change of seed is essential to the agricultural prosperity of the country. I cannot at present say what the total amount of interest will be.

MR. DILLON: Will the right hon. Gentleman consider the desirability of extending to those parts of Ireland where the distress is quite as acute as in 1880 the same conditions as then obtained?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I do not think there is sufficient reason for that at present.

Irish Civil Service—Case of Mr. Percy Ludgate.

MR. T. HARRINGTON (Dublin Harbour): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he is aware that Mr. Percy E. Ludgate, of Drumcondra, passed the Civil Service examination for assistant clerkship, abstractor class, in October, 1903, and was medically examined by the physician selected by the Civil Service Commissioners and declared fit for the service; that, without having received an appointment as assistant clerk, he competed successfully for a second division clerkship, but failed to satisfy the examining physician as to his fitness; that, in consequence of the latter medical examination, Mr. Ludgate's certificate of qualification given in the former case has been cancelled, thus penalising him for one appointment by reason of his success in securing another; and, if so, whether he will take steps to have him medically examined with the view to his securing one or other of the above appointments, and will he say whether there is any difference in the medical standard of qualification required for assistant clerkship or second-division clerkship.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY (Mr. VICTOR CAVENDISH, Derbyshire, W.): The facts are substantially as stated in the hon. Member's Question, except that Mr. Ludgate's certificate as assistant clerk was never granted, and therefore was not cancelled; and that the date of the examination referred to was February, 1903, and not October, 1903. As nearly a year had elapsed since Mr. Ludgate's medical examination for an assistant clerkship, it was necessary to re-examine him before issuing him a certificate for a second-division clerkship. The result of the medical examination proving unsatisfactory the Civil Service Commissioners were unable to grant a certificate for either position. The medical requirements are practically the same in both cases.

Dublin Post Office—Officers' Holidays.

MR. NANNETTI: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General if he is aware that several officers in the Dublin Post Office this year are listed for annual leave at earlier periods than in previous years; and that during the months of June to September (inclusive) there are fewer men listed for leave in each batch than in the other months of the year; and will he see that the annual leave list is so arranged that an equal number of men are sent out in each batch so that a fair distribution of the leave period is made.

LORD STANLEY: I am making inquiry, and will inform the hon. Member of the result.

Deceased Wife's Sister Bill.

MR. JAMES O'CONNOR: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether His Majesty's Government have received from the Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia a letter, transmitted through the Governor-General, complaining of the hardships endured by Australians in consequence of the non-recognition in Great Britain of marriages made in Australia with sisters of deceased wives, and requesting that the existing conflict between British and Colonial law in this respect should be removed by legislation; and whether he intends to give effect in this matter to the wishes of the Australian people.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): The Answer to the first part of the Question is in the affirmative. The matter will, of course, be fully discussed in the House when the Bill dealing with the subject comes up for discussion.

STANDING ORDERS.

Ordered, That the Select Committee on Standing Orders do consist of thirteen members. Sir John Brunner, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. John Edward Ellis, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. Halsey, Mr. Henry Hobhouse, Mr. Humphreys-Owen, Sir James Rankin, Mr. William Redmond, Colonel Stopford-Sackville, Sir Mark McTaggart Stewart, Mr. Whitmore, and Mr. Wodehouse were accordingly nominated members of the Committee.—(Mr. Halsey.)

SELECTION.

Mr. Blake, Mr. Sydney Buxton, Sir John Dorington, Sir William Hart Dyke, Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Fenwick, Mr. Halsey, Mr. McKenna, Sir Mark McTaggart Stewart, and Mr. Wharton were nominated members of the Committee of Selection together with the Chairman of the Select Committee on Standing Orders. —(Mr. Halsey.)

MR. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe) took exception to the Standing Order by which the Committee was deprived of the power of selecting its own Chairman. It had a good reason in its origin but now that the Committee of Selection had become of such importance this had ceased to operate. He did not propose to take action now but certainly hoped to do so sometime.

NEW BILLS.

FOREIGN TRAWLERS REGULATION BILL.

"To provide for the better prevention of fishing by Foreign Trawl Vessels within areas closed to British Trawl Vessels," presented by Mr. Black; supported by Mr. Crombie, Mr. Weir, Mr. John Wilson (Falkirk), Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Cathcart Wason, and Mr. Ainsworth; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 7th March, and to be printed. [Bill 44.]

RATING OF MACHINERY BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the Rating of hereditaments containing Machinery," presented by Mr. George Whiteley; supported by Mr. Chapman, Sir Edward Strachey, Sir William Houldsworth, Sir John Dorington, Mr. Cawley, Sir William Tomlinson, and Mr. John Rutherford; to be read a second time upon Friday next, and to be printed. [Bill 45.]

TRAMWAYS AND PUBLIC COMPANIES (IRELAND) ACT (1883) AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend The Tramways and Public Companies (Ireland) Act, 1883," presented by Mr. Patrick Aloysius McHugh; supported by Mr. Clancy, Mr. O'Dowd, Mr. William McKillop, and Mr. Conor O'Kelly; to be read a second time upon Friday, 7th April, and to be printed. [Bill 46.]

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE (IRELAND) ACT (1887) REPEAL BILL.

"To repeal the Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887," presented by Mr. Lundon; supported by Mr. Dillon, Mr. John Redmond, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Mr. Patrick Aloysius McHugh, and Captain Donelan; to be read a second time upon Friday, 10th March, and to be printed. [Bill 47.]

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

MR. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford): I beg to move the Amendment which stands in my name, as follows—

"But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that the present system of Government in Ireland is in opposition to the will of the Irish people, and gives them no voice in the management of their own affairs; that the system is consequently ineffective and extravagantly costly, does not enjoy the confidence of any section of the population, and is productive of universal discontent and unrest, and has proved to be incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the people."

My object in bringing forward this Amendment is to raise a discussion on the question of the government of Ireland, and to express the perfectly frank and unmistakable feeling of detestation of the present system which is well-nigh universal among all classes of the population of Ireland. My object is also once more to define the position and policy of the Irish Party upon this matter, and to make it plain to everyone—not only to the Government, but to the Opposition—that we stand where we have always stood, irrevocably committed to Home Rule and necessarily independent of any Government that does not make Home Rule a cardinal point in its programme. I think everybody will admit that we are entitled to press this point, and to make our position in this matter clear. We are being driven—some people think we are being rapidly driven—towards a general election, and many people also think that a general election will result in the return to power of those who have been identified in the past with the policy of self-government in Ireland, and who have for that reason received the support of the Irish Party. No one can deny that there is an unmistakable attempt to limit the decision at the next general election to one particular issue to the exclusion of all others, and I, therefore, consider it a duty we owe to Ireland and to ourselves, and, indeed, to our English friends also, to dispel any doubt that may exist anywhere as to the views, the policy, and the duty of the Irish Party upon this question. For us there is only one issue. We have been sent to this House to demand the freedom of our country. We are elected here an independent Party, and our mandate from our constituents is that we shall not enter into an alliance with any British Party which does not approve of and adopt the policy of the restoration to the people of Ireland of the management of their own affairs. From that attitude nothing can change us, and so it is not a matter of convenience or expedience, but it is a matter of principle and of necessity. It is not, of course, my business to attempt to pry into the future, or to foretell what the future procedure or policy of British Parties may be, but I deem it common honesty—and I believe that British Parties will find that on this matter honesty is their best policy as well as ours—to tell them plainly that this is our unchangeable attitude, and it is that attitude they will have to reckon with.

We base our condemnation of the present system of rule in Ireland upon four grounds. We condemn the present system because it is not government in accordance with the will of the governed. On the contrary, it is government in direct opposition to the declared will of the overwhelming majority of the people. We condemn it because it is ruinously extravagant, and weighs down the nation with a burden of unjust taxation, and because, in addition to that, it is an inefficient government which neglects every industry and interest of the nation, and necessarily leads to depopulation, ignorance, poverty, and discontent. Further, we object to this Government because it is distrusted and condemned by those who call themselves Unionists as well as by those who call themselves Home Rulers.

As to the first of these points, it is unnecessary for me to labour it. Amidst all the uncertainties and doubts surrounding all Irish questions, amidst all our contradictions and controversies, one fact has stood out perfectly plainly and beyond dispute for the past thirty years or more, and that is that the majority of the representatives of the Irish people returned to this House have been pledged to overturn the present system of government. Since the extension of the franchise in 1885 that majority of the Irish Members has never fallen below eighty-one out of 103. In the present Government of Ireland public opinion in Ireland is a negligible quantity. The overwhelming majority of her representatives have absolutely no control whatever over her domestic affairs, and no Irishman and no man, whatever his nationality, but especially no Irishman, is allowed to serve in any really responsible position in the Government of our country unless he is a known opponent of the wishes and aspirations of the overwhelming majority of the people. Of course there are exceptions to this. Seventy years ago a very able Scotchman was sent to Ireland in the person of Sir Thomas Drummond to act as Under-Secretary. He was not an Irishman, but as soon as ever it became known that he had popular leanings a campaign was set on foot against him by the ruling powers in Ireland, and when he ventured to rebuke Irish landlordism, and especially when he committed himself to that phrase which in these days seems to be flat blasphemy, i.e., that property has its duties as well as its rights, from that moment he was thwarted, maligned, and pursued with a malice which no doubt helped in the end to drive him into an early grave. For four or five years he served in Ireland, but he was only able to do so because, in his case, he was loyally defended by those who availed themselves of his services, and because he was not at the first breath of opposition from the Orange set in the North of Ireland repudiated and thrown overboard by those who had availed themselves of his great ability and unrivalled experience in the Government of Ireland. To-day—seventy years later—we have a somewhat similar case, and the mere fact that Sir Antony MacDonnell has popular leanings is sufficient, apparently, to cause his appointment to be denounced as a betrayal by the English Government of that handful of men who endeavour to impose their will on the majority of the people of Ireland. This exception only proves the rule which I have attempted to lay down, namely, that no man in any degree in sympathy with the majority of the Irish people is allowed to have any part in the Government of the country.

Ireland to-day is governed by a minority, and for a minority of the people she is governed by a democracy more divorced from sympathy with the people and from responsibility to the people than obtains in the system which you in this country are so fond of denouncing in the case of Russia. Ireland, no doubt, is articulate in the House of Commons, and I am glad to think that she is able to make herself troublesome, or otherwise I fear that Irish discontent would find no voice at all. But here we are in a permanent minority of 80 out of 670; and we are voted down by representatives elected by another people. We are governed by a network of public boards—the Education Board, the Board of Public Works, the Local Government Board, the Congested Districts Board, the Board of Trade, the Prisons Board, and I know not how many other boards, all of which are nominated by Dublin Castle. These boards are not responsible in any shape or form to the people whom they govern. Public opinion in Ireland has for them no existence, and the names of the men who rule the boards are scarcely known to-day to the people of Ireland. They can never be called to account. They are represented in this House by the Chief Secretary of the day, who is President, I think, of each one, though, of course, he is not cognisant of their proceedings, and can only be in the most nominal way responsible for their action. Chief Secretaries come and go. There have been fifty-three changes in the office of Chief Secretary since the Union. There have been twenty-seven changes in the office of Chief Secretary within the last fifty years. That gives an average since the Union of about two years for each Chief Secretary, and further, these Chief Secretaries have been strangers to Ireland, they have had no interest whatever in the country, and they have had no stake in the country. Only seven or eight of the whole number have been Irish by birth, or even by the most remote connection, and since 1871 no Irishman at all has been Chief Secretary for Ireland. What earthly possibility had such men, I would ask the House, of making themselves acquainted with the affairs of these boards? The thing is impossible. The permanent, centralised, nominated, semi-independent boards, stuffed full of the members of the ascendancy Party, have been omnipotent in the Government of Ireland, and the Chief Secretary of the day, if he is challenged on the ground of his nominal responsibility, is accountable only to this House, where the representatives of Ireland are always in a permanent minority. Is it any wonder that, under these circumstances, the very soul of Ireland is in revolt at this system, and the sentiment of the people is that an armed rebellion itself would be a duty did a reasonable chance of success exist?

Such a system of government as this must of necessity be extravagant, because every system of government run in the interests of a minority against the interests of the majority of the people must be extravagant. The Irish government to-day is admittedly the most costly government of the kind in the world. It costs double the amount of the government of Belgium, which has a larger population and four times the trade. It costs more than double as much as the government of Switzerland, and by comparison with any small country of similar resources in the world it is shocking in its extravagance. Compared with the cost of the government of Great Britain it is not so much shocking as ludicrous. The cost of civil government per head of the population in Ireland is just twice the cost of the government per head of the population in England. The policing and the prison system in Ireland cost three times as much as the policing and prison system of Scotland, though the population is about the same and the criminal statistics show that there is far less crime in Ireland than there is in Scotland. The ludicrous part of all this is that England does not gain anything by it. In the last ten years the population of Ireland has gone down by about 200,000, and the taxation of Ireland has increased by £3,000,000 a year. The cost of Irish government has gone up from something like £5,500,000 in 1894 to £7,214,000 in 1902, so that England cannot be said, therefore, to have been benefited by this misgovernment of Ireland to any great extent. Ireland's Imperial contribution has unjustly increased, but it has not increased materially in proportion to the total increase of the cost of running the country. The great increase in Irish taxation has gone almost entirely in the increased cost of running the rotten and inefficient system of government in Ireland itself.

This brings me to another part of the question. I base my indictment of the government of Ireland on its merits. I maintain that it is the worst and most inefficient government in the whole world. The right hon. Gentleman who will speak on behalf of the Government will have to defend a system which has no parallel in the whole history of the world. In speaking of this question I feel that I must confine myself within comparatively narrow limits. I will take as an example of what I mean by bad and inefficient government the question of the land. If the Land Act of last year is a failure, and undoubtedly in some respects it is, that is due entirely to the fact that where Irish Members pressed their views those views were rejected. I had intended to give some quotations as to what recently occurred with reference to the position of Sir Antony MacDonnell. What occurred? Sir Antony MacDonnell went to Ireland, with the full approval of the Chief Secretary and the Lord-Lieutenant, to carry out a policy of concession and reform. He has been thwarted in that, and things did not succeed with him. What has been happening? He has found his official chief rounding on him, and, for my part, I would not be astonished if in the end it is not found that the English people themselves have lost all respect for a Minister who is guilty of what I may call the tergiversation, the disloyalty of the Chief Secretary to a man whom he put in that position, and whom he ought to have backed. Under all the circumstances, the Irish Party are entitled to come to the House of Commons and make their claim that the government of Ireland should be once more placed the hands of the Irish people. Nothing else will remedy the present condition of affairs. Every class of the community in Ireland is opposed to the present rule. It is unnecessary for me to speak of the wishes of the overwhelming majority of the people. Generation after generation they have sent to the House of Commons an overwhelming majority of their Members pledged to a radical change in the Government, but the feeling entertained by them has spread, and to-day it is to be found in practically every class of the community.

Recently a development of the most important kind has taken place in Ireland under the name of the Reform Association, identified with the name of Lord Dunraven. It is not my business to defend that association, which is, I understand, not making a demand for Home Rule. The men who are at the bottom of it avow themselves as Unionists, yet the fact remains that they have come forward to make a confession that their former position is untenable, that the government of Ireland has broken down under the present system, and they propose a change. It is not only Lord Dunraven and his friends. I may go further and take the case of Sir West Ridgeway. He was not an Irishman like Sir Antony MacDonnell. He was an English Conservative gentleman who was Under Secretary for Ireland during the Chief Secretaryship of the present Prime Minister. Sir West Ridgeway tells us that in the very middle of the coercion régime of the present Prime Minister, he, as Under Secretary, prepared for the Government a memorandum outlining a scheme of self-government for the country consisting of provincial councils, along with a partly elective body which was to have power over all Irish finance. What an extraordinary light that throws on the system of government in Ireland! Here is Sir West Ridgeway carrying out a policy of coercion in Ireland at the behests of a Government which declares that Ireland has no grievances and that twenty years of resolute government is all that is necessary in order to settle the Irish question, while at that very time there are searchings of heart among the very men who are carrying out that programme of suppressing popular agitation. We find Sir West Ridgeway preparing a programme which so far as I can see is quite as extreme, if not more extreme, than the programme of Lord Dunraven, in the preparation of which Sir Antony MacDonnell seems to have had a hand. The same applies right through all the administrators who have been sent to Ireland from every Parliament. Lord Spencer went to Ireland to administer coercion, and his experience taught him the rottenness of the present system. Lord Aberdeen went to Ireland to carry out a system of coercion and his experience taught him the same lesson. Lord Dudley went to Ireland to carry out a Unionist policy, and he has not been long in the country without discovering the rottenness of the present system. Speaking of Under Secretaries, there is not only Sir West Ridgeway who can be quoted. What about Sir Robert Hamilton? What about Sir Redvers Buller? Every man who has been sent from this country to govern Ireland under the present system has admitted, no matter what Party he came from, that the system has broken down absolutely. The only differences to-day are the differences as to the methods for remedying the system. Various remedies have been proposed. Sir West Ridgeway says he proposed a system of provincial councils with certain legislative powers, with a financial council partly elective. Lord Dunraven proposes a system of devolution, and I suppose that if the hon. Gentlemen who represent Ulster constituencies were asked for a remedy they would say that the proper remedy is to instal them and their Orange friends in absolute power in Dublin Castle.

It is well for us to remember in this connection that every single class and creed in Ireland to-day is denouncing the system of Dublin Castle. I am sorry I have not the notes of the utterances of hon. Gentlemen opposite which I had intended to read. Hon. Gentlemen opposite have denounced government by Dublin Castle far more vigorously than ever we did. The hon. Member for North Down said just before Parliament met that either the Government must go or Sir Antony MacDonnell must go. I have heard from North Down since then to the effect that when the general election comes the probability is that the person to go will be the hon. Member himself. An hon. Member for one of the Divisions of Antrim made a declaration in Ireland the other day that he for one would not regret the general election, because he did not think that Ireland could be any worse governed under a Liberal Government. And then, not content with that, the Ulster Members issue a manifesto signed by the full strength of their party—was it seven or eight?—and in that manifesto they do not base their attack on Dublin Castle because of Sir Antony MacDonnell at all—there is not a word about him—no, it is an indictment based on the general government of Dublin Castle, as evidenced by the refusal of the Castle to do what they call justice to certain isolated parts of Ulster with which they are identified. And since the House met a most interesting document, which I am sorry I have not with me, has been issued, a manifesto in which they declared in solemn conclave—though it must have relieved the mind of the Prime Minister enormously when he saw that there were only four gentlemen at the meeting—a manifesto in which they declared that they had made up their minds to give a general support to the Government on the Address on every question except questions arising out of Ireland, and went on to say that they entirely distrusted the action of the Government on all Irish affairs. Therefore you have every class of the community expressing distrust of the government of Ireland. I might quote a more important critic of the Government, namely, the Government itself—because the House will remember the speech made the other day in which it was declared by Lord Lansdowne, who is himself the Leader of the Government in the Upper House—that the present system of government in Ireland was antiquated and complicated, and that it required serious improvement, and in which he described what he called Sir Antony MacDonnell's policy as the policy of co-ordination. Now whether you call this co-ordination, or devolution, or provincial councils—as Sir West Ridgeway called it—all those policies amount to this, that every class of the population and the Unionist Government itself condemns the present system of rule. In my opinion it has come to this, that as practical men we, in the House of Commons, ought not to consider the theoretical question at all as to whether the government is good or bad—because, I submit, it is by universal consensus of opinion condemned—but we ought to confine ourselves as practical men to the remedy.

Now the remedies which are proposed are various. The remedy which we propose at any rate is well known. We propose Home Rule for Ireland. We believe that the present system, in a phrase once used by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose, is too rotten to be mended. The policy must be a policy of ending and not mending. The system should be abolished altogether, and I think I am correct in saying that what has occurred within the last few days will make it impossible for any English Government in the near future to sit upon the Treasury Bench without proposing some radical remedy in the present system of government. Nothing in my judgment can be a possible or even a tolerable substitute for self-government in any country. Without self-government I am convinced that Ireland will go on in the future as she has gone on in the past, badly governed, poverty-stricken, and discontented. But with self-government I am perfectly convinced in my heart and conscience she has before her a future of freedom, prosperity, and peace.

*MR. WALDRON (Dublin, St. Stephen's Green), in seconding the Amendment, said it was almost impossible to bring anything new before the House in regard to the system of government in Ireland as the subject had been debated again and again during the last twenty or thirty years. The events of the last few days had shown how difficult it was to justify the present system. In his own recollection in Ireland there had been twenty Chief Secretaries since Mr. Chichester Fortescue held the post, and they had had an average duration of office of less than two years. What hon. Member in this House would entrust the management of his business or his property to a manager who held his appointment on such a tenure? Had the physical condition of the country improved under this system, or had the consent of the governed been obtained? Had the population increased, or had general contentment been diffused? He would be a courageous or a mendacious man who would answer either of these questions in the affirmative. How long was such a system to be forced on the country in defiance of the wishes of the great majority of the inhabitants? The events of the last few days gave the best possible answer as to the impossibility of the present system. When the present Lord-Lieutenant arrived in Ireland he said that the first necessity of the government of Ireland was that it should be in accordance with Irish ideas. What attempt had there been to govern the country in accordance with Irish ideas? The Union had never been allowed to work on account of the course pursued by persons who called themselves Unionists. What they wanted was, not to make Ireland contented with the Union, but to run a system in which they were allowed to be monopolists. It was a matter of common knowledge that they turned with great ferocity on the candidate for a Unionist seat in Leinster with the result that the seat was lost to their Party. It had been said that the Liberal Party were not committed to Home Rule, but he could not believe that. The first principle of Liberalism all over the world was that government against the consent of the people was wrong. The system by which Ireland had been governed had diminished the population, increased poverty, and prevented the development of the resources of the country.

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the present system of Government in Ireland is in opposition to the will of the Irish people, and gives them no voice in the management of their own affairs; that the system is consequently ineffective and extravagantly costly, does not enjoy the confidence of any section of the population, and is productive of universal discontent and unrest, and has proved to be incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the people.'"—(Mr. John Redmond.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

MR. WILLIAM MOORE (Antrim, N.) asked that he might be allowed, before proceeding to lay before the House very shortly the views of those whom he represented, to express the regret felt on his own side, which he had no doubt would meet with general sympathy from Members opposite, at the absence of the right hon. and gallant Gentleman the Member for North Armagh, who was a popular figure in the House. And, compared with this occasion—an occasion important for the very existence of Irish Unionism—there never was an occasion on which his services were so much needed. The House would, he thought, be pleased to know that he was fairly on the way to convalescence. The hon. and learned Member for Waterford had taken the straightforward course of reminding the House where, after twenty years, his Party now stood. He said they were still, as ever, united in an unalterable demand for Home Rule, and although the hon. Member rather unworthily sneered at their small numbers—they were seventeen Members in that House—still they represented those who were the loyal supporters of Unionist government in Ireland, and who numbered 1,250,000 of their fellow-countrymen. It was not only on behalf of his own constituents, but of all those who whilst they chiefly lived in the province of Ulster were scattered throughout the rest of the land, that he would like to say that after twenty years they, too, stood where they did. They had fought inch by inch during those twenty years with all the weight of the Nationalist Members against them, with the people in the country behind those hon. Gentlemen against them. Yes, they were 1,250,000 of people who had stood out against all the odds, and had fought Home Rule at home inch by inch. They had succeeded in keeping it off so far, and they would succeed for another twenty years if they were fairly and honestly treated by the Leaders of the Unionist Party. That day, after twenty years of loyalty, they were just as determined to face Nationalist opposition, and the intrigues and plottings of those responsible for Irish administration under a Unionist Government. The hon. Member for Waterford was perfectly correct in the statement which he made when he said that in every section of the population of Ireland there was discontent. After twenty years of Unionist Government he never remembered, as at this minute, such universal contempt and mistrust; such disaffection on the part of this million and a quarter of people who, certain members of His Majesty's Government thought, might be lightly thrown overboard without a regret. One quality—and the sooner that this was borne in on the minds of statesmen on that side of the House or the other, whether they were members of a Government which was a friend or a foe—the one quality which was required for a Government in Ireland was the quality of straightforwardness; and that was the one quality which within the last two years had been conspicuously lacking in every department of Irish administration. Of course it was very easy, when they came over to this country, to have their grievances misrepresented. It was very easy to minimise the numbers of those who put them forward. It was quite a simple matter to get hold of friends in influential quarters of the Press and say, "This is a little Unionist clamour, it does not matter; it is Orangemen"—as if that answered everything. The opinions that he expressed that day were held, it was true, by the Orange body, but they were equally held by every Irish Liberal Unionist; they were held by Irish Conservatives, and the attempt to minimise them in that way was unfair to their importance and dishonest in practice. If they wanted to go by the newspapers, let him ask the hon. Members of the House to take a look at the Irish Press. They had in Ireland four leading Unionist papers. They had the Orange paper, if he might call it so, the Belfast News Letter, the Liberal Unionist Northern Whig; they had the general Unionist paper, the Irish Times, and they had the Conservative organ in Dublin, the Daily Express. Of course, English Members did not often see those papers, but they represented and covered the entire ground of Unionist opinion in Ireland, and day after day in each one of them—it was a fact which could not be disputed or denied—they found column after column of direct criticism, complaint, and suspicion charged against the heads of the Irish Administration. Things were not right when that was so.

They did not get many opportunities of bringing these things forward in the House except on an occasion like this, and they would dwell a little in detail upon them. He knew the subject they were discussing, although important, was very general, and they must avoid, as far as possible, details. [NATIONALIST cries of "No."]. He meant details likely to weary the House. But one matter they felt very much the loss of in the North, and also in other parts of Ireland. They had brought their plea before their people and before the House. It was the systematic boycotting of counties, because they were Unionist, from participation in public funds. It was not merely a money matter. It was the persistent unfairness of the policy of the Irish Government which had, within the last two years, done more than anything else to goad Irish Unionists into revolt. It was only within the last six months that the dishonesty—for there was no other term for it—of the whole method had been brought home to them. It was a policy of glow and glamour. They went to the Chief Secretary or elsewhere. They received the most bountiful of promises; but when it came to fulfilment of those promises, there were other parts of the country to be considered. It was said, "Oh, you are Unionists; you can be trusted not to make yourselves unpleasant in the House of Commons. We have no money; it is all going to the West and you had just better wait till next year." Now, they had been put off long enough. He would give an instance of this policy. There was a very important matter in the North of Ireland involving the expenditure of public money. He would not discuss the matter on its merits in detail—hon. Members opposite would know them. A deputation representing the five Unionist counties waited on the Chief Secretary in Dublin Castle in 1901. They were then told that everything that could be done would be done, and that immediately. In 1902 the Chief Secretary, in pursuance of his policy of promises without performance, was anxious to get through a Marine Works Bill which affected the West of Ireland. They were relying on his promises, and one of his colleagues, the Deputy-Master of the Mint—he was sure that the hon. Gentleman would be pleased to hear how hon. Members cheered him that day—pressed the matter of this grievance on the Chief Secretary, and the Chief Secretary, anxious to get his Marine Works Bill through, on August 5th, said he might take it from him that, in regard to all those schemes in which he was interested, all that could be would be done. The Chief Secretary in 1902 got his Marine Works Bill. In the following year this matter was pressed again and again on the Chief Secretary, and again and again disregarded, because it came from the Unionist part of the country. In the following year the Chief Secretary wanted a Development Grant Bill, and on April 1st, 1903, the hon. and gallant Member for North Armagh again pressed this demand upon the Chief Secretary, who had admitted it was legitimate. When the Chief Secretary got the Bill through, he got up and said, "Oh, yes, what you say is quite right. £100,000 was allotted, but as some jealousy was raised in some other part of the country, it would only be fair to consider the claims of the north-east corner of Ireland, though I cannot say that any one scheme will be dealt with." In 1904 matters were still pressed upon the Chief Secretary, when £90,000 was being expended in Mayo, and in the present year Sir Antony MacDonnell was able to assure the hon. Member for Mayo that up to the present time in the Union of Swinford £376,000 of public money had been advanced for land purchase. No doubt they would get plenty of promises, but while the present Administration continued in Ireland, no Unionist would get a copper from the public funds. [Ironical NATIONALIST cheers] Hon. Members might laugh. It might be a light thing when mud and water were two feet high in the houses and fever was rampant. Of course it did not matter to the Chief Secretary—they were only Unionists—who all the time was devoting money to a part of the country where it was of absolutely no use, except to keep hon. Members opposite quiet. Harbours and piers for Nationalists were always forthcoming, but Unionists could get nothing. Yet this was called impartial administration! All over the country Unionists and Protestants were being excluded from getting their share by the local boards. [NATIONALIST cries of "Where?"] He could give particulars. When the Local Government Act was passed the House of Commons, knowing that the power given to local boards would be abused, inserted clauses protecting the minority, all appointments having to be sanctioned by the Local Government Board or the Lord-Lieutenant. But when they got a Nationalist local board excluding Protestants on account of their religion, or because they were Unionists, and the Local Government Board was asked to intervene to protect this wretched minority, the Government said:—"We cannot really afford to vex the priests, or run against the Nationalists," and so the Protestants were sacrificed. This was nothing but moral cowardice on the part of the Chief Secretary. What happened at Ballinasloe? On November 26th last the Cavan County Council met to appoint a rate collector. These collectors were paid by poundage on the amount of the rates they collected. A candidate named George Armstrong, a resident in the neighbourhood, sent in a tender that he would collect rates for 2d. in the £. But the Cavan County Council, who had never allowed a Protestant to sit at its board, appointed instead of Mr. Armstrong another gentleman, simply because he was a brother or cousin of the priest and was a Roman Catholic. His terms were 3d. in the £; and the ratepayers of county Cavan were paying the additional 1d. in the £ of poundage because Mr. Armstrong was a Protestant and a Unionist. That case was sent up to the Local Government Board, which was asked, in the interest of the ratepayers, not to sanction the appointment of a man who was to receive 3d. per £1 instead of an efficient and solvent applicant who was willing to take 2d. per £1. The answer was "we cannot interfere." That policy of non-interference, not only in Ballinasloe, not only in Cavan, but all over the country, had been carried so far that if one went into any Protestant or Unionist house in any part of Ireland one found there no reliance upon any shape of protection against combination to injure them, to exclude them from public service, and deprive them of their rights. That was a matter of administration. He could only assure his friends on that side of the House that if they cared to investigate the matter they would find a hundred cases of this sort. It was going on all over the country, and it was because this state of things was so general that there was this general distrust and dislike of the Irish Government on his side, just as much as on the other.

To turn to higher politics the position was a very curious one. In the old days the theory of government in Ireland was that there should be one Minister, whether he was the Lord-Lieutenant with a seat in the Cabinet, in which case the Chief Secretary had no seat, or whether, as now, it was the Chief Secretary in the Cabinet with the Lord-Lieutenant Governor of Ireland, he being assisted by people who had local knowledge, the Lord Chancellor and the two Law Officers. [HON. MEMBERS cheered.] He did not know why hon. Members cheered. It had been pointed out by the hon. and learned Member for Waterford that the Lord-Lieutenant and the Chief Secretary had generally been either Englishmen or Scotchmen. What were they expected to know of Ireland? It had been customary to provide the Ministry with men who were born and brought up in the country, and had risen to eminence in their profession. Such men had always been allowed to have a voice in the internal government of the country. He was dining with a Judge not long ago. [Ironical NATIONALIST cheers.] He did not know that that would be an object of merriment to hon. Members opposite. This gentleman was old enough to remember, or to have gathered from his legal forefathers, how government in Ireland was carried on in the early days of last century, and he told him as a fact that, for twenty-one years in Ireland, Saurim, the distinguished Irishman and Attorney-General, practically administered Ireland. Now although the Attorney-General was a trusted and influential colleague in the last Administration, with a voice in the government of the country, what had happened in the last two years? They had changed the permanent non-political Civil Service staff, and had brought over and put in this subordinate position a gentleman of avowed politics, a gentleman of pronounced opinions, both political and religious, a gentleman too distinguished to be put under the ordinary rules of the Civil Service, a gentleman who was provided with greater freedom of action, greater opportunities of initiative than if he was promoted in the ordinary course. And what was the first act of this gentleman? Whatever his powers might have been he was an ordinary Civil servant and member of a permanent staff. He went to Ireland, and to secure that he should have the greater freedom, the greater power of initiative, he directed that the Law Officers were not to be consulted as to the business of the country. Thus two members of the King's Government, with seats in this House, were shut up in their law rooms in the Castle in a position very little better than that of law clerks. The same gentleman caused it to be publicly known, shortly after his arrival, that, being cut off, of course, from the views of those familiar with the country, he would be dependent on other sources. He said that the opinion of the Roman Catholic Bishops and priests of the country and other influences were the most useful means of supplying the Government with information that would keep them in touch with affairs. That also had been put to them in a delicate paraphrase, called "accessibility." They had it stated that it was with the Chief Secretary's approval that Sir Antony MacDonnell made himself accessible to persons of all kinds and descriptions with whom he discussed important subjects. But did anyone suppose that when this official was appointed with those extra powers—powers of initiative and of greater freedom—that he was to be the authority to rule 4,750,000—1,250,000 of whom were Protestants and Unionists—through the information and influence of the priests. That was the cause of the whole disaster. Ulster could not be ruled on the information and influence of the priests.

He had said many hard words against the Irish Administration, but he had never done an injustice to Sir Antony MacDonnell. He had never spoken to him in his life. It pleased the Chief Secretary to suggest bias in the Anderson case, but he had no prejudice against Sir Antony MacDonnell. He had an Indian record of which any Irishman might be proud, and if he had done an injustice to Sir Antony MacDonnell he would apologise to him. Now they were beginning to see that the Chief Secretary and the Irish Administration, for all their fair words and sympathy, had been at the back of the whole thing. Only the other day a letter appeared in the papers from the Roman Catholic Bishop of Limerick, in which he denounced the Chief Secretary and the Irish Administration for having tricked and played with him and his clerical colleagues in the matter of University education. He was sorry to say he thought that that was exceedingly probable and that Sir Antony MacDonnell would be obliged to disclose what he promised the Roman Catholic bishops in carrying out his policy of "accessibility." From Friday night, however, instead of the straightforward action they were entitled to expect from a Unionist Minister, they knew he was at the back of the whole thing. That was enough to make every Unionist, whether he were an Irishman or an Englishman, sick of the whole business. It was quite reasonable then that they should describe the mischievous effect of such a policy, and he did not deplore a single word he had said in regard to the Administration, but he would withdraw if the state of affairs were shown to be otherwise. It was, however, inadvisable that a Civil servant should be sent down to Belfast on a quasi-political mission to interview the Lord Mayor and the Town Clerk. Sir Antony MacDonnell got his answer from the Town Clerk. He stated that the Government were about to introduce a Roman Catholic University Bill, and that he wished to overcome their objections. Of course, hon. Gentlemen opposite would say that that was perfectly legitimate, but he maintained it was not legitimate in a country where they wanted to establish confidence in the Government that the head of the permanent staff should be sent on such missions. Further, Sir Antony MacDonnell attended dinners and other functions in Dublin, and made speeches which, reading between the lines, could have been delivered by any hon. Member in the House. That was neither fair to him or to them.

That was the position. It was utterly unsatisfactory and would have to be ended as soon as possible. Up to August last the position of the Irish Unionists towards the Government was one of dislike and distrust, but since the introduction of this devolution scheme those feelings had become five times as intense, and the real question was, "Who was responsible for this scheme?" Irish Unionists were now asked to vote confidence in the Government. It was not a question of approval or objection to Home Rule—Home Rule was a question they would vote against at any time—but a question of confidence in the Irish Government. In regard to Imperial affairs the Irish Unionists were as proud of the Empire as anybody, and they would support this Government because they thought it was the only Government, but was it not rather hard to put a man in such a position that he should be asked to vote confidence in the Irish Administration when it was now established that the head of that Administration, responsible to the Unionists and to the House, had been sitting in Dublin Castle intriguing to ruin the whole of Unionism in Ireland. In August there came this devolution proposal, the root principle of which was the transfer of money in bulk to the Irish Administration. The action of the Civil servant who had taken part in it had been said to be indefensible. They had been told by one member of the Government that these proposals had been moderately condemned by the Government and by another that the Government repudiated them. He did not know what the varying grades of censure might be, but in some shape or form every man of the Government had thrown these proposals overboard. Irish Unionist members of the Government had done their duty to their constituents. The Attorney-General had done more than anyone else to show how destructive to Unionist principles this would be, and the English Attorney-General boldly challenged this measure and threw it overboard. He, therefore, would not discuss its merits, but here was a wholesale and insidious betrayal of Unionist policy upon a question vital to the Irish Unionists, and they were asked to give a vote of confidence to this Government.

Let them see who was at the bottom of this, and who was responsible for the paternity of these proposals. There was no doubt that it was born at the Castle. There were four people present at the birth. One was Lord Dunraven—he had told them what he thought about it. Another was Sir Antony MacDonnell, who, he thought, had been infamously treated. There was also Lord Dudley, who had frankly admitted that he was party to, privy to, and cognisant of the action of Sir Antony MacDonnell in what he did in connection with the scheme. He could not understand how, if the full facts were before the Cabinet, Sir Antony MacDonnell could be permitted to be censured by any honest Government, if the Cabinet were aware that the Lord-Lieutenant had given his sanction to his action. They might be told that the Government was not aware that there were three people, the Lord-Lieutenant, Sir Antony MacDonnell, and Lord Dunraven—he would come to the fourth in a minute—who knew about it. The question was about the Chief Secretary, because the curious thing was that Sir Antony MacDonnell, the Lord-Lieutenant, and Lord Dunraven all believed that Sir Antony MacDonnell was not exceeding the instructions of the fourth Party. Lord Dunraven said it was not true to say that Sir Antony MacDonnell pursued a policy that had been disapproved of by his chief. The Lord-Lieutenant wrote saying he was aware Sir Antony MacDonnell was helping Lord Dunraven and that he had discussed the suggested reforms with the Under-Secretary, but he did not think Sir Antony MacDonnell was exceeding his instructions, because he knew that under the terms of his appointment he differed from the ordinary Under-Secretary, and that on two previous occasions, in connection with the land question and the University question, Sir Antony MacDonnell had been in close communication with Lord Dunraven. The curious thing was that of the four supporters, three of them took an absolutely different view from the fourth, and that was that Sir Antony MacDonnell was not running counter to the wishes of the Chief Secretary. The root-principle of these proposals was the transfer of money in bulk to the Irish Administration. That was the very thing that was attempted in the House, but was stopped by the hon. Member for King's Lynn and the hon. Member for Islington. That was the very idea for which the Chief Secretary strove. His idea was to take the Development Grant and make it a charge on the Consolidated Fund. That was the idea at the bottom of devolution.

Then there was another matter. Lord Dunraven was chosen—he was a harmless nobleman with a passion for notoriety—they thought as much of him in Ireland as they did in New York—as a harmless instrument, on two occasions, for bringing schemes before the public. Here they had from start to finish Lord Dunraven in close confabulation with the Chief Secretary, or, as he was careful to put it, Mr. Wyndham. What were those topics dealing with administrative reform which it was inexpedient for Lord Dunraven to discuss with the Chief Secretary except in his private capacity. Those discussions were going on all through the year and Lord Dunraven said very fairly that the Chief Secretary's disavowal should have come earlier. The element of secrecy on the part of the Chief Secretary cast suspicion over the whole transaction. When these proposals appeared in print the Chief Secretary wrote a disavowal. But such a disavowal! It meant that he never saw the identical words in the proposals. It was to be regretted that the right hon. Gentleman did not disavow these proposals on principle. From that day to the present, although members of his Government had been calling for the paternity of this precious scheme, never one word could be extracted until the House met, and Ministers could no longer escape from the inquisition of question and answer. If everything was fair, honest, and above-board, why this desire for concealment? On Thursday last he asked the Chief Secretary whether there was any official sanction for this proposal, and it actually took two days to get a "Yes" or "No to that question! Was there any wonder, under these circumstances, that Irish Unionists were distrustful? Was there any wonder that Unionists, when they saw that they had been wounded in the house of their friends, should jib at a vote of confidence in a Government which—and from the evidence it was the almost irresistible inference—had hatched this plot in Dublin Castle? When this matter came to be dealt with, it would not be a matter of apology or excuse. They would want, not graceful sophistries or platitudes, but categorical denials if they were going to satisfy Irish Unionists.

This was a serious matter. It was not a matter merely affecting Irish Unionists. Their English Unionist colleagues had been elected for the maintenance of the Union. If this were a fraud on Irish Unionists it was also a fraud on English Unionists. They believed that they had been betrayed by their own leaders, and they were going to fight the matter out.

They did not care if they had to fight an open foe—they did care a great deal, because after years of loyalty it was a hard position to be placed in—but they would fight a secret enemy just as hard as an open foe. These were times of danger and stress; they had been given away behind their backs; and it was their duty to themselves and to those whom they represented to see the thing out, and, fortunately, a means was at hand which would enable them to do so. It was a striking commentary on the Chief Secretary's administration of Ireland that, within the last twelve months, two different associations for the protection of Unionist interests had had to be formed. They had organised and embodied in a union all the constitutional associations in Ulster, and they now had the Ulster Union. The Liberal Unionists and the Orangemen were separately represented. That council, with some 200 delegates, would be meeting in Belfast on March 3rd, and they would take counsel there whether the time had not come for Ulster to draw on her reserves. [Laughter.] Hon. Gentlemen laughed, but they did not know what he meant. He would tell them what the Ulster reserves were. They were Ulster's contribution to the Government. There were five Members representing Irish constituencies members of the Government; there were two Members for the University of Dublin, and three Members sitting for Ulster constituencies. If they were pressed in this way, if they were convinced that they were being tricked and betrayed, as their people believed, it would be time for them to consider whether they should not ask the five Unionist Members of the Government to step out of the ranks, and come to their help. He knew perfectly well what their feelings were; he knew their loyalty, and the services they had always rendered to their Unionist constituents. It would be a great sacrifice to ask them to make, but if the Irish Unionists were betrayed in the fashion now prevalent there would be no alternative. He was sorry that on that occasion he in company with his colleagues were absolutely prevented from voting confidence in an Irish Administration carried on as at present. It was the first time, he thought, for twenty years that Irish Unionists had been forced to say that. They appealed to the Chief Secretary last year to get rid of this wretched, rotten, sickening policy of conciliation, which meant bribing one's enemies at the expense of one's friends. That appeal unfortunately fell on deaf ears. Matters had changed now: they left it to the leaders of their Party, they appealed to them to put their foot down on this trickery and treachery towards Unionists in Ireland, and to give them a straightforward, resolute Government, which would be impartial to all sections of the community. The men who were responsible for the present state of affairs were guilty of much disservice to the Unionist Party. It was lamentable that the Viceroy should have been concerned in a movement which struck at the whole principles of Unionism, and gave colour to the statement that the Unionist Government were being converted to Home Rule. He and his colleagues had not abated their opposition to Home Rule, but it had been made impossible for them to oppose Home Rule on the present occasion by voting confidence in the Irish Government as now administered.

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. Wyndham, Dover): I rise at once because one passage in the speech of the hon. and learned Member who moved the Amendment before the House, and almost the whole of the violent speech to which we have just listened, were directed to a matter which is personal to myself, and I therefore do not propose until I have dealt with that matter to go into the merits of the Amendment or to answer the subsidiary points which have been raised. But in case I should otherwise forget to do so before I sit down, I wish most emphatically to repudiate the charge that during my administration and in pursuance of my policy, favouritism has been shown to certain parts of Ireland at the expense of other parts. It is not so. I have the figures here, and if it would not seem as if I were interposing them between the House and the matter on which I must speak I would read them now. [Cries of "Read."] No; whether the House is impatient to hear me on the Dunraven scheme or not

I am impatient to speak upon it. I ask the House to allow me to go into this matter somewhat fully. The last speaker, in the attack which he delivered against me says he is sick of the policy of conciliation, and I have no doubt he disapproves cordially of any Chief Secretary meeting any persons except those who agree with him. I have no doubt he thinks I am betraying the Union and no longer deserving of his confidence if I attempt to make higher education acceptable to the Irish people and to bring it within the reach of their pockets, and if I think it proper to speak, as I have spoken, to a Roman Catholic Archbishop, a Presbyterian Moderator, Fellows of a University, to all and sundry who could give me any opinions or facts which might help me to solve a problem which I bitterly regret I have not been able to solve. Therefore, I am not going to make a speech which will convince my hon. friend, who has attacked me so vehemently, that he should approve of all I do and have tried to do in Ireland. That is beyond my power. What I do wish is to make it quite clear that in the letter I wrote to The Times on September 27th last I was expressing a view which I have always held—I was expressing my objection to the introduction of a semi-elective financial board, and my fundamental and unalterable objection to the delegation to any board of any legislative powers other than those of Private Bill legislation. These are the views I hold and which, I thought, everybody knew I held. They are clear to me, but it does not always follow that views which are clear to one's self are clear to everybody else. When we discussed Home Rule in the 80's and 90's there were many somewhat ambiguous solutions proffered as alternatives to a direct negative—provincial councils, and I know not what—and at the end of that controversy there were some, among whom I include myself, who arrived at the definite view that there was no middle path, that Home Rule must mean really a Parliament, and, I think, a Parliament with powers to tax, and that if we are not prepared to adopt that form of government we must be content with the Union as it stands and try to work it as best we may. That is my opinion; and that being so, knowing as I do that a great many people in Ireland are not satisfied with the present political position, knowing as I do that Ireland stands in need of all the help this House can give her, and is bound to give her, as I think, under any intelligent appreciation of the Union, I have not been anxious to guard myself against suspicions and risks by refusing to meet any man who came to speak to me on his views as to how some amendment might be brought in.

And now I come to the point of my relations to Sir Antony MacDonnell. The charge against me is either that I appointed a distinguished public servant whom I had no business to appoint, and that I gave him powers I had no business to confer on him; or that I was right in doing that, but that the moment he put one foot wrong I threw him over. I deny both charges. What were the conditions of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment? If I may develop this at some length I shall be glad to do so, because, unless the House goes back with me over the last few years, I do not think they will realise the impression that was made upon my own mind. In the year 1902 I had no idea there was going to be a vacancy in the office of Under-Secretary. Sir Antony MacDonnell came back from India with about as high a record as any man who ever went there. He was an Irishman, and I was introduced to him by Lord Lansdowne. I was delighted to make his acquaintance, and I was much impressed by his personality and his ability. He asked me to give him letters to the heads of various departments in Ireland in order that he might make use of them on a visit to that country. He talked at great length on land problems. In India he had tackled successfully a great many land problems. I know it is the fashion to deride the appointment I made on the ground that Indian experience was not an advantage but rather a disadvantage to the man going to Ireland; but anybody who reads Sir Henry Maine's works will know that in India every form of land tenure is to be found, and would understand that the man who did the work Sir Antony MacDonnell did in India was not a man unfitted to assist me in dealing with the Irish land question, and certainly not a person likely to be hostile to the landowning class. However that may be, I was much impressed by Sir Antony MacDonnell; and a vacancy which I did not expect suddenly occurred. Sir D. Harrel resigned at a moment when I did not expect his resignation; and my thoughts naturally and inevitably turned to the distinguished Irishman I had met with such a high record, and I asked him to assist me in my task, not a very easy one, by becoming Under-Secretary for Ireland. At that moment I found myself under the necessity of proclaiming a number of districts in Ireland under the Criminal Law Amendment Act; at that moment I was hoping to pass the Land Bill of 1902, or to bring in a better measure the next year; and at that moment, before I had any conversation with Sir Antony MacDonnell, I was gravely exercised in my mind, and had had many conversations with his predecessor on the subject, by the immense amount of new work which had been cast on the various Irish Departments by Unionist legislation. The Government of Ireland has ceased to be merely the police force of Ireland. Under the Congested Districts Board, the Government of Ireland has to administer large sums of money, and under the Local Government Act and other Acts many new duties have been created, and, in my judgment, in my deliberate judgment, I had arrived, before I saw Sir Antony MacDonnell, at the conviction that it was proper and right and almost necessary for the Chief Secretary to take a better collective view of all these Departments, that he should try to draw them together, and that he should have a strong chief on the staff to assist him in the difficult task thrown upon his shoulders.

The case I have to make is that there are certain things which I have always held and hold now. Other things have been attributed to me by the last speaker; for instance, that I am in favour of delegating legislative powers to a body in Ireland. I have never held that view, and I do not hold it now. It is natural that I could not invite such a man as Sir Antony MacDonnell, with such a record, to come and help me as a mere clerical assistant; and, apart altogether from anything that specifically passed between us, if it was proper to make such an appointment, and I hold that it was proper, it was impossible to make it without accepting Sir Antony MacDonnell as he was, as a man sworn of the Privy Council on the same day as I was myself. Do you suppose a Minister could invite a man who had rendered greater services to the Empire than he could ever hope to render, to sit on an office stool and merely to register the papers that came into the office? Let me be condemned for making the appointment, but if I made the appointment I had to accept Sir Antony MacDonnell, and I was glad to accept him, on the valuation he had won in India by his long and distinguished services. Sir Antony MacDonnell did not take up this task with a light heart. I was perfectly well aware that by appointing him I exposed myself to risk of attack. I had talked over Ireland with him before I suggested he should become Under-Secretary, and it was because we were both deeply interested in the possibility of doing something for the good of Ireland that, after a fortnight's consideration, he decided he could undertake the task, and we embodied in our letters the conversations in which we had been engaged; and these letters make it perfectly plain and clear that Sir Antony MacDonnell was invited by me rather as a colleague than as a mere Under-Secretary to register my will. I was glad to have his advice, to welcome any suggestions from him, and it was made clear, subject, of course, to my control, that he was to enjoy a certain freedom of administrative action. Let me be blamed for that if my hon. friends think I made a mistake in the appointment. I do not think I did. But I made clear to Sir Antony MacDonnell all the projects which I thought within the conceivable bounds of legislative action.

It has been suggested, not here, this afternoon, but elsewhere, that when I invited Sir Antony MacDonnell to help me in Ireland I had in my mind, and that I imparted to him, some desire to carry out what is called devolution. That is certainly not the case. Nothing of the kind was ever mentioned by either of us. The letters are extant—they are in Sir Antony MacDonnell's possession—and they show that no such problem was contemplated by me at the time of his appointment. We had proposed to deal, in the first place, with the maintenance of order. At that time that was a pressing problem. Here are the problems we hoped to deal with then, and the order in which they were placed:—(1) the maintenance of order; (2) a Land Bill on the lines of voluntary purchase, or, where that was impossible, an automatic and cheap system of fixing rents instead of the existing litigious system; (3) education in the spirit of the Prime Minister's views; (4) the co-ordination, direction, and control of detached boards. The co-ordination, or correlation, as I used to call it, of the various boards in Ireland does not suggest to me, and never will suggest to me, the introducing of another board which is to be of an elective character. It is bad enough to have forty-two boards, and the last thing I want, at any rate, is to have a forty-third board, half of the members of which I am to nominate, and be accused of betraying the Union, and the other half to be elected to quarrel with those I have nominated; while the Treasury views on finance will not be accepted by the board, and the views of the board will never be accepted by this House. That has nothing to do with co-ordination. The other matters mentioned were material improvement and that object of derision, administrative conciliation; and by administrative conciliation no man has ever meant winking the eye at disorder, and if proof of that were needed it comes at the end of a programme which begins with the maintenance of order. Administrative conciliation in my mind means an attempt, however vain, however futile, however malign — however libelled — to show that the duty of government does not end with maintaining order as the first condition of economic progress. The province of government is larger, and some positive direction and energetic help can be given to economic progress. That was all that was contained in Sir Antony MacDonnell's letter to me as the projects which he contemplated. In my reply I indicated one or two more, and here they are. One was, that if we lived long enough, I hoped something would be done to carry out the Report of Lord Balfour of Burleigh's Commission—something to consolidate the grants to Ireland and to relieve the rates. And I hoped something would be done to develop transit in that country. That is all that was proposed—nothing else was proposed. And therefore I hope that from this day forth it will not be suggested in this House or in another place that I entered into a clandestine conspiracy with Sir Antony MacDonnell to foist upon the public, unbeknown to them, principles which were opposed to the principles of the Unionist Party. The hon. Member who attacked me in his speech, quoted some words to the effect that it was better that the members of the Reform Association, I think he said, should not meet me at Sir Antony MacDonnell's dinner table. Was that the charge?

MR. WILLIAM MOORE: The Chief Secretary considered that the meeting should not be held at Sir Antony MacDonnell's house, as he wished to keep it private.

MR. WYNDHAM: What meeting, with whom and when?

MR. WILLIAM MOORE: This is a letter written by Sir Antony MacDonnell—

> "If the first meeting," that is of Lord Dunraven and his Committee, "was held at my house, or at my invitation, everyone would say that Mr. Wyndham was a prime mover in the business. Any help I can give I should be happy to give by supplying facts and information, but I think—and in this Mr. Wyndham, to whom I have spoken, agrees with me—that it is better I should not appear prominently or even to the extent of inviting men to meet you."

MR. WYNDHAM: I do not know what impression that conveys to the minds of other people in the House, but the impression which it conveys to my mind is that I was to meet those persons who published the Dunraven scheme. [Cries of "No."] The impression conveyed to my mind is that it has some connection with the Reform Association. Well, but it has not any.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE: It was read in that connection in the speech of Lord Dunraven.

MR. WYNDHAM; No, I think not. That is not what Lord Dunraven could have intended, because what is the fact? Not this year, but in the year 1903, just after the Land Act had been passed amidst general plaudits—at a time when Lord Dunraven received the compliments that he had earned from all sections of opinion—at a time when the hon. Member for Cork City, who is not in the House, had converted a paper which was very hostile to the Government into an organ of the derided policy of conciliation—it was at that time that Lord Dunraven came to me and discussed the chances and prospects of a Moderate Party in Ireland, and showed to me the proof sheets of an article which he subsequently published in the Irish People. And still I am in favour, if it was possible—the chances are not so good as they were—I am not going to disguise anything from the House—I am in favour of Lord Dunraven or anyone else forming a Moderate Party in the Centre and South of Ireland. I should be very glad if it could be done. I know that on many questions hon. Gentlemen from the South of Ireland do not see eye to eye with my friends who sit for northern constituencies, but surely they would not deny to Unionists in the Centre and South of Ireland the right to express their views. Luckily, I can refer anybody in this country to the article which Lord Dunraven contributed to the Irish People on November 7th, 1903, which was the outcome of our meetings at the time. Lord Dunraven and I were discussing these projects. And again, just as in the letter exchanged between myself and Sir Antony MacDonnell, there is no mention of any desire to delegate legislative power other than for Private Bills to anybody, so in the contribution which Lord Dunraven made at the time, and after our conversation in 1903, there is no mention of anything of the kind. He speaks of land purchase, of education, of the conditions of the people, of the labourers, of the Irish Land Bill, of transit, of fiscal reform, and after that he asks, in heavily leaded type, how is further co-operation practicable? Upon that point did anybody expect devolution? Not at all. The article goes on—

> "The questions enumerated sufficiently prove the existence of a vast field on which the efforts and energies of all men of all creeds, classes and politics can be profitably employed."

I agree with every word of that. I think with Lord Dunraven, although I do not approve of his two proposals—to have a semi-elective financial board and to delegate legislative powers other than for private legislation—although I do not approve of those two proposals I will not turn round when it puts me in a difficulty and unsay all that I have said about Lord Dunraven, who took the foremost part in producing the Land Conference. When he took up the Land Conference he was exposed to derision, but he carried it through and was praised by all. This is not an occasion when I shall turn round and say I am embarrassed, or the Party is embarrassed, because you have advocated objects to which I object.

MR. T. W. RUSSELL (Tyrone, S.): What about the suggested meeting at Sir Antony MacDonnell's house?

MR. WYNDHAM: Why not? In the year 1903, when we were discussing these matters, before there was any Reform Association or anybody had any idea of it—what has it got to do with the Reform Association and the manifesto published on December 26th, 1904—what has it got to do with founding a Moderate Party in the South of Ireland? What has the desirability of Lord Dunraven asking men to meet me—what, I ask, have those things and the article contributed to the new organ of peace—what have they got to do with a publication which I saw for the first time a year afterwards, which contained two things to which I objected, and to which I expressed objection?

MR. T. W. RUSSELL: I do not disagree with the right hon. Gentleman, but I wish to know what first of all the meeting was to be about, and why it should be secret.

MR. WYNDHAM: I do not see the force of that. Does the hon. Gentleman suggest that we were going to discuss devolution at that meeting?

MR. WILLIAM MOORE: Lord Dunraven is asked, according to this letter, to bring together the identical people who within twelve months formulated this scheme. It was suggested that the meeting should take place at Sir Antony MacDonnell's house. Sir Antony MacDonnell said: "It will never do to have Mr. Wyndham appearing as the prime mover in that matter." What is the meaning of that secrecy?

MR. WYNDHAM: If the hon. Member suggests that a letter of that kind having been written, it reflects upon me let him think so. It has nothing to do with the matter that he has been discussing, and I can quite understand that for Lord Dunraven to hold a sort of political dinner party at the Under-Secretary's house would have been a mistake, and would have excited comments which would have been prejudicial to the objects which he had in his mind, and those objects are the objects which I have read out. I do not know whether that seems as clear to the House as it does to me. [OPPOSITION and NATIONALIST laughter.] What I cannot understand is why discussions at the beginning of the autumn of 1903 should have been woven by the hon. Member who has attacked me into a charge that I was in favour of these two things. The prospects of such a Moderate Party working for objects upon which all men were agreed are, I regret, overcast when the same men—if they are the same men—take up the idea of delegating legislative power other than for Private Bills to anybody. The prospects of a Moderate Party are overcast to-day by taking up that project, because it is a project on which I do not suppose any two men in Ireland would agree. But the meetings and discussions in 1903 which have been referred to were meetings and discussions on subjects upon which it was hoped that all men would agree, and at that time I never gave any countenance to the idea either of creating a semi-elective financial board or to the idea of delegating powers, other than for Private Bill legislation to anybody or board of any sort or description. That is really all that I have to say. Neither then, nor on any subsequent occasion, have I ever said a word, or written a word, to Sir Antony MacDonnell in favour of either of those two proposals, those proposals have not been before me, and those are the proposals to which I attach importance, and to which I strongly and vehemently object.

But then it is said, how do you testify to the loyalty of Sir Antony MacDonnell? I testify to it with all my heart. He is a man of the greatest candour and integrity—a man with whom I have been proud and glad to work. And if the House cares to follow the lines which led to the misunderstanding, I will trace them faithfully from start to finish. I had discussed finance with Sir Antony MacDonnell, not on many occasions, but on several occasions. I had, as the hon. Member for North Antrim pointed out, been for a long time in favour of devoting moneys which are exclusively Irish to the needs which are peculiar to that country. I am not going to defend that position now. It is a position which men of honour understand. I have defended it in this House, and I have carried a Bill—the Development Grant Bill—through this House. I brought in a Bill last year for devoting the savings on Irish administration to that grant, which I was not successful in carrying, but my mind has been working upon that fact for a long time since. I do not claim any great merit for that. It is not very novel. As a matter of fact Ireland has always enjoyed something of that kind. When the Exchequers were amalgamated in 1817 funds were expended without consultation with this House and without any control on the part of the Treasury. When the Irish Church was disestablished and disendowed the Church Surplus Fund came into being, and it has for many years been devoted to needs which are peculiar to Ireland. The Congested Districts Board started with an income, the new Technical Department started with an endowment and income; and with all those precedents before me I desired, in view of the political and financial circumstances of the situation, to give some extension to the principles which are to be found in those measures, and which have governed the dispensation of all those funds. I have spoken on these lines to Sir Antony MacDonnell, and he, with his Indian experience, found analogies between my ideas and the views which he had formed in India. But here comes the first source of serious misunderstanding. When Sir Antony MacDonnell has spoken to me of the Indian Budget and of provincial contracts I, who am colossally ignorant about Indian affairs, did not know that in India there is a semi-elective council with a voice in these matters; and therefore it never occurred to me during the conversations I had with Sir Antony MacDonnell that in pointing out the analogy between Indian finances and some of the ideas I had in my mind, he had in his mind, unexpressed, or at any rate not clear to me, the idea that another board would come into existence, partially elective, a board to which I should have to submit my Estimates, in addition to the Treasury and this House. If I had obtained an inkling of the idea that I was to submit the allocation of Irish resources not only to the Treasury, but then to another body of this description, which would resent everything that the Treasury had done, and in the third place to this House, where the Irish Members would dissent sharply from the views of the board—if I had ever entertained in my mind that this was part of the financial ideas intended I should at once and forthwith have told Sir Antony MacDonnell that, in my judgment, the proposal was impracticable and unworkable. But it did not. When I was talking of the Development Grant policy and he was citing the Indian analogies it is now clear to me that, though we were travelling on parallel lines, he was travelling on a line that went further, in accordance with the practice of India. In any case it has never been suggested to me that there should be any control over my allocation of Irish money for certain purposes other than the control of the Treasury and this House.

Now I come to the second and the graver cause of misunderstanding which confirmed the first cause. At the end of last session I defended Sir Antony MacDonnell, and I am prepared to defend him again. I went upon a holiday, and I tried to make that holiday as complete as I could make it. I paid no heed to the newspapers, I neglected my correspondence, and my mind was not intent upon politics at all. I do not dwell upon this, though, owing to the exacting demands that Ireland makes upon the time and attention of a Minister, I had not enjoyed a holiday for six years, and I meant this to be a holiday. There was no indication to make me suppose that anything important was going to happen in Ireland. The Irish Reform Association came into being without startling me. In the second manifesto, published on September 26th, everybody read into the formation of the Irish Reform Association all kinds of designs which I had not discovered in it on a very cursory and otiose perusal of the report on the first reading. I was on a holiday, and I did not know that the association was going to be formed or to issue a manifesto or report. The first report issued by the association made no impression on my mind, and it made very little impression upon the mind, of other people. I did not read it at the time; I was not following politics at all closely; but the Irish Times, a Unionist organ, seems to have read this report, I suppose, more carefully than I did. It was not at all startled or alarmed. This newspaper pointed out—and I think it is a fair criticism of the first notice of the Irish Reform Association—that its proposals were very vague, and added—

> "For the present we are content to bid the Irish Reform Association a cordial welcome and to wish success to its patriotic labours."

If I had been in Dublin and had read the article I should not have thought it my duty to dash into print and to say that these gentlemen were all wrong. The association only becomes real and concrete to me when I see the two proposals to which I have referred and to which I object. I was travelling about from this place to that place, and I was on the eve of going abroad. Sir Antony MacDonnell, who, as I now know, was taking a great interest in the Irish Reform Association and was intent upon this matter, which was not present to my mind, wrote me a letter saying that he was helping Lord Dunraven in respect of Irish finance. I wish I had that letter. If I had that letter I must say that the last cloud of suspicion would be dispersed; but I do not remember getting that letter. Sir Antony MacDonnell, however, recalls that letter to my mind, and he says that he was helping Lord Dunraven. I am not sure that he mentioned the Irish Reform Association, and he is sure that he did not mention the two matters to which I object—the creation of a financial council and the delegation of any legislative power other than Private Bill legislation to that body or to any other body. I may have erred in this matter; but all I can say is that if the letter did not contain any reference to these two points then I am not concerned as to what its contents were, except that I am deeply concerned that there should be a serious and melancholy misunderstanding between Sir Antony MacDonnell and myself, the only misunderstanding in the whole of our official connection. But, if these two points were not suggested in that letter, it contained no suggestion that a manifesto was to be issued; and it was the last thing I anticipated. I was abroad in Germany, and I never for a moment imagined that anybody was going to issue another political manifesto. Those are the points to which I attach importance, and I attached so much importance to them that I objected strongly to them both. When I saw for the first time in The Times on September 26th, without an idea that Sir Antony MacDonnell had assisted in drafting these proposals, and without consulting a single soul, I said that, in my judgment, the two points were inadmissible. That is the effect of my letter to The Times. I attached then, and I attach now, greater importance to the second point—the delegation of legislative powers other than Private Bill legislation. In the forefront of my letter I repudiated that. For the first time in The Times I did not, perhaps, state strongly, as I now state, my objection to the semi-elective financial board. That was not because I did not object to it. I never heard that there was to be a semi-elective financial board. I was concerned in the second part of the letter, to making it clear that the Treasury had some part to play in the giving of greater grants to Ireland. It was my duty, even on a cursory perusal of the document, to let the Chancellor of the Exchequer know that I was no party to seeking to get at that time further funds for Irish purposes. It was obvious to me that if these two proposals were objectionable I was bound to repudiate the second one forthwith.

I think that I have now exhausted the personal drama; at any rate, I have searched every nook and cranny of my mind and I have told the House all that I know of the matter. I am ready to take any blame which it is ready to cast upon me. I will take great blame for securing Sir Antony MacDonnell's services on the only terms commensurate with his performance of the duties. I did that, and I would do it again. I will take blame for permitting and for encouraging him to see Lord Dunraven and others and to collect information which might be useful to me in respect of Roman Catholic education. I did that, and I would do it again. I have as great a right to my views on the higher education of Roman Catholics as any other hon. Members. In India there are elective boards. I may be blamed because such little heed as I did pay to the coming to birth of the Reform Association during my holidays did not seem to me to afford any reason for my rushing back to Ireland. But from all this there followed, as I have said, a serious misunderstanding, but what is perfectly plain is that Sir Antony MacDonnell was justified and well warranted in the belief that I should not, and could not, object to his seeing Lord Dunraven or discussing with him the possibilities of reform, and the chances of Unionists in the South taking a more active part in politics and local affairs. He knew from conversations and from my speeches in this House that I was in favour of allowing the Irish Government to devote money exclusively Irish to the needs peculiar to that country, and he knew that I did not object, and I do not object, to the principle of some such measure for Private Bill legislation as that which has been given to Scotland, with the necessary alterations to make it applicable to Ireland. From this he inferred that I did not object, and I do object, to the creation of an elective financial board, and that I did not object, and I do object, to the delegation of any legislative power to anybody in Ireland other than for the purpose of Private Bills. His inference was a perfectly honest one, upon which he acted without any attempt to conceal anything.

MR. DILLON (Mayo, E.): Then why was he censured by the Cabinet?

MR. WYNDHAM: I am coming to that. He was wrong in drafting that document without being sure that I approved of the proposal, but it throws no kind of reflection upon his honour, candour, or integrity. His career in India stands unblemished by this matter. Now I am asked why I do not defend his action. I ought to add, as I said before, that as soon as Sir Antony MacDonnell saw my objection to these two proposals in The Times he at once informed Lord Dunraven that he could have no connection with the programme. Having made that clear I am asked why I did not defend Sir Antony MacDonnell. I have defended Sir Antony MacDonnell.

MR. DILLON: But why was he censured by the Cabinet?

MR. WYNDHAM: He was censured by the Cabinet because he assisted the publication owing to this misunderstanding, as I have explained, of proposals to which I and to which the Cabinet object; proposals which I was not at liberty to make without consultation with my colleagues, and which, therefore, he was not at liberty to make without knowing clearly that I was in favour of them.

MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL (Oldham): Does that apply to the Viceroy?

MR. WYNDHAM: A statement made by the Cabinet that they could not defend a publication of these proposals is a statement of fact. How can we as a Party, as a Government, defend the publication of proposals to which we object? But to that statement was added that the Government were thoroughly satisfied with the loyalty of Sir Antony MacDonnell. Now, it may be urged that you ought not to say you cannot defend the publication of those two proposals, and, at the same time, say that you are satisfied of his loyalty.

MR. DILLON: You said his conduct was indefensible.

MR. WYNDHAM: I do not know whether hon. Members wish to add acerbity, but I do not remember the word "conduct" being used. The point was that in assisting the formulation of these proposals his action was indefensible. But that casts no reflection upon Sir Antony MacDonnell. You cannot defend the publication of views from which you dissent yourself. Let me put it to my hon. friend. If we had said that we could not defend the publication of these proposals and we disapproved of them, without saying that we were satisfied that Sir Antony MacDonnell was acting honestly, we should have been casting an unmerited aspersion upon a public man upon whom no such aspersion should be cast. It would have been thought that the Government approved, or tacitly assented, to proposals to which the Government as a matter of fact took the strongest objection, and to which I have taken the strongest objection. I have dealt with this matter fully and without any artifices of speaking, and having dealt with it I feel it would be dull indeed——

MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL: Before the right hon. Gentleman passes from the subject altogether, will he answer the question whether the censure of the Cabinet on Sir Antony MacDonnell also covers the action of the Viceroy?

MR. WYNDHAM: This is a somewhat new question, because, when the Cabinet censured, if that is the proper term, Sir Antony MacDonell they did not know that the Viceroy had assented. Having dealt with this personal drama, at any rate very frankly, I feel it would be useless for me to deal seriously with the Amendment before the House, for this personal drama for the moment engages all our attention. The Amendment before the House raises very great questions of the highest moment. The hon. and learned Member for Waterford who opened this debate was quite explicit, as he always is. He wants Home Rule. We are entitled to know whether those who vote for this Amendment are ready to go to that length or not. I saw in the newspaper the other day that everybody should vote for this Amendment, because it meant a change in Party Government. Well, I should like to know the views of the Opposition upon this Amendment. My own views are perfectly clear. I stated last year in the debate on the Address that there is no middle term between Home Rule and the Union as it at present exists. I do not believe you will improve the situation of Ireland by means of a National Assembly and calling it something else. I do not believe you will improve the situation in Ireland by giving limited powers which you say you can revoke. I do not think you will improve the situation by supporting a national body and giving it no financial control, giving it a stipend like a boy upon an allowance. If any of those plans were followed the situation of Ireland would not be better, but worse than it is now. Because I am unable to say now, and because I have never been able to say, that the Unionist policy is unacceptable to the majority of the Irish people, it is assumed that we ought to try some experiment. Sir, I deny that. It is true now, as it was when the words were written, 110 years ago, that "This a state of things which no man in his senses can call perfectly happy." But it is the state of Ireland and the words go on. "To-day, the question is this—Are we to make the best of this situation which we cannot alter?" My view as a Unionist Minister has been that we ought to try and make the best of the situation. Because I have followed that view, I have exposed myself in some quarters to a great deal of hostile criticism, and if it is because I hold that view I have been condemned, I shall accept the condemnation with equanimity.

*MR. HALDANE (Haddingtonshire) said that after listening to the speech of the right hon. Gentleman he accepted fully the assurance he had given. He was a man of honour, and he accepted every word he had uttered as regarded his personal share in this most unhappy transaction. He could not help feeling, however, that Sir Antony MacDonnell had been very badly used in this matter. What were the circumstances under which Sir Antony MacDonnell, in the year 1902 was appointed to the great office which he held at the present time? They had heard them stated by the right hon. Gentleman, but they had also heard them stated in another place by Lord Lansdowne, and they knew pretty accurately what was the footing upon which Sir Antony MacDonnell came to Dublin Castle. The conditions were quite different from the usual conditions. Lord Lansdowne had stated that one of the conditions was that Sir Antony MacDonnell was not to be bound by the narrow rules of routine, and that he was to have greater opportunities of initiative. That was one of the phrases which appeared in the speech of the right hon. Gentleman opposite. One of Sir Antony MacDonnell's tasks was to be the co-ordination of the many detached or semi-detached boards under which the Government of Ireland was at present sub-divided. That was a most remarkable phrase. Upon that footing, and coming to Ireland from a great position in India as Sir Antony MacDonnell did, what took place? There was a discussion between the right hon. Gentleman and Sir Antony MacDonnell as to what was to be the policy of the administration in which he was to take a share, and the Chief Secretary had told them that there were many topics on which there was large discussion, and that there was an exchange of views not merely in writing but also in conversation. There was, for instance, an exchange of views upon education, and they knew, of course, that that meant the large question connected with University education in Ireland. Then there was the question of co-ordination of the many detached boards, which were the same words as he had just quoted from Lord Lansdowne's speech. Then there was administrative conciliation, another very remarkable phrase, and there was also consolidation, opening up a wide field. It was perfectly obvious from what the right hon. Gentleman had told the House that the discussions between himself and Sir Antony MacDonnell went very far. He accepted the right hon. Gentleman's statement that there was a mistake, but his point was that the person to be sympathised with in this matter was Sir

Antony MacDonnell and not the right hon. Gentleman. The Unionist Party had made a step forward towards a larger and more liberal measure of government in Ireland, and they had been reproached for being under the influence of hon. Gentlemen from Ireland who sat on the Nationalist side, but those gentlemen had even a better ground for reproaching the administration for being under the heel of the Ascendency Party in Ireland. He welcomed certain signs of a systematic effort on the part of the administration to try and free itself from that control. First, there was the Local Government Bill of the President of the Board of Trade, then at the Irish Office and, later, the conference in Ireland which led up to the Land Act of 1903. That conference was composed of the same people who had issued this manifesto which gave rise to such misunderstanding. The House had learned to-night that the views of the Chief Secretary were not opposed to every statutory board. He had made an exception in favor of Private Bill legislation, and held the view that a statutory board could be formed in Ireland to deal with that. The proposed financial council, however, was a matter on which he would like some light, for such a council was certainly a new feature in the situation. The right hon. Gentleman, he understood, had not concealed from them that he was in favour of a financial council of some kind, but what he did object to was a financial council which should control the allocation, which he himself chose to make, of the grants.

MR. WYNDHAM: No, I personally, speaking for what my experience of Dublin Castle is worth, object to having anybody interposed between the Treasury and this House.

*MR. HALDANE: It was not to have any power of control, but it was to be a financial council.

MR. WYNDHAM: Well, what is the good of a financial council if it has no power?

*MR. HALDANE: Well, I should have thought that that was a topic which emerged in the conversations between Sir Antony MacDonnell and the right hon. Gentleman. Was it not discussed?

MR. WYNDHAM: That is so; but I must ask the right hon. Gentleman to take it from me that I supposed, in my ignorance of Indian affairs, when the words "provincial control" were mentioned, that they did not convey financial control. I did not know there was a council in India. My object had been to get more money from the Consolidated Grant for Ireland, to be devoted to Irish purposes on the lines of the Development Grant. My object has never been—and as soon as I heard it stated I objected to it—that anybody should intervene between the Treasury and this House, a third body to whom I should have to repeat the endless arguments I have to urge in order to get money for any purpose.

*MR. HALDANE: Then I misunderstood the right hon. Gentleman very much when I heard his speech. I certainly thought that some consultative body was discussed.

MR. WYNDHAM: No.

*MR. HALDANE: Not even discussed.

MR. WYNDHAM: No.

*MR. HALDANE said that of course he accepted the right hon. Gentleman's statement; but it was very remarkable that Sir Antony MacDonnell should have slipped so easily into the idea that a financial council, which occupied a prominent position in the Reform Association scheme, came within the scope of what he was authorised to discuss. It only confirmed in his mind the fact that the discussions between the right hon. Gentleman and Sir Antony MacDonnell must have gone very far and been very loose. The step taken by the right hon. Gentleman in summoning Sir Antony MacDonnell to the councils of the Irish Office on the footing which had been described was a most extraordinary one. It seemed to him that Sir Antony MacDonnell must have very much misunderstood the letter of this, as he had misapprehended the spirit. It seemed to him that the case was one either for dismissal or defence, and not for the policy of censure which the right hon. Gentleman and those around him had adopted. It also seemed that there had been a good deal of division of opinion in the councils in which the right hon. Gentleman had taken part. For example, the attitude of mind of the right hon. Gentleman and Lord Lansdowne was quite different from that of the more extreme representatives of the Ascendency Party, not only out of the Government, but in the Government. One of the most extraordinary features of the situation was the fact that the attack on the right hon. Gentleman should come from the English Solicitor-General, who was a member of the Government. Then, again, they found The Times demanding the head not only of Sir Antony MacDonnell, but of the Lord-Lieutenant, in such an article in that paper as appeared that morning from its Dublin correspondent. After quoting the article in question, the right hon. Gentleman said that it was conveyed to his mind that there were two elements with which the right hon. Gentleman had to deal—those who, like Lord Lansdowne, wished to govern Ireland sympathetically, and those who, like the writer of The Times article and the hon. and learned Member opposite, took the old stiff ascendency view.

There had been a great deal of talk upon the question of a Catholic University. The right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the House had always taken a very large view of this matter, and had stated that he wished to put education upon a footing free from the taint of Protestantism on the one hand, and Catholicism on the other, and existing only for educational purposes. The Chief Secretary committed himself to that policy in 1899, but since then some other element in the Cabinet had diverted him from carrying out those views, and what they had before them on this occasion was very much like what occurred in 1899, namely, the Government coming to a certain conclusion, and expressing certain convictions, and then being terrorised out of them. A Government of that kind could not command the confidence of the country and could not command the confidence of Ireland. They had just had an example of the kind of confidence which this policy inspired in hon. Members representing Ulster. The House knew perfectly well the opinions of the Opposition upon these questions. He could not help contrasting the want of firmness and definiteness now shown in this matter by the Government in regard to Sir Antony MacDonnell with the very different attitude adopted by Lord Morpeth and Lord John Russell in regard to Mr. Drummond on the memorable occasion which presented the nearest parallel. In the spring of 1839 Mr. Drummond found himself in a situation very much like that in which Sir Antony MacDonnell found himself at the present time. What he did was to come to the conclusion that the magistrates in Ulster could not be trusted to deal with the maintenance of order in cases where there was a conflict between Protestants and Catholics, and so he appointed stipendiary magistrates. Knowing the spirit in which Mr. Drummond was appointed, knowing the work they had sent him to do, the men then responsible for the conduct of government in Ireland did not waste time upon small matters of detail, but took into account the fact that they had given the largest freedom to Mr. Drummond, just as it was given to Sir Antony MacDonnell, to do his best. And what happened? The House of Lords passed a vote of censure upon Mr. Drummond, but Lord John Russell in the House of Commons defended Mr. Drummond's action and reversed the decision given in the House of Lords. One could not help thinking that it would be much better if there was a little more of that firmer spirit shown on the part of those now administering Irish affairs.

He was talking of what they might have done, if they had used all the splendid opportunities which had come to them, with the magnificent majority they had in the House, and the resources at their disposal. Whether they took education, administration, or the reforms which formed the non-controversial part of the conversations between Sir Antony MacDonnell and the Chief Secretary, a vast field was open to them from which they seemed to have been frightened by the paralysing influence of that small Party in Ireland which appeared now to be exerting such a great influence. Surely the business of the Government of this country was to know their own mind about what they were going to do in Ireland, and he could not believe that they knew their own mind when they appointed Sir Antony MacDonnell, with the views he held, and then had to pull him up with a censure upon the matter they now had before them. Taking that broad view of the case, which one was bound to take in matters of this sort, the dilemma was one which necessitated either dismissal or a defence from the Chief Secretary. Dismissal they could not adopt in the face of what had now been admitted. That there were differences of opinion was quite evident, but it was not as though Sir Antony MacDonnell had neglected to perform some executive act, for he had simply taken part in the preparation of a certain scheme which had been given to the public. That might have been unwise, but it only represented Sir Antony MacDonnell's individual view and it was not put forward on any other footing. This matter had been going on for some months, and the whole head and cause of Sir Antony MacDonnell's offending was that he had taken a line of his own in trying to administer the government in the interests of Ireland and not in the interests of any section. Surely this was a possible policy for hon. Members opposite, and they ought to try to find some lines on which to run the government of Ireland, which lines should have in them the element of continuity and should be in the interests of Ireland as a whole and not of any one section; lines which those who came after them might take up with some assurance of continuity, still carrying on the good work which had already been begun. That did not seem to him to be the mind or the mood of the present Ministry, who stood up to nobody; they could not stand up to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, and they could not stand up to the Ulster element. One wondered whether there was anything left upon which the present Government would show sufficient nerve to initiate a policy and follow it out to its conclusion. The proposal before the House was a most opportune one, for it gave them an opportunity of discussing and bringing to the test a situation which he thought was more extraordinary than any situation which he had seen in the House of Commons for some time past.

Lord HUGH CECIL (Greenwich) said he was unable to agree with his hon. friends sitting near him upon this question, although he was generally very warmly in sympathy with their actions in Irish affairs. Upon Home Rule he heartily agreed with them. He should have thought that at the present time Home Rule was as dead as any question in the world, and his hon. friends representing Ireland need not be so anxious about it as they apparently were. He was very much surprised that anyone should be alarmed at the idea of this question coming to the front again, because in his opinion the English people had come to regard Home Rule as a closed issue. ["No, no!"] Nevertheless it was quite fitting that the Chief Secretary should repudiate with all the earnestness in his power any notion of coquetting with such a policy. He did not think that anything which Sir Antony MacDonnell had done could be reasonably construed as meaning an encouragement to Home Rule. Sir Antony MacDonnell was pursuing a conciliatory policy, and the right hon. Gentleman naturally contemplated that he should collect information from all sorts of people, and all sections of society, upon all sorts of matters, but he did not contemplate that he would either identify himself with any scheme of delegation or the Imperial control of finance. By doing this he was extending his duties beyond the limits which his right hon. friend had marked out for him. It was absurd, however, to say that Sir Antony MacDonnell was not to discuss these matters. Paraphrasing the apostle, "It is not a shame to speak of Home Rule." Home Rule, though pernicious, was not indecent. What was improper was that a scheme should actually be formulated with the assistance of the Under-Secretary and published to the world. That scheme was of a very moderate character, and did not go the whole distance of Home Rule; but it was an extremely foolish proposal and would probably have given an advantage to Home Rulers in the discussion of the question both in this country and in Ireland. It was improper, therefore, that Sir Antony MacDonnell should have identified himself with the publication of the scheme. Then arose the question of what his position and what the position of the Government towards him ought to be. The hon. and learned Member for Haddingtonshire strongly affirmed that the Government had no alternative except to dismiss or to defend Sir Antony MacDonnell. It was impossible to lay down a more astounding doctrine or one more injurious to the public service. Was it to be said that the Government must either approve what they knew to be wrong or dismiss a public servant whom they knew to be useful? Was there to be no alternative to insincerity or injury to the public service?

*Mr. HALDANE asked whether the noble Lord held that public servants should be attacked when they had no opportunity of defending themselves.

Lord HUGH CECIL said that when an attack was made the truth should be told. So far as a public official was in the right the Government should say he was in the right, and so far as he was in the wrong they should say he was in the wrong. How could he be aggrieved because they had spoken the truth when asked about the matter? The hon. and learned Member, who doubtless as a lawyer could defend anybody, had already taken up the cudgels in Sir Antony MacDonnell's behalf.

*Mr. HALDANE asked whether the noble Lord suggested that Sir Antony MacDonnell should be sent to him with authority to state all the facts of what passed between him and the Chief Secretary?

Lord HUGH CECIL understood that all the facts had been laid before the House. ["No."] The hon. and learned Member had already made a defence of Sir Antony MacDonnell, and had laid down the doctrine that the Government must get rid of a public servant whom they believed to be useful to the public service, because they were not able to say they thought him right when, as a matter of fact, they knew him to be wrong. Common sense demanded that they should pass a moderately and temperately worded censure when he was wrong, praise the much wider portion of his official work which deserved praise, and leave him in the position he adorned, and in which he would continue to be able to serve the public. It was often said of soldiers in the field and other public servants that the Government must either defend or dismiss them. That led to a series of insincere public defences, which everybody knew to be insincere, which were positively unfair to those who legitimately criticised the action of public officials, and which advanced no cause whatever except the lowering of the tone of debates in Parliament by creating the impression that Members were playing an unreal game and could not tell the truth. He strongly defended and applauded the Government for the course they had taken in regard to Sir Antony MacDonnell. He could not help feeling that his hon. friends were a little unreasonable in their attitude in regard to the policy of conciliation toward all classes in Ireland.

Mr. WILLIAM MOORE said he had no objection to conciliation at all. He thought it a capital theory, but in practice it proved to be conciliating their enemies at the expense of their friends, and as such was disastrous to Unionism.

Lord HUGH CECIL said that wherever a Government had to deal with two bodies of partisan opinion, each strongly inflamed against the other, if they were impartial, it was certain that they would be strongly censured by both parties. In view of the strong opinions held by the hon. Member for Antrim, if he did not criticise the Government it would be almost positive proof that the Government were partial in his favour. Everybody who had sat through Irish debates knew that the Irish question was not a question between Ireland and England; it was a quarrel between two parties of Irishmen — landlords and tenants, Nationalists and Unionists, Protestants and Roman Catholics—and this quarrel was perpetually being brought before the House, and landed the Government of the United Kingdom in a series of awkward positions. Any effort to do what was fair and just to both parties was denounced by the opposing camps. The Chief Secretary's administration had received that mark of success, and it was exactly what he should have expected from that right hon. Gentleman's moderate and impartial way of looking at things.

He was glad the Chief Secretary had repudiated so emphatically all schemes of devolution which partook of the nature of the Dunraven proposals. There was no doubt great force in the argument in favour of relieving the House of some of its burden of business, but he distrusted all schemes designed for that object unless they possessed two qualifications—first, that they left a real control to the House, and secondly—which was more important—that they proposed no delegation from the other House of Parliament. Whatever might be said about the House of Commons being overburdened with work, the other House could not be said to be, and any proposal to delegate power from that Assembly could be put forward, not as a matter of business, but only with an eye to the principle of nationality. That was where he dissented so vehemently from hon. Gentlemen opposite. They conceived the Irish question to be a national question, in fact, they called themselves "Nationalists." If he said there was not, never had been, and never would be such a thing as an Irish nationality, he would very deeply offend hon. Members; therefore he preferred to say that in none of the four countries of the United Kingdom could it be maintained that there was historically a nationality in the full sense of the word. When was England a nationality? In what year of grace? He did not know that England, as such, ever had what was called the idea of nationality. He did not admit that a country was a nationality when one half of the population was engaged in cutting the throats of the other half, hence he did not admit that England was a nationality during the period of the Wars of the Roses. Nor as long as they were under French influence could they be called an English nationality. That brought them down as late as Henry VII., and by that time Wales had become amalgamated. Then, in the time of Elizabeth, Scotch influence came in. Scotch influence spread over England so that England was almost a protected State. Under James I. the two peoples were united. There was not a single moment in Irish history when it could be said that Ireland had a nationality of which she had since been deprived. How absurdly unreal it was to speak of the United Kingdom as being made up of nationalities! He doubted whether there was a single Member of Parliament in whose veins was not flowing blood belonging to all four. Clearly they were of one nationality, amalgamated of different racial component parts—one nationality with one national history, just as they had one body of national interests and one national language. There was no greater sham than the idea of nationality as applied to any one of the four countries. The only difference between Irish nationality and English nationality was that the one was an active and the other a dormant sham. This very debate served to remind the House of the essential duality of Irish character. If they were to treat any nationality at all they must divide Ireland into halves, separating the North East from the rest of the body, unequal in population, wealth, and intelligence. Home Rule was in many respects a pernicious proposal; and it was certainly altogether misdirected. It did not "touch the spot" in Irish affairs, or reach the real Irish difficulty. Disapproving strongly of Home Rule, he submitted to his hon. friend that there was something more important than their immediate quarrel with the Government. Home Rule was for the time being extinct in English opinion. English and Scotch opinion would decide the Home Rule question. There was no prospect of converting the whole of Irish opinion to the one side or the other. Ulster would not be converted to Home Rule, nor the South of Ireland to Unionism. It followed, therefore, that it was all important to have regard to English and Scotch opinion, and to inflict, or nearly inflict a defeat on the Government which would beyond all doubt revive the Home Rule feeling in England and Scotland. It was thought the thing was dead; people did not care two straws about it.

They had not followed Sir Antony MacDonnell—hardly knew his name. But the moment they saw that the Imperial Government had been either defeated or jeopardised they would say, "This is a very serious matter, the Irish Government is not being well conducted; we must really listen again to those views, which we thought almost every one had abandoned, as to a fundamental administrative change." He was convinced hon. Members would sincerely regret it if they took such a course. Not only were loyalty, zeal, and earnestness necessary to achieve great objects, but patience also, and it would be an ill day for their common country if, in a moment of irritation, his hon. friends jeopardised the fruits of a victory which was almost won, and to which their courage and patriotism had largely contributed.

MR. JOSEPH DEVLIN (Kilkenny, N.) said it was a very fitting thing that the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich should lecture the Irish landlords on the disadvantages of ill-tempered debate in this House. He was not aware that any of the Irish Members of the House on one side or the other had addressed the epithet "coward" to any Member of the House, though that was the epithet the noble Lord flung at the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. The speech just delivered by the noble Lord displayed an amount of British audacity which was characteristic of all superior Englishmen when they came to deal with the affairs of Ireland. The noble Lord had made it plain what the Irish Nationalist Members, and what Ireland, might expect from him and the Party to which he belonged. He had taken upon himself to pose as the apostle of unambiguous speech in the House, but he had come forward to-night to defend the Government on a question with respect to which, to borrow a phrase, "metaphysical sophistication" had been the prominent feature. There had been questions put from both sides of the House to the Chief Secretary, and he had not answered one of them. The right hon. Gentleman had been asked from both sides what was the part Lord Dudley had played in this transaction. He wanted to know from the Government—did Lord Dudley represent anything or anybody in Ireland? Lord Dudley was the representative of the King, and surely the Government could not charge Sir Antony MacDonnell with reprehensible conduct if Lord Dudley sent a communication to be read in the House of Lords that he had been associated with the whole transaction from beginning to end.

The Chief Secretary had that afternoon pointed out that he at least was free from association with the proposals of Lord Dunraven, and yet the right hon. Gentleman's speech from beginning to end was a defence of Lord Dunraven and his proposals. The right hon. Gentleman had written on behalf of the Cabinet that the conduct of Sir Antony MacDonnell was reprehensible. An hon. Member on his side of the House had stated that Sir Antony, if his conduct was reprehensible, was unworthy of being entrusted further with the administration of Irish affairs, or else the Government was a sham and a fraud. No one knew the views of the Prime Minister on the fiscal question, but if the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham were to succeed in inducing the country to accept his policy, the fruits of his labours were to be plucked by the Prime Minister. The Chief Secretary had in the same way freed himself from the proposals of Lord Dunraven and Sir Antony MacDonnell, but if these gentlemen had succeeded they would have been put on one side and the Chief Secretary would have come forward and claimed the credit.

The hon. and learned Member for North Antrim approached every question affecting Ireland from the point of view of place and jobs. His own opinion was that the hon. Member was a rather unreasonable Unionist, for he had admitted that out of the ten Irish Unionists five had got places of emolument which might, all things considered, be regarded as a reasonable share of responsibility and gain. He had noticed that the hon. Member's eloquent appeal to his friends on the Treasury Bench to give up their places had been met with a painful silence. The noble Lord the Member for Greenwich had said there were two Irelands. That was not so; but in any event he denied that the hon. and learned Member for North Antrim represented the Protestants of Ireland while there were in the House the Member for South Tyrone—who had rendered more service to the Union than the whole galaxy of hon. Gentlemen opposite—the Member for Fermanagh and the Member for East Down. None of these Gentlemen were Catholics, nor, so far as he knew, Nationalists. The only Protestantism in Ireland the hon. and learned Gentlemen recognised was the Protestantism which had for its music the big drum and which marched under Orange colours.

These three hon. Gentlemen were the representatives and exponents of a new idea in Ireland; a wider appreciation of the events in Parliament; they would come back after the general election strengthened in numbers and influence, and the House would have the Irish Question presented with an irresistible power that it never had before. Everybody knew that Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment was not a Castle appointment. According to Lord Lansdowne he was a different kind of man from those usually appointed by the Castle. Lord Lansdowne said—

> "Sir Antony MacDonnell has held successively a series of the highest and most responsible posts in the Indian service. He was at different times at the head of the Government of Burma, at the head of the Government of the Central Provinces, with a population of 12,000,000 committed to his charge, and he was Chief Commissioner of the North-West Provinces, with a population of no fewer than 47,000,000 under his government. Subsequently he became a member of the Viceroy's Council, and on his return home, as the noble Marquess reminded us, he had the high honour of a place in the Privy Council conferred upon him. Now, my Lords, during that long and arduous service in India Sir Antony MacDonnell has had to deal with the most difficult of the many difficult problems with which Indian statesmen are confronted. He dealt with great famines, and thanks to his administration, waves of distress, the violence of which we can scarcely conceive in this country, passed over the districts committed to his charge and left the population scathless behind them. He dealt with religious difficulties in a country where religious differences produce feelings as bitter even as those which can be found on the other side of the Irish Channel. He dealt with the great and intricate problems of Indian land tenure—problems as complicated as any with which we are familar in these islands."

That was what Sir Antony MacDonnell had done, and that was not the class of appointment that hon. Gentlemen opposite wanted. If a mere Castle hack was needed that could be got without any difficulty and without going very far afield. There were five placemen on the benches opposite and ten or twenty eager to be made placemen. There was never any difficulty in getting a fine lot of candidates for a Government job. There were hon. Gentlemen on the other side who would preserve the best traditions of Castle government if they could only get a place. There had been some appointed to unpaid positions who were found too dear at the price. What was wanted was a man of strong mind and great powers of initiative to popularise Dublin Castle—an entirely hopeless task. It was not the Under-Secretary's fault that he had not succeeded, it was the fault of the Dublin Castle system which was rotten to the core, and could never be anything but a name that stank in the nostrils of all decent men. Sir Antony MacDonnell was given large powers of initiative, free action, and consultation as they had now learned. But the foundation and basis of all the charges against him was, that he was an Irishman come to govern Ireland; and secondly, he was a Catholic Irishman. Was that a crime? Let the gentlemen answer who had traduced him in Ulster. It was not his function to defend Sir Antony MacDonnell. All Castle officials were alike to him. He believed that they could never govern Ireland satisfactorily by Dublin Castle, but still the position of Sir Antony MacDonnell should be regarded with some consideration for Irish chivalry. Hon. Gentlemen opposite had not only pursued Sir Antony MacDonnell in regard to this particular incident raised in this debate, but had throughout pursued him with a truculence unparalleled in the case of any other public man. And that night the hon. and learned Member stood up in the House and practically apologised for all he had said about Sir Antony MacDonnell, rightly interpreting the new condition of affairs, and that the responsibility rested with the Government—a responsibility which the Government had shirked. Sir Antony MacDonnell merely pleaded that honourable past which had characterised him in all his public actions since he was entrusted with responsibility in public office.

The hon. Member opposite, in order to prove that there were two Irelands to intelligent, but ignorant Englishmen, made an attack upon County Cavan. He told about the horrible action that was done to a poor Protestant rate-collector or a potential rate collector. His argument was that a rate collector had been appointed, who was preferred to a Protestant candidate who was prepared to collect the rates at 1d. in the £ poundage less. Was that a basis of attack on Sir Antony MacDonnell? What were the real facts? They did not know in the House anything of the local conditions of this much-maligned County Cavan. And yet, having a Catholic population of 95 per cent. of the whole, it returned a Protestant Member of Parliament. The hon. Member did not tell that to the House. Might he ask the noble Lord, with his airy epigrammatic references to two Irelands, was that a proof of Catholic bigotry, or of the bitter passions that existed between Protestants and Catholics? Here was County Cavan returning to this Parliament to represent them, and promote their interests, a gentleman of a different religious persuasion to 95 per cent. of the inhabitants. How many Catholic representatives had they in the noble Lords of Ireland? And yet he came there flaunting the flag of religious liberty, while it would be a positive miracle for any Catholic, even if he betrayed his own class, to be returned for a constituency in that part of the country. The hon. and learned Member opposite also came there, representing that poor persecuted minority, and at a time when there was a keener realisation of the future in store for Ireland, and a better spirit was prevailing among the people, when the writing was on the wall, so far as this Government was concerned, he appealed to the old Party cries, bad manners, Party strife, and religious differences among the people of Ireland. The hon. and learned Member talked about the 1,250,000 Protestants whom he represented in the House, but the Orange lodges in his own constituency would revolt against him. He talked about something a minute ago that was an abortion in Dublin Castle, but there was another abortion, brought forth he did not know where—the Ulster Landlords Union; and he talked about the various associations which it represented. Why, the hon. Member for South Belfast would not be allowed into it. This association, which surely represented something in this House, would not be recognised amongst the brilliant Constitutionalists which dominated the Government and that new-born body. If he came there to speak for the whole of Ulster and his hon. friend sitting opposite him, he hoped the hon. and learned Gentleman would tell the House what his view was of the hon. Gentleman who brought forward the Irish Landlords Union. What was his speech from beginning to end but the most powerful impeachment of British rule in Ireland ever heard? The United Irish League would print it at their own expense, because it showed that eighty-two Nationalist Members on that side of the House, ten Members on the other side of the House, and five or six on both sides of the House were all united in saying that the Government was a bad Government, the system was an evil system, and that the conduct of Irish affairs was pernicious in principle. What could be more irresistible? Hon. Gentlemen opposite were not satisfied; they on that side were not satisfied, and if all were united in dissatisfaction of British rule in Ireland, surely the country ought to have a Parliament of its own.

The hon. Gentleman opposite was very fond of aristocratic company; he told the House that he was dining recently with a Judge. All he himself would say was that he was sorry that two Judges were not dining together. He could assure the hon. Gentleman that he need never have any fear of opposition to his promotion from that side of the House. He observed, however, that the hon. Gentleman did not use as a peroration the eloquent passage delivered by Lord Westmeath in the House of Lords, who he believed bore the same relation to Unionists in that House which the hon. Gentleman bore to Unionists in this House. Lord Westmeath said that he would urge on his friends to leave Ireland alone in future, as they wanted to manage their own affairs. The House was now agreed on two fundamental propositions. One was that the government of Ireland was an extravagant and partial government, and that its conduct of Irish affairs from every point of view had been a failure and a disaster. It was also agreed that it was inefficient. He had always understood that logic was one of the great characteristics of the English people; and if that were so, how could they refuse to give Ireland a Parliament of her own. Ireland had not been mentioned in the King's Speech; but it had been heard in the House and elsewhere all the same. The fiscal question and other great English controversial topics had been completely obscured by Ireland springing to the front again. Their policy had been denounced in one breath and practically vindicated in another. The attempt to blind the public on this issue was almost as patent as that in connection with the fiscal policy. The fact was that the Government could not be straight on any question. He expected that that was why the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Belfast was appointed War Minister.

The hon. Member for North Antrim stated it was his duty to show the Chief Secretary in his true light to Unionists in England. If that was the view held by hon. Gentlemen opposite, and if they demanded a dissolution, surely if the Government had any respect for public opinion, they would allow the judgment of the country to be taken. The Chief Secretary had broken his promises in connection with the labourers' question and other questions. He got £12,000,000 sterling for Irish landlords, because the House relied on his promises that something would be done for the labourers. Last year he introduced a Bill which was an insult to the labourers; this year they were not mentioned at all. The Prime Minister himself had for years been telling the world how eager he was for a Catholic University. If the Government had as much tenacity for principle as they had for office, they would have resigned long ago. He did not expect prosy platitudes from the right hon. Gentleman, but an honest and chivalrous speech apologising for the attack he had made on Sir Antony MacDonnell when he charged him with being guilty of conduct which was indefensible. The hon. and gallant Gentleman the Member for Hampshire had a seat in this House, and was able to defend himself, but the Prime Minister, anxious to stand by a subordinate member of the Government, sprang to his feet, and, not satisfied with his own eloquence, had to go to that of John Bright to find words eloquent enough to defend that hon. Member. Sir Antony MacDonnell had no seat in this House, and could not defend himself from the most unfair and cruel charges that had been made against him. Here was a distinguished servant who had been charged with being guilty of indefensible conduct, although they had it on the faith of both Lord Lansdowne and Lord Dudley that they knew all about it. Had he been the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary he would have scorned to have retained office by trampling upon his subordinate.

*MR. SLOAN (Belfast, S.) said he embraced this opportunity of withdrawing everything he had ever said with regard to Sir Antony MacDonnell, in view of the statement made by the Chief Secretary. It was quite possible that had Sir Antony MacDonnell not been accused they would not have extracted such important information from the Government as that which they had received that day. He was surprised that the Chief Secretary on going for a holiday, not having had one for six years, did not settle this matter before he went. The Unionist supporters of the Government found themselves that evening in a very awkward position. Lord Lansdowne had given an entirely new definition of Home Rule, which, he said, was "co-ordination of detached and semi-detached boards." They could always fight an open foe, but when they found a Jesuitical friend they must watch him. While the debate was in progress he thought of the speech made by the Viceroy at Belfast, wherein he said that it did not matter whether a man wore an orange or a green shirt, what they wanted was toleration. They also found that the Government was ever ready to give an answer across the floor of the House in regard to a permanent official who was muzzled, who had been unjustly condemned, who had, in his opinion, been most unfairly treated — that this permanent official had been wrong in his action, and his conduct indefensible—but the conduct of the Viceroy, who wrote to Lord Lansdowne that he knew all about it, had not been questioned why? Being interested in this devolution scheme, he invited one of its promoters to Belfast to explain it, and he was asked whether Sir Antony MacDonnell had anything to do with it, because they all thought it was the creation of Sir Antony's brain, and that the Chief Secretary had nothing to do with it, but Lord Dunraven in another place on Friday last said the scheme was type-written in Dublin Castle for secrecy. More than that, some of the Unionists of Belfast honoured Sir Antony with a visit and discussed the question of a Roman Catholic University, or what was called the "educational spirit of the Prime Minister's view." All these things had been going on, and the Chief Secretary was supposed to know nothing about these interviews of Sir Antony's.

It was an absolute impossibility to expect an Irish Unionist to give a vote of confidence on the Amendment which had been moved by the hon. and learned Gentleman the Member for Waterford. The representatives of a Unionist Government ought to be able to get up and say to the Nationalists, "You are here to demand Home Rule, we are here to refuse it." As to the suggestion of the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich, that since there was no possibility of satisfying either Party in Ireland, the best thing was to treat both with contempt, that was a course the right hon. Gentleman would be well advised not to pursue. Lord Lansdowne had said that Sir Antony MacDonnell was an honourable and able official who had come over "to do something for his country before he died." Did this mean granting Home Rule to Ireland under a new name? If, in order to do that, it had been announced that he was to occupy the Chief Secretary's chair and that the right hon. Gentleman was to sit at his feet, it would have been easy to understand Sir Antony MacDonnell taking the lead in many things that he ought not to have. It would be interesting to hear the Prime Minister's views on the question. Another question to be asked was what connection the Chief Commissioner of the Dublin Police had with this correspondence? That official also had helped in the matter of higher education and knew something about the correspondence. The whole mystery was not yet unravelled; it would not be surprising if other mysteries were revealed. He would that Sir Antony MacDonnell were unmuzzled, for he believed he would make a clean breast of the whole matter. The noble Lord the Member for Greenwich was perfectly correct in saying that the question of Home Rule would be decided by England and Scotland. The Irish Unionists were a small minority, and it would be useless for them to attempt to fight the battle of the Union unless England and Scotland sent a majority of Members to defend the same principles. The true opponents of Home Rule were not the Ulster Members, but this country as a whole. The Chief Secretary was entitled to regard the course of the debate with some dissatisfaction, but what Unionists had to complain of was not so much that the scheme was allowed to be put before the country as that Sir Antony MacDonnell had been connected with the proposals with the knowledge of the Lord-Lieutenant and the Chief Secretary. He did not think that Ireland would be any more peaceful under the kind of Government described by the hon. Member for Waterford. Many hon. Gentlemen opposite disapproved of the treatment meted out to Protestants in various parts of Ireland. The truth was that the great trouble in Irish politics and the great hindrance to the welfare of the people was the unnecessary interference of the priests. Peace was impossible while the priests controlled Ireland, and until that control was stopped it would be difficult for any Irish Administration to draw an impartial line between the two Parties.

He and his friends were willing to support the Government upon Unionist principles, because they believed that such principles were best for Ireland, but he regretted that their desires had been prevented by the Jesuitical treatment which had been meted out to them from a so-called Unionist Government. He was thoroughly convinced that this treatment was not conciliation but something under a false name, full of hypocrisy, and the sooner the Government washed its hands of it the better. They ought not to expect support from Irish Unionists until they adopted that course. He wished to assure hon. Members opposite that he was as much interested in the welfare and prosperity of Ireland as they were, and the question upon which they differed was as to what methods and tactics ought to be adopted. He was anxious that the Government should take an honest stand, and when they gave a permanent Under-Secretary or any Civil servant a free hand they should not hide themselves behind that official. If they failed in their policy let them say so, and take the responsibility. It was a disastrous thing, and not even honourable, to allow any person who had occupied the position of permanent Under-Secretary in Dublin Castle to act in this way. He was not satisfied at all that the Chief Secretary ought not to release Sir Antony MacDonnell from his false position. What were they to have for the future? What guarantee had they that the principles he had initiated would not be carried out this year or next year? What guarantee had they that Lord Dunraven would not go on with a scheme of co-ordination of detached or semi-detached boards with the consent of the Cabinet. Were they to understand that this was a sort of half-way house without an open door into which people of all creeds and politics might enter. Irish representatives on the whole were not unaware of the disastrous effects of Dublin Castle administration. While he could not agree with the hon. and learned Member for Waterford that the only solution of this problem was Home Rule, because under Home Rule meant Rome Rule, he believed that there was a possibility of giving greater consideration to the needs of the Irish people than was being given by the present Administration. It was time that the Government set their house in order. He thought that the Opposition would find it very difficult indeed in some quarters of England to advocate Home Rule with success, for it would be a harder nut to crack than it was before. They were all agreed that because the Government had refused to take a resolute stand they had been most unsuccessful in conciliating their enemies, and this time they ought to consider not so much conciliation but even-handed justice to all classes.

MR. T. W. RUSSELL said that this had been an interesting and extraordinary debate, but he could not agree with the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich that they had had the whole of the facts brought out. He assured the noble Lord that there were a good many ugly facts still to come out. The hon. Member for Haddingtonshire was entirely right when he said that this attack upon Sir Antony MacDonnell began long before the devolution proposals were heard of, and in this aspect this controversy was one of the most squalid character. He had handed to the hon. and learned Member for Waterford a circular issued by the Irish Unionist Party which was signed by the hon. Member for Mid. Armagh. This was the origin of the whole business under their own hand and seal. [AN HON. MEMBER: What is the date?] It was dated 15th February, 1905. It states—

> "The Chief Secretary appears to have abdicated his position of responsibility in favour of a subordinate official with a policy of his own, which is directed to destroying the basis of Irish Unionism and to stimulating against Irish loyalists a political and religious propaganda."

That was the point he wished to direct the attention of the House to. The circular went on to state—

> "Unionist constituencies are deprived of their share of public funds; Unionist individuals of their right to emoluments or promotion."

These gentleman were very candid. The circular proceeded—

> "Government is carried on in a mass of clerical intrigue directed against Protestants, all in pursuance of this policy."

Those gentlemen for whom the hon. Member for Mid. Armagh spoke, and the Party which they represented, at present held nine-tenths of the positions of emolument and trust in Ireland; and yet they desired more, and were getting them every day. He had only to refer to a fact, known to every Irish Member of the House, that within the last twelve months four County Court Judges had been appointed in Ireland, and although the counties over which they had to administrate had an overwhelming Roman Catholic population, three out of four of those appointments had not gone to Catholic barristers, although there were plenty of Catholics fit for them, but three of them had been given to Orangemen and only one to a Nationalist. It was the same in every branch of Irish Government, and yet the gentlemen holding nine-tenths of these positions came and made an appeal to the House of Commons for more. He had been a Member of the House of Commons for twenty years, and remembered a good many gentlemen, barristers from Ireland, who had sat in the House. Where were they now, or, at any rate, most of them? On the Bench opposite. The people who now came clamouring for appointments had received almost all the appointments which had been given since the Union took place, and the vast majority of the population had been practically ostracised by successive Governments. What was the state of things when the Grand Juries had control? Where did the Catholics have a chance then? Was it likely that they could change all that and give the people the chance they had never had before whilst those gentlemen's friends held all the positions of authority. In some respects this was the most squalid debate, so far as the hon. Gentlemen opposite were concerned, that had ever taken place in the House of Commons.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS.)

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment [20th February] to Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the present system of Government in Ireland is in opposition to the will of the Irish people, and gives them no voice in the management of their own affairs; that the system is consequently ineffective and extravagantly costly, does not enjoy the confidence of any section of the population, and is productive of universal discontent and unrest, and has proved to be incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the people."—(Mr. John Redmond.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

MR. T. W. RUSSELL, continuing his speech, said he had listened attentively to the explanation of the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary as to how he and Sir Antony manufactured Irish policy. It consisted of five or six heads. They were to settle the land question by a system of voluntary purchase. They were to deal with higher education in Ireland, and they were to deal with local government or Home Rule by co-ordinating detached or semi-detached boards, whatever that might mean. He thought it might mean a great deal. He did not see how they were to co-ordinate forty-one boards without abolishing most of them and setting up another body in their place. What he would like to ask the Chief Secretary was, with a policy such as that what did all this secrecy mean? Why did he not come out into the open? Had he made a speech in Ireland explaining the policy, it, at all events, would have received fair play. It might not have been carried, but he most certainly would not have been in the very difficult and dubious position he was in that day. What was the position? The Chief Secretary answered a Question in the House on Thursday last, and used remarkable words. It was a remarkable answer—he rather thought it had been sanctioned by the Cabinet. The right hon. Gentleman said that the first time he saw these proposals was in September in The Times. What would the man in the street think of a statement like that? The man in the street on the English side of the water might be a more intelligent person than the man in Ireland, but he could tell the Chief Secretary what he would understand by a reply of that kind. The right hon. Gentleman said he saw those proposals for the first time in September and most people would have imagined that he had never heard of them before. Supposing there had been no debate in the House of Lords and that answer had stood as it was given, the inevitable conclusion of the public would have been that the Chief Secretary was ignorant of those proposals until he saw them in the newspaper. Why did he not stand up and say he had discussed those questions, as Lord Lansdowne told them, over and over again with Lord Dunraven? Technically he was right and technically it was the truth. He remembered an hon. Member raising a storm of hostility because he said in a Court of Justice that he once made a statement to deceive that House. What did the Chief Secretary mean by telling the House that he did not see these proposals till September? Why did he not stand up like a man by his friend and subordinate and say that he had discussed those matters over and over again with Sir Antony MacDonnell and Lord Dunraven. Might he ask, when he saw them, what was his action? He (Mr. Russell) remembered the famous phrase used by the right hon. Gentleman at Dover, when he said he blew out that candle, but he was not concerned with the blowing out of the candle. He wanted to know whether the right hon. Gentleman was present at the lighting of it. Let them see how he blew it out. In a letter he said the report embraced, but tended to confuse, three subjects which were by their nature categorically distinct. First, economy in the application to Irish purposes of public money now actually expended in that country; second, amendment in the procedure of Private Bill, legislation in Ireland consequent on the success of the measure in Scotland, and then the institution of a statutory Legislative Assembly for Ireland. What did the Chief Secretary think about those proposals? He said nothing about the first, he approved the second, and he condemned the third. The real reason why he did not condemn the first was because he was convinced that the proposal was sound in principle. The letter might be taken as a condemnation of the establishment of a statutory body for Irish legislation. It was not a condemnation of the setting up of a financial council, or of Private Bill legislation being dealt with in Ireland. There was a correspondence in existence between Sir Antony MacDonnell and the Chief Secretary on this question. Would it be produced? That was a plain question. He desired a plain answer. The contrast between Lord Dudley and the Chief Secretary in this matter was very great, Lord Dudley had not thrown over his subordinate officer to the Ulster wolves. Did the right hon. Gentleman confer over and over again with Lord Dudley on this question? He (Mr. Russell) wanted to know why the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary, did not take his stand with Lord Dudley instead of taking refuge in the paltry statement he had made in the House. Lord Dudley had come out of this in a much more creditable manner than the right hon. Gentleman.

There was danger in this debate that other questions would be lost sight of by the predominance of the question of Sir Antony MacDonnell. He wanted to lay bare to the House how the Government was being carried on in Ireland regarding great public issues. Taking the question of higher education, Mr. Gladstone attempted to deal with that thirty-two years ago. About twenty years ago the present Prime Minister declared in Glasgow to a gathering of Unionists that there was in connection with that question an intolerable grievance. He had restated his views over and over again. The Prime Minister now commanded a great majority. He forced through an Education Bill which had deeply touched and wounded the conscientious feeling of hundreds and thousands of English people But the Irish grievance still remained where it had stood for ages. He would ask them to see what followed from this method of treatment. The Catholic youths were placed at a great disadvantage in the battle of life. That question was kept alive in Ireland so as to inflame the passions of large sections of the people, and a case was made out for Catholic education, which, even according to the Prime Minister, was all but unanswerable. The Government appointed a Royal Commission three years ago. Lord Cadogan, then the Lord-Lieutenant, declared that he meant business. Yet nothing had come of it, and Lord Cadogan was Lord-Lieutenant no longer. That Commission took the line of least resistance. They said in effect, "Let the Royal University stand, no new University is needed now; affiliate the Queen's Colleges and the University College of Dublin." Why could they not have acted upon the Report? The Catholic Bishops were ready to accept that plan. By a telegram read from the Nationalist Benches from Archbishop Walsh last session that was announced. But the Government invented a new plan of their own; they threw over the Commission and sent Sir Antony MacDonnell down to Belfast to interview people who represented nobody. There were two dinner-parties given in Belfast. Very respectable gentlemen were present. But there was no one at them who could command a single vote in Ulster. It would have been better to have gone and seen the hon. Member for South Belfast. What was foolishly called the Dunraven scheme was put before them. Lord Dunraven seemed to be the handy man of the Irish Government. But it was no more Lord Dunraven's scheme than his own. The author of the scheme was sitting on the Treasury Bench. They were not content to act upon the Report of their own Commission. The suggestion was made in a letter of two columns in the Irish Times, signed by Lord Dunraven, that there should be a Catholic College within the University from Dublin. They got the information from these Belfast gentleman, and as they did not like the idea, so for the sake of the Union—which always came into every Irish question—they resolved to sacrifice their conscientious convictions on Catholic education. What was the next step? The Catholic Bishops were consulted. He did not object to that, for they represented somebody. It was a highly proper proceeding, and of course, they, like wise men, were not so much concerned about the scheme. They had had interviews with the Commission on Education before. What they wanted to know was if the right hon. Gentleman meant business, and they were assured that nothing was nearer to the heart of the Irish Government than the settlement of this question. The Bishops then consented to accept either Lord Dunraven's scheme or the scheme of the Commission. But it then occurred to the Government that they had better consult Trinity College—a thing that should have occurred to them at first. But the moment the scheme was put before the College, of course, they would have nothing to do with it. Just imagine all this as an example of effective government. Why did they not go to Trinity College first and see whether they would consent to such a scheme? Why did they deliberately keep alive this question to divide people? This was what they called ineffective, and he submitted that that word in the Amendment was too mild.

Now, let them take the Land Act. There was a proverb that "Man proposes, but God disposes." It might be said that Parliament proposed and Irish officialdom disposed. Under the present system it was impossible to get an honest adminstration of any Act. In the session of 1903, the House spent two or three days in discussing the case ot non-judicial tenants, tenants who had not got their rents fixed. They were provided for with the other tenants under Section 1 and were under the zones. He remembered the Attorney-General saying that these tenants had no relation to Section 1 and that they ought not to be there. They succeeded, and these 50,000 tenants were put under what was now Section 5. Irish officialdom in its worst days never did a more monstrous thing than was done with regard to those tenants. They had fought to get them outside the zones because they would be submitted to impossible and unfair prices. And what had happened? He knew cases in the North of Ireland where they came under Section 5. The Act said that the Commissioners should take all the circumstances into consideration, yet would it be believed that the interpretation put on Section 5 by the Estates Commissioners —and he presumed by Mr. Justice Meredith—was such that these people who were free from the zones, merely got out of the frying-pan into the fire. The question in such cases was whether the farm as it stood was security for the advance or not. There was no question about the tenants' property in it. But now that was valued as part of the security, and the price went up to thirty and thirty-five years purchase because of the property of the tenant. In other words the tenant might have to purchase his own property over again. He would take another case which came before the Estates Commissioners the other day. It was an estate in the West of Ireland. In 1897 this estate was in Mr. Justice Ross's court and a request was issued by him to the Land Commission to have it valued for sale. Two years afterwards the estate came before the Land Commission on the report of the Commissioners, Mr. Frederick Wrench and Mr. Lynch. They were both landlord's friends to the chin, and were not consumed with anxiety about the tenants, but they reported deliberately that, in their opinion, there was no security for the advance of a single shilling upon that property. They reported that the estate was laden with arrears and that there were only two holders with a valuation above £5. They said that if default occurred recovery would be impossible. The demand of the new tenant for an advance of £7,000 was refused. The 1903 Act was passed, and here came the comedy of the whole thing. Mr. Blake Foster, the owner of the estate, disappeared, and the Scottish Union Insurance Company came upon the scene. The Irish Members would recollect that one afternoon the Member for West Edinburgh and the Member for Peebles and Selkirk were active on the Ministerial side of the House protecting the interests of that insurance company. The Scottish Union Insurance Company employed an agent who got the tenants to sign agreements for 10 per cent. less than the rents they had ever paid. That being successfully accomplished they brought them up to the Land Commission and handed them over the counter to a clerk of the Commission, and without inquiry they were registered as judicial rents. That being settled the agent proceeded again to the West and got the tenants to sign purchase agreements, showing another 10 per cent. reduction. These purchase agreements were lodged with the Estates Commissioners, and £9,800 was demanded for the estate on which, according to the Land Commissioners, not a single shilling could be advanced under the old Act. What was stated in support of the demand was that the prices were within the zone and that the Estates Commissioners had no discretion. What he wanted to know was whether the Chief Secretary was going to do anything in that matter. Were these gentlemen to be allowed to sell these bankrupt estates at fancy prices where there was absolutely no security for the advance? Was the right hon. Gentlemen going to amend the Act so as to protect the public against these men. They had heard nothing about that to-day. There was nothing in the King's Speech about it, and yet these cases would be crowding before the Land Commissioners in a few days. It was a serious matter for the taxpayers of Ireland, and, indeed, for the taxpayers of England too, That was what was called efficiency in Ireland.

The mover of the Amendment had said that this system of government was extravagant and costly. He thought he would be able to prove that up to the hilt. What were the facts? This country extracted from Ireland £10,000,000 per annum in the shape of taxation. The cost of the government of Ireland, all told, was something like £7,000,000. That was to say, £3,000,000 per annum came to this country from Ireland as an Imperial contribution. The cities of Ireland were crowded with masses of the very poor. In the city of Dublin there were 25,000 families living in one room apiece. A great tract of country in the West was in a state of chronic famine and the people were given over to something like absolute despair in the face of facts like these. This Imperial contribution of £3,000,000 a year helped to pay for the Army which was useless and from which Ireland got no benefit. More than that, Ireland was taxed to the extent of 30 per cent. over Scotland for government, although the population was about the same. He would give a few figures by way of contrast. In Ireland the cost of the Lord-Lieutenancy was £36,557; in Scotland it cost nothing, there being no such office. The Chief Secretary's Department cost £41,650, while the cost of the Secretary for Scotland's Department was £41,678. The Local Government Board in Ireland cost £79,875, and in Scotland £15,825. The Registrar-General's Department in Ireland cost £22,913, and in Scotland £12,227. The Valuation Department in Ireland cost £32,425, and in Scotland there was no Valuation Department. The work of that Department in Scotland seemed to be done by the Local Government Board. The Supreme Court of Judicature, the County Courts and law charges in Ireland cost £421,687, and that was exclusive of £16,333 for the Land Commission which came out of the Consolidated Fund. The Scottish legal expenses amounted to £259,373. The Royal Irish Constabulary and the Metropolitan Police cost £1,569,214, while the whole of Scotland was policed for £539,196. Why should the government of Ireland cost more than the government of Scotland? Scotland was a well-governed country. He saw his hon. friend the Member for Clackmannan rather shrink from the imputation of a previous speaker that there was more crime in Scotland than in Ireland. What was the reason? Scotland was a great manufacturing country, and it had large towns, and wherever these two things were found they would get crime of a certain kind. Ireland was to a large extent an agricultural country. That was the reason.

MR. EUGENE WASON (Clackmannan and Kinross): I beg your pardon. We have a great many Englishmen in Scotland.

MR. T. W. RUSSELL said he wanted to ask this question seriously. Why was it that Ireland, a poor country, should be taxed to the tune of 30 per cent. more for government than Scotland, a rich country? He thought it was high time that English Members did pay some attention to that matter. Was the Amendment of his hon. friend wrong in describing the Government of Ireland as extravagantly costly? It was the absolute and literal truth.

Did this system enjoy the confidence of anybody? They had ocular demonstration in the House of Commons. Here there were eighty-two or eighty-three Members, permanently encamped in their midst, hostile to the Government in every shape and form. Did hon. Members from Ulster feel confidence in His Majesty's Government? There were the Unionists from Ulster who arrogated to themselves the title of the only Unionists. There were a few others, and there would be more by-and-bye. For a hundred years and more the Ulster Unionists had been a favoured class. They now had nine-tenths of the positions of trust and emolument in the country. There were sixteen Irish Judges, and thirteen of them were Protestants. Two-thirds of the County Court Judges were also Protestant. There was not a department of the State where friends of those gentlemen were not quartered. Chief Secretary after Chief Secretary quartered his private secretary on the country—and there were at least half a dozen of such gentlemen occupying positions of emolument in Ireland to-day. And Ireland was expected to be content. Those gentlemen would be content so long as they were fed with manna from the Treasury. But it did not follow everybody else would be content. And yet because a Protestant doctor at Ballinassloe was passed over for promotion and a Roman Catholic chosen instead these gentlemen had actually conjured up a state of affairs which had no existence save in their own heated imaginations; and here 105 years after the Union the English garrison was in revolt. Let not the Chief Secretary be discouraged. After the First Lord had spoken they would come to heel. He was not a betting man, but if he were he would bet heavily upon every one of them trotting into the lobby against the Amendment when the division came. At all events they were in open revolt. One would imagine to hear them that they were in the fight which defeated Home Rule. But not one of them was there. Did they save the Union? Some of them were in swaddling clothes at the time and the rest of them took precious good care to keep a safe distance from English platforms, and it was a very good thing for the Union that they did. Here they were in open revolt, their heart-strings torn because their beloved Government had disappointed them and determined to make a last stand—what for?—not for the Union but for their immemorial privileges.

The Irish Government had the confidence of nobody save officials and lawyers "on the make." But for the Home Rule scare which the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich had raised the Government would not have a single supporter save for Trinity College—and that support would not be entirely disinterested either. No man could fail to be alarmed at the condition of Ireland, and if they had statesmen at Dublin Castle instead of men who intrigued, the question would be faced and a remedy would be devised. The working of the Land Act was absolutely arrested for lack of money, there was maladministration in favour of landlords, and the West, which was the great reason of the Act being passed, was practically exempt from its action. If this went on for fifteen or sixteen years more they would have a nation of old men and old women, of policemen, and officials. What a lurid light this Dunravenism threw upon it all! He was no admirer of some of the methods of what was called "MacDonnellism" in Ireland, and he rather suspected Sir Antony MacDonnell had discovered, what he might have discovered earlier, that Ireland was not India, and that the methods applicable to India were entirely out of place in a country of representative institutions. He now realised that, although the Ulster Unionists had probably found that they had "bitten off more than they could chew," in this case, it was after all a rather dangerous thing to defy the representatives of any section of the people. The cardinal mistake in all this business was the secrecy. This policy was a reasonable policy — settlement of the land question, of education, extension of local government—there was no reason for secrecy in all that. But the people had been deceived, and he told the Chief Secretary that the period of his usefulness and the usefulness of the Irish administration had gone for ever.

And upon this subject he had a question for the Attorney-General for Ireland, who went to North Derry and assailed Lord Dunraven's scheme. He hinted darkly at the author of that scheme, and assailed Sir Antony MacDonnell, though not by name. He demanded investigation. He had got it, and it was to be hoped that the right hon. and learned Gentleman was satisfied. Now when did he propose to go back to Coleraine and inform his friends he was totally mistaken, and that, instead of Sir Antony MacDonnell being the author of the scheme, he only assisted with information; that the real culprits were the Irish Government, with Lord Dudley, and the Chief Secretary, who talked things over and kept them in such a state that he could retire at any moment when it became necessary? The Attorney-General for Ireland had told his constituents that this was Home Rule on the sly—did he mean to continue to serve those gentleman who had deceived him and his constituents? This business had been got up because the Ulster representatives were played out in Ulster upon every other question, and by raising a Home Rule scare they hoped to befool the farmers once more, but they would not do it. He heard Lord Lansdowne the other night and enjoyed his definition of co-ordination of detached and semi-detached boards —a blessed word, "co-ordination." He was going to vote for this Amendment—not because he was a Home Ruler, but because he was in favour of co-ordination. They might call this a Home Rule Amendment, but the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich would not frighten him by calling it so. He voted for it not on that ground. He voted for it because it was a sterling indictment of the whole system of Irish government, and he believed that system to be intolerable. He would vote for the Amendment because he believed it was true in every line and every word.

*MR. LONSDALE (Armagh, Mid.) congratulated the Member for South Tyrone on his first speech from the Nationalist Benches, where they thought he ought to have sat long ago. The Amendment directly attacked the system under which Ireland was governed. Hon. Members opposite wanted to demolish that system in order to put in its place a form of government which would make Ireland absolutely independent of the rest of the United Kingdom. They who represented Irish Unionism were of course as determined as ever to resist to the utmost all revolutionary proposals of that kind. They were equally determined to offer the most uncompromising opposition to the insidious schemes of devolution which had been put forward by men who had called themselves Unionists. The fact could not be disguised that there existed a strong feeling of discontent at the present Irish administration. It was due not to the system but to the partisan way in which the system had been conducted. In the last session of Parliament the Unionists had endeavoured to make the Government understand how deeply the people of Ulster were stirred by the numerous acts of partisanship that had been committed. Under Sir Antony MacDonnell the Unionist administration was swayed by influences opposed to the interests of Loyalists, and the alarm they felt was increased by the publication of devolution proposals with which the name of Lord Dunraven was associated. The disclosures made in that House and in the House of Lords, while they justified the mistrust by the Irish Unionists of Sir Antony MacDonnell's administration, did nothing to lessen the resentment which was felt at the action of the Unionist Government. Sir Antony MacDonnell had been permitted a freedom of action which was altogether unusual in one holding the position of Under-Secretary. They were given to understand now that Sir Antony MacDonnell was far too distinguished a man to be bound by the ordinary rules of the Civil Service, and that in accordance with the understanding arrived at when he accepted the position he had been left practically a free hand at Dublin Castle. He did not hesitate to say that the appointment of Sir Antony MacDonnell upon such terms was entirely inconsistent with the principle of Ministerial responsibility, and had the conditions been made known at the time he went to Ireland, the Unionist Party would never have ratified the arrangement. It was understood that he had been asked to assume the Under-Secretaryship only for a time, because his special experience in India would be of service in the preparation of the Land Bill. It was never contemplated by any Unionist Member that Sir Antony MacDonnell, whose Nationalist sympathies were well known, would be placed in such a position of freedom that he could initiate and carry out a policy of his own which was not a Unionist policy, but one that was, in fact, destructive of the first principles of Unionism.

They were entitled to ask from the Chief Secretary some explanation of his position in relation to this matter. They had it placed beyond doubt that Sir Antony took a very active part in shaping the scheme of devolution which had been repudiated by the Government. The Chief Secretary stated that he saw these proposals for the first time when they appeared in The Times in September and that he at once repudiated them. Of course he accepted that statement, but he considered the Chief Secretary should inform the House as to how far he was cognisant of the negotiations and discussions which had been proceeding between his Under-Secretary and Lord Dunraven, and also to what extent he sympathised with the objects they had in view. It had been avowed that the Lord-Lieutenant had full knowledge of the discussions that were going forward, and it was impossible to resist the conclusion that the Chief Secretary, as a member of the Cabinet, should have interfered earlier than he did, not merely to check the zeal of his Nationalist Under-Secretary in his schemes to promote Home Rule, but to prevent the many acts of partiality and injustice, which had made the system known as "MacDonnellism" a by-word among Irish Unionists. What more glaring example of partisanship could they have than the way in which the Executive dealt with the extra police charges, to which he called attention last session. Nine Nationalist counties in the South and West of Ireland, which flatly refused to pay the demands levied upon them, were excused payment by the Lord-Lieutenant. Very different treatment was meted out to the Ulster counties of Armagh, Tyrone, Down, and Londonderry. Their claims for equal treatment were ignored; payment in full of these charges was insisted upon; and they had been given to understand that if they did not pay, the amounts would be summarily deducted from grants due to them by the Government. It was impossible to justify this arbitrary and one-sided exercise of the administrative powers of the Irish Executive. It stood as an illustration of the flagrant abuse of authority in favour of Nationalists, and to the prejudice of that section of the Irish people who had a clear right to expect fair and just treatment from a Unionist Administration. He asked the Government to reflect upon the absolute failure of the so-called policy of conciliation. It had conciliated nobody. Hon. Members opposite refused to be conciliated. They would not be moved even by the sacrifice of the interests of Loyalists and Unionists. The friends and supporters of the Government had been alienated, and, so far from allaying differences among the Irish people, this policy had stirred into fresh activity the sectarian feeling which was, unfortunately, too rife in Ireland. It had encouraged aggression and intolerance on the one side, and created a sense of injustice on the other, and this sense of wrong would not be removed so long as the author and chief organiser of this policy remained at Dublin Castle. As representatives of the Irish Unionists in that House, he and his colleagues demanded fair treatment and nothing more. He could not believe that in these circumstances the Government would persist in turning a deaf ear to their representations. He hoped that they would receive from the head of the Government, not merely a repudiation of Home Rule and devolution, but such assurances as would convince them that the malign influence at Dublin Castle would be withdrawn, and that in future the administration of affairs in Ireland would be carried on in accordance with the principles of strict justice towards all sections of His Majesty's subjects.

Mr. WINSTON CHURCHILL said that the hon. Gentleman who had just sat down had stated the point of view of the Ulster Members with rather more moderation than others who had spoken from his quarter of the House. But he noticed, or he thought he noticed, in the speech of the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich a disposition to ignore altogether the fact that any change of any sort had come over the Irish question in the passage of years, and even a disposition to suggest or assert that whatever might have happened as regards others, no change could come over that question. Now, it seemed to him—he spoke with great diffidence in presence of hon. Members who had taken part in these debates for many years—that there was a very great difference between the Irish question as it presented itself in 1905, and as it presented itself in 1886. For twenty-five years the House of Commons had been debating Irish matters in their more modern aspects, and the attention of Parliament was very rarely concentrated for a very long time on a question without some result being produced. On this particular question it had undoubtedly produced great results both in Ireland and England. He must say that time had largely vindicated the opinions which were expressed by Mr. Gladstone in 1886. A great scheme of local government, which Lord Salisbury in 1887 declared was worse and more dangerous than Home Rule itself, had been established in Ireland by the Tory Party, and was now at work. Upon the whole it was said to be working well, and gave still brighter promise for the future. The land policy in 1886 was the principal object of the attack of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham and other Unionists. That land policy which was almost contemptuously refused by the House of Commons, condemned without debate, killed without division, and which, as much as any other single circumstance, had helped to injure the prospects of its companion measure, had since been passed by the House of Commons by overwhelming majorities at the instance of the very Party which had most vehemently opposed it. Well, these were great events, and their consequences ought not, he thought, to discourage those who took an interest in Ireland. It was quite true that the credit of those measures belonged to the Party opposite, and he did not think any one would wish to deprive them of any credit properly their due. But it was also true to say that nothing else than the espousal of the Irish cause by a great English Party would have been sufficient to give the necessary impulse which had awakened the conscience of the English nation. These events had produced great changes of feeling in Ireland. No doubt the Amendment before the House made a clamorous assertion of irritation and discontent. He was not minimising these, but it was true, he thought, to say that, in spite of that discontent and irritation, the Irish question did not present itself to the House of Commons with anything like the terrible and tragic aspect which it wore in the years between 1881 and 1887. Events had also changed aspects in England. There had been elections since. After all, the electors in this country followed the course of politics with some attention, and they had observed that a large number of important measures, from which they were led to believe all sorts of dire consequences would follow, had been passed in Parliament by the very men who had made these most gloomy predictions. So far from any serious and unfortunate consequences arising, both countries seemed to have benefited very much by their operation. So he ventured to say it was a new situation in Irish affairs which had arisen.

They were confronted now with a problem in almost every respect less difficult and dangerous than had been confronted in 1886. They found in former times a much more restricted demand put forward on a much less representative authority. Surely it was a striking fact when the hon. Member for South Tyrone could sit on the same side of the House as the hon. and learned Member for Waterford. [An Hon. Member from the Ministerial side: "Let him stay there."] Yes, but the hon. Member for South Tyrone was not an unattached unit. He carried with him a considerable body of opinion, and when Lord Dunraven promulgated a scheme which was treated with consideration by the hon. Member for Mid. Cork these were facts which ought not to be excluded from a judgment of the Irish question. They ought to all be encouraged by them and by successful experiments in the past in Irish legislation. As the hon. and learned Member for Waterford had said that day, he hoped that the Irish question would be honestly approached. He maintained that there had not been a time for many years when there was a greater mass of opinion arrayed against any extreme departure in Irish policy. There never was a time when the declaration of leading politicians of every political complexion in Great Britain, when the pledges given by candidates in various parts of the country, and when the composition of the Parties at Westminster, was more intolerant at the starting of any revolutionary scheme. There never was a time when a Government would be less able to take office fettered in its entire discretion. But it was also true that there never was a time when there was a greater number of moderate sensible people who were prepared to give consideration to the Irish question without passion, to see what a rotten system of Government prevailed in that country, and to approach one of the most difficult, as it was one of the most attractive, questions which could occupy the minds of English politicians.

He did not propose that night to fall foul of the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary. He was quite ready to admit, and sincerely believed, that during his tenure of office the right hon. Gentleman had tried to do his best to hold the balance even between Catholic and Protestant in Ireland. He thought that the right hon. Gentleman's policy and efforts in Ireland had been, he would not say a bright exception, but a less dark exception, to the records of this somewhat melancholy Parliament. He quite agreed with the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich that the very fact that the Chief Secretary was attacked from all parts of the House proved in a certain sense the impartiality of his administration. But since the attack had been made, after four years of administration by the right hon. Gentleman with his great powers, high motives, and distinguished talents, and since it had drawn down on him discontent and adverse Irish opinion, it proved something more. The right hon. Gentleman's impartiality might be unaffected, but it likewise proved the impossibility of the system over which he had been called to preside.

Now, being himself a somewhat lonely politician [Ministerial cries of "Not now"] he was naturally very sympathetic with any Member who was in a minority, and consequently he was not at all prejudiced against the strong expressions of opinion uttered by the hon. and learned Member for North Antrim; but he confessed he was a little sceptical about the grievances of the Irish Unionists. They had heard a piteous tale of their patient suffering under intolerable treachery and wrong. It was a world of sin and woe that we lived in! But he saw that other good people suffered misfortune besides the hon. and learned Member for North Antrim, and the hon. Member for Mid. Armagh. And he was not convinced that these latter deserved more pity than other persons of equal virtue and intelligence. Never before in the recent political history of this House, he supposed, was there a minority so well-equipped for political warfare, and so influentially protected as the Ulster and Orange Party in that House. It added to their debates fifteen Members altogether, and out of them—he was counting the right hon. Gentleman the Solicitor-General, who was one with them in thought and sympathy—there were no fewer than five in the Government and two in the Cabinet. The Cabinet was well disposed towards them, for they were its thick and thin supporters—they supported it when it was right and when it was wrong. That was the kind of supporters a Government, and particularly this kind of Government, was always well disposed to. They had many strong supporters in the Conservative Party who were devoted to their interests and the interests of the class in Ireland whom they represented. They had immense influence in the House of Lords. They enjoyed the support of The Times newspaper, which must be a great consolation to them. When they came to the influence which they exerted in the Government, they had the support of the Solicitor-General, that great master of political deportment, who had added to their knowledge on that question several valuable precedents as regarded the conduct of colleagues towards one another, as regarded the conduct of the Law Officers of the Crown towards the Prime Minister, and as regarded the conduct of the Prime Minister towards public servants. They enjoyed the support of Lord Londonderry, who, notwithstanding that he had views of his own on free trade, was not inclined to abandon them, and naturally exerted great authority in this country, particularly on a Tory Cabinet. In addition to that they had the support of the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for War in those comparatively lucid moments which interrupted the continuity of his labours at the War Office. Well, when they observed, with all this influence in high places, with all this talent of newspaper organisation, that this minority had failed to persuade their own Government for which they had worked so long of the reasonableness of their demands and the essential justice of the position they occupied, he did not believe that they had suffered any great course of flagrant wrong which it would not be in the power of any Government easily and readily to remove. He quite believed that they were seeking for justice, but it seemed to him that what they considered justice was privilege. When they asked for justice and fair treatment for their own affairs, what they wanted was considerable power over the affairs of other people who lived in the same country with them. He was not convinced that the indignation they had expressed was altogether sincere, for, after all, people usually brought their opinions to the test of a vote. There was an Amendment before the House the other night praying for the dissolution of Parliament and the dismissal of His Majesty's Ministry which, according to the hon. and learned Member for North Antrim, had betrayed him, and yet the hon. and learned Member had voted against that Amendment, and for the continuance in office of the Government against whose conduct he now so strongly protested. What did that mean? Either that the grievances which the hon. and learned Member brought forward were not sufficiently well founded to be carried to a vote, or that the hon. and learned Member's case and his demands were so extravagant that there was no Party and no Government likely to be called into existence which would be able under any circumstances to entertain them.

He now came to a much more interesting and momentous question which had obtruded itself into the general discussion of Irish affairs; he meant the relations between the Chief Secretary and the Under-Secretary at the Irish Office. He believed that his right hon. friend, the Chief Secretary—if he would allow him to refer to him in that form—although they sat on opposite sides of the House he thought it desirable that public relations between Gentlemen on opposite sides should be cordial—he had known the right hon. Gentleman long enough to believe that he would not be guilty of any wilful misleading of the House of Commons or of subordinates who, on his own admission, had been perfectly loyal to him. He did not think it was difficult to understand how the present situation had arisen, judging from the general political attitude of the right hon. Gentleman, and from the revelations they had lately heard. The views of the right hon. Gentleman were rather peculiar for a Unionist Minister to hold. The right hon. Gentleman was a sincere and convinced opponent of Home Rule; but yet he thought that the Irish ought to be free to manage their own affairs. That was a position not so paradoxical as it might sound; but it was rather difficult for a gentleman occupying such a dual capacity to carry on an Administration. The right hon. Gentleman desired earnestly the welfare of the country he was appointed to control; but the principal plank in the platform of his Party was absolute opposition to the repeal of the Union. How did the right hon. Gentleman reconcile his conscientious opinion and his duty to the Party ticket? Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed under conditions which were highly irregular, though not indeed, improper. For his own part he regarded the irregularity as the best part of the story. If the Chief Secretary said he did not consider himself technically responsible, either for Sir Antony MacDonnell's action, or for the scheme which Lord Dunraven had put forward, he accepted his words as final. But he did not think the right hon. Gentleman could escape from some degree of moral responsibility in regard to that scheme, and the proof of that was, he thought, that Sir Antony MacDonnell still remained Under-Secretary for Ireland. He did not know whether in the course of the next few days there would be an announcement; but he was under the impression that unless the right hon. Gentleman felt some confusion in his own mind, he would not have allowed an officer whose conduct was indefensible to continue to serve under him.

Passing for a moment from the personal to the political aspect of the situation, he could not help remarking how very keen the Government were on having everything their own way. They did not mind what they did, as long as they themselves did it. Here in this Irish business there was what the right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fife would call "pure Balfourism." The right hon. Gentleman and the Party to which he belonged accused their opponents of endeavouring to subvert the Legislative Union between this country and Ireland; and on that ground they received the support of hon. Gentlemen from the North of Ireland. Many people thought that private arrangements should not be made which weakened and violated the whole conditions on which that support had been extended, and when the matter became public, to explain that it was only the unauthorised act of an agent led away by enthusiasm. The right hon. Gentleman had some moral responsibility for Lord Dunraven's scheme. It had now been dropped like a hot coal. He should like to know if, when the right hon. Gentleman returned from his hard-earned and richly-deserved holiday, he had found that the Dunraven scheme had been received with universal applause, if he had found the hon. Member for North Antrim anxious to embrace Lord Dunraven, and the Solicitor-General asking them both to meet him at dinner at his house, he would have then developed this extreme orthodoxy?

Mr. WYNDHAM: My hon. friend forgets that I wrote a letter directly I saw the scheme in the newspapers.

Mr. WINSTON CHURCHILL said that the right hon. Gentleman might say he never saw the publication of the scheme a month earlier, which scheme had been very considerably attacked by the organs of the Unionist Party in the intervening period. In fact he thought that before the right hon. Gentleman repudiated Lord Dunraven's second scheme there had been three or four leading articles in

The Times newspaper which, he dared say, the right hon. Gentleman occasionally read, all of which were calling upon him for an immediate repudiation of the scheme of Lord Dunraven even before it appeared in its final form. The whole of this incident showed quite clearly that the governing instrument, which had discharged much useful work in past years, was worn out, and that a new instrument was required to deal with real and pressing questions, not merely of Irish government, but of British politics generally. Last Wednesday, when the House was discussing the dissolution Amendment, a Cabinet Council was being held to discuss what was to be done with regard to the revelations which had become public, and the Prime Minister and those who sat with him at the table were engaged, as they had been engaged before, in trying to frame a form of words which would reconcile persons who profoundly differed from each other and enable them to continue a little longer in office as a Government. This form of words involved the direct censure of Sir Antony MacDonnell, and it was decided at that Council to apply to his action the word "indefensible," and to his opinions the word "erroneous." He would ask the right hon. Gentleman what was the position of the Viceroy in this matter? Lord Dudley had been four years in Ireland. The Viceroyalty was, he supposed, the most thankless and disagreeable office in the gift of the Crown. Lord and Lady Dudley had exerted themselves and spent money with princely generosity with no other object than to leave Ireland a little better than they found it; and it was only in accordance with the character of the noble Lord that he should have made a frank avowal of sympathy and approval of Sir Antony MacDonnell's action and policy. What he wished to ask the right hon. Gentleman was, did the censure of Sir Antony MacDonnell cover the Lord-Lieutenant also? When he asked him earlier in the afternoon, the right hon. Gentleman said that the Cabinet did not know that the Viceroy was involved in this matter. He also understood the right hon. Gentleman to say that he did not know until December 27th that the Viceroy was involved in Sir Antony MacDonnell's action.

MR. WYNDHAM assented.

MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL said he was astonished at that. It seemed to him a very strange thing that the right hon. Gentleman should have failed to make that very important fact known to his colleagues in the Cabinet.

MR. WYNDHAM: At the meeting of the Cabinet the other day the question of Ireland was not discussed.

MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL said there must have been a Cabinet some time or other at which the answer which the right hon. Gentleman read in that House was drawn up His point was that at that Cabinet the Ministers were in ignorance of the fact that Sir Antony MacDonnell had the support and approval of the Viceroy, and the right hon. Gentleman, although he knew it, did not inform them of it. If that were true, he could not help thinking that the right hon. Gentleman had failed in the correct appreciation of his public duty.

He would pass away from the special incident to the general issue raised in the Amendment. The Amendment contained a statement of fact that might be extravagant in some parts of it. Although it was negative in its character no one could admit the evil it asserted without being involved in real responsibility to make an effort to redress it. He did not think that the question of Irish devolution stood alone. There was also the question of Wales. An extension of self-government was demanded, not only in the interests of nationalities which were cramped within our larger political organisation, but also in the interests of Parliament, which had become choked with an ever-expanding volume of business. They demanded greater freedom to manage or mismanage their own political affairs. The noble Lord the Member for Greenwich seemed to imagine that nationality was not a valuable principle and indeed that there was no such thing at all—that Burns was just as much an Englishman as Shakespeare and Shakespeare just as much an Irishman as Moore. This question of devolution, however, was not brought before them in the interests of nationality alone, but in the interests of Parliament, which was becoming increasingly choked with an ever-expanding volume of business, due not only to the complexities of modern life but to the manifold possibilities of the King's Dominions. It was now admitted that the House of Commons had no effective scrutiny over necessary details of expenditure. They knew that Private Bill legislation was almost a farce, and the position had arrived at such a topsy-turvy condition that time could be found to pass an Education Bill for Wales which the Welsh Members detested, but no time to pass an Education Bill for Scotland which the Scottish Members desired. He was convinced that no Party in the future would refuse to consider the delegation of administrative and legislative functions to provincial or national boards. He believed in the extension of local government on a scale hitherto quite unknown, in the creation of national boards in the four parts of the kingdom, and the handing over to them of large slices and blocks of business which could not properly be dealt with at Westminster. Lord Dunraven's plan had been called amateurish, but it was now known that it was framed by an expert in administration. It was allowed to be workable, it originated in Dublin Castle, had the approval of the Lord-Lieutenant, and merited respectful attention from all interested in Irish affairs. They were told it was contrary to Unionist principles; but what were Unionist principles? The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had, surely, a right to set the standard of Unionist orthodoxy, and he in 1885 expressed an opinion, which he had not since repudiated, in favour of local government for Ireland more thoroughly popular than had hitherto been attempted, with powers to deal with a variety of questions, including education, land tenure, railway and other communications, and with financial authority.

The most obvious objection to the present Irish system was that the people had no sense of ownership in government similar to that existing in this country. We might have a poor thing of a Government, but at least it was our own, and slowly the electoral machinery could change it; but in Ireland there was no change possible, it was an arbitrary authority under the specious guise of representation. A Catholic University desired by four-fifths of the population and admitted as desirable by every Government for the last twenty years had never been attempted by any Government with prospect of success. He, himself, was not favourable to a Catholic University in Ireland, and if such a measure were introduced he would be compelled to vote against it. There was no inconsistency in that. He believed that the day had passed when the House of Commons could defend religious tests in connection with education. But what business was that of theirs? So long as they were unable to deal with a question of that kind, there stood revealed a cardinal defect in their system of government in Ireland.

Then there was the question of finance. It would be easy to show that the Irish people had no interest whatever in making economies of any kind, how a Royal Commission had declared that they were paying an undue proportion of taxation, and how they were charged no less than 75 per cent. of indirect taxation. But he would pass to a more general point. What was there in the air of these Irish offices that so powerfully influenced distinguished public officials, Chief Secretaries, and Tory Viceroys, who were sent to watch the working of the Irish governmental machine on the spot? Sir Anthony MacDonnell did not stand alone. Before him there had been Sir West Ridgeway, Sir Robert Hamilton, Mr. Thomas Drummond, and others. What was it that disquieted these public officials? What was it that drew Lord Carnarvon to the empty house in Grosvenor Square? What was it that induced Lord Dudley to cast away all his prospects of future promotion in the Conservative Party? Was it some dim understanding of a great truth which came to those who watched the working of the machine at close quarters, or was it the clear apprehension of a great fraud?

The Irish polity had its equal nowhere in the world. It might be that in South Africa one of these days the system would be much the same, because the same seed planted in soils, however different, produced the same peculiar plant, but for the present the Irish polity stood alone. Ireland was governed by neither King nor people. The system of government was not democratic, autocratic, or even oligarchal. The land was hag-ridden by forty-one separate semi-independent administrative boards, which overlapped in all directions, some of them fed with money from the Consolidated Fund, others with money voted by this House, and others from Irish funds; some under the control of the Viceroy, some under the control of the Chief Secretary, some under the control of the Treasury, and some under no control at all except their own sweet will. The resultant administration was costly, inefficient, and unhandy beyond compare. A mighty staff of police and officials, nine-tenths of the latter drawn from the minority of the population, were employed in imposing the system upon a people desperately poor; taxation rose automatically with the expanding establishment of this wealthy and extravagant country; population at the same time dwindled steadily. To all this had to be added a Loyalist caste. What an Old Man of the Sea a loyalist faction was to get on the backs of any British Government! He had no quarrel with hon. Members opposite. They were perfectly loyal —to their own interests—and honestly believed that those interests were the interests of their country. But they paraded their loyalty, using it to extort concessions of privilege and ascendency from the British Government; when any man attempted to do even-handed justice in the King's name between man and man in Ireland, they complained that they were being betrayed; and, in the exact language of their own South African prototypes, they declared that loyalty did not pay a dividend on the capital invested. Let all this be thrown into the arena where British Parties were fiercely struggling for the mastery, and the panorama of Irish government was complete. Against such a system, brought to the knowledge of the House and the country by distinguished Irish Unionists who had hitherto never been challenged as exponents of Unionist opinion, by witnesses so trustworthy, impartial, and reluctant, it seemed to him that every liberal-minded man ought cheerfully to vote.

MR. T. L. CORBETT (Down, N.) said that, listening to the hon. Member for Oldham, he had been reminded of the phrase once used in this House about "an old man in a hurry," and he could not help wondering whether there were not also some young men in a hurry, who would one day realise the truth of the old proverb, "More haste, less speed." It seemed to be the congenial occupation of some Members to abuse their Party and condemn their leaders, but it was in no such spirit that the Ulster Members had approached their difficult and disagreeable task of criticising the Government. Hitherto they had been amongst the most loyal and devoted supporters of the Unionist Party and Government; the raison d'être of their presence in the House of Commons was the defence of the Union, which, after all, was the very corner-stone of the whole fabric of the Unionist Party. Consequently the revolt of the Ulster Members had been undertaken with no light heart. The Prime Minister in a memorable phrase recently declared that the Unionist Party was not for sale. For some months past, however, the Unionist Members for Ulster had had the feeling that they were being sold, and that when they were not being sold they were being given away. Too long they had submitted to the scarcely concealed contempt with which the Chief Secretary had treated their opinions and received their representations; the Government had taken advantage of their Unionism, evidently believing their loyalty to Party and leaders to be so deeply ingrained that they would not cause any trouble. What was to be said about the plain facts which had been dragged to light in the other House of Parliament? The Government selected for the post of Under-Secretary for Ireland a distinguished official of great ability, a man of well-known Home Rule sympathies, and a devoted son of the Roman Catholic Church, who would accept the office only on special terms. The House had a right to know what those special terms were. Negotiations had been carried on with the knowledge of the Lord-Lieutenant and the Chief Secretary. Why were not those negotiations stopped at an earlier period? Was Sir Antony MacDonnell allowed to feel his way and only thrown over because of the storm which had arisen? Knowing Sir Antony MacDonnell's religious and political opinions, he did not blame him so much as he blamed those who put him in a position to do what he had done. What had the Government gained by their policy? They had not gained a single Nationalist vote, but they had certainly lost the confidence and loyalty of their most devoted, sincere, and true-hearted followers in the North of Ireland.

Mr. HUGH LAW (Donegal, W.) thought it would be a pity if in this debate attention were diverted altogether from some of the larger aspects of the question raised by the Amendment. The objections to Home Rule might be divided into three classes:—first, the old story that Home Rule meant Rome Rule; secondly, that of which the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich was the exponent, that the whole thing was absurd child's play, a ridiculous mirage, that there was no such thing as an Irish nation at all; and, thirdly, that there was an Irish nation, but that it was a horribly criminal and disloyal faction which could not safely be given self-government, lest it should bring wreck and ruin on the Empire of which it, de facto, formed a part. As to the first class, it had already been pointed out that overwhelmingly Roman Catholic constituencies had returned Protestant Members to the House of Commons. When would a constituency of the North-East show a similar spirit of tolerance by returning a Catholic? This was not a mere accident; he doubted whether there had been a year since the Union in which Catholic voters in all parts of Ireland had not sent men of other faiths to represent them in Parliament. The one case of Catholic intolerance put forward by the hon. Member for North Antrim was debated in the House nearly a year ago, and, although a special association had been formed to hunt up such matters, not a single case of oppression had been discovered in the intervening months. As to the contention that no such thing as an Irish nation existed, what constituted a nation? It was certainly not race. The essence of nationality was like the essence of Christianity. A man was a Christian who believed as such, and a man was of that nation in which he believed, and to which he felt himself to belong. Finally, to what was it that the Irish people were expected to be loyal? The history of Canada should ever be borne in mind in this matter. What was the foundation of loyalty? The answer was given many years ago by Grattan, when he said, "Loyalty is a noble, a magnificent, a capacious thing, but loyalty without liberty is corruption."

Sir JAMES HASLETT (Belfast, N.) said that it was quite possible he might be mistaken in his estimate of what this Amendment meant, but the speeches which had been delivered, pointing to the difficulties under the present administration of Ireland, contemplated as the only solution of this problem the complete separation of Ireland from England and a complete Ireland within herself. Anything less than that was not the principle of Home Rule advocated by hon. Members opposite. If it was to be merely a partial or fiscal separation, or a withdrawal from the British Parliament of merely minor affairs, then he understood that that was not what was meant by the demand for Home Rule for Ireland. Lord Randolph Churchhill once stated that, so far as he could gather from the Irish Members, Home Rule meant dissolving the last link that bound Ireland to England. If that were a wrong definition of what Irishmen meant by Home Rule, then of course they started upon fresh ground. He remembered a speech made by the hon. Member who had addressed them in such clear terms that evening from the opposite side, in which he stated that a liberal measure of county government would meet the demand of Ireland, and would give to the people the opportunity to show their capacity and their right to have government upon similar lines to England. The measure of 1898 had now borne fruit for some years, although there were still many faults and blots upon the system of county government in Ireland. No one would contend that that Act or its administration was anything like perfection, for it was full of blots and shortcomings which showed a narrowness of mind, but, notwithstanding all that, the present system of local government in Ireland had done good, for it had developed the interest of the people in local affairs, and in the main he welcomed that measure. Personally, he never joined in those invectives of one section against the other, for they could do no good for Ireland. He supposed that the Chief Secretary was the greatest scoundrel in the world, if they listened to one side, whilst the other side considered him quite a respectable gentleman. He had conversed with Sir Antony MacDonnell, and had always found him willing to listen to reason, and he was equally ready to advance his own views for the general welfare, not of Belfast alone, but of Ireland as a whole. He had suffered from Chief Secretaries in the past, and he had not got from them all he wanted, but that was not always the fault of the Chief Secretary, but on account of the eternal tugging at him for money from all directions. They had heard that Belfast was the place that was getting all the money, but he could assure hon. Members opposite that Belfast never got a copper of the Government doles. Belfast had, however, asked that the Government doles should not be given out to other districts in opposition to Belfast, and they insisted that the free trade which had made Belfast should not be stifled by doles made to other cities.

With regard to the general administration of the affairs of Ireland, his chief objection was that the money voted and placed in the hands of the Government in Ireland was not given on a broad and general principle, but on just a hand-to-mouth principle dependent upon the parties tugging at the Treasury, and that cases were decided without any reference to the general administration of Irish affairs. Many of the relief works undertaken by the Government, such as the making of roads, had turned out practically useless, and he could point out one road made in this way which was scarcely ever used except for the purpose of grouse shooting. The mover of the Amendment before the House had stated that he had no other idea than to prove to the House of Commons that, in consequence of the general breakdown of the administration in Ireland, there was no solution of the question except the granting of complete separation. [NATIONALIST cries of "No, no!"] If he was wrong in his definition of Home Rule he would ask the Home Rulers themselves to supply a definition. Until they adopted this course, he had a perfect right to take the previous definition of their demand. The hon. Member for Oldham had told them that things had changed since 1886, and that in Ireland they were now in more favourable circumstances. All he had to say was that he had not heard one word in mitigation of the demand put forward by the Home Rulers, or any alteration in the definition of Home Rule, which still remained what he had ventured to put before the House. What was demanded was the absolute right to govern Ireland through an Irish Parliament, absolutely separated from the Parliament of the British Empire. That was not devolution but absolute separation. Mr. Gladstone had honestly tried to grapple with the question; at first he said that it passed the wit of man to devise a satisfactory scheme to deal with the subject, but afterwards made proposals which were pregnant with contradictions. Under one scheme the Irish Members were to be retained at Westminster taking part in the management of English affairs, but the English people were not to have any voice in the management of Irish affairs. Home Rule meant that for general purposes, for the general welfare of the nation, for the making of laws to protect life and property, for taxation, and for the protection of Ireland by an Army and Navy, Ireland was to have a separate Parliament, and that the Parliament at Westminster was not to have any voice or control over Irish affairs. Under such a system the idea prevailed in the minds of the Loyalist minority that it was quite possible that they would receive only scant justice from the majority. The Protestants had in many instances elected Roman Catholics to fill public positions on governing bodies in Ireland, but he would like hon. Members opposite to give the House any case where Protestants had been elected as members of a local governing body where the power existed to elect a Nationalist. Those were some of the dangers which were present in the minds of the minority.

He wished to remind the House that the taxes paid by the minority in Ireland amounted to five times as much as those paid by the majority. They had been promised an Ulster Parliament. The Ulster people might have many faults but they refused to desert their brethren throughout the length and breadth of Ireland by accepting a Parliament of their own. Many of his warmest and dearest friends were Catholics, and he did not consider them any the less worthy of his friendship, because they differed from him upon politics and religion. Nevertheless, they refused to have a Parliament of their own for Ulster, and he believed that nine-tenths of the Protestants of Ireland would tell them that, in their opinion, it was for the best interests of Ireland, best for the protection of life and property in that country, and for the securing of laws upon a broad basis, that Ireland should be governed under laws made by the Parliament at Westminster. He had in the past taken part in the devising of laws, and he confessed that he had not always been in the right. He would give them an instance of the danger of making laws from a narrow local point of view. At one time they were very anxious to put down betting in the streets of Belfast, and they embodied in a Bill a clause to the effect that if three men were seen talking together in the public street, the police should have power to call upon them to move on and disperse, or else they should be taken to the police station and their names should be taken. When that measure was brought before the British Parliament, a Member of the Upper Chamber asked, "Do you really mean that? Look what a great power you are placing in the hands of a young constable. You might have all the merchants in your city taken to the police station." Before that explanation, he had looked at the matter simply with a desire to put an end to one of the most degrading things in the city of Belfast, but he afterwards fully realised what a weapon that would be against the merchants in the city, and so they withdrew the proposal. If they had a narrow-minded Parliament, they might have that narrow view put into their laws. Just in proportion as they broadened the basis, in that same proportion were they likely to get broad and generous laws. It had been said that the best laws ever devised by Parliament could be set aside, and rendered futile in their administration. Some charges had been made against the Judges who administered the law in Ireland by the hon. Member for South Tyrone, but he did not think anyone could say that Dublin Castle influenced the Judges upon the Bench in their interpretation of the law.

MR. T. W. RUSSELL: What I say is that it is the duty of the Castle officials to advise upon the law, and they have a very curious way of deciding in favour of the landlord in every case.

SIR JAMES HASLETT said that no Castle official could override the interpretation placed upon the law by the Judges.

And, it being Midnight, the Debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

PAUPERISM (ENGLAND AND WALES) (HALF-YEARLY STATEMENTS).

Copy ordered, "of Statement of the number of Paupers relieved on the 1st day of January, 1905, and similar Statement for the 1st day of July, 1905 (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 84, Session 1904)."—(Mr. Grant Lawson.)

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, 21st February, 1905.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with:—Barry Railway [H.L.]; Bridgewater Canals [H.L.]; Hastings Tramways [H.L.]; Hessle Gas [H.L.]; Leeds and Liverpool Canal [H.L.]; Mortgage Insurance Corporation [H.L.]. Metropolitan District Railway [H.L.]. The same were ordered to lie on the Table.

Abertillery Urban District Water Bill [H.L.]; Administrative County of London and District Electric Power Company Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª, and committed. The Committees to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

Alexandra Park and Palace Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª, and committed.

Bangor (County Down) Water and Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Blackpool Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Clacton Improvement Bill [H.L.]; East London and Lower Thames Electric Power Bill [H.L.]; Humber Conservancy Bill [H.L.]; Hythe Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Littlehampton Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Matlock Bath Improvement Bill [H.L.]; Nine Mile Point Railway Bill [H.L.]; Nottingham Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Preston Corporation (Ribble Navigation) Bill [H.L.]; Sandgate Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Southport, Birkdale, and West Lancashire Water Board Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª, and committed. The Committees to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation) Bill [H.L.]; Tees Valley Water Board Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª, and committed.

Torpoint Urban District Water Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª, and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member.

Tralee Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]; Weaver Navigation Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª, and committed.

Whitby Urban District Council Bill [H.L.]. Read 2ª, and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TREATY SERIES, No. 4 (1905).

Convention between the United Kingdom and Mexico respecting postal rates upon letters passing between New Zealand and Mexico; signed at Mexico, 1st February, 1904. (Ratifications exchanged at Mexico, 12th January, 1905.)

WAGES AND EFFECTS OF DECEASED SEAMEN.

Account of the sums received and paid in respect of the wages and effects of deceased seamen in the year ended 31st March, 1904.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES) (VISITING COMMITTEES).

Rules proposed to be made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department with respect to the constitution of the Visiting Committee of Borstal Prison.

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF SOUTHAMPTON).

Order made by the county council of the county of Southampton altering the Sarisbury polling district in the Fareham Parliamentary Division.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP (SPECIAL EXCEPTION—NIGHT WORK).

Order, dated 18th February, 1905, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 54 (4) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception in that section to male young persons of the age of sixteen years and upwards employed in the process of continuous wire-drawing carried on in non-textile factories.

COMMITTALS (IRELAND).

Returns from the Clerks of the Crown and Peace of the number of persons committed for trial in 1904.

RAILWAY COMPANIES POWERS ACT, 1864.

Certificate of the Board of Trade authorising the Corringham Light Railway Company to raise additional capital.

SEAMEN'S SAVINGS BANKS (MONEY ORDERS AND TRANSMISSION OF WAGES).

Account of all deposits received and repaid by the Board of Trade on account of Seamen's Savings Banks, under the authority of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, during the year ended 20th November, 1903, and of the interest thereon; statement showing the number and amount of seamen's money orders issued and paid at ports in the United Kingdom and at ports abroad from 1855 to 31st March, 1904; also, statement showing the receipts and payments in connection with the transmission of seamen's wages, home and foreign, from 1878 to 31st March, 1904.

RAMSGATE HARBOUR.

Statement of the receipts and payments made by the Board of Trade for the year ended 31st March, 1904; together with an account of the receipt and issue of stores.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

NEW BILLS.

CRIMINAL CASES (RESERVATION OF POINTS OF LAW) BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to amend the Crown Cases Act, 1848. Was presented by the Lord Chancellor; read 1^a; and to be printed. (No. 11.)

STREET BETTING BILL [H.L.].

A Bill for the suppression of betting in streets and other public places. Was presented by the Lord Davey; read 1^a; to be printed; and to be read 2^a on Tuesday next. (No. 12.)

BISHOPRIC OF BRISTOL BILL [H.L.].

Order of the day for the Second Reading read.

*THE LORD BISHOP OF BRISTOL: My Lords, this Bill is exactly in the form in which your Lordships read it a third time last year. It proposes to bring into the diocese of Bristol, by agreement with the Bishop of Gloucester, twenty-three parishes in the South of Gloucester, and also, by agreement with the Bishop of Bath and Wells, one parish in the diocese of Bath and Wells. That parish already has the populous part of it within the boundary of the City of Bristol, and by general agreement it was thought it ought to come within the diocese of Bristol, especially as I have special means, which the diocese of Bath and Wells does not possess, of dealing with the great population in that district. There is no money to be transferred from either diocese to the diocese of Bristol, although it must be evident to your Lordships that to increase the number of parishes in that diocese by something like one-seventh more than it possesses now must increase the burden on the Bishop. It seems to me a great pity that alterations of boundaries of this kind have to be done by Acts of Parliament. I long for the time when His Majesty's Government will make it possible to effect changes of this kind by Order in Council.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2^a." (The Lord Bishop of Bristol.)

THE LORD ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY: My Lords, I think I ought to say that, having looked very carefully into this matter both last year and since, I feel I can support every word the rt. rev. Prelate has said. I think the Bill ought, as soon as possible, to be passed into law.

On Question, Bill read 2^a, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

SEAMEN'S AND SOLDIERS' FALSE CHARACTERS BILL [H.L.].

Order of the day for the Second Reading read.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (The Earl of DONOUGHMORE): My Lords, except for a small, and, I can assure your Lordships, purely drafting Amendment in Clause 3, this Bill is exactly the same Bill that your Lordships passed through all its stages last year. On the Second Reading last session, I explained the Bill at some length, and I do not therefore think it necessary to inflict another speech upon you on the subject. I beg to move that the Bill be read a second time.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ᵃ."—(The Earl of Donoughmore.)

On Question, Bill read 2ᵃ, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

ARMY REORGANISATION.

*THE DUKE OF BEDFORD: My Lords, I beg to call attention to certain pages of the summary of the speech of the Secretary of State for War with regard to the reorganisation of the Army, and to ask the noble Earl the Under Secretary of State for War if he can give any information regarding the intentions of His Majesty's Government respecting the Militia and the proposed territorial regiments of the Regular Army.

At the close of last session the Government brought forward a scheme of Army reorganisation which produced the impression that the abolition of the Militia formed an essential part of the proposed reconstruction of the military forces. In the course of a debate which took place in your Lordships' House in July last, the Government announced that the proposals, as far as the Militia was concerned, should remain in abeyance, and stated that the scheme of the Army Council dividing the Army into a General and a Home Service Army had their approval.

Meantime the Prime Minister has informed the country that the problem of the defence of the British Empire is the defence of the borders of Afghanistan. It is then from that point of view that reorganisation of our military forces must be considered. If the occasion arose, the sequence of operations would be as follows: The existing Army in India must hold its own till the command of the sea is assured. The Regular Army must then be embarked and transported to India, replacing the garrisons in India, which would be moved to the front as fresh troops arrived to relieve them. Then a supplementary force, whether the territorial Army or the Militia, must be in readiness to free the remainder of the Regular Army by undertaking all garrison duties at home and abroad. Thus no force assembled in this country as a second line to the Regular Army could possibly reach the scene of active operations under a year from the date of its first assembly at home.

To meet the problem of Afghanistan, the Army Council proposes to divide the Regular Army into a General Service Army and a Home Service Army, into which, if public opinion allows, the Militia is to be absorbed. That appears on pages 11 and 12 of the summary. The question is, Can you better supplement your General Service Army by a Regular Home Service Army or by a force raised on a Militia basis? That is a question which has never been discussed. I desire to bring it to your Lordships' notice, and to contrast the respective merits of the Militia system and of a Home Service Regular Army for the defence of the Empire.

The Army Council's scheme of reorganisation provides for a Home Service Army by cutting off certain battalions of the Regular Army and converting them into territorial battalions. But if the Regular Army is divided into parts, you do not at once and materially increase the sum total of men by that division. Your Army is in two parts instead of in one whole. Does such a division result in multiplication, and does it produce the additional supplementary force required? I presume the answer of the Army Council would be—"Our territorial regiments are reserve-creating machines. All that we, who exist to provide for instant war, require, is a prolonged period of peace in which to build up our Reserves." The aim of the Army Council seems to be to form a Home Service Army of some eighty battalions, partly by subtraction from the present Regular Army, and partly by the absorption of the Militia. This scheme of a Home Service Army of eighty battalions, if realised, would, at the end of eight years, give a Home Service Army with a total Reserve of 200,000 men—allowing 10 per cent. for waste, 180,000 available men. But it will be at the end of eight years, and the Army Council will have wiped out both the Militia and the Militia system. Eight years is too long a tether. Let us test the value of the scheme at the end of four years. The task is to defend the borders of Afghanistan against a great military Power, to occupy Afghanistan itself, to garrison India, South Africa, and all foreign stations, and to defend the United Kingdom. The Army Council proposes to accomplish this task by means of a General Service Army—but less numerous than the present Regular Army—the Indian Army, and a Home Service Army of 90,000 men, for that would be the extent of the Reserve at the end of four years. Behind those 90,000 men there would be nothing except the Volunteers.

There is a clear lesson to be learnt from the South African War as regards the value of the Volunteers. In 1900, when the country was in a tight place, the force was asked for two months of consecutive service at home, but was only able to contribute fourteen days. Their place in the scheme of national defence had to be supplemented by garrison battalions, raised in panic and at a cost of millions to the country. It is true that the Volunteers sent abroad, on an average, 6,000 men per annum for three years. But fourteen days of consecutive service at home and a yearly contribution of 6,000 men for foreign service for three years is not going to save the situation when the 90,000 men of the Home Service Army are used up, as they must be by the end of the first year of the war. The Army Council by favouring the absorption of the Militia into the territorial, that is, the Regular Army, limits military service to that very small fraction of our population which is prepared to serve in the Regular Army.

I find in the Report of the Royal Commission on the South African War that the following opinion is expressed—

> "No military system would be satisfactory which does not contain powers of expansion outside the limit of the Regular Forces of the nation."

History shows that there are only two ways of creating a national Army. The one is by conscription, which has been perfected by the nations of the Continent of Europe and by Japan; the other is by the old English Militia system, which, although neglected by the country of its origin, has never failed to perform all that was required of it. The Army Council proposes to form territorial regiments on the Continental plan of two years training, but without the foundations of the Continental system, which is conscription. On the Continent men are not taken till the age of twenty, and are then trained for two years at the highest possible pressure. For our Home Service Army boys are to be accepted at the age of eighteen, and at a minimum weight of 112 lbs., that is eight stones, which is a child's and not a boy's weight. If the Army Council is going to subject these boys, who certainly will not physically represent the average boyhood of the country, to the same severe strain of military training which prevails abroad for the manhood of the Continent from twenty to twenty-two, all I can say is that the Army Council should be prosecuted by that excellent society which exists for the prevention of cruelty to children.

On second thoughts, it occurs to me that this contingency will not arise, because no recruits will join the Home Service Army if they are to be trained on the Continental plan. On the other hand, if the training of the Home Service Army does not differ from that of the General Service Army, and is made equally attractive, then it is certain that the Home Service Army will attract all the recruits, to the ruin of the General Service Army. Short service at home is preferable to long service abroad, in spite of the differences of pay. That is conclusively shown by the breakdown of the three years system of enlistment, mentioned on page 5 of the summary.

A statement has been issued showing the financial effect of the proposals of the Army Council. But that statement tells us nothing as to the cost of barracks and depôts for these territorial regiments of the Home Service Army. They are to be located near the county towns. That means the purchase of desirable building sites, and entails the provision near each barrack of some hundreds of acres of land for battalion and company training, also the acquisition and construction of many rifle ranges. All that points to a bill of very many millions. From the point of view of national economy, there is no doubt that the Militia system is the better.

No one can dispute the deficiencies of the Militia as now organised. But the true comparison is not between the territorial Army and the Militia in that parlous condition to which it has been reduced since its transfer to War Office administration thirty-five years ago. It is between the territorial Army and the Militia as it would be if properly administered. On page 8 of the summary four extracts are given from the Report of the Royal Commission on the Militia and Volunteers. We are told with respect to the Militia, first, that as regards the infantry, there—

> "Is a consensus of opinion both among Militia officers, and those Regular officers who have ha dspecial opportunities of observation, that the average Militia battalion would not be fit to take the field except after several months continuous embodiment."

It is necessary to remember that the Duke of Norfolk's Commission was considering a problem, now declared to be of very minor importance, namely, that of the defence of this country after a successful landing by foreign invaders. The Militia was to be embodied on Monday and fight a second battle of Hastings on British soil against the flower of Continental chivalry on the Tuesday following. Hence the stress laid upon the lack of efficiency to meet the best troops of the Continent until after several months continuous embodiment.

But, as the Prime Minister has stated, the problem now is the defence of the frontiers of Afghanistan, and, as your second line cannot be brought into action under twelve months, there is ample time for that improvement which may confidently be expected from a Militia force within some months of embodiment. The proposed territorial regiments are no better situated for the purpose of immediately taking the field than Militia regiments. Both these forces are a second line; neither is more ready than the other at a moment's notice. But the advantages are in favour of the Militia. In the territorial regiments the eighteen-year-old boys with the Colours will not be fit for service, and the imperfectly, because far too hurriedly, trained Reservists must be summoned back from civil life. They will return, having forgotten most of their slight military training, and they will be complete strangers to their officers and non-commissioned officers and to each other. Indeed, the mobilisation of a territorial regiment will, to a great extent, be the assembly of a crowd of men who have never seen each other before. That is consequent upon two years of boy service with the Colours, and then six in the Reserve.

The Reserve of these territorial regiments must be for a moment compared to the Reserve of the Regular Army in 1899. That Reserve had been trained for seven years, mostly abroad, and, to a very great extent, on active service. Such was the Reserve which saved the situation in South Africa, and whose creation we owe to the genius of Lord Cardwell and to the loyal insistence of Lord Wolseley. The Reservists of the territorial regiments will have been trained near their homes, during boyhood, for two years, less intervals spent in hospital, and may possibly have once seen Aldershot, or even gazed upon Stonehenge.

The Militiaman, although trained for a short period, by being brought up regularly for several years in succession acquires a certain solidarity which is not attained under the rival system. The embodiment of a Militia regiment for service is exactly the same as the assembly for the annual training. The Militiaman, on embodiment for service, takes his place in the same section in which he stood for the annual training the year previous. The second extract on page 8 is to the effect that—

> "The training of the Militia officer is inadequate to enable him to properly lead troops, especially incompletely-trained troops."

The Militia officer has to make his living by the exercise of his civilian profession. On that account he is often a far more capable and a much more widely educated man than the Regular officer, for no man who is obliged to use his brains in his youth in order to secure a competence in his old age can afford to enter the Army, but he can and does serve in the Militia.

Now, as for the training of the Militia officer being inadequate, the War Office is not in a position to reproach him on that score. I quote from Colonel Westropp's note to the Report of the Duke of Norfolk's Commission—

> "The military education of the Militia officer is a most serious problem. In nothing is competence more essential in an officer than in musketry. These are the facilities offered during the year 1903. Of the officers of the Militia 315 applied to undergo a course of musketry at Hythe; 121, or just over one out of three, were received there for instruction."

My own experience is that between 1903 and 1904 I forwarded three applications from officers to attend courses of signalling, but all were refused. The War Office is an educational authority, paid to carry out its educational duties. Yet it closes its schools in the face of would-be students, and then denounces their lack of learning, splendidly unconscious of where the responsibility rests. The third extract on page 8 is—

> "That the force is imperfectly equipped for war."

That is no reflection on the Militia, but on those who have been responsible for its administration. It is a complaint of very long standing. But it is useless to dwell on this point until the intentions of the Government regarding the Militia are known. I now come to the fourth extract, that—

> "The Militia, in its existing condition, is unfit to take the field for the defence of this country."

Of course if a force is imperfectly equipped for war by the military administration, it must be unfit to take the field for any warlike purpose. But what of the military administration?

I add one more extract from the Report of the Royal Commission on the Militia and Volunteers, which is not on page 8 of the summary, but which is the conclusion arrived at by the Commission—

> "We are forced to the conclusion that the Militia, in its existing condition, is unfit to take the field for the defence of this country. We think, however, that its defects arise from causes beyond the control of its officers and men."

The Duke of Bedford.

I read in the summary of the speech of the Secretary of State for War on page 7 that—

> "The decay of the Militia is the natural and inevitable consequence of the way in which that force has been treated."

The fact, then, that the decadence of the Militia is due to mistaken military administration, is admitted. The question for the country to decide is whether the Militia system is to be abolished because of the incapacity of successive military administrations to get the right value out of that particular form of service.

It is not surprising that the administration of a force, which combines civil employment and military service, by a controlling body absolutely without any knowledge of civilian business and labour should end in failure. Take the education and training of the average officer of the Regular Army. As a small boy at school he joins the Army class and begins to specialise before he has received any general education. He leaves school for a crammer's establishment where he intensifies the specialisation. He joins the Army and serves abroad. The only method of administration and system of business known to him is the one that he learns in his regimental orderly room. He can always fall back on the Army Act, and that never fails him. It gets him out of any difficulty that he may have created for himself. In due course he fills various unimportant staff appointments abroad. He is certain to be the author of many foolish orders, but still not so extravagant as to bring upon him the censure of his superiors. All his orders must be obeyed by his subordinates, whose duty it is to make the most impossible orders as workable as circumstances will allow, and whose interest it is never to ruffle the temper of their superior officer. Hence he is never subject to criticism, consequently he regards himself as a heaven-born administrator. He returns home as a field officer, and gets an appointment upon some district staff which entails the administration of all the branches of the Auxiliary Forces.

Without such a curriculum the following case, of which I have had personal experience, could not occur. The recruits of a Militia battalion were ordered to assemble for preliminary drill on Easter Monday. To the military mind, trained as I have described, a Bank Holiday meant a holiday for persons employed in a bank. The Militia recruits of the regiment in question were not bank clerks. Therefore Bank Holiday should make no more difference to their assembly than the full moon. Orders must be obeyed. A military force which cannot or will not obey orders is useless. The military mind of the Regular officer is intolerant of excuses for non-compliance with orders based on what to him are petty local reasons. The civilian mind of the Militia officer chafes sorely at having his business transacted by a gentleman to whom he would scarcely offer a stool in his business office as a second or third clerk.

The necessity of a link between the War Office and the Auxiliary Forces was recognised by the appointment of advisory boards in February, 1903. These were abolished by the Army Council in April, 1904. At present there is a Director of Auxiliary Forces, but it is impossible for any Director of Auxiliary Forces, or for any staff with which he may be provided, located in the War Office, to be in touch with the varying conditions of civilian life and labour all over the United Kingdom. Those conditions can only be represented to the Army Council by Militia commanding officers who live constantly in the same neighbourhood as their men. If it is the intention of the Government to retain the Militia, I would strongly advise the re-establishment of the advisory boards, whose mouthpiece should be the Director of Auxiliary Forces.

Advocating, as I do, the retention of the Militia system adapted to modern conditions, I may fairly appeal to some well-known facts in our military history. In the last hundred years we have had three periods of great wars. The Peninsular and Waterloo campaigns, the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny, and, lastly, the Boer War. In all these wars the Militia has played its part. But I need not detain your Lordships by entering upon the particular conditions of service of the Militia at home, abroad, and in the field with the Regular Army, which prevailed at each epoch. The fact is undisputed that in none of the wars which I have mentioned could the Regular Army have maintained itself in the field and carried on the necessary garrison duties without the assistance of the Militia. The history of the Militia system goes back for hundreds of years, and the continuity of its existence affords evidence that this form of military service is congenial to the people of this country. I believe, therefore, that the Militia system is the only system by which we can create a national citizen Army.

As to foreign service, there is no doubt that a Militia force will only serve abroad if the war is popular. But in what respect will you be better off with the Reservists of the territorial regiments? After two years of boy-service close to their homes they will have returned to civilian life, looking at, and voting upon, the policy of this country from a Party point of view. They will think and act as civilians, not as soldiers. If they disapprove of the war, and on that account do not obey the summons to rejoin, will you discover them and bring them back by the aid of the police, and send them as prisoners across the seas? Your Lordships may depend upon this. If the war is a just war, both Militia and Home Service Reserve will come forward for foreign service. If the war is held by the country to be an unjust war, neither will. My conviction is that if you attempt to enlist men for foreign service outside the Regular Army as at pressent constituted, under the impression that you can compel them to serve abroad in an unpopular war, the last state of your military forces will be worse than even the present. Therefore I should never enlist the Militiaman for foreign service. I should add to the form of enlistment a distinct warning that, if Parliament considered it necessary, the whole Militia force would be asked to volunteer for foreign service, but that each man was free to say "Yes" or "No" when that question was put to him by his country.

The reorganisation of the Militia to convert it into a truly national force will require some effort, and, more than that, some sacrifices from every class of the community. In the first place, Parliament must explain the reasons which demand such sacrifices. They are not far to seek—the experience of the Boer War, the memory of the disastrous week in December, 1899, the military and also the moral lessons to be learnt from events now taking place in the Far East, the defence of the borders of Afghanistan, are the reasons which make that problem so pressing. If anything more be needed, the speech of the Prime Minister at Southampton in October is surely sufficient. If we aim at a national force, we must stop recruiting for the Militia by means of the War Office, and invoke again the aid of local civil authorities. So long as it remains the business of the War Office to find men for the Militia, the responsibility of recruiting is not regarded as a national duty, but merely as a departmental matter in which the country, as a whole, is not in the least concerned.

It is scarcely necessary to remind your Lordships that the Lord-Lieutenant is purely a military officer, appointed under the authority of the Militia laws, and that Deputy-Lieutenants owe their existence to the same legislation. Their constitutional position should be made a reality. Lord-Lieutenants and Deputy-Lieutenants in association with county and borough councils should be made responsible by Parliament for finding the officers and men needed for the Militia. The staff for recruiting purposes would be the officer commanding the Militia regiments with his adjutant and permanent staff. This staff, acting under the immediate orders of the Lord-Lieutenants and Deputy - Lieutenants, in conjunction with the county and borough councils, would be an entirely different agency from the recruiting staff at present employed by the War Office, and controlled by an officer of the Regular Army who has probably served most of his life abroad, and is unknown and unheeded by the countryside. This officer must still trust to the recruiting sergeants, who attend fairs and other gatherings, haunt street corners, and seek for the idle and the unemployed. Traditions cling to the recruiting sergeant which make him an object of dislike and distrust to the parents and friends of the working classes.

Parliament should require each county or town, according to the number of the male population, to furnish its quota of men for service in the Militia. If the quota was not forthcoming, then a fine should be inflicted by Parliament for every man deficient. The county or borough would pay this fine out of the general county or borough rate, in the same way as the police rate is now paid. It might be known as the Militia deficiency rate. Neither the duty nor the fine is new. The duty which would be imposed on the county council is inherited from the quarter sessions. The liability for a fine rested, in the reign of Charles II., upon owners of personalty as well as owners of real estate. Any owner who failed to provide his quota was fined. A hundred years later the liability was transferred to the parochial authorities, and any parish which failed to provide its quota was fined by means of a rate levied for the purpose. I would gladly revert to the early principle, and throw the liability not only on realty but on personalty also. But for the present I am concerned only to show that the existing machinery can be utilised to enforce the liability.

At present, service in the Militia, in the case of both officers and men, is regarded by their friends and relations as a pleasant pastime, but one which must never be allowed to stand in the way of the real business of life. If Parliament imposed a penalty for deficiency in the Militia service, the importance and the true meaning of that service might become apparent to the country. The system of recruiting for the Militia which I suggest would not damage recruiting for the Line, because you would be once more opening the door for the Militia soldier, that is, a man who has employment in civil life, and who would under no circumstances join the Regular Army. Does the Government still consider that the proposals of the Army Council respecting the Militia must remain in abeyance? In the summary, on page 12, I read—

> "But the Militia cannot be left in its present unsatisfactory condition. Prompt measures must be taken to improve it so as to make it a more serviceable fighting force."

Therefore I ask the noble Earl if it is the intention of His Majesty's Government to adopt in whole or in part the proposals of the Duke of Norfolk's Commission. I also read on page 12 that in July last the Secretary of State proposed—

> "To take into consultation representative officers of the force in order to discuss any further changes that might with advantage be introduced."

I beg to ask the noble Earl if that course has been followed, and, if so, with what results?

I trust that the noble Earl may be in a position to give a definite reply on these points, because at present everybody connected with the Militia is in a state of absolute uncertainty as to the intention of Parliament. Uncertainty as to the future paralyses action and produces that condition when no one cares to do anything, because nobody knows what is going to happen next. Take the case of recruiting. How can any Militia commanding officer at the present moment have any interest in getting recruits for his regiment when he knows that it is the earnest wish of the Army Council to remove him from his command and request him to hand over his regiment to an officer from the Line? I hear now of instances of men who are thinking of joining the Militia saying to the recruiting officer—"We want to join the Militia, but we do not want to join the Line. We hear some talk of turning the Militia into the Line. Can you tell us before we enlist what is going to happen to the Militia?" Well, my Lords, the recruiting officer returns exactly the same answer that any member of your Lordships' House, not being a member of the Government, would give, namely, "I have not the smallest idea what is going to happen to the Militia." I trust that the noble Earl the Under-Secretary of State for War will be able to give an answer which will at once remove all uncertainty.

*VISCOUNT HARDINGE: My Lords, we are greatly indebted to the noble Duke for bringing this subject before your Lordships this evening, for there is no doubt that this is a most important and urgent problem. I trust the noble Earl the Under-Secretary will not evade the questions which the noble Duke has put, but will give us a definite answer. Since the Secretary of State for War brought forward his proposals in the other House at the end of last session, the Militia, as the noble Duke has said, has been in a state of great uncertainty as to its future, which can only be described as having an effect disastrous to that force; and I believe the same thing applies to the Volunteers. Therefore, my Lords, the sooner some definite answer is given the better, not only for the good of those two services, but of the nation at large.

If I understand the proposals of the Secretary of State for War rightly, I gather that he wished not to imply that he was desirous of abolishing the Militia; in fact he said that nothing was further from his thoughts. What he intended to do was to raise its status by drafting the Militia into the territorial regiments, and thereby mixing up officers and men of the Militia with those of the home Line battalion. If such a course is adopted, I venture to think, with all due deference to the Secretary of State for War, who I know conscientiously believes that it is the true solution of this question, and is in the interests of national defence, that the Militia generally will look upon it as the abolition of that old constitutional force, without the aid of which we should have been unable to bring the late South African War to a satisfactory conclusion. For several years past the Militia has not received any encouragement from the War Office; in fact, it has been most unfairly treated. The War Office have always worked on the principle that anything was good enough for the Militia, whilst if the same consideration has been meted out to them as had been extended to other branches of His Majesty's Auxiliary Forces, I am confident we should not hear, as we do now, of the inefficiency of the Militia.

Take, for instance, the shooting of the Militia. I was told the other day by a general who holds a responsible position at the War Office, that he thought the shooting of the Militia was far from satisfactory; in fact, he considered it was very bad. If your Lordships only knew what sort of rifles and ammunition are served out to the Militia, and the way that their annual course of musketry is hurried through—in most instances the officers commanding districts want to clear the ranges for the other branches of the Regular Forces and for the Volunteers and Yeomanry—you would not be surprised at their defective shooting. Until quite lately officers of Militia were unable to attend a course of musketry instruction at Hythe without having to pay their own expenses. Bearing all these points in mind, I think it is matter for wonder that the shooting of the Militia is as good as it is.

From the speech of the Prime Minister to Unionists in Glasgow on January 13th, I gather that he, at any rate, is perfectly satisfied with the present state of the Army. Yet only a short time before this speech was made, the noble Earl the late Commander-in-Chief (Lord Roberts) deemed it his duty to write his opinion of the state of the Army in the Nineteenth Century and After in words to this effect:—

> "I maintain that it is the bounden duty of the State to see that every able-bodied man in this country, no matter to what grade of society he may belong, undergoes some kind of military training in his youth, sufficient to enable him to shoot straight and carry out simple orders if ever his services are required for national defence."

No man calling himself an Englishman can fail to doubt the truth and wisdom of these words; and I trust His Majesty's Government, before they finally decide either to abolish the Militia or to change its present organisation, will ponder over these words of warning from so great an authority; for if there is one branch of the service which is suitable for the training of the youth of the country, that force undoubtedly is the Militia.

LORD RAGLAN: My Lords, I feel some diffidence in addressing your Lordships on this subject, as I have on more than one occasion inflicted long speeches with regard to it upon the House; but this is a matter on which I feel so very strongly that I cannot refrain from saying a few words in support of what has fallen from the noble Duke. The noble Duke has fully explained the position in which we, as commanding officers of Militia, feel ourselves, and I do not think it necessary to follow him in regard to that. But I do appeal to the noble Earl the Under-Secretary of State for War to answer as fully as he is able the questions put by the noble Duke.

I would like to draw the attention of His Majesty's Government to the fact that while the War Office Council is deliberating the Militia is dwindling. As far as I am able to make out, because the Returns for 1904 have not yet been published, the numbers of the Militia have fallen by 600 officers and something like 6,000 men from what they were before the commencement of the late war. That perhaps in itself would be a small thing, but the falling-off had been going on for many years before the war. I must emphasise what the noble Duke says, that we commanding officers of the Militia have considerable difficulty in putting pressure on our friends to send their sons into Militia regiments, because we are unable to say exactly what will be the result to the Militia force of the present changes.

The question of the training of officers, alluded to by the noble Duke, is one which I have before mentioned in your Lordships' House. The proper training of Militia officers is prevented by the difficulties put in the way of their getting proper instruction. I was informed the other day that for the year 1905 the number of vacancies allotted to the Militia of the Western District for the course at Hythe is only twenty-two. According to the new regulations, an officer is supposed to obtain a high certificate before he can qualify for promotion to the position of captain, and your Lordships will be able to calculate how many of the subalterns in the Western District will be able to qualify as captains. The noble Duke has explained most fully the reasons why men do not join the Militia. They previously joined a Militia regiment because they knew what it was, but while there is a possibility of the Militia being turned into a new-fangled, territorial regiment, recruits will not readily come forward.

There is one point on which I differ from the noble Duke—the question of the enlistment of the Militia for general service in the event of war. That is a point which I have urged for many years, in season and out of season. It was originally advocated many years ago by the late Sir George Walker in a lecture at the United Service Institution. Sir George Walker commanded the old Scottish Borders' Militia, and no man ever lived who was a better soldier or more thoroughly acquainted with the Militia. Sir George Walker was a strong advocate for enlisting the Militia for general service, and I, many years afterwards, followed humbly in his wake.

I look upon the existing condition of things as unfair both to the officers and men of the Militia. They are engaged on the distinct understanding that their service is limited to the United Kingdom; in fact, if I am not mistaken they cannot proceed even to the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands without volunteering. But the first thing that happens in the event of war is that they are asked to volunteer for foreign service. That is putting an unfair pressure upon them, for no officer or man likes to hold back when his regiment is proceeding on foreign service. I am fully persuaded of this fact, that if the Militia were frankly told that they were liable to proceed on foreign service in the event of a national emergency, you would not lose a single recruit or a single officer. Moreover, when it is understood that the Militia is liable to go on foreign service, the force will receive a new status, and it will become the duty of the War Office to see that it is properly trained and equipped for war. As long as the Fleet commands the sea, this country can never possibly be invaded, but we must have from somewhere a large force of men to defend the great land frontiers of the Empire.

Many years ago we were told that there was no fear of our land frontiers being invaded, but what has happened in the Far East is a lesson to all of us. We have seen enormous armies and immense quantities of guns and ammunition transported gigantic distances by means of a single line of railway. Railways are no great distance from our frontier, and thousands of men can be conveyed on those railways to within very short distances of our bases. You would require a large Army to deal with a crisis of that sort. I hold, if the Militia is enlisted and equipped for general service, and receives proper consideration, it can do all the work that a hastily-raised force can perform. I hold that no other force can succeed to the traditions of the Militia, and that if it is properly treated the Militia can perform any duty which may be required of it.

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (The Earl of DONOUGHMORE: My Lords, the noble Duke who introduced this discussion laid considerable stress on the necessity of an early decision of the principle at issue. I can assure him that I am entirely with him in desiring to see such an early decision. But we must not forget—the tendency is to forget it—what the principle at issue is. The noble Duke assumes that the principle at issue is whether the Militia is to be amalgamated — absorbed was the word he used—in the proposed short-service Army. I think that description is rather too bald adequately to describe the question under discussion. I do not deny that I have myself argued in favour of such absorption, and I wish I could have persuaded the noble Duke that it was an advisable thing; but I think the position of the Government was made perfectly clear last year, particularly by my noble friend the First Lord of the Admiralty, and perhaps I may be allowed to remind your Lordships of the position. The scheme which has been submitted to Parliament by His Majesty's Government involves the separation of the Army into a General Service Army and a Home Service Army, and the question we have to decide is, what part the Militia is to play in that division. The Home Service Army is that part of the Army which is to be ear-marked for service at home in time of peace and service abroad in time of war. It has now, I think, been universally accepted that our Army is chiefly needed for service abroad; and yet, while we have, in round numbers, a Regular Army of 250,000, a Militia of, say, 90,000, Imperial Yeomanry amounting to 25,000, and 240,000 Volunteers, making a total of 605,000, it is a notable fact that only 250,000 out of that total of 605,000 are ear-marked for service abroad. Therefore, it was with considerable satisfaction that I heard the conclusion of the speech of the noble Lord who spoke last, and who was one of my predecessors in office.

We have drafted a Bill, and I propose to ask your Lordships to read it a first time at the end of this debate in order to have it printed and circulated, authorising us to enlist the Militia for service abroad in time of war or emergency, or perhaps I should say for service abroad when embodied. Care is taken in the Bill to safeguard the rights of existing officers and men in the Militia, and it is not intended, for reasons which I shall be prepared to explain when the Bill comes up for Second Reading, to include the Imperial Yeomanry. I venture to suggest to your Lordships that this is a logical step for us to take in view of our belief that the Army as a whole is primarily needed for service abroad. The old custom, which I am sorry to say still holds favour with the noble Duke, of asking the Militia to volunteer to go abroad on the outbreak of war is cumbersome in view of your definite decision that you want them to go abroad. There has hardly ever been a big war—indeed, there has never been a big war—in which we have been engaged when we have not needed the Militia to go abroad; and I think it is therefore better that we should enlist them for that purpose. The noble Duke and the noble Lord who spoke last, complained, quite rightly, I think, of the uncertainty in which the Militia find themselves in regard to this matter. But on the last occasion on which my noble friend Lord Raglan addresed us on this subject he urged the Government to defer these drastic changes, and my noble friend, Lord Wemyss, whose absence I regret today, urged us, not once, but twice, to do nothing until Parliament had had an opportunity of discussing the proposal. I deplore the uncertainty existing.

It has often been stated in your Lordships' House that the great problem before us in time of peace is to provide adequate drafts for India. Three months ago, in considering the state of the infantry and framing Estimates for this year, we were naturally anxious to make a start with the system of general and short service; but those who are particularly acquainted with these matters came to us and advised us that owing to the very small number of extensions of three-years men, Indian drafts in the next few years would be in serious jeopardy. It was, therefore, decided to make every effort by nine-years enlistments to make the Indian drafts safe. I am happy to be able to inform your Lordships that the result of the nine-years recruiting has been distinctly satisfactory. Since the Army Order was issued on October 26th last, and up to February 11th, 8,427 nine-years men have been enlisted, considerably improving the position, though not making the drafts absolutely safe. Perhaps I may be pardoned if I give one short example to show the position we were in when we decided upon this change. A very distinguished regiment, the Norfolk Regiment, were in 1898 some sixty-eight over establishment, and they had 534 men available for drafts. Last year they were 254 over establishment, but had only 108 men available for drafts.

It followed, the nine-years enlistments having been decided upon, that the enlisting for the short-service battalions had to be postponed. This is the cause of the uncertainty we all deplore; we are not able to contemplate immediately the organisation of a short-service Army, or of finally deciding what form the Militia will have in the organisation. I do not think that the present position can possibly be lasting. Long service alone gives us no Reserve, short service alone creates anxiety about drafts, and I believe the only true remedy is to be found in a combination of the two, but until we are able to say that the drafts for India are made safe provisionally by the number of long-service men in the Army, we shall not be able to start our short-service battalions. I am afraid the state of uncertainty which noble Lords so deeply deplore must continue, but I can assure them no one will be better pleased than my colleagues on the Army Council when we are able to start our short-service battalions and come to a final decision in the matter.

I should like to say a word or two with regard to what the noble Duke said about the Volunteers. The noble Duke suggested that the Volunteers are an unreliable force.

THE DUKE OF BEDFORD: I gave their record of service, which I believe was perfectly accurate.

* THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: I think the noble Duke's suggestion was that the Volunteers are an unreliable force, and that the only method of raising a citizen Army is through the Militia. Here we differ from the noble Duke. It is our intention to look to the Volunteers for home defence against raids. Though they cannot be relied upon as units for service abroad, we have full confidence in the Volunteers as units for home service. They are slightly more numerous than are now required, and by a reduction in numbers we propose to increase their efficiency. My right hon. friend the Secretary of State for War stated yesterday in another place that the Volunteer Vote would be taken at the same sum this year as last year. We hope to make a saving on that Vote by reductions of numbers, and with the co-operation of the Volunteers themselves, which we are confident we shall obtain, we shall be able to apply the money saved in considerably increasing their efficiency for the purpose for which they are intended.

The Militia, being made reliable for service abroad, will, ipso facto, become the Reserve of the Regular Army. The noble Duke drew rather a pessimistic picture as to the efficiency that we could expect from a short-service home force. He suggested that their Reservists would go down after two years training, and on mobilisation would come back to strange regiments, not knowing their officers, and being generally rather a breed of lost sheep, who could not compare with a Militia regiment which had been embodied. What is the position? The Militia have their preliminary drill, very often not under their own officers. That drill is at present, I think, six weeks, and there are suggestions to increase it in length. They then serve for one month a year for a number of years, and on embodiment they come up, I admit, and serve under their own officers in the regiment they have been accustomed to. It is suggested that the men in these short-service battalions should serve for a certain time in the depot and should then join their short-service battalion, in which they would be at least twenty-one months out of the two years. They would then go to the Reserve for six years, and twice during that service they would go back to their short-service battalions for one month's training, practically a Militia training. I do not think it can seriously be argued that these Reservists would go back to a strange regiment under strange officers, when they would go back to the regiment in which they had served twenty-one months, and possibly the two months reserve training. I think the noble Duke is rather unduly favouring the Militia when he says that the Militia would provide a more efficient Reserve than the Reserve we should get by the short-service battalions.

I now come to the important point raised by the noble Duke as to the present deficiencies in the Militia. The noble Duke says those deficiencies are due to the War Office. I think that that is very largely true, but it is a great deal easier to say that the deficiencies in the Militia are due to the War Office than to provide a remedy. I would be more inclined to suggest that the deficiencies are due to certain inherent defects in their position. They are mere adjuncts to the Line, little more than a feeding-machine, both as regards officers and men, and I claim that the line of progress which the Government suggest will do a great deal to remedy the evils that have arisen.

We have received hundreds of remedies as to how to increase not only the Militia but all branches of His Majesty's forces. But there are two necessities which must be satisfied before any remedy can be adopted. The first, I think, will be admitted by everyone. It is absolutely necessary that no remedy must involve a serious increase in the total amount of Army Estimates. Your Lordships will remember that my noble friend supplied me last year with a scheme for obtaining subalterns for the Auxiliary Forces. I think we could easily get them on the terms he suggested—namely, by giving them all a retaining fee of £100 a year. But that would have involved a serious increase in the Army Estimates. Secondly, it is of no use to suggest a remedy for one branch of the Army that will injure some other branch. What is the proposal of the noble Duke? The noble Duke suggests that a remedy for the present state of affairs might be found if local authorities were permitted to recruit for the Milita, and if Militia recruiting were taken out of the hands of the War Office and absolutely separated from recruiting for the Regular Army. According to the noble Duke's proposal, competition would be set up between the Army and the Militia for recruits, so that in every county in the Kingdom in which there is a Militia regiment there would be a sort of "pull devil, pull baker," going on between the recruiting agent of the local authority and the Army recruiting officer who wanted recruits for the Army. I cannot admit that that is a proper remedy.

The matter of better provision for the training of officers is continually before us at the War Office, and we are doing our best to increase the accommodation, but even expenditure on buildings is bound between certain necessary limits, and we have rather to content ourselves with doing one thing at a time. But this is a question on which we feel quite as strongly as the noble Duke, and we are just as anxious to give facilities for the training of officers of the Auxiliary Forces as we are to afford them to officers in other branches. I do not wish to refer at any length to the noble Duke's amusing description of what he considers the intellectual attainments of an officer in the Regular Army and his utter inability to understand any question affecting the Auxiliary Forces. I think he will admit that there are officers in the Regular Army who are fully equal to the intellectual requirements of the time, and I regard what he said on that matter as nothing more than good-natured chaff.

The noble Duke advocates a revival of the Auxiliary Forces Advisory Board which we had at the War Office for some time, and I think his argument is that its revival would be a very useful method for bringing the views of the Auxiliary Forces before the War Office. There are certain disadvantages in that system. I am speaking in the presence of two colleagues of mine on that board, and I am sure they will admit that the procedure was a little cumbersome, for we could never have a meeting at less than, I think, twenty days notice owing to our constitution. But I claim that we have already gone a great deal further than the Advisory Board in what we have done. We have a Militia colonel always in the War Office now, in the department of the Director of Auxiliary Forces, who is available to any member of the War Office for the purposes of information.

As to the question whether the recommendations of the Duke of Norfolk's Commission are to be adopted in whole or in part, it must be evident that to carry them out will involve some considerable expense, and at the present moment we would not feel justified in increasing the Army Estimates. But I am permitted to tell your Lordships that a request will be made in another place for the same amount of money on the Militia Vote as was given last year. There are a great many units, infantry and artillery, which are really past praying for as efficient units, and there are certain regiments of garrison artillery, which, as your Lordships know, have never yet been utilised in any known defence scheme. We hope by a reduction and amalgamation of certain units to effect certain saving, which we intend to apply solely for the improvement of the Militia, largely, of course, in the direction of the recommendations of the noble Duke's Commission. At the same time your Lordships will understand that we are still bound by the fact that we are not yet able to start the short-service Army.

As to whether we have had opportunities of discussing this matter during the autumn with colonels of Militia, I can assure the noble Duke that such is the case. There is one colonel present, sitting beside the noble Duke, whom Mr. Arnold-Forster has had the pleasure of interviewing, and we were also able to obtain the views of a great many colonels of Militia through the Director of Auxiliary Forces. That is in addition to personal interviews which my right hon. friend had. We deplore the delay which has occurred just as much as my noble friend. We shall be glad when the position of the drafts enables us to start a short-service Army, and will rejoice when the end of the present period of tension is reached.

Lord TWEEDMOUTH: My Lords, I do not propose to go at length into the whole question raised by the noble Duke, but I desire to say a few words with regard to the remarkable announcement which the Under-Secretary of State for War has made to-night. At any rate, I am glad to congratulate the Under-Secretary of State, rising as he did from between two colleagues, both of whom are colonels of Militia, on the rôle he had to fill, because last year the Secretary of State for War, in the other House, appeared as the stern judge, pronouncing the sentence of early execution on the Militia force, whereas on the present occasion the Under-Secretary has appeared more like the peaceful dove, bringing the leaf of a reprieve to one of the most ancient forces of His Majesty the King. But whilst I recognise the importance of the announcement made by the Under-Secretary of State, I must say that we have not received very much information as to what the future of the Militia is to be. The noble Earl has told us, very clearly indeed, that they are to have a further condition of service imposed upon them. Seeing that such a condition as compulsory foreign service is to be imposed upon a force which has not hitherto been subject to that liability, I think we ought to have been fully informed as to the conditions under which the force is to serve in the future. For my own part, I should be inclined to look upon the proposal with favour, but before we can consent to it we must know exactly the position the Militia are to hold in the future, and the duties that are to be imposed upon them. The Under-Secretary of State told us—and I am glad he was able to do so—that we should find on the Estimates of this year a sum not less than that applied to the Militia last year. If I remember rightly, the amount was something over £2,000,000. That, again, is a guarantee that the Militia are to be maintained.

THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: I was speaking of the Militia Vote—the Pay Vote of the Militia—which amounts to about £800,000. The total spent on the Militia does, I think, amount to about £1,800,000, but a large portion of it is borne on other Votes.

